Aug. 31, 1956.

Proceeding in eminent domain by the State to acquire a parcel of land, owned by defendant partners, for highway purposes. From an order of the Superior Court, San Mateo County, A. R. Cotton, J., that a specified sum be paid to defendant city in satisfaction of an assessment lien against the land from an amount paid into court by the State in satisfaction of a judgment for the partners and the city tax collector, the partners appealed. The Supreme Court, Shenk, J., held that assessment lien having become effective after partners were divested of their rights in property under Superior Court's order authorizing State to take possession of property, pursuant to constitutional provision, immediately on issuance of summons, partners were entitled to compensation for such taking without deduction of amount of lien.

Order reversed.

Opinion, 288 P.2d 904, vacated.

301 P.2d—1

1. Eminent Domain ⇨320

Where there is such a substantial change in status of land taken by condemnor and condemnees' relation thereto as to divest all of condemnees' interest therein for all practical purposes, strict rule that title to property does not pass until condemnation judgment is entered and recorded should not apply. West's Ann.Code Civ. Proc., § 1253.

2. Eminent Domain ⇨320

Under constitutional provision for State's taking of immediate possession of property condemned for highway purposes before divestiture of condemnee's title thereto, owner of property at time of such taking is entitled to compensation, so that property is deemed taken when his title is divested, in absence of prior physical taking, as possession follows title, but divestiture of title after physical taking is merely confirmation of original taking, which is merely accelerated by such provision. West's Ann.Const. art. 1, § 14.

3. Eminent Domain ⇨63

A condemnor's acts in entering into possession of private property and proceeding to commence construction thereon constitute "taking" thereof within constitutional provision for taking of immediate possession of property by public corporation condemning it. West's Ann. Const. art. 1, § 14.

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Taking".

4. Eminent Domain ⇨320

Title to property condemned does not pass until compensation is awarded and final judgment in condemnation filed in county recorder's office, but a taking of sufficient consequences has same effect of finality of transfer for specific purposes as passage of title. West's Ann.Code Civ. Proc., § 1253.

5. Eminent Domain ⇨320

Land, of which State was ordered by superior court to take immediate possession, pursuant to constitution, on filing of complaint and issuance of summons in proceeding to condemn it for highway purposes, was taken before condemnation judgment, though compensation to owner, required before taking of property, was not made until after trial. West's Ann. Const. art. 1, § 14.

6. Eminent Domain ⇨63

State's dispossession of owners of land therefrom, pursuant to superior court order made on issuance of summons in proceeding for condemnation thereof for highway purposes, and acts of appropriation, destruction of buildings and damage caused by State before judgment, constituted taking of land within constitutional provision, regardless of whether State could restore land to its original status. West's Ann.Const. art. 1, § 14.

7. Eminent Domain ⇨152(1)

Where lien of city's special benefit assessment against land for drainage project became effective after owners of land were divested of their rights therein pursuant to court order authorizing State to take immediate possession thereof on issuance of summons in proceeding to condemn land for highway purposes, such owners were entitled to compensation for taking of land without deduction of amount of assessment lien, though improvement proceedings were initiated before commencement of condemnation action. West's Ann.Streets & Highways Code, § 10,000 et seq.; West's Ann.Const. art. 1, § 14.

Arthur J. Harzfeld, City Atty., Frank W. Rose, Asst. City Atty., San Mateo, for respondent.

SHENK, Justice.

In this proceeding in eminent domain the state acquired for highway purposes a parcel of land in the City of San Mateo which had been owned by the defendants James H. and Noel L. Arthur. The judgment awarded $25,500 to the Arthurs and to the tax collector of the City of San Mateo "as their interests may appear." The state paid the full amount into court. Subsequently the court ordered that $612.20 be paid from this fund to the city to satisfy a claimed assessment lien against the property. From this order the Arthurs have appealed.

The proceeding which culminated in the assessment lien asserted against the Arthurs' property was commenced by the City of San Mateo in January, 1952, pursuant to the Municipal Improvement Act of 1913, Str. & H. Code, § 10,000 et seq., for the purpose of completing a drainage project affecting and benefiting the lands involved. The assessment is a special benefit assessment in which the cost of the improvement is assessed against the parcels of property embraced within the district in accordance with the special benefit to each parcel.

A year after the initiation of the proceeding resulting in the assessment lien, the California Highway Commission, on January 21, 1953, adopted a resolution determining that the public interest and necessity required the acquisition of the Arthurs' property for highway purposes. The complaint in eminent domain was filed and summons was issued on April 20, 1953. Pursuant to the constitutional provision, art. 1, § 14, an order was made on that date authorizing the state to take immediate possession of the property. On June 21, 1953, the owners were required to vacate and the state commenced the removal of buildings and the construction of an overpass thereon. Thereafter, on August 19, 1953, the City of San Mateo recorded its special benefit assessment lien against the property. Trial of the cause in eminent domain was commenced on November 9, and judgment was entered on December 2, 1953. The value of the property was fixed as of the date of issuance of summons, April 20, 1953 (see Section 1249, Code Civ.Proc.).

The theory on which the trial court ordered payment of the city's assessment out of the award was that such an assessment is a levy on the interest of the owner; that title to the property does not pass in a condemnation proceeding until judgment is entered and recorded (§ 1253, Code Civ. Proc.); that the mere taking of possession of land prior to judgment pursuant to the provisions of article I, § 14 of the Constitution does not accelerate the passing of title; that the title was therefore in the Arthurs at the time the assessment was levied, and that the lien attached to the award in condemnation. See City of Los Angeles v. Superior Court, 2 Cal.2d 138, 39 P.2d 401.

The Arthurs do not claim that the foregoing theory is not supported by authority, but they assert that the conclusion based thereon was never intended by the Constitution and other laws of this state and that a factual situation such as this has never been finally passed upon by its courts. They argue that to deprive them of all but a bare legal title to their property and thereafter to levy and require that they pay an assessment for benefits they can never enjoy out of an award based on the value of their property at the time of taking possession and before accrual of the benefit, is a taking without the just compensation required by article I, § 14 of our Constitution. They rely in part on City of Los Angeles v. Los Angeles Pacific Co., 31 Cal.App. 100, 116, 159 P. 992, 998, where the court, after reviewing cases in other jurisdictions, concluded that "the defendants could not be charged with subsequent taxes against property which they had ceased to own."

[1,2] In situations where it can be said that in addition to a mere taking of possession by the condemner there is also such a substantial change in the status of the land taken and the condemnee's relation to it as to constitute, in effect, a divestiture for all practical purposes of all of the former owners' interest, the strict rule should not apply. People v. Klopstock, 24 Cal.2d 897, 151 P.2d 641; People v. Joerger, 12 Cal.App.2d 665, 55 P.2d 1269, 1272; 29 C.J.S., Eminent Domain, § 135, p. 966. In the Joerger case the court stated that in "the ordinary proceeding the property is not 'taken' until the final decree is entered. Code Civ.Proc., § 1253. It is the divesting of the title of the owner and the vesting of the title in the condemnor which constitutes the 'taking' in such cases. But where, as under our Constitution, provision is made for a 'taking' prior to the divestiture of title, the party who owns the property at the time of such 'taking' is entitled to the compensation * * *. It thus appears that where there is no prior physical 'taking,' the property is deemed to have been 'taken' when title is divested, as possession follows the title. Where there has been a prior physical 'taking,' the subsequent divestiture of title is merely a confirmation of the original 'taking.' The effect of the constitutional amendment was merely to accelerate the 'taking.' To hold otherwise would, in effect, nullify that provision of the Constitution which provides that 'private property shall not be taken or damaged for public use without just compensation having been first made or paid into court for the owner.'"

[3] This court also has held that the act of a condemner in entering into possession of private property and proceeding to commence construction thereon was a "taking" of the property as that term is used in the constitutional provision here involved. Until the adoption of the constitutional amendment in 1918, article I, § 14 did not provide, as it does now, for an order whereby the condemner might enter into possession of the land prior to a judgment in condemnation. In 1897 the Legislature attempted to amend section 1254 of the Code of Civil Procedure to authorize such orders for possession pending trial of the cause. The constitutionality of the amended section was challenged in Steinhart v. Superior Court, 137 Cal. 575, 70 P. 629, 630, 59 L.R.A. 404. The question presented was whether taking possession and using the property during the pendency of the condemnation proceeding was a taking within the meaning of the then constitutional provisions. The court stated: "To hold that possession of land may be given to a person seeking to acquire a right of way by condemnation, during the pendency of the proceeding, and before the amount of compensation has been determined and paid to the owner, or into court for him, would be to hold that this so-called temporary possession is not a taking of private property for a public use. But both on authority and reason it is so." The section was held unconstitutional. To the same effect see the earlier case of Davis v. San Lorenzo R. R. Co., 47 Cal. 517.

[4] It should be clear from the foregoing that a distinction is drawn between the legal effect of passage of title and the "taking" of the property involved. There is no passage of title in condemnation proceedings until an award has been made and the final judgment in condemnation filed in the office of the county recorder. § 1253, Code Civ.Proc.; Metropolitan Water Dist. v. Adams, 16 Cal.2d 676, 107 P.2d 618. However, as an exception to the strict application of the law, it is recognized that a "taking" of sufficient consequences is deemed to have the same effect of finality of transfer for specific purposes as does the passage of title.

[5] Contentions by the city that article I, section 14 does not permit the conclusion that there has been such a "taking" in the present case are apparently based on the general language therein that "property shall not be taken" without compensation having "first" been made. As compensation to the owner is not made until after trial, it is said to follow that there can be no taking within the meaning of the section until after trial. But the constitutional language is framed in words of limitation on the rights conferred upon the condemner, see Steinhart v. Superior Court, supra, 137 Cal. 575, 579, 70 P. 629, and that the special provisions of the section qualify its general language to permit a taking prior to judgment in condemnation under the special circumstances present in this case. See Metropolitan Water Dist. v. Adams, supra, 16 Cal.2d 676, 107 P.2d 618.

[6] It is also claimed by the city that here the acts of appropriation of the land by the state were not final and conclusive; that the state could restore the lands to their original status which would not have been possible in the Joerger case. In the present case it appears from an agreed statement of facts that pursuant to the order for possession the state "acting through the Department of Public Works took possession of the real property * * * and required the appellants to remove themselves from the premises. Immediately thereafter the State removed the buildings which had belonged to the appellants and started construction on additions to Bayshore Highway."

There is no justification for a holding that the test of "taking" is whether the lands thereafter may be restored to their original condition. In Steinhart v. Superior Court, supra, 137 Cal. 575, 70 P. 629, the court held that there would be a taking where the condemner exercised a right to "take possession of and use the land and premises sought to be condemned, during the pendency and until the final conclusion of the proceedings". In any event it appears in the present case that the disposition of the defendants and the acts of appropriation, destruction and damage brought about by the state prior to judgment constitute a "taking" as contemplated by the constitutional provision.

[7] The City of San Mateo claims that there is no merit in the contention by the Arthurs that if the order of the trial court be enforced they will have been required to pay an assessment for a benefit which they have not and cannot realize, thus resulting in an unconstitutional exaction from them. It is not disputed that benefits from the drainage project would accrue to the lands here involved, and that planning for the project was well in advance of and as a matter of public knowledge prior to the commencement of the condemnation proceeding. The city contends that changed conditions which may reasonably be anticipated can be taken into consideration in determining the value of property, see Long Beach City H. S. Dist. v. Stewart, 30 Cal.2d 763, 768-769, 185 P.2d 585, 173 A.L.R. 249; that an award in condemnation necessarily includes every element of value in the property; that in the present case the Arthurs fail to show that the amount awarded did not include the enhanced value of the property by reason of the pending improvement; that the Arthurs demand full value for their property but seek to avoid the cost of the improvement which entered into the determination of the award, and that for equitable reasons they are not entitled to relief from paying the assessment. It cannot be ascertained from the record what means or processes were utilized in arriving at the amount of the award or whether the so-called anticipatory benefit to the land by reason of the improvement to be made was taken into consideration in fixing that amount. Although the improvement proceedings were initiated prior to the commencement of the action in eminent domain, the city acquired no interest in the lands within the improvement district nor the proceeds therefrom until the special assessment liens were recorded on August 19, 1953.

Whatever merit there may be in the foregoing contentions of the city under other circumstances they are of no avail as against the Arthurs if the levy of the assessment was made after the award in condemnation. In the present case the effective "taking" by the condemner is advanced from the time of the award to the time of appropriation of the property, that is, June 21, 1953, which was prior to the time of the levy.

In accordance with what has been said it follows that the assessment lien became effective after the Arthurs are deemed to have been divested of their rights in the property and they are entitled to compensation without deduction on account of the assessment lien.

Julia GOLDBERG, Defendant and Respondent.

Civ. 21410.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 3, California.

Sept. 12, 1956.

Husband brought suit for divorce on ground of cruelty, and wife filed a cross-complaint for divorce, on ground of cruelty. The Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Thurmond Clarke, J., entered a decree awarding husband a divorce and denying wife a divorce, and the husband appealed from parts of the decree vacating disposition of community property and awarding support to wife. The District Court of Appeal, Shinn, P. J., held that, since wife was the wrongdoer and husband the aggrieved party, husband was entitled to the greater share of the community property and wife was not entitled to support.

Judgment reversed.

1. Divorce \Rightarrow 252

Where court found wife to be the wrongdoer and husband the aggrieved party and granted husband divorce on ground of extreme cruelty of wife, husband was entitled to the greater share of the community property. West's Ann.Civ. Code, § 146.

2. Divorce \Rightarrow 238

Where court found wife to be the wrongdoer and husband the aggrieved party and granted husband divorce on ground of extreme cruelty of wife, wife, in absence of an agreement, was not entitled to support. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 146.

Robert H. Green, Balboa Island, for appellant.

Aron & Shapiro, Haskell J. Shapiro, Los Angeles, for respondent.

SHINN, Presiding Justice.

Leo Goldberg sued his wife Julia for a divorce, charging cruelty. He alleged there was community property consisting of a home and furniture, a 1940 Oldsmobile, a 1940 Chevrolet truck, fifty oil paintings of the value of $5,000 and other property of a nature unknown to him in the possession of his wife. Julia answered and filed a cross-complaint for divorce, charging cruelty. She described the ownership of community property as it was described by Leo, except that she alleged there was other community property of unknown nature in the possession of Leo. Each party sought custody of three minor children, each sought an award of all the community property and Julia prayed for an allowance for the support of herself and the children.

The court found Julia guilty of extreme cruelty and Leo not guilty. It found the residence and contents to be owned in joint tenancy and did not attempt to disturb that ownership. It found the community property to be as alleged in the pleadings and did not find there was any other community property. The decree awarded Leo a divorce, custody of the children and the car and truck valued at $100 each. It awarded Julia the paintings of the value of $5,000 and also $110 per month until the further order of the court. Leo appeals from the parts of the decree which make disposition of the community property and which award support to Julia.

[1, 2] He has filed a brief; Julia, after liberal extensions of time, has filed none. The cause has been ordered submitted on the opening brief. Rules on Appeal 17(b). If Julia had been awarded a divorce on the ground of cruelty she would have been entitled to the greater share of the community property. Civ.Code, § 146; 16 Cal. Jur.2d 595-6; Rocha v. Rocha, 123 Cal. App.2d 28, 266 P.2d 130. But she lost, and the decree was in favor of Leo and the ground for it was the extreme cruelty of Julia. Leo was entitled to the greater share of the community property. Since the court found Julia to be the wrongdoer and Leo the party aggrieved, Julia, in the absence of an agreement, was not entitled to support. McLaughlin v. Superior Court, 128 Cal.App.2d 62, 274 P.2d 745.

The appeal is before us upon the judgment roll. Inasmuch as it appears on the face of the record that the division of the community property and the award of support to Julia were contrary to law there is no alternative to a reversal of the judgment.

The parts of the judgment above referred to from which an appeal has been taken are reversed.

Patrick RICHARDS, a minor, by and through his guardian ad litem, Thomas Milton Richards, Plaintiff and Respondent,
v.

Ross RELLES, Jr., Harry Viani et al.,
Defendants.

Ross William Relles, sued herein as Ross Relles, Jr., by and through his guardian ad litem, Ross Relles, Defendant and Appellant.

Civ. 8776.

District Court of Appeal, Third District,
California.

Sept. 12, 1956.

Minor's action by guardian ad litem for injuries received when struck in eye by an object hurled by eight and one-half year old defendant, also represented by his guardian ad litem. The Superior Court, Sacramento County, Jay L. Henry, J., entered judgment for plaintiff, and defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Peek, J., held that instructions on negligence, when considered together with other special instructions on degree of care required of children, were not erroneous on ground that they imposed same standard of care on defendant minor as on an adult.

Affirmed.

1. Trial ⇨296(3)

In minor's action for personal injuries received when struck in eye by object hurled by eight and a half year old defendant, instructions on negligence, when considered together with other instructions on degree of care required of children, were not erroneous on ground that they imposed same standard of care on defendant minor as an adult. West's Ann.Civ.Code, §§ 25-37.

2. Negligence ⇨5

A custom or practice does not excuse a defendant's failure to exercise due care unless such custom or practice is consistent with due care.

3. Infants ⇨102

Trial ⇨260(8)

In minor's action for personal injuries received when struck in eye by object hurled by eight and a half year old defendant, there was no error in rejecting defendant's requested instruction that he was not guilty of negligence if he was not doing anything more or less than healthy boys of his age have done, since it was an erroneous statement of the law and unnecessary because jury was otherwise fully instructed as to the true standard of care.

Russell A. Harris and Sherman C. Wilke, Sacramento, for defendant-appellant Relles.

Nichols, Richard, Allard & Williams, Oakland, and Albert H. Mundt, Sacramento, for plaintiff-respondent Richards.

PEEK, Justice.

This is an appeal by the defendant Relles from a judgment in favor of plaintiff and against Relles alone (the jury having found in favor of the defendant Viani) for damages alleged to have been sustained by plaintiff as a result of being struck by a rock thrown by Relles.

The evidence, which is not in contradiction, shows that four years prior to the trial of the action the plaintiff Patrick Richards, who was then approximately four and one-half years of age, was playing in a lot near his home with his older brother Jimmy and younger brother Gary. The defendants, Ross Relles and Harry Viani, who were between eight and nine years of age, were playing in a vacant lot immediately across the street from plaintiff. The defendants were throwing rocks and clods of dirt at various bottles and cans. Upon seeing the plaintiff and his brothers, Relles, to scare the Richards children, began throwing rocks and clods of dirt at them. Before the oldest of the Richards brothers was able to get them home, Patrick was struck in the eye by one of the objects, causing serious injury which resulted in permanent impairment of his vision. Appellant Relles does not contend, nor could he, that there was insufficient evidence to support the conclusion of the jury upon the question of actionable negligence; however he does contend that the court committed prejudicial error, first in the giving of certain instructions, and second in the refusal to give a particular instruction submitted by him.

The three instructions which form the basis of appellant's first contention are found in B.A.J.I., being numbers 101, 101-A and 102, respectively, and are as follows:

"101. Negligence—Basic Definition.

"Negligence is the doing of some act which a reasonably prudent person would not do, or the failure to do something which a reasonably prudent person would do, actuated by those considerations which ordinarily regulate the conduct of human affairs. It is the failure to use ordinary care in the management of one's property or person."

"101-A. Negligence—A Relative Term.

"Negligence is not an absolute term, but a relative one. By this we mean that in deciding whether there was negligence in a given case, the conduct in question must be considered in the light of all the surrounding circumstances, as shown by the evidence."

"102. Ordinary Care—Definition.

"Ordinary care is that care which persons of ordinary prudence exercise in the management of their own affairs in order to avoid injury to themselves or to others."

It is appellant's contention that use of the words "management of one's property or person" and "management of their own affairs" in the challenged instructions clearly implied to the jury that the standard of conduct applicable to the case presented was that for a mature person capable of managing his own property and affairs; that in so doing the court thereby implied that the defendants, aged eight and eight and one-half, were capable of managing their own property or affairs, and hence it was directly in conflict with the provisions of sections 25 to 37, inclusive, of the Civil Code. In his argument appellant fails to consider that in addition to the instructions so challenged, the court also gave to the jury his instruction number 2 which was as follows:

"You are instructed that while a minor, like an adult, is required to exercise ordinary care, he is only required to exercise that degree or amount of care that is ordinarily exercised by one of like age, experience, and development. The ordinary care which a child of limited judgment and experience is called upon to exercise in a given situation is not the quantum of care required of an adult under the same circumstances. A child is required to exercise only that measure of care which children of the same age under similar circumstances ordinarily exercise."

The court further instructed the jury that:

"A child is not held to the same standard of conduct as an adult and is only required to exercise that degree of care which ordinarily is exercised by children of like age, mental capacity and experience. There is no precise age at which, as a matter of law, a child comes to be held accountable for his actions by the same standard as applies to an adult. It is for you to determine the mental capacity and experience of each of the minor defendants, and whether his conduct was or was not such as might reasonably have been expected from a child of like age, capacity and experience, under the same or similar circumstances."

[1] In addition thereto, the court instructed the jury that it was to consider the instructions as a whole and not to single out any one particular sentence or word. Under such circumstances it cannot be said that the jury which had the opportunity of seeing the children involved, even though the trial was held four years after the date of the accident, was not well aware that the question presented by the instructions related to the conduct of minors. Likewise this court cannot say that the wording of the particular instructions so attacked either confused the jury or misled it into a belief that the particular wording of such instructions placed upon defendants a degree of care wholly inconsistent with their ages.

Appellant's second contention is directed at the failure to give a further instruction proposed by him as follows:

"In determining whether or not the defendant Relles was negligent, a helpful guide to you can be found in the answer to this question: Can you, the jury, truthfully and conscientiously say, as you review the facts of this case as you find them, that the defendant Relles, aged 8½ years at the time of the occurrence giving rise to this suit, was doing anything more or less than healthy boys of his age have done from time immemorial and will continue to do as long as the race retains its activity and love of innocent sport?"

"If you find the answer to that question in the negative, then you will find that the defendant Relles was not negligent and return a verdict in his behalf."

It is appellant's contention that while the instruction might have been worded differently, nevertheless, it did instruct the jury that the age, experience and development of a person at the date of the incident forming the basis of the action was the standard by which to judge his conduct, and that the failure of the court to give such instruction led the jury to understand that it was to determine the standard of conduct to be that of a child of his age at the time of the trial rather than the date of the accident.

[2,3] We agree with plaintiff that the wording of the instruction was definitely argumentative; that it was an erroneous statement of the law, since custom or practice does not excuse a defendant's failure unless it is consistent with due care; and that it was an unnecessary instruction because the jury was otherwise fully instructed as to the true standard of care.

The record further shows that there could have been no question in the minds of the jurors that the injury occurred at a time when the appellant was four years younger than at the date of the trial. Appellant's counsel made this abundantly clear from the outset of the trial in his voir dire examination of the jurors, in his direct and cross-examination of the witness and by his repeated references thereto in his argument to the jury. Furthermore in this regard it should be noted that the court specifically instructed the jury as follows:

"* * * I feel it important to again remind you that in judging the credibility of any witness who is a minor, you should give careful consideration to the age of the witness at the time of the occurrence and at the time he or she testified, the lapse of time between the occurrence of the accident giving rise to this suit, and the time of testifying * * *."

The judgment is affirmed.

Action by insurance company's receiver against former officer, who sought to disqualify receiver's attorneys, who had previously acted for corporation. The Superior Court, County of Marin, Thomas F. The District Court of Appeal, Bray, J., held that evidence was insufficient to show that relationship of attorney and client had existed between officer and attorneys.

Order affirmed.

1. Attorney and Client ⇨21

An attorney who attempts to use, against interests of his former client, information gained while attorney-client relationship existed, may be enjoined from so doing. Whether attorney-client relationship exists is question of law; however, where evidence upon which facts necessary for determination of such question is in conflict, such conflict must be determined, and it is for the trial court to evaluate the evidence.

Findings are not necessary on determination of motion to disqualify attorney.

4. Attorney and Client ⇨21

In action by insurance company's receiver against former officer, who sought to disqualify receiver's attorneys, who had previously acted for company, evidence was insufficient to show that any relationship of attorney and client existed between officer and attorneys or that officer had given attorneys any information which he was not required to give them in his official capacity as an officer. This is an appeal from a certain order in an action brought by respondents as plaintiffs, against appellants as defendants, for an accounting and other relief on behalf of the policyholders, creditors and stockholders of the Rhode Island Insurance Company, in which it is charged that Stewart B. Hopps, former director, member of the executive committee and chairman of the board of the company, dominated and managed the company's affairs for his own personal gain in violation of his fiduciary duties. Defendants moved the trial court to restrain and enjoin the Providence, Rhode Island, law firm of Edwards & Angell, its partners, associates¹ and other counsel (to the extent that their knowledge of the subject matter of the action was derived from that firm) from further participation in the case and from disclosing information pertaining thereto. The motion was based upon the alleged dual relationship of Edwards & Angell towards Hopps and a claim that Hopps had turned over to that firm as his lawyers certain files, documents and other information which plaintiffs have used and have threatened to use against him in the present action. After a hearing² the motion was denied. Defendants appeal.³

Questions Presented.

(1) Does the evidence support the court's implied finding that counsel were never Hopps' personal attorneys, and (2) where an attorney represents a corporation dominated by one of its officers whose personal interests to a considerable extent are coincident with the interests of the company, does an attorney-client relationship exist between the attorney and the officer, depriving the attorney of the right to represent the receiver of the company in litigation against the officer?

1. The firm, its partners and associates will hereafter, for brevity, be referred to as "counsel."
2. It occupied 11 days, during which oral and documentary evidence was received. The transcript contains 1183 pages.
3. See Meehan v. Hopps, 1955, 45 Cal.2d 213, 288 P.2d 267, holding the order denying the motion appealable.

The Law.

With legislative authority the Board of Governors of the State Bar of California have formulated rules of professional conduct approved by the Supreme Court. These rules are binding upon all members of the State Bar. Bus. and Prof. Code § 6077.⁴ Applicable here are Rule 5: "A member of the State Bar shall not accept employment adverse to a client or former client, without the consent of the client or former client, relating to a matter in reference to which he has obtained confidential information by reason of or in the course of his employment by such client or former client"; Rule 7: "A member of the State Bar shall not represent conflicting interests, except with the consent of all parties concerned." Section 6068, Business and Professions Code, provides: It is the duty of an attorney "(e) To maintain inviolate the confidence, and at every peril to himself to preserve the secrets, of his client."

[1] As the law is clear, we deem it unnecessary to cite the many cases holding that an attorney who attempts to use against the interests of his former client information gained while the attorney-client relationship existed, may be enjoined from so doing.

The question first to be determined is:

1. Had There Been an Attorney-Client Relationship Between Counsel and Hopps? ✓

[2] The determination of that question is one of law. De Long v. Miller, 133 Cal. App.2d 175, 178, 283 P.2d 762. However, where there is a conflict in the evidence the factual basis for the determination must first be determined, and it is for the trial court to evaluate the evidence. Id., 133 Cal.App.2d at page 179, 283 P.2d at page 764.

[3] On the question of whether counsel ever represented Hopps as his attorney, the evidence is directly conflicting. Concededly the firm never charged nor received payment from Hopps for any services whatever. The services which Hopps claims were for him personally were paid for by Rhode Island. Soon after Hopps became connected with the company, counsel ceased to act as general counsel for it. Thereafter they were employed on special matters from time to time. At the time counsel first met Hopps they were working for Rhode Island on a merger of the Merchants Insurance Company into the former. Rhode Island's chairman asked counsel to draw a contract for the employment of Hopps, which was done. Hopps claims that the attorney drawing the contract advised him as well as the company. The attorney denied this and claimed that Hopps consulted his own lawyer, Farber, exclusively concerning the contract. Hopps testified that he confided in and was advised by counsel concerning his personal involvement in the affairs of Rhode Island; that he turned over to counsel his personal files; that Attorney Winsor of the firm was a friendly advisor and legal confidant and familiar with Hopps' personal affairs; that the firm undertook to represent Hopps' personal interest in the California controversy⁵ and in a number of other matters. We deem it unnecessary to detail the evidence concerning the matters testified to by Hopps as showing a personal attorney and client relationship between him and counsel. Suffice it to say that evidence to the contrary on all matters was presented by Edwards & Angell. The question is primarily one of credibility. The trial court obviously disbelieved Hopps.⁶

[4] There are four matters in which appellants particularly claim that counsel acted personally for Hopps.

(1) The preparation of the employment contract between Rhode Island and Hopps. While Hopps does not claim that he employed counsel in this behalf but that Gilman, of counsel, advised him personally, Gilman denied this. Gilman had been handling for Rhode Island a proposed merger of Merchants Insurance Company with it. Watson, Rhode Island's chairman, asked Gilman to draw the employment contract. Gilman conferred with both Hopps and Watson, sending copies of the contract when prepared to both. In the letter to Hopps accompanying the proposed contract Gilman stated that if it was not satisfactory to Hopps Gilman would take up with Watson any proposed changes. It frequently happens that one retained by a client to draft an agreement between him and another, will send such agreement to the other, asking for the latter's suggestions concerning it, which suggestions the drafter will take up with his client. This statement did not convert Gilman's relationship from attorney for Rhode Island to attorney for Hopps in any respect. The agreement was not to become effective unless the merger was made, and provided that Hopps was to have the right to be interested in the Merchants Insurance Company's dealing with Rhode Island and was only required to give part of his time to the latter. Winsor, of counsel, called on Hopps in New York in connection with the merger. None of these matters changed counsel's relationship as attorney for Rhode Island into attorney for Hopps as well. In his deposition Hopps stated that the work done by counsel on the employment contract was done for Rhode Island. At the trial he retracted that statement.

5. This was a conflict between the Insurance Commissioner of California and Rhode Island, see Rhode Island Ins. Co. v. Downey, 95 Cal.App.2d 220, 212 P.2d 965, in which the actions of Hopps were looked upon with disfavor by the commissioner.

6. While there were no findings, we must assume that the trial court actually found all matters necessary to support the trial court's ruling. Findings are not necessary on the determination of a motion to disqualify an attorney. De Long v. Miller, supra, 133 Cal.App.2d 175, 178, 283 P.2d 762.

This contract was later amended, apparently to Hopps' advantage. Counsel had nothing to do with the change. No attack is made upon the validity, propriety or effect of the employment contract.

(2) Approximately nine years after the contract was drawn, counsel were employed by Rhode Island in connection with a controversy with Cuban interests. It involved nine companies and individuals including Hopps and Rhode Island on the American side, and seven on the Cuban side. It was actually a fight for control. Although the controversy had been going on for approximately seven years, counsel had nothing to do with it until approximately three months prior to its settlement. At Watson's request, counsel were employed to represent Rhode Island. At counsel's request Hopps prepared and gave them data concerning the background and history of the controversy and his interest in it. One of the most important problems was whether a proxy held by Hopps or those held by the Cuban interests should prevail. Hopps prepared memoranda concerning these, sending copies to Rhode Island's executive committee as well as to counsel. Counsel advised Rhode Island that only Hopps' proxy could be considered. The fact that counsel so advised, and the other matters they did in connection with the controversy, did not make them attorneys for Hopps.

(3) The Pioneer Equitable Settlement. This involved a dispute between Rhode Island on one side, the Pioneer Equitable and other companies and an individual on the other. Hopps had interests on both sides. There were a number of lawyers representing Rhode Island in this matter including counsel, who were employed by Rhode Island as special counsel in connection with a suit over custodian funds included in the controversy. Counsel denied Hopps' assertion that their special duty in the controversy involved any consideration by them of Hopps' personal interests nor any advice to him concerning them.

(4) The California controversy. As above stated, this was a controversy between Rhode Island and the Insurance Commissioner of California. Counsel were employed to bring a suit in the Rhode Island federal court to restrain the effect of the California decree appointing the commissioner conservator of Rhode Island. Counsel had no connection with the matter prior to this decree. In addition to proceedings in the federal court, counsel endeavored to work out a settlement of the controversy with the commissioner. Richards, of counsel, after consultation with Hopps and the obtaining of data from Hopps and other company officers, went to California for that purpose. Richards was told by the California authorities that the commissioner objected to Hopps' association with the company. Richards testified that he told them that he would not discuss personalities, but wanted to work out an arrangement by which the company could continue in business in California. During the negotiations in California, Hopps came out as well as other members of counsel, and together they prepared memoranda to be submitted to the commissioner's counsel. Here again there was nothing done by counsel or information received by them, which in anywise made them attorneys for Hopps. While they refused to agree to Hopps' removal from a position of authority in the company, or even to discuss such a change, they were not representing Hopps in so doing, but as attorneys for the company were refusing to discuss the matter of the removal of its president.

Appellants point out that the "contemporaneous record" is replete with instances where Hopps presented memoranda and material to counsel and spent considerable time in conference with counsel, all to assist them in the preparation of the various proceedings in which they were engaged for the corporation. These are matters which Hopps' position as an officer of the corporation, and particularly one who dictated, or at least was instrumental in determining, the policy of the corporation in the particular matter, required him to give the corporation.

Disregarding the testimony of Hopps, as we are required to do on this appeal, we can find nothing in the record to show any relationship of attorney and client between Hopps and counsel, nor that he gave them any data, or disclosed to them any information which he as an officer of the company was not required by his position to do, nor which they as attorneys for the company in the matters entrusted to them, were not entitled to receive.

2. Effect of Representation of the Company.

[5] Appellant has not cited, nor have we found, any case holding that an attorney for a corporation is disqualified from representing it in an action brought by it against one of its officers, nor that in such an action the attorney may not use information received from such officer in connection with company matters. The attorney for a corporation represents it, its stockholders and its officers in their representative capacity. He in nowise represents the officers personally. It would be a sorry state of affairs if when a controversy arises between an attorney's corporate client and one of its officers he could not use on behalf of his client information which that officer was required by reason of his position with the corporation to give to the attorney.

Kingman, of counsel, testified that on May 26, 1950, White, the then president of the company, came to counsel's office and informed him that the company would have to go into receivership and that Hopps stated that he was going to get counsel appointed as co-counsel for the receiver with another firm of attorneys. Richards, of counsel, testified that later he informed Hopps that any receivership might involve any officer or director of the company. Winsor testified that he and others of counsel stated to Hopps that if the firm accepted employment by the receiver the firm would have but one loyalty and that it would be the firm's duty to prosecute any claims against any past or present officers or directors. Hopps stated that there were no claims against him and he was not worried. Thereafter at a conference between two members of counsel, Hopps and the then general counsel for Rhode Island and others, legal problems concerning the receivership were discussed. The general counsel stated that he saw no problem in counsel's acceptance of employment by the receiver, as counsel had never represented Hopps, he being Hopps' personal attorney. Winsor then stated that the problem was not a legal one but a personal one and the general counsel stated that no question would ever be raised and asked Hopps whether that was right. Hopps replied that it was. While the above mentioned statements were denied by both Hopps and the general counsel, such denial merely made a conflict in the evidence to be resolved by the trial court. The fact that counsel, as attorney for the receiver, requested and received Hopps' cooperation in certain receivership matters, that prior to their appointment as receiver, counsel on behalf of the company had prepared an answer in which it alleged that the officers, directors and agents of the company were not at fault, in nowise affected their right to represent the receiver, nor to participate in an action in which the receiver claims that Hopps, one of the officers, was at fault. If Hopps' action in arranging for the appointment did not constitute a consent to counsel being appointed attorneys for the receiver and acting in all respects as their duty as attorneys for the receiver required, such action indicates at least that Hopps originally did not consider that counsel had been his personal attorneys nor that he had disclosed to them any information over and above what his position with the company required him to disclose.

Cases cited by appellants where attorneys were enjoined from proceeding against former clients are easily distinguishable from our case. In all of them the relationship of attorney and client actually had existed between the attorney and the party.

against whom the attorney was now acting. Wutchumna Water Co. v. Bailey, 216 Cal. 564, 15 P.2d 505: A discharged attorney attempted to appear practically on the opposite side of a controversy in which he formerly for many years represented the former client. Brown v. Miller, 1923, 52 App.D.C. 330, 286 F. 994: The attorney had formerly been employed by the Alien Property Custodian during a period when the custodian had charge of the affairs of a certain company. While he did not act for the custodian in connection with that company's affairs, he had access to its files, had examined letters and papers concerning the closing of the company's affairs, and had an intimate knowledge of the method of doing business in the custodian's office. He attempted to appear adversely against the custodian in connection with the company's affairs. The court held that in addition to his access to the files his intimate knowledge of the method of doing business in the custodian's office disqualified him from acting as attorney in this matter. Consolidated Theatres v. Warner Bros. Cir. Man. Corp., 2 Cir., 1954, 216 F.2d 920: An attorney who had been in the office of the law firm defending a motion picture producer in anti-trust litigation attempted to represent an exhibitor's anti-trust damage suit against the producer. United States v. Bishop, 6 Cir., 1937, 90 F.2d 65: An attorney represented the government on the first trial of an action by a veteran on a war risk policy. On the second trial of the same issue he attempted to represent the veteran. Watson v. Watson, 1939, 171 Misc. 175, 11 N.Y.S.2d 537: A wife sued to annul a marriage on the ground of the husband's previous conviction of a crime. The attorneys who had defended the husband in the criminal proceeding and who had obtained from him the history of his life attempted to represent the wife in the annulment action. The other cases cited by appellants relate to situations where the attorney either had represented the person whom he was now appearing against in the same matter or one connected with it or had advised other counsel representing the person he was now proceeding against. In none of the cases was there a situation where the attorney for a corporation was appearing for the corporation adversely to a former officer thereof.

[6] Assuming that some of the information obtained from Hopps by counsel as representative of the corporation is that upon which the receiver's contention that Hopps dominated the corporation, its officers and companies, to its damage, is partially based, nevertheless such fact would not prevent counsel from representing either the corporation or the receiver in a controversy with Hopps nor from using that information against him. To hold that it would do so, would, in effect, grant an immunity to Hopps to which he was not entitled. The fact that in the several matters in which counsel represented the corporation what appeared to be for the benefit of the corporation also was for Hopps' benefit as a principal stockholder and because of his interest in the allied companies, did not make counsel his personal attorneys. If this were true, then the attorney representing a corporation in any given matter becomes the personal attorney of each stockholder because the attorney's actions benefiting the corporation likewise benefit the stockholder. Such relationship would disqualify the attorney from acting adversely to the stockholder concerning that particular matter in any controversy between the stockholder and a third party, but obviously would not prevent the attorney from representing the corporation in any controversy between it and the stockholder. As attorneys for the corporation, counsel's first duty is to it. Likewise, as an officer of the corporation, it was Hopps' duty to disclose to it all information necessary for its purposes. To hold that the giving of such information in that more or less intimate relationship which necessarily must exist between an officer of the corporation and its attorneys would prevent the corporation attorneys from thereafter using it in favor of the corporation in litigation against the officer, would be unfair to the corporation and its stockholders, and would violate the above mentioned very important precept, namely, that the attorney's first duty is to his client. Were appellants' contention correct, in all litigation between a corporation and a former officer, more time of the court would be spent in determining, as each bit of evidence appeared, whether it was obtained by the corporation attorney from the officer than in determining the merits of the litigation.

Santiago TARIN, Defendant and Appellant.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 1, California.
Sept. 12, 1956.

Hearing Denied Oct. 9, 1956.

Proceeding on application for a petition for a writ of error coram nobis. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, David Coleman, J., denied the petition and defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Doran, J., held that petitioner's grounds for setting aside his judgment of conviction lacked support in the record, and denial of his petition for writ of error coram nobis did not violate any of his constitutional rights.

Order affirmed.

Criminal Law §997(15)

In proceeding on application for writ of error coram nobis, grounds set forth by petitioner for vacating his judgment of conviction lacked support in the record, and denial of his petition for the writ did not violate any of his constitutional rights.

Santiago Tarin, in pro. per.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., William E. James, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

DORAN, Justice.

This is an appeal from an order denying a petition for a writ of error coram nobis. Appellant appears in pro. per.

Defendant was charged with the possession of heroin. As recited in respondent's brief, "defendant with counsel present, entered a plea of 'Guilty as charged in the information'. Probation was denied and, no legal cause appearing why judgment should not be pronounced, judgment was pronounced and defendant was sentenced to the State Prison for the term prescribed by law, the Terminal Island Facility being recommended.

"Judgment was entered on October 3, 1952 and no appeal was taken from the judgment entered on defendant's guilty plea.

"More than three years after entry of judgment, on October 25, 1955, defendant filed in the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the County of Los Angeles, a document entitled, 'Petition for Writ of Error Coram Nobis, Writ of Habeas Corpus, Writ of Certiorari and for the Order to Show Cause Why the Writ or Writs Should Not Be Granted.'

"In the 'Petition' defendant recited that he had been paroled on October 13, 1953, and that parole was revoked on August 4, 1955.

"Grounds Stated in the Petition

"As 'grounds' for issuance for the requested relief defendant contended:

"1. That he was 'forcibly restrained without his consent upon illegal entry of his private domicile';

"2. That his plea of guilty was 'coerced' in that he was 'forced to withstand an ordeal of some (60) days in the jail tanks handicapped by an infected eye'; and

"3. That the Adult Authority 'violated the petitioner and aggravated a new charge using it as a prior.'

"No reason was stated by the defendant in his application why he waited over three years to file his petition. Further, no affidavits or other proof was offered in support of the charge of 'coercion' or of any of the other grounds alleged."

As recited in appellant's brief, "Appellant contends that there is only one question of law that is to be settled by the District Court of Appeal. This question is:

"Did the Superior Court of the State of California violate the constitutional rights of defendant by denying defendants petition for error coram nobis without a proper hearing?"

"Your appellant, Santiago Tarin, being confined in a State Prison located at Represa, California was informed on or about the 1st day of October, 1955, while studying law in the Law Library of said Prison, that he was given a fraudulent and void trial on the 11th day of September, 1952 in that while being represented by counsel, he was forced to enter a Plea of Guilty to charges contained in the information filed against him on the 3rd day of September, 1952.

"Your appellant contends that his constitutional rights to a fair trial were denied him by the method used by the Court Officers in that he was subject to coercion which resulted in the overreaching of his free will and clear judgment in making the Plea of Guilty.

"Appellant contends that had he been informed of the true meaning of the law of the State of California prior to the 1st of October, 1955, he would have then filed his petition for a Writ of Error Coram Nobis at the very earliest possible moment, however, due to the fact that he was not aware of his trial being fraudulent until October of 1955, he is entitled to be heard by way of Error Coram Nobis even though a period of three years has passed since the entering of the plea of guilty.

"Appellant concedes that the writ of Error Coram Nobis is one of narrow scope and its purpose very limited."

The record reveals that appellant actually made no showing in support of the application for the writ. As argued by respondent, "In the instant case the petitioner made no such showing and as a consequence, the petition was properly denied.

"Aside from the foregoing which required the court below to deny the petition, the following must be considered:

"It is well established that on such an application, affidavits (if any were filed), and statements made by the defendant do not have to be accepted at face value but may be disbelieved and in that event the discretion of the trial judge, in the absence of a clear showing of an abuse thereof, will not be disturbed.

" * * * * *

"Under the circumstances, the trial court had no alternative but to deny the petition for writ of error coram nobis. In a case such as this, the burden is on the applicant for the relief to produce convincing proof of a fact which constitutes legal ground for the issuance of the writ. The presumption that the judgment is valid in all respects is strong. It is clear that the appellant failed in the trial court to overcome this strong presumption and that he is entitled to no relief from an appellate court.

"People v. Shorts, supra (32 Cal.2d 502, 508, 197 P.2d 330).

"As the court said in People v. Stapleton [139 Cal.App.2d 513, 293 P.2d 793, 794]:

"A petition for writ of error coram nobis places the burden of proof to overcome the strong presumption in favor of the validity of the judgment on the petitioner. This burden requires the production of strong and convincing evidence. A mere naked allegation that a Constitutional right has been invaded will not suffice. The application should make a full disclosure of the specific facts relied upon and not merely state conclusions as to the nature and effect of such facts. People v. Shorts, 32 Cal.2d 502, 508, 197 P.2d 330. [Emphasis added.]”

As pointed out by respondent, appellant's contentions lack support in the record. The denial of the petition for writ of error coram nobis in no sense violated defendant's constitutional rights.

The order is affirmed.

Civ. 5409.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District,
California.

Sept. 7, 1956.

Rehearing Denied Sept. 27, 1956.

Hearing Denied Oct. 31, 1956.

Action to determine boundaries and to quiet title. The Superior Court of San Diego County, C. M. Monroe, J., entered judgment for plaintiffs, and defendants appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Mussell, J., held, in part, that evidence established that possession of plaintiffs of disputed property had been actual, notorious, uninterrupted, adverse and exclusive until spring of 1951 when defendants had caused fence to be erected some 400 feet west and parallel to fence line pointed out to plaintiffs by original owner as east boundary line of their property; that during all such period plaintiffs had paid state and county taxes assessed against their lot, with exception of small area in northeast corner; that in 1929, plaintiffs had entered into oral agreement with original owner by which owner, in consideration of payment of certain sum, had agreed to execute will conveying lot to plaintiffs, including area in dispute.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Adverse Possession — 57, 85(5)

In action to determine boundaries and to quiet title, evidence sustained findings that plaintiffs had had actual, notorious, uninterrupted, adverse and exclusive possession of disputed area between parties' lots until spring of 1951 when defendants caused fence to be erected some 450 feet west and parallel to fence line which original owner had pointed out to plaintiffs as east boundary line of their property; that during all such period plaintiffs had paid state and county taxes assessed against their lot; and that plaintiffs had entered into oral agreement with original owner by which owner for valuable consideration, had agreed to execute will conveying lot which included area in dispute.

2. Boundaries — 3(3), 40(1)

The true location of the survey of a tract of land is a question of fact; and in boundary disputes, monuments control over courses and distances, and, if circumstances warrant it, fences may be considered monuments.

3. Boundaries — 48(3)

To make an agreement establishing a boundary line binding, occupation in accordance with line so fixed must be acquiesced in by parties for period equal to that fixed by statute of limitations, or for such a length of time that parties ought not to be allowed to deny its correctness.

4. Boundaries — 48(2)

To be binding, an agreed boundary line must be accepted as the true line, regardless of its accuracy as shown by subsequent measurements.

5. Boundaries — 48(1)

In applying the doctrine of agreed boundaries, it is not the theory of law that there has been a conveyance of land from one coterminous owner to other; but rather, that they have agreed between themselves as to land which they respectively owned under circumstances which are binding upon both of them and their privies.

6. Boundaries ⇨48(6)

An agreement establishing a boundary line is conclusive of correctness of line.

7. Boundaries ⇨48(2)

A fence may establish or mark the true boundary line between adjoining landowners and constitute an agreed boundary, when it is erected or maintained in circumstances rendering applicable the doctrine of agreed boundaries.

8. Boundaries ⇨37(5)

In action to determine boundaries and to quiet title, evidence sustained finding that original owner and defendants' predecessor in title, for many years, had recognized barbed wire fence pointed out to plaintiffs as true and common boundary line, and conclusion of trial court that plaintiffs were owners of disputed area was supported by record.

9. Wills ⇨58(2)

In action to determine boundaries and to quiet title, evidence supported finding that plaintiffs had paid original owner $1,800 for which he had promised to execute will leaving disputed property to them.

10. Wills ⇨59, 67

Where parties paid original owner $1,800 for which owner promised to execute will leaving disputed property to parties, promise was enforceable; parties, as intended legatees, were entitled to enforce their rights under the contract with the original owner.

11. Adverse Possession ⇨57

In action to determine boundaries and to quiet title, evidence established that plaintiffs had possession of disputed area, and that that possession was actual, notorious, uninterrupted and exclusive from 1929 to 1951, at which time defendants had erected fence west of common boundary line between lot owned by plaintiffs and lot owned by defendants.

12. Adverse Possession ⇨57

In action to determine boundaries and to quiet title, evidence that plaintiffs had actual, notorious, uninterrupted and exclusive possession of disputed area between parties' lots from 1929 to 1951 was sufficient to constitute adverse possession under statute.

13. Evidence ⇨274(11)

Statements of original owner pointing out boundary line of plaintiffs' lot, which owner for valuable consideration had agreed to devise to plaintiffs, and survey which original owner had taken of property, were not inadmissible as self-serving declarations of a deceased person intending to enlarge his holdings, in suit involving boundary dispute between successors in title of original owner, since declarations of original owner were all against his interest as original owner of land west of old fence, claimed by plaintiffs to be true boundary line, and such declarations confirmed reduction of original owner's holdings as claimed by plaintiffs. Sloane & Fisher, San Diego, for respondents.

MUSSELL, Justice.

This is an action to determine boundaries and to quiet title. On March 10, 1922, one Jessie M. Lockhart conveyed lots 3, 5, 6, 7 and 8, in section 7, township 14, range 4 east, S.B.M., on Cuyamaca Mountain in San Diego county, to one A. B. Tahar. In October, 1922, Tahar obtained a survey of this property by a licensed surveyor, Percy L. Day, and a map of the property involved was prepared by him for Tahar's use. On or about November 14, 1922, A. B. Tahar conveyed to one George S. Gay said lots 7 and 8, according to the said survey made by Percy L. Day in October, 1922, and all of said lots 3 and 6 lying north of the meandering creek bed running through said lots, described by metes and bounds. In 1923 Tahar conveyed to George A. Malette a portion of lot 6 of said land which was described in the deed as commencing at a point on the south line of lot 6 where a small creek intersects same; thence north along said creek to its intersection with a road north of Rocky Hill; thence west along said road to the west line of said lot 6; thence south along said west line to its intersection with the south line of said lot marked by a post in a stone mound; thence along said south line to the point of beginning.

In 1928 the plaintiffs became acquainted with A. B. Tahar and visited his mountain property. The Sheltons and Tahar became very close friends and in 1929, when the Sheltons were on the Tahar property, Tahar showed them the Day survey map and told them that they were to have lot 3 as shown thereon. He pointed out the boundary of this lot to the Sheltons and directed their attention to a barbed wire fence which he said was the boundary line between the property they were to have and the property which he had theretofore deeded to George Malette. The Sheltons paid $1,800 to Tahar and he agreed to execute his will leaving them the property. They built a cabin on it, ran a pipe line to a spring and occupied the property pointed out to them by Tahar actually, notoriously and uninterruptedly until the spring of 1951, at which time the defendants caused a fence to be erected approximately 450 feet west of and parallel to the fence pointed out to the Sheltons by Tahar as being the boundary line between his property and that theretofore conveyed to Malette. The area between these two fences is the property in dispute here and is shown on a map in evidence prepared by Daniels, Brown and Hall (Defendants' exhibit I).

In 1936 section 7, township 14 south, range 4 east, S.B.M., was surveyed by one Dupree Averill, a United States surveyor, and he prepared a map (Plaintiffs' exhibit

5) in which the boundary line between lots 3 and 6 did not correspond to the boundary line shown on the Day map and pointed out to the Sheltons by Tahar.

On July 21, 1931, Tahar executed his will in which he left to George A. Malette "My remaining interest in Lots Five (5) and Six (6), Section Seven (7), Township Fourteen (14) South, Range Four (4) East, S.B.M." The will further provided as follows:

"I have heretofore arranged for thirty-seven (37) acres of my Cuyamaca property to go to Henry Wood Shelton and Dorothy Shelton, provided my death occurs within ten (10) years from date hereof and in that event, I leave any interest therein to said Henry Wood Shelton and Dorothy Shelton and their children, without the right of disposition, until the death of all said Shelton family, as a life estate, upon their death said property to be disposed of by will of last survivor of those mentioned herein. This is in cancellation of my indebtedness to them. The said property is to be subject to the Agreement entered into by and between George Gay, George A. Malette and myself."

Tahar died in 1938 and letters testamentary were issued to George A. Malette on May 27 of that year. On January 27, 1939, an order for partial distribution was made in the estate of Tahar distributing "Lot 3, Section 7, Township 14 S, R 4 E, SBM, consisting of 37 acres, recorded in County Records office of San Diego, California, to Henry Wood Shelton and Dorothy Shelton. Lots 5 and 6, Section 7, Township 14 S, R 4 E, SBM, as recorded in County Records office, San Diego, California, to George A. Malette."

In the trial herein it was stipulated and found by the court as follows:

"Upon trial defendants expressly disclaimed any right, title or interest in lands in Section 7, Township 14 South, Range 4 East, SBM, lying westerly of such division fence, until January 27, 1939, and confined their claims to those which arose under Order for Partial Distribution on said date in the Matter of the Estate of A. B. Tahar, deceased, Probate No. 25535 in the Superior Court of San Diego County, California."

Plaintiff Henry Shelton testified that he and his wife paid taxes on their property first in 1931 and 1932 to Tahar and later to George Malette and finally they paid "direct"; that in 1929 Tahar pointed out to him and to his wife the boundary of lot 3, both as shown on the Day map and on the ground, and told them that the property which he was showing them was what they were to have; that Tahar pointed out to them the barbed wire fence and stated that that was the east boundary line of their property; that remnants of this fence were still on the property at the time of trial; that George Malette died June 6, 1949, and that during his lifetime he made no assertion of any right to change the said boundary line fence and acquiesced in it as the true boundary line between his property and that of the plaintiffs.

[1] The trial court found, in substance, that all of the allegations of the plaintiffs' complaint were true; that defendants confined their claims to those which arose under the said order of partial distribution; that the possession of plaintiff of the disputed property was actual, notorious, uninterrupted adverse possession and exclusive until the spring of 1951 when defendants caused the fence to be erected some 450 feet west and parallel to the fence line pointed out to the Sheltons by Tahar as the east boundary line of their property; that during all of such period plaintiffs paid state and county taxes assessed against lot 3 with the exception of a small area in the northeast corner thereof; that on or about December 13, 1929, plaintiffs entered into an oral agreement with A. B. Tahar, in which Tahar, in consideration of the payment to him of $1,800, promised and agreed to execute his will conveying lot 3 to them, including the area here in dispute. These findings are supported by substantial evidence and cannot be here disturbed.

[2] The true location of the survey of a tract of land is a question of fact and in boundary disputes, monuments control over courses and distances and where the circumstances warrant it, fences have been considered as monuments. Rodgers v. Roseville Gold Dredging Co., 135 Cal.App.2d 6, 286 P.2d 536.

[3-7] In 8 Cal.Jur.2d 763-767 it is said that to establish an agreed boundary line there must be an actual designation of the line upon the ground and occupation in accordance therewith. To make the agreement binding, occupation in accordance with the line so fixed must be acquiesced in by the parties for a period equal to that fixed by the statute of limitations, or for such a length of time that the parties ought not to be allowed to deny its correctness. An agreed boundary line must be accepted as the true line, regardless of its accuracy as shown by subsequent measurements. In applying the doctrine of agreed boundaries, it is not the theory of the law that there has been a conveyance of land from one coterminal owner to the other, but rather, that they have agreed between themselves as to the land which they respectively own under circumstances which are binding upon both of them and their privies. Such an agreement is conclusive of the correctness of the line and a fence may establish or mark the true boundary line between adjoining landowners and constitute an agreed boundary, when it is erected or maintained in circumstances rendering applicable the doctrine of agreed boundaries.

In Mello v. Weaver, 36 Cal.2d 456, 460, 224 P.2d 691, it is held that an agreement to locate a boundary line need not be express, but it may be implied from long acquiescence; that the implied agreement must have been based on a doubtful boundary line; that a dispute or controversy is not essential but it may be evidence of the existence of a doubt or uncertainty; that it is not required that the uncertainty should appear from the deed or from an attempt to make an accurate survey from the calls in the deed; that a doubt may arise from a believed uncertainty which may be proved by direct evidence or inferred from the circumstances surrounding the parties at the time when the agreement is deemed to have been made, and if in good faith the parties resolve their doubt by the practical location of the common boundary, it will be considered the boundary called for by the deed.

[8] The evidence, considered in the light of the rules stated herein, is sufficient to support the finding of the trial court that Tahar and Malette, for many years, recognized the barbed wire fence pointed out to Shelton as the true and common boundary line between lot 3 and lot 6 and the conclusion of the trial court that plaintiffs are the owners of the disputed area is supported by the record.

[9, 10] There is also substantial evidence to support the trial court's finding that plaintiffs paid Tahar $1,800 for which he promised to execute a will leaving the disputed property to them. Such a promise is enforceable. Brown v. Superior Court, 34 Cal.2d 559, 560, 212 P.2d 878. Plaintiffs, as intended legatees, are entitled to enforce their rights under the contract with Tahar. Daniels v. Bridges, 123 Cal.App.2d 585, 590, 267 P.2d 343. As is said in Weeks v. Taddeucci, 132 Cal.App.2d 491, 495, 282 P.2d 586, 589, quoting from 50 Restatement of Trusts:

"Although a trust of an interest in land is orally declared and no memorandum is signed, the trust is enforceable if, with the consent of the trustee, the beneficiary as such enters into possession of the land or makes valuable improvements thereon or irrevocably changes his position in reliance upon the trust."

[11] The evidence further shows that plaintiffs had possession of the disputed area, which possession was actual, notorious, uninterrupted and exclusive from 1929 to 1951, at which time defendants erected a fence west of the common boundary line between lots 3 and 6. As is said in Klein v. Caswell, 88 Cal.App.2d 774, 779, 199 P.2d 689, 692:

"The possession required by the statutes and by the decisions is one that must be so open, notorious and continuous as to give notice to others that it is hostile to the record owner and must be such as to indicate a claim of right, at least to the extent of putting a prudent man upon inquiry. "It must, in other words, be an open, unequivocal, actual possession—notorious, apparent, uninterrupted, and exclusive—carrying with it marks and evidences of ownership, which apply in ordinary cases to the possession of real property." Lofstad v. Murasky, 152 Cal. 64, 91 P. 1008, 1010."

[12] In the instant case the evidence was sufficient to constitute adverse possession under the statute.

[13] Appellants argue that all statements attributed to A. B. Tahar as well as the so-called "Day" survey should not have been admitted and that all of these statements attributed to Tahar were self-serving declarations of a deceased person intending to enlarge his holdings. We are not in accord with these contentions. The declarations of Tahar were all against his interest as the original owner of the land west of the old fence and they confirm the reduction of his holdings as claimed by the Sheltons. In Sharp v. Blankenship, 79 Cal. 411, 413, 21 P. 842, it was held that in case of a disputed boundary line which is in doubt, the declarations of a grantor, at or before the time of the sale and conveyance, are admissible against both him and the parties claiming under him. See also section 1853 of the Code of Civil Procedure.

The judgment is affirmed.

v.

SOUTHERN PACIFIC COMPANY, a corporation; Circosta Iron & Metal Company, etc., et al., Defendants and Respondents.

No. 16830.

District Court of Appeal, First District,
Division 1, California.

Aug. 31, 1956.

As Corrected Sept. 26, 1956.

Action by railroad employee against railroad under Federal Employers' Liability Act and against a shipper for injuries suffered when railroad employee was struck by a piece of pipe thrown from a car by one of shipper's employees while railroad employee was inspecting cars at shipper's siding. The Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco, Thomas M. Foley, J., granted a nonsuit in favor of the railroad and rendered judgment for shipper. The employee appealed from both judgments. The District Court of Appeal, Bray, J., held that evidence was sufficient to present a question for jury on issue of railroad's negligence in sending employee to work in a dangerous place, and that instruction given on the issue of the negligence of shipper that the happening of the accident would not support an inference in negligence was prejudicial error.

Both judgments reversed.

1. Master and Servant ⇨265(2)

Under the Federal Employers' Liability Act, the injured employee, in order to recover damages for injuries received in scope of his employment, must prove negligence of employer. Federal Employers' Liability Act, § 1 et seq., 45 U.S.C.A., § 51 et seq.

2. Master and Servant ⇨228(1)

Negligence ⇨101

Under the Federal Employers' Liability Act, the contributory negligence of injured employee is not a defense, but it must be considered by jury in reduction of damages. Federal Employers' Liability Act, §§ 1 et seq., 3, 4, 45 U.S.C.A., §§ 51 et seq., 53, 54.

3. Appeal and Error ⇨927(3)

In passing upon an order granting a nonsuit in a Federal Employers' Liability Act case, the District Court of Appeal must construe the evidence most favorably to plaintiff, and if fair minded persons could reach different conclusions on the same evidence, the issue is for jury even where evidence is not controverted. Federal Employers' Liability Act, § 1 et seq., 45 U.S.C.A. § 51 et seq.

4. Master and Servant ⇨106(1)

Employer whose duty it is to provide his employee with a safe place to work, ordinarily is not liable for injuries to his employee on premises of third party over which employer has no control, however, if employer knows, or should have known, that the third parties' premises are dangerous, employer may be liable for employee's injuries there.

5. Master and Servant ⇨286(9)

In action by railroad employee against railroad under the Federal Employers' Liability Act and against a shipper for injuries suffered when railroad employee was struck by a piece of pipe thrown from a car at shipper's siding, evidence was sufficient to present a question for jury on the issue of railroad's negligence in sending employee to work in a dangerous place. Federal Employers' Liability Act, § 1 et seq., 45 U.S.C.A. § 51 et seq.

6. Master and Servant ⇨289(39)

Negligence ⇨136(31)

In action by railroad employee against railroad under the Federal Employers' Liability Act for injuries suffered when employee was struck by a piece of pipe thrown from a car by one of shipper's employees while railroad employee was inspecting cars at shipper's siding, whether the fact that employee saw a man standing in the car he was about to inspect and failed to realize that the man might throw material out of car, was or was not the sole proximate cause of accident, or whether it constituted contributory negligence, which, while not a defense, would serve to minimize damages, were questions for the jury. Federal Employers' Liability Act, §§ 1 et seq., 3, 4, 45 U.S.C.A. §§ 51 et seq., 53, 54.

7. Appeal and Error ⇨216(1)

Ordinarily, where plaintiff offered no instructions on the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur, the reviewing court would be precluded from considering the failure of the trial court to give an instruction on it.

8. Appeal and Error ⇨1066

Where trial court instructed that the happening of accident did not support an inference of negligence, reviewing court was required to determine whether doctrine of res ipsa loquitur applied, even though plaintiff had offered no instructions on the doctrine.

9. Negligence ⇨121(2)

For doctrine of "res ipsa loquitur" to be applicable, the injury must be caused by an instrumentality under the exclusive control of defendant, the accident must be of a type which ordinarily does not happen unless someone is negligent, and accident must not have been due to any voluntary act or contributing fault on part of plaintiff.

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Res Ipsa Loquitur".

10. Railroads ⇨282(3)

In action by railroad employee against shipper for injuries sustained when employee was struck by piece of pipe thrown from a car by one of shipper's employees while railroad employee was inspecting cars at shipper's siding, evidence was sufficient to authorize application of doctrine of res ipsa loquitur as to shipper.

11. Negligence ⇨121(2)

The fact that plaintiff, in action for personal injuries, proved specific acts of negligence causing injury would not preclude application of doctrine of res ipsa loquitur.

12. Appeal and Error ⇨1064(1)

Railroads ⇨282(14)

In action by employee of railroad against shipper for injuries suffered when employee was struck by a piece of pipe thrown from a car by shipper's employee while railroad employee was inspecting cars at shipper's siding, where under proper instructions doctrine of res ipsa loquitur could have been applied by jury, giving instruction that the happening of accident did not support an inference of negligence, even though employee offered no instructions on the doctrine, was prejudicial error.

13. Railroads ⇨282(9)

In action by railroad employee against shipper for injuries suffered when railroad employee was struck by a piece of pipe thrown from a car by shipper's employee while railroad employee was inspecting cars at shipper's siding, whether railroad's employee, who did not make his presence known, was contributorily negligent in not ascertaining what observed shipper's employee was doing in car was question for jury.

14. Railroads ⇨275(1)

Where shipper's employee was engaged in leveling a car full of metal at shipper's siding and process of leveling car required that long pieces of metal more than five feet long, or metal which protruded over edges of car would be thrown out, employee's duty was to use only ordinary care to avoid throwing metal on railroad employee walking beside the cars.

Leo Fried, George Olshausen, San Francisco, for appellant.

Roger G. Eliassen, San Francisco, for respondent Circosta Iron & Metal Co.

Ricksen, Freeman, Hogan & Vendt, Oakland, for respondent Southern Pacific Co.

BRAY, Justice.

In this action for personal injuries brought against defendant Southern Pacific Company, a corporation, under the Federal Employers' Liability Act, 45 U.S.C.A. § 51 et seq., and against Circosta individually and doing business as the Circosta Iron & Metal Company, the trial court granted a nonsuit in favor of defendant Southern Pacific and the jury granted a verdict in favor of Circosta. Plaintiff appeals from the judgments entered thereon.

Questions Presented.

1. As against Southern Pacific—was there substantial evidence of its negligence to go to the jury?

2. As against Circosta—

(a) Withdrawal of res ipsa loquitur issue.

(b) Was contributory negligence an issue?

(c) Instructions on relative duty of care of plaintiff and Circosta.

(d) Propriety and correctness of court's instruction in absence of parties.

Evidence.

Plaintiff was employed by Southern Pacific as an inspector of freight cars. His foreman was McTiernan who customarily gave the inspectors the numbers of the cars they were to inspect. It was then the duty of the inspectors to go to the yards of the different shippers which had loaded and leveled cars, and inspect them. The leveling process consisted of throwing out any scrap metal which was more than 5 feet long or which protruded over the edges of the cars. The inspectors usually came to the yard about 4:00, at which time the cars were usually ready. However, there was testimony that the cars on occasion were leveled between 4 and 4:30 p. m.

The day of the accident, Doris McLaughlin at the Southern Pacific dispatching office had received an order from Davis, a Southern Pacific employee who customarily gave such information, that two Southern Pacific cars would be ready for inspection in the Circosta yard at 4 p. m. Doris informed McTiernan about 3:35 p. m. that the cars were ready for inspection there. McTiernan and plaintiff then drove to that yard, arriving shortly after 4:00. Their presence was not made known at the Circosta office. The cars plaintiff was to inspect were located about 200 feet from the office. On the near side of the track was a road, on the other side of the cars were the scrap metal piles. As plaintiff approached the cars he assumed that they were loaded and leveled. There was nothing sticking over. While he was turning around the end of a car to inspect the other side, he noticed a man in the car. Plaintiff could not see what he was doing. Plaintiff only saw the upper part of his body and it seemed like he was looking down at the load. Plaintiff did not notify him of his presence. When plaintiff was about through inspecting the first car and was between the two cars getting ready to inspect the second, he was hit on the head with a piece of pipe thrown from the car by the Circosta employee in it who was leveling the load. This person had not been cautioned to be careful in throwing material from the car as inspectors might be about and did not know of plaintiff's presence. The employee gave no warning nor did he look in the direction he was throwing the pipe. Plaintiff was severely injured by the pipe.

Rasmus sued Southern Pacific Company under the Federal Employers' Liability Act. At the end of Rasmus' case, Southern Pacific's motion for nonsuit was granted. The action against Circosta, which was brought under the ordinary law of negligence, proceeded to a verdict and judgment for this defendant. Plaintiff's motion for new trial was denied by operation of law through the court's failure to act upon it. Plaintiff appeals from the judgments.

1. Southern Pacific Appeal—Nonsuit.

[1-3] Was there any evidence of negligence of Southern Pacific? Under the Federal Employers' Liability Act the injured employee, in order to recover damages for injuries received in the scope of his employment, must prove negligence of the employer. Blunk v. Atchison, T. & S. F. Ry. Co., 97 Cal.App.2d 229, 234, 217 P.2d 494. Contributory negligence is not a defense, but must be considered by the jury in reduction of damages. 45 U.S.C.A. § 53. Assumption of risk has been abolished. 45 U.S.C.A. § 54. The duty of this court in passing upon an order granting a nonsuit in a Federal Employers' Liability Act case is the same as in cases under the state law of California, namely, the evidence must be construed most favorably to plaintiff, Lavender v. Kurn, 327 U.S. 645, 652, 66 S.Ct. 740, 90 L.Ed. 916, and if fair minded persons could reach different conclusions on the same evidence, the issue is for the jury even where the evidence is not controverted. Bailey v. Central Vermont Ry., 319 U.S. 350, 353, 63 S.Ct. 1062, 87 L.Ed. 1444; Carpenter v. Atchison, T. & S. F. Ry. Co., 109 Cal.App.2d 18, 23, 240 P.2d 5.

[4, 5] Here there was evidence that the employer informed the employee that the cars were ready for inspection, that with his foreman plaintiff went to inspect the cars, that it was customary for the foreman not to check at the Circosta office to determine that the cars actually were ready for inspection, nor to check the cars themselves to see if the loading and leveling had ceased. There was evidence to the effect that work in loading cars customarily continued after 4 o'clock, the time when inspection of the cars customarily started. The rule in cases of this kind is that the employer whose duty it is to provide his employee with a safe place to work, ordinarily is not liable for injuries to his employee on premises of a third party over which the employer has no control. The rule, however, is subject to the well recognized exception that if the employer knows, or should have known, that the third party's premises are dangerous, the employer may be liable for the employee's injuries there. See Ericksen v. Southern Pacific Co., 39 Cal.2d 374, 380, 246 P.2d 642.

"As was said in Beattie v. Elgin, Joliet & Eastern Ry. Co., 7 Cir., 217 F.2d 863, 865, 866: 'The fact that an employee is sent to premises not belonging to or under the control of his employer does not absolve the employer from liability for injuries he may sustain because of their unsafe condition. * * * Inasmuch as plaintiff at the time of the accident was in a place where his assigned duties required him to be, defendant on the issue of negligence was chargeable with knowledge of the conditions which existed there from time to time which in the exercise of reasonable care it could have ascertained. * * *'" Van Horn v. Southern Pacific Co., 141 Cal.App.2d 528, 297 P.2d 479, 481.

Whether the above facts, coupled with the fact that the information given plaintiff by his employer to the effect that the cars were ready for inspection was incorrect, constituted negligence by the employer, was a question for the jury. It cannot be said that as a matter of law the employer was not negligent.

[6] Nor can we say as a matter of law that the fact that plaintiff saw a man standing in the car and failed to realize that the man might throw material out of the car made that fact the sole proximate cause of the accident. As said in Ericksen v. Southern Pacific Co., supra, 39 Cal.2d at pages 379-380, 246 P.2d at page 646: "The plaintiff's knowledge of the unsafe nature of the premises does not relieve the defendant of liability. Since 1939 the defense of assumption of risk has been barred under the Act. 45 U.S.C.A. § 54. No subsequent decision has been cited which as a matter of law relieves an employer from liability for injuries due to dangers known to the employer simply because those dangers were also known to the employee." Whether a reasonable and prudent person would have concluded that the man's presence meant danger, and therefore the failure to so conclude was or was not the sole proximate cause of the accident, or whether it was or was not contributory negligence which, while not a defense, would serve to minimize the damages, were all matters for the jury. The nonsuit should not have been granted.

[7, 8] 2. Circosta Appeal. (a) Res Ipsa Loquitur.¹

1. Plaintiff offered no instructions on the subject. Ordinarily this would preclude our consideration of the failure to give an instruction upon it. However, the [9, 10] Generally, three conditions are necessary to make the doctrine applicable. See John v. B. B. McGinnis Co., Inc., 37 Cal.App.2d 176, 179, 99 P.2d 323. (1) The injury must be caused by an instrumentality under the exclusive control of the defendant. This condition existed. (2) The accident must be of a type which ordinarily does not happen unless someone is negligent. It was for the jury to determine whether this requirement was met. It could have found that this condition existed. Defendant's main answer to this is that it was the custom for its men to throw pipe and metal off cars. But the prevailing custom within a company or an industry does not necessarily determine that the customary activity measures up to the degree of care required by the law. If it was Circosta's custom to throw metal off the cars without ascertaining that no one was in a position to be hit, particularly during the period when Circosta knew that the Southern Pacific employees were accustomed to inspect, a jury could find that this fact would not only not measure up to the standard of care required but also that the accident would not have occurred had there been no negligence. (3) The accident must not have been due to any voluntary act or contributing fault on the part of the plaintiff. As pointed out before, whether that situation existed was one for the jury to determine. See Baker v. B. F. Goodrich Co., 115 Cal.App.2d 221, 252 P.2d 24.

[11] The fact that plaintiff proved the specific acts of negligence causing the injury does not preclude the application of the doctrine. "If, because of the circumstances of the case and the probabilities, an inference of negligence, is raised, the doctrine should be applied, it is difficult to see why its application should be denied merely because plaintiff proves specific acts of negligence. There is no reason why such proof should wholly dispel the inference any more than it would in any other case. The plaintiff is penalized for going forward and making as specific a case of negligence as possible. If he endeavors to make such a case he runs the risk of losing the benefits of the doctrine to which the circumstances entitle him. Rather than place him in such a position he should be encouraged to prove as much as possible. The end result is not injurious to the defendant. He is not injured by the fact that the inference of negligence arose. The circumstances established a foundation therefor based upon probability. Indeed, he is in a better position as he has specific evidence to meet before the trier of fact that may be helpful to him. The case goes to the trier of fact with the general inference of negligence, plus other evidence of specific acts of negligence, to be weighed against defendant's showing. There is no reason for applying a different test for determining when the inference is wholly dispelled as a matter of law in a case where res ipsa loquitur is applicable, than is used in the case of any other inference." Leet v. Union Pac. R. Co., 25 Cal.2d 605, 621-622, 155 P.2d 42, 51, 158 A.L.R. 1008; see also Doke v. Pacific Crane & Rigging, Inc., 80 Cal.App.2d 601, 609, 182 P.2d 284.

[12] In the following cases the doctrine was held applicable: Robbins v. Henry court instructed that the fact of the happening of the accident does not support an inference of negligence and also that negligence is never presumed, and that the jury would not be justified in inferring that defendant was negligent as the accident might have occurred without any fault of defendant. In Jensen v. Minard, 44 Cal.2d 325, 282 P.2d 7, the court held it to be prejudicial error in a case involving res ipsa loquitur to give an instruction of the type given here even though no instructions on the res ipsa loquitur doctrine were asked. Therefore, here we are required to determine whether the doctrine applies. "Even though instructions on the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur were not requested, the jury should not have been foreclosed from considering the evidence provided by the happening of the accident itself in determining whether defendant was negligent." Jensen v. Minard, supra, 44 Cal.2d at page 329, 282 P.2d at page 9.

Cowell Lime & Cement Co., 7 Cal.App.2d 646, 46 P.2d 781, the plaintiff was struck by a cement sack being thrown down a chute; Cooper v. Quandt, 105 Cal.App. 506, 288 P. 79, employee of one building contractor was struck by a plank dropped by an employee of another contractor working on the building; Doke v. Pacific Crane & Rigging, Inc., supra, 80 Cal.App.2d 601, 182 P.2d 284, employee of industrial plant killed by the falling of an appliance while assisting appliance company's employees in installing the appliance at the plant. The trial court erred prejudicially in giving the above mentioned instructions in this case where under proper instructions the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur could have been applied by the jury.

(b) Contributory Negligence.

[13] Unlike the situation as to the Southern Pacific Company, contributory negligence could be a defense in favor of Circosta. The court properly instructed on it. The fact that a crane lifting metal was working near the cars, the fact that plaintiff saw a man in the car looking downwards, were circumstances which the jury, although not compelled to so find, could have found would cause a prudent person to determine that the leveling of the metal in the car had not been concluded, and that hence there was danger of being struck, and that plaintiff was guilty of contributory negligence in not ascertaining what the man was doing in the car.

(c) Relative Duties of Care.

[14] The court instructed that defendant was not required to use any greater degree or amount of care than plaintiff was required to use. Plaintiff contends that this is contrary to the holding in Dixon v. Pluns, 98 Cal. 384, 33 P. 268, 20 L.R.A. 698. There the court said that one engaged with tools and materials directly over a public sidewalk was required to use more than ordinary care to prevent them from falling on pedestrians lawfully using the sidewalk. Such rule would not apply here where no public sidewalk was involved. Defendant's duty was only to use ordinary care. We see no impropriety in the instruction.

(d) Instruction in Absence of Parties.

Inasmuch as the case will have to be retried because of the court's failure to instruct on res ipsa loquitur, and obviously no such occurrence will be repeated, we deem it unnecessary to discuss this assignment of error.

Both judgments are reversed.

Action by prior assignee of certain accounts receivable which were assigned to it while they were in futuro for recovery of amount paid to a subsequent buyer of the same accounts which were sold to it after they were in esse. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Walter R. Evans, J., entered judgment for prior assignee and subsequent buyer appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Ashburn, J., held that receivables which were to grow out of future agreements for sale and purchase of assignor's goods had sufficient substance to be recognized as assignable choses, the assignments to become complete when the debts came into being, and as such, such assignments were within protection of recording statute giving priority to a first recorded assignment of accounts receivable.

ASHBURN, Justice.

This appeal presents the problem of priority between assignments of certain receivables, plaintiff having purchased same while they were in futuro and defendant after they were in esse. Judgment went for plaintiff in the sum of $3,501.77. It runs in favor of H. S. Mann Corp., doing business as California Smelting and Refining Co., against Advance Industrial Finance Co., a limited partnership, and H. R. Goedert, one of the general partners. Defendants appeal from the judgment.

On September 16, 1952, Bryce Moody was indebted to H. S. Mann in the sum of $8,595.70 for raw materials which he had purchased for his factory. Bryce's father, George Moody, was engaged in manufacturing sprinkler equipment and was buying castings from Bryce. On the last mentioned day Bryce by a writing assigned to Mann an account owing to Bryce by George Moody as it existed on that date "and as it may exist at any time during the term of this agreement." In making such assignment it was Bryce's purpose to use the money due from the account to enable him to purchase his further metal requirements from Mann without direct extension of credit to Bryce. It was the latter's agreement to cause his invoices and billings to bear the notation that same had been transferred, and were payable, to Mann. "Notice of Assignment of Account Receivable" was duly recorded September 18, 1952, when the balance due from George Moody to Bryce was apparently $918.

Bryce Moody and George Moody,¹ were originally defendants, but the action was dismissed as to them. The written contract of September 16, 1952, designates Bryce Moody as "Moody" and H. S. Mann Corp. as "Mann." It contains the following pertinent provisions: "1. Moody hereby assigns to Mann his account receivable from George Moody, doing business as Moody Sprinkler Co., referred to hereinafter as The Account, * * * as that account exists as of this date, and as it may exist at any time during the term of this agreement. * * * 4. * * * Moody agrees that he will cause his invoices and billings to The Account to bear the notation that same have been transferred and are payable only to Mann, and that he will cause copies thereof to be sent to Mann at the same time they are sent to The Account, * * * 6. This agreement is, and shall be construed as, a sale by Moody to Mann of Moody's account receivable from The Account as it exists this date, and as it will exist in the future."

Mann continued to sell materials to Bryce who, when castings were sold and delivered to George, would furnish Mann with a memorandum of each delivery. Mann would then send an invoice to George containing a notice that Bryce had assigned to him certain specified invoices owing from George to Bryce. Each of such assigned invoices was paid by George in due course until defendant Advance Industrial Finance Company entered the scene. On February 3, 1953, Bryce sold to Advance invoices totaling $2,677.19, and on February 13, 1953, sold it further invoices aggregating $824.58. On February 3 Bryce owed Mann $6,896.19, and on February 13, $5,778.66. The contract between them was still in existence and the recorded notice of assignment had never been withdrawn. Defendant collected from George Mann $3,501.77 upon the particular invoices sold to it. Bryce later went into bankruptcy.

Counsel debate the applicability and effect of Chapter IIIb of Title 14, Part 4,

1. Herein frequently referred to as Bryce and George for sake of brevity.

Division 3 of the Civil Code, §§ 3017-3029, which chapter is headed "Assignment of Accounts Receivable". The title of the original act, Stats.1943, p. 2542, is: "An act to add a new chapter to Title 14 * * * of the Civil Code to be known as Chapter 3b, relating to the assignment of accounts receivable and providing for the giving of notice thereof." Said chapter was enacted as the result of Corn Exchange Nat. Bank & T. Co. v. Klauder, 1943, 318 U.S. 434, 63 S.Ct. 679, 87 L.Ed. 884, and in furtherance of a policy of furthering non-notification financing of receivables. (The history of this statute is discussed in 17 So.Cal.L.Rev. 303; 33 Cal.L.Rev. 40; 38 Cal.L.Rev. 308; In re Nelson's Estate, 211 Iowa 168, 233 N.W. 115, 72 A.L.R. 856; and Durkin v. Durkin, 133 Cal.App.2d 283, 291-292, 284 P.2d 185.) In the Klauder case a creditor's committee of Quaker City Sheet Metal Company took assignments of its accounts receivable, which assignments were recorded on the company's books but no notice was ever given to the debtors whose obligations had been thus transferred. The company having gone into bankruptcy within four months, the trustee challenged the effectiveness of the assignments as against the bankruptcy estate. Section 60 sub. a, of the Bankruptcy Act, 11 U.S.C.A. § 96, sub. a, as then in existence is set forth in the footnote, so far as here pertinent.* The case arose under the law of Pennsylvania which was to the effect that, in case of failure of an assignee of a chose in action to give notice to the debtor, a subsequent good-faith assignee who gives such notice acquires a superior right. The court held that the trustee in bankruptcy had the same rights as a bona fide subsequent purchaser, and said in 318 U.S., at page 437, 63 S.Ct. at page 681: "So long as the transaction is left open to possible intervening rights to such a purchaser, it is vulnerable to the intervening bankruptcy. By thus postponing the effective time of the transfer, the debt, which is effective when actually made, will be made antecedent to the delayed effective date of the transfer and therefore will be made a preferential transfer in law, although in fact made concurrently with the advance of money. In this case the transfers, good between the parties, had never been perfected as against good-faith purchasers by notice to the debtors as the law required, and so the conclusion follows from this reading of the Act that the petitioners lose their security under the preference prohibition of § 60, sub. b."

Under California law then existing notice had to be given to the debtor of the fact of assignment of a chose in action in order to effectuate it as one having priority over a subsequent assignment; the later assignee acquired the better right if he bought without knowledge of the existing assignment and gave notice to the debtor before the first assignee did so. Graham Paper Co. v. Pembroke, 124 Cal. 117, 120, 56 P. 627; 44 L.R.A. 632; Adamson v. Paonessa, 180 Cal. 157, 163, 179 P. 880; Smitton v. McCullough, 182 Cal. 530, 535, 189 P. 686; First Nat. Bank v. Pomona Tile Mfg. Co., 82 Cal.App. 2d 592, 605, 186 P.2d 693; City of Los Angeles v. Knapp, 7 Cal.2d 168, 171, 60 P.2d 127; 1 Cal.Jur.2d § 15, p. 332.

Various states met the Klauder decision in different ways. (33 Cal.L.Rev. 40, 86.) California, Ohio and Missouri adopted re-

2. "A preference is a transfer, as defined in this Act, of any of the property of a debtor to or for the benefit of a creditor for or on account of an antecedent debt, made or suffered by such debtor while insolvent and within four months before the filing by or against him of the petition in bankruptcy, * * * the effect of which transfer will be to enable such creditor to obtain a greater percentage of his debt than some other creditor of the same class. For the purposes of subdivisions a and b of this section, a transfer shall be deemed to have been made at the time when it became so far perfected that no bona-fide purchaser from the debtor and no creditor could thereafter have acquired any rights in the property so transferred superior to the rights of the transferee therein, and, if such transfer is not so perfected prior to the filing of the petition in bankruptcy * * * it shall be deemed to have been made immediately before bankruptcy."

cordation statutes of varying content (id. p. 96). Sections 3017-3029, Civil Code, Chapter IIIB, enacted on May 26, 1943, constitute the California response to the difficulty.

The transactions at bar occurred in September, 1952, and February, 1953. Between 1951 and September 9, 1953, § 3017 read, in part, as follows: "(1) 'Account' means an open book account, mutual account, or account stated, due or to become due, carried in the regular course of business and not represented by a judgment, note, draft, acceptance, or other instrument for the payment of money; it includes rights under an unperformed contract for work, goods or services which in the regular course will result in an open book account." Section 3018 said, in part: "An assignment of an account is entitled to priority over any subsequent assignment of the same account; provided, that as between two or more assignees who receive written assignments for value without notice, the assignee whose notice of assignment or of intention to assign, is first filed as provided in this chapter is entitled to priority over all other assignees of the same account. Except as to any credit extended by a creditor after the notice provided for in this chapter is filed, an assignment of an account shall be invalid as against any creditor of the assignor without actual notice unless notice of or of intention to make the assignment as provided for in this chapter is filed at the time of or before the execution of the assignment or within five days thereafter." The county recorder is designated as the "filing officer", § 3017, subd. (6), and § 3019 prescribes the necessary contents of the recorded notice.

[1] It appears that Bryce kept in his books no account with George showing the transactions giving rise to receivables. But exhibit B is a book account kept in George's business which does show those sales and the resulting debits and credits. It is settled law that a claimant can establish his claim on an open account by proof of the account as it appears in defendant's books. Millet v. Bradbury, 109 Cal. 170, 173, 41 P.

865; Richmond v. Frederick, 116 Cal.App. 2d 541, 546-550, 253 P.2d 977; Gardner v. Rutherford, 57 Cal.App.2d 874, 884, 136 P.2d 48; Moss v. Underwriters' Report, Inc., 12 Cal.2d 266, 83 P.2d 503; Shanklin v. Scribner, 62 Cal.App. 487, 217 P. 130. The discussion of the law must start with the premise of an existing open account and an assignment of same to plaintiff Mann.

[2] The court, having regard for the statutory phrase "'rights under an unperformed contract for work, goods or services which in the regular course will result in an open book account'", made finding XI which was intended to affirm the existence of a requirements contract between Bryce and George Moody whereby George was to purchase and Bryce to supply all castings needed by the former in his business. The finding is: "[T]hat there existed an agreement, express or implied, between the father and son to the effect that the father would purchase all castings necessary for the father's business from the son, so long as the price and quality delivered by the son were competitive; that said agreement between father and son existed prior to September 16, 1952, when the son assigned his account with the father to plaintiff; that plaintiff knew of this agreement between father and son and relied on it in taking said assignment from the son, and that the monies that were to become due to the son, and did in fact become due to the son, after September 16, 1952 from the father, which made up the account assigned to the plaintiff, arose pursuant to and in accordance with the above-described agreement between the father and son." But the evidence as a matter of law does not support this finding of an existing contract. George Moody testified:

"Q. Did you ever have any contract or agreement with your son whereby you obligated yourself to purchase any particular amount of merchandise from him? A. No.

"Q. In other words, he like other customers, would offer you merchandise and if you wanted it you would buy it; is that correct, sir? A. Well, I might make it a little different from that. If I wanted it I would order it.

"Q. Correct. If you did not want it you did not order it; is that correct? A. That's right.

"Q. For this merchandise you did not owe him any money, did you, until you ordered the merchandise? A. No."

Bryce Moody was not asked and hence did not testify on the subject. Mr. Mann testified that George Moody, before Bryce went into the business of making castings, had purchased most of his requirements from Burke's foundry; that when Bryce returned from service in the army George Moody caused to be turned over to Bryce the bulk of the patterns which had been used in making George's castings, and that the bulk of this pattern equipment was moved from Burke's foundry to Bryce's premises; that this may or may not have been all of the pattern equipment owned by George; that he, Mann, had numerous discussions with George and Bryce concerning the type of their business dealings with one another; "The Witness: * * * Mr. George Moody's conversations with me, said very briefly that if Bryce Moody could produce brass castings at a cost to George Moody that was competitive with prices demanded by other producers of the brass castings; if Bryce Moody were to produce brass castings of satisfactory quality and if Bryce Moody were to maintain delivery schedules which were suitable to the needs of George Moody, he, George Moody, would favor his son, Bryce, to the exclusion of other vendors, but Mr. George Moody made very clear that his son, Bryce, must not place his business at any disadvantage, if he could not produce, to potential sources of supply. I had a very clear understanding of the business relationship between father and son." The foregoing comprises the entire evidence on the subject. It leaves the purported contract without any established price for the goods or any prescribed quantities, with no maximum and no minimum, no commitment by Bryce to supply all the castings that George needed and no promise by George to buy only from Bryce or to buy all his requirements from him. This falls short of an integration. 1 Williston on Contracts, Rev. Ed., § 104A, p. 361, says: "A question of interpretation also arises where an offer does not exactly define the quantity of goods. * * * The true interpretation may be, however, that the offer is an open one to be accepted from time to time by submitting orders for specific quantities. The requirement contracts sometimes fall within this category,—a series of contracts being formed as the separate orders are given." A footnote to the text cites numerous authorities to the effect that this does not measure up to an enforceable requirements contract. 46 Am.Jur. § 64, p. 257: "Where there is no other consideration than the promises of the parties, an agreement for the sale of such quantity as the buyer, at his option, may order or request from the seller is invalid, because the buyer may avoid any liability without any detriment. Where an agreement for the sale of such quantity as the buyer desires, wishes, or wants has been construed to have the same meaning and effect, it has been held invalid for the same reason. Where a seller agrees to sell a definite quantity of a certain article at a fixed price, and the buyer does not agree to purchase any definite quantity, but merely promises to buy only so much as he may desire to order from time to time, and gives no other consideration, there is insufficient consideration for the seller's promise." Southwest Pipe Line Co. v. Empire Natural Gas Co., 8 Cir., 33 F.2d 248, 250: "This court has had occasion in many cases to discuss the question of mutuality in contracts for the future delivery of personal property. It is well established that such contract cannot be enforced, if the will, wish, or want of one of the parties determines absolutely the quantity to be delivered. If that situation exists, there is want of mutuality." But the absence of an enforceable contract between Bryce and George does not necessarily end the matter. It calls for a careful analysis and interpretation of the statute, whose dominant purpose was the protection of assignees of receivables against claims of priority of a bankruptcy trustee without the necessity of giving actual notice to the debtor. The legislature was not interested in re-defining assignability of choses, merely in establishing priority over the trustee of such assignments as were recognized as good under existing California law.

[3, 4] Monies to be earned under an existing contract have long been held assignable at law; in the absence of an existing contract the question of assignability of potential earnings or other receivables is generally considered one for equity, which supplements and corrects the inadequacies of the common law. Indeed this process has proceeded in this state to the point where the difference between law and equity vanishes for practical purposes so far as concerns the subject in hand. See First Nat. Bank v. Pomona Tile Mfg. Co., supra, 82 Cal.App.2d 592, 606, 186 P.2d 693. "The California cases relating to contingent results of existing contracts do not refer to such distinction, and they state the rule as a general one that equity will uphold assignments, not valid at law, of any future interest, as a rule applying alike to those which are vested, but relate to property to come into existence in the future, and those which rest only in possibility, provided they are fairly made and not against public policy." Bridge v. Kedon, 163 Cal. 493, 497-498, 126 P. 149, 151, 43 L.R.A.,N.S., 404.

[5] It clearly appears that Bryce and George Moody had established a business relationship which actually resulted in George's buying all of his required castings from Bryce, in Bryce's satisfying George as to price, delivery and quality and that the established method of doing business afforded basis for expectation that it would continue indefinitely. The receivables which were to grow out of it had sufficient substantiality to be recognized as assignable choses, the assignment to become complete when the debt came into being. The case is closely parallel to H. D. Roosen Co. v. Pacific Radio Pub. Co., 123 Cal.App. 525, 531, 11 P.2d 873, 875. It is there said, in part: "While on August 4th, the day of the assignment itself, there was no express agreement that Kriedt was to print the August issue for defendant, yet he had been doing defendant's work for a long time; and Dickow's testimony shows that defendant did not intend to make a change before that issue appeared. In furtherance of the purposes of both parties, an express contract for the printing was made verbally at the time of the acceptance on August 8th, whereby defendant undertook to pay plaintiff $900 out of the compensation to accrue. The fund was unquestionably existent potentially at the time of the acceptance; and, in view of the past relations of the parties and the testimony of Dickow as to contemplated continuance of the relationship, the assignment, when made on August 4th, had for its support not merely a supposititious expectancy, but a potentiality sufficient to validate an equitable transfer. Walker v. Rich, 79 Cal.App. 139, 144, 249 P. 56."

Is the assignment of such a potential chose protected by the recording statute, Chapter IIIb? Though subdivision (1) of § 3017 (above quoted), when read without reference to the context, seems to include only receivables, reflected in a book account, which are presently in existence and payable immediately or at some later date, plus such potential receivables as may grow out of performance of a presently existing contract, other provisions of the statute point to the conclusion that the phrase "due or to become due" used in connection with the words "open book account" includes future items of the account which enter into it as a result of later transactions in the course of dealings between the parties to the account. For instance, subdivision (3) of § 3017 defines creditor in such manner as to include one having a contingent claim. Under § 3018 he has priority over the assignee of any book account unless notice is recorded as required. Section 3019, which prescribes the requisites of the notice of assignment, says in subdivision 2 that the notice shall not be effective unless the "assignment, if it assigns accounts to arise in the future, gives the general nature of the business out of which such accounts are to arise and the address where such business is or will be carried on". (Emphasis added.) This recognizes a right to assign "accounts to arise in the future," not merely future items of an existing account. And the notice must give the "general nature of the business out of which such accounts are to arise and the address where such business is or will be carried on". This refers to accounts arising from future businesses, as well as future accounts arising out of going businesses. Subdivision 2(a) of § 3019 calls for: "A statement that the assignor intends to assign or has assigned an account or accounts then existing or thereafter arising to the assignee". (Emphasis added.) In the event the assignor intends to assign or has assigned specified accounts, the notice must set forth the names and addresses of the persons owing the same. As previously noted, the chapter is headed "Assignment of Accounts Receivable" and § 3020 requires the recorder to keep an index entitled "Index of Notices of Assignment of Accounts Receivable".

[6-11] The guiding star of statutory construction is the intention of the legislature. To the end that it be correctly ascertained the statute is to be read in the light of its historical background and evident objective. Stafford v. Realty Bond Services Corp., 39 Cal.2d 797, 805, 249 P.2d 241; 23 Cal.Jur. § 148, p. 773; "the objective sought to be achieved by a statute as well as the evil to be prevented is of prime consideration in its interpretation". Richfield Oil Corp. v. Crawford, 39 Cal.2d 729, 738, 249 P.2d 600, 605. All parts of the law are to be harmonized. "Where possible, all parts of a statute should be read together and construed to achieve harmony between seemingly conflicting provisions rather than holding that there is an irreconcilable inconsistency." Wemyss v. Superior Court, 38 Cal.2d 616, 621, 241 P.2d 525, 528. And if departure from the literal meaning of the text be necessary to effectuate the legislative intention, that should be done. "A statute must be so construed as to make sense; to make every clause and phrase effective in deriving the legislative intent; and when the true purpose of the statute has been determined, it must be liberally construed in order to effectuate the purpose. The manifest reason and purpose of an act must not be sacrificed to a literal interpretation of its verbiage. When the legislative intent has been ascertained, it must be enforced as intended notwithstanding the derived meaning may be inconsistent with the strict letter of the statute as enacted." People v. Villegas, 110 Cal.App.2d 354, 357-358, 242 P.2d 657, 659. In the light of these principles no difficulty is experienced in reaching the conclusion that this statute was not intended to change the law of assignability of potential receivables; that its primary purpose was to give priority to the first assignee of any such receivables as are recognized as assignable; that § 3017, properly construed, embraces present and future items of existing and future book accounts; that the word "contract" connotes future agreements as well as those existing at the time of the assignment which is to be protected by the recordation of notice.³

3. Section 3017(1) was amended in 1953 to read as follows: "'Account' means a debt, due or to become due, arising out of the sale, storage, transportation, care, repair, processing, manufacture or other improvement of tangible personal property, or arising out of a contract therefor, or arising out of the rendition of personal services which in the regular course of business will result in an open book account; * * *." Its terms are sufficiently obscure to prevent the amendment from throwing much helpful light upon the present problem, either by way of indicating a legislative intent to change the law or, on the other hand, merely to interpret the previous form of the section.

[12] The receivables here involved were covered by the assignment to plaintiff and they came into being and hence were fully assigned to him before the covering invoices were sold to defendant on February 3 and February 13, 1953. Notice of assignment having been recorded it was not necessary for Mann to give the debtor, George Moody, notice of his blanket assignment; it was perfected and acquired statutory priority over the later assignments to defendant.

Finding XI is erroneous, but other findings fully support the judgment, which is correct. Finding XI is stricken. The judgment is affirmed.

Civ. 21558.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 1, California.
Sept. 12, 1956.

Hearing Granted Nov. 8, 1956.

Proceeding on petition for writ of mandate ordering petitioner restored to position of deputy sheriff. The Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Bayard Rhone, J., denied writ of mandate and petitioner appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Doran, J., held that deputy sheriff's prior suspensions, which were effected without any hearing and without giving deputy sheriff proper or adequate opportunity to defend himself against them, were not proper grounds for discharge and also that petitioner could not be discharged on basis of violation technical rule, which had merely been assumed to apply to petitioner and in addition that evidence was insufficient to show that petitioner falsely and with knowledge of its falsity accused police sergeant of being intoxicated while working as a uniformed officer at an approved outside assignment.

Judgment and order reversed with directions, that writ of mandate issue.

Opinion, 297 P.2d 1022, vacated.

1. Officers ⇨70

Sheriffs and Constables ⇨21

A deputy sheriff or other public servant, after a long period of service, should not be discharged from office except in those cases where adequate grounds exist and where discharged employee has been accorded a fair and impartial hearing, and in such a case, it is essential that the employee's rights, together with well recognized humanitarian principles, be closely guarded and given every possible consideration.

2. Officers ⇨69.7

Where prior suspensions of deputy sheriff for disciplinary reasons were effected without any hearing and deputy sheriff was thus not given a proper or adequate opportunity to defend himself against such suspensions, prior suspensions were neither proper ground for discharge in subsequent hearing before Civil Service Commission, nor were properly admitted in evidence at that hearing.

3. Sheriffs and Constables ⇨21

Where deputy sheriff was charged with failure to go through proper channels in the designated chain of command in making an official communication to a captain in the sheriff's emergency reserve, and was discharged on basis of that and other charges, but the technical rule requiring such procedure was merely assumed to apply to reserve officers to which deputy sheriff had made his communications, such assumption was prejudicial to deputy sheriff's rights and such charge therefore could not be basis for discharge.

* Opinion vacated 306 P.2d 780.

4. Sheriffs and Constables Ⓒ21

Discharge of a deputy sheriff based upon something less than full proof of the elements of the charge cannot be given judicial approval.

5. Mandamus Ⓒ168(4)

In proceeding on petition for writ of mandate ordering petitioner restored to position of deputy sheriff, wherein it was disclosed one of the grounds for discharge was that petitioner had falsely accused police sergeant of having been intoxicated while working as a uniformed officer at an approved outside assignment, evidence was insufficient to show that deputy sheriff falsely and with knowledge of its falsity accused the police sergeant of being intoxicated at time in question.

DORAN, Justice.

Appellant Damiani, a Deputy Sheriff of Los Angeles County, was discharged for cause on November 18, 1954. A formal hearing, requested by appellant, was held before the County Civil Service Commission on December 22 and 23, 1954, and the order of discharge sustained. The appellant then petitioned the Superior Court for a Writ of Mandate which was denied, and the present appeal followed.

The Sheriff's letter giving notice of the discharge states that the appellant had violated certain rules of the Sheriff's Office which require official communications to be sent through channels or the "chain of command", in that "you on or about October 30, 1954, * * * communicated verbally and in writing directly with Captain Charles Mullison, of the Sheriff's Emergency Reserve", etc.; and that "on or about October 25, 1954, you submitted a signed, but undated report to your station Commander, Captain James E. Pascoe, in which you falsely stated that Sergeant Byron A. Mallette was intoxicated while off duty, but working in an approved outside assignment at the Elliott Junior High School, 2184 N. Lake Avenue, Altadena, California, between 8:00 p. m. and 11:30 p. m., as a uniformed officer". A further ground for discharge specified in the Sheriff's letter is that on May 1, 1952, appellant Damiani had been suspended 30 days for violation of rules and regulations, and on November 2, 1951, had been suspended for 5 days, "because you directed vile and profane language against your superior officer".

The trial court's findings in the mandamus proceeding were to the effect that the appellant had not been denied due process of law; that the findings of fact made by the Civil Service Commission were supported by substantial evidence; that appellant, previous to the discharge involved herein, had been "suspended, without pay for disciplinary reasons twice", for less than 30 days, and "that there is no provision for a hearing on a suspension for not longer than thirty days"; that the hearing before the Civil Service Commission was held "on due notice, and was full and fair", and that "Petitioner's discharge was justified".

It is one of the contentions that appellant did not violate the chain of command rule by making charges directly rather than "through channels", for the reason that Captain Mullison and Deputy Weberg mentioned in the Sheriff's letter, were "private citizens" deputized under the Disaster Relief Authority of Los Angeles County, and acting on the Emergency Reserve, which fact did not make such persons members of the Sheriff's Department; and that there was nothing in the Manual of Policy and Ethics prescribing the channels requirement in reference to such Reserves.

The appellant also argues that "There was not substantial evidence in the light of the whole record to support the findings of either the Civil Service Commission or the trial judge". It is likewise claimed that "No law or rules of any commission were presented to the trial court, nor * * * to this court, which allows former suspensions without a hearing to be used as a basis for a discharge".

[1] That the discharge of a deputy sheriff or other public servant, after a long period of service, is a matter of the utmost importance both to the individual and to the public, cannot be denied. It is likewise fundamental that such a discharge should not come about save in those cases where adequate grounds exist, and where the discharged employee has been accorded a fair and impartial hearing. And in such a case as the present, it is essential that the employee's rights, together with well recognized humanitarian principles, be closely guarded and given every possible consideration.

This fundamental duty devolves upon every official, commission and court before whom the matter is presented, from the lowest to the highest. The modern tendency of creating various boards and commissions with quasi-judicial powers and broad discretionary authority in no manner alters this basic rule. Any other view of the matter would seem to countenance an arbitrary grant of power quite un-American in principle.

In the instant litigation it appears that Louis J. Damiani had been employed as a deputy sheriff in Los Angeles County for six years, and previous to that period had been a police officer in another state. The reasons for Damiani's discharge, according to Sheriff Biscailuz's letter, are threefold, namely, that appellant made certain official communications directly to a superior officer rather than sending the same through a prescribed "chain of command" or official "channels"; that appellant had falsely accused Sergeant Mallette with having been intoxicated at a school dance; and finally, that on two previous occasions, several years before, Damiani had been suspended without pay.

From the record it is impossible to say which of these accusations was deemed vital or controlling, or whether it was only the sum total and cumulative effect thereof which was considered important enough to warrant appellant's discharge. The respondents' brief practically eliminates from consideration the last ground for discharge, namely the evidence of appellant's prior suspensions without pay, by stating that "While not sufficient standing alone to support any disciplinary action, it was properly considered in connection with the severity of the sentence to be given on the main charge". The respondent does not go on to state whether the "main charge" so mentioned is the violation of the channels rule, or the alleged false statements concerning Sergeant Mallette's intoxication. So far as the record shows, there is no "main charge", and the matter is thus left in an unsatisfactory and indefinite condition.

[2] Respondents' position in regard to the evidence of former suspensions cannot be upheld. As said in appellant's supplementary brief on rehearing, "Since the Court must assume that Petitioner paid the penalty of any such violations, (loss of pay, etc.), their inclusion as one of the three charges against him and their reason for his discharge is basically unfair, and there are no rules of any Commission justifying such procedure". In this connection it should be remembered that these prior suspensions were effected without any hearing and appellant was thus given no proper or adequate opportunity to defend himself. Such prior suspensions were neither proper grounds for discharge nor properly admitted in evidence, and the procedure in reference thereto must be deemed highly prejudicial to appellant's fundamental rights.

The charge that appellant's accusatory communications were not made through proper channels in the designated chain of command, in itself a technical matter, can be sustained only if it appears that the technical rules involved therein are clearly applicable to the case at hand. Yet, this highly important element has been assumed to exist and was not definitely established. It is not enough that there might be, as Captain Pascoe stated, some "general practice" relating to this matter. The record is barren of any definite showing that these "chain of command" requirements relied upon, actually apply to the Sheriff's Reserves to which Captain Mullison belongs.

[3,4] Captain Mullison was, according to the testimony, "connected with the Sheriff's Department * * * in the Reserve Section". The "duties of that position" are "to supply reserves as needed and as called for by the Captain of the Altadena Station". The Manual of Policy and Ethics prescribing the "channels" method of official communications fails to make any mention of such Reserves. The practical situation, therefore, is that appellant is charged with having breached a technical rule which has been assumed to apply to these reserves. This defect must be deemed prejudicial to the appellant's rights. The discharge of a deputy sheriff based upon something less than full proof of the elements of the charge, cannot be given judicial approval.

The appellant was clearly entitled to precise accusations and definite proof of serious grounds for discharge; nothing should be left to supposition. Yet in this case, as previously mentioned, appellant was presented with a conglomeration of charges, one of which was clearly improper, and another which is left in the realm of indefiniteness and surmise. Whether appellant was discharged for one or the other of the three charges, or on general principles, or for the sum total, cannot be ascertained. The entire proceeding is thus left in an unsatisfactory condition, difficult to understand and even more difficult to defend.

accused Sergeant Mallette of being intoxicated at the time in question. Even if it be assumed that appellant was entirely mistaken in believing such to be a fact, it does not follow that the accusation was made with knowledge of its falsity. If appellant had observed certain symptoms which from previous association indicated that Mallette was intoxicated, the conclusion which Damiani arrived at on the occasion in question, was not an unreasonable one.

The record indicates that the appellant was quite frank and open about the matter, even discussing it with Sergeant Mallette who testified that Damiani "called to me from the platform out in the yard and he said: 'What about being drunk at the Elliott School?'. I said, 'Well, what about it?' He said, 'Well, you were drunk'. I said, 'All right, just put it in writing and be sure to sign your name to it'." And, with such an apparent stamp of approval on Mallette's part, this is exactly what appellant did. Moreover, Captain Weberg, to whom appellant's report was submitted, seems to have more or less approved of it, and testified, "I might have agreed, I don't know", claiming to be somewhat confused about the matter.

All of this is a long ways removed from proof that appellant knowingly made false statements or was guilty of conduct which would justify a discharge. And this matter assumes much greater importance when it is considered that it cannot be determined whether Damiani's discharge was given on this or some other ground, or on general principles. In addition to the charges already mentioned, the Civil Service Commission seems to have also incorporated a general catch-all phrase in its conclusions to the effect that the appellant had "behaved in a manner to bring discredit upon himself and the department". In this indefinite state of the record it is futile to talk about substantial evidence in support of the findings.

The judgment and order are reversed, with directions that a Writ of Mandate issue, ordering that the appellant Louis Damiani be restored forthwith to his position as Deputy Sheriff as of November 18, 1954.

v.

Adolph William LEMPIA, Defendant and Appellant.

Cr. 5521.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 1, California.

Sept. 12, 1956.

Rehearing Denied Sept. 26, 1956.

Hearing Denied Oct. 9, 1956.

Proceeding on prisoner's application for a writ of error coram nobis, writ of audita querela, writ of habeas corpus, writ of certiorari, and recall of remittitur. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, David Coleman, J., denied the petition and prisoner appealed. The District Court of Appeal, White, P. J., held that where prisoner sought to vacate his judgment of conviction on ground that he pleaded guilty through mistake or fear, and on ground of illegality of procurement of evidence used against him, such grounds, if meritorious, could have been considered and remedied or corrected upon a motion for a new trial or upon an appeal from the judgment, and in view of fact prisoner did not avail himself of such statutory remedies a review of his conviction was not authorized upon a writ of error coram nobis.

Order affirmed.

1. Habeas Corpus ☞113(4)

Statute permitting appeals to the District Court of Appeal by the state from a final order of a superior court made upon the return of a writ of habeas corpus discharging a defendant after his conviction in a criminal case does not authorize an appeal by a convicted defendant from an order denying a petition for a writ of habeas corpus. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 1506.

2. Criminal Law ☞997(6)

Purpose of a writ of error coram nobis is to secure a release, where no other remedy exists, from a judgment rendered while there existed some fact which would have prevented its rendition if the trial court had known it and which, through no negligence or fault of the defendant, was not then known to the court.

3. Criminal Law ☞997(2)

The writ of error coram nobis will not issue for any cause for which there is another statutory remedy, the functions of such writ being strictly limited to an error of fact for which there is no other statutory remedy provided.

4. Criminal Law ☞274

Where record disclosed defendant was represented by counsel at all stages of proceedings from arraignment to judgment of conviction for violation of narcotics laws, his plea of guilty to such charge could not be set aside on the basis of mistake, ignorance, inadvertence and overreaching of free will. West's Ann.Health and Safety Code, § 11500.

5. Criminal Law ☞998

In order that it may be effective and within the possibility of favorable action thereon, a motion to vacate a judgment must be made within a reasonable time after such judgment has been rendered.

6. Criminal Law ☞997(12)

A petition for a writ of error coram nobis to set aside a defendant's judgment of conviction brought three years after the judgment of conviction and including a period of 16 months on parole during which time no effort was made to seek a remedy for the errors asserted in the petition, was not an application within a reasonable time, and therefore could not be acted upon favorably.

7. Criminal Law §997(1)

A writ of error coram nobis is not a catch-all by means of which those convicted of crime may litigate and relitigate the propriety of their convictions ad infinitum.

8. Criminal Law §997(2)

A writ of error coram nobis cannot be utilized to obtain adjudication of issues or errors that could have been remedied and corrected upon a motion for a new trial or upon an appeal from the judgment.

9. Criminal Law §997(2)

Where prisoner sought to vacate his judgment of conviction on ground that he pleaded guilty through mistake or fear, and on ground of illegality of procurement of evidence used against him, such grounds, if meritorious, could have been considered and remedied or corrected upon a motion for a new trial or upon an appeal from the judgment, and in view of fact prisoner did not avail himself of such statutory remedies a review of his conviction was not authorized upon a writ of error coram nobis.

10. Habeas Corpus §3, 4

Where the affidavit of complaint against a defendant charged with a crime and his commitment after conviction was sufficient, and the information stated facts constituting an offense of which the trial court had jurisdiction, all subsequent irregularities or errors, if any such occurred in the trial court, were matters for review upon motion for new trial or on appeal, and habeas corpus would not lie on account thereof.

11. Habeas Corpus §4

The writ of habeas corpus may not serve as a substitute for an appeal.

12. Habeas Corpus §4

It is only where facts alleged in a petition for habeas corpus indicate that the accused had no opportunity to present his contentions at the trial, or on appeal, that he may resort to such writ.

13. Habeas Corpus §3, 4

Where all matters set forth by a prisoner in his petition for habeas corpus were known to him at the time of trial and could have been raised on motion for a new trial or on appeal from the judgment, or both, he could not resort to a writ of habeas corpus to serve the function of an appeal.

14. Habeas Corpus §48

Folsom State Prison is not within the habeas corpus jurisdiction of the District Court of Appeal for the Second Appellate District, Division One.

WHITE, Presiding Justice.

This is an appeal from an order denying appellant's petition for a writ of error coram nobis, writ of audita querela, writ of habeas corpus, writ of certiorari, and recall of remittitur.

The record reveals that on December 3, 1951, in the Superior Court of Los Angeles County, an information was filed charging appellant with a violation of Section 11500 of the Health and Safety Code of California, and alleging two prior felony convictions.

On December 5, 1951, accompanied by counsel, appellant appeared in said superior court and entered his plea of not guilty. On February 11, 1952 appellant with his counsel, appeared before the court, withdrew his plea of not guilty and entered a plea of guilty to the charge made against him in the information. On motion of the district attorney each allegation of prior conviction was stricken from the record. On March 19, 1952 appellant's application for probation was denied, judgment was pronounced and he was sentenced to State Prison. No appeal was taken from the judgment.

On June 20, 1955 appellant filed his petition above referred to, and also his notice of appeal from the denial thereof. The petition was denied and the notice of appeal attached thereto was ruled premature on July 15, 1955. On July 29, 1955 appellant filed his notice of appeal.

As a basis for his aforesaid petition appellant alleges that:

"1. His plea of guilty was made through mistake, ignorance, inadvertence and overreaching of his free will.

"2. The evidence used against him was procured by the arresting officers through use of force and fear."

[2,3] When the foregoing grounds which form the basis of appellant's petition are considered, it appears that he has misconceived the purpose of the writ of error coram nobis. Under our law, a motion to vacate a judgment in the nature of a petition for a writ of error coram nobis is a remedy of narrow scope. As was said by our Supreme Court in People v. Adamson, 34 Cal.2d 320, 326, 210 P.2d 13, 15: "Its purpose is to secure relief, where no other remedy exists, from a judgment rendered while there existed some fact which would have prevented its rendition if the trial court had known it and which, through no negligence or fault of the defendant, was not then known to the court. [Citing cases.]" (Emphasis added.) See also People v. Reid, 195 Cal. 249, 255, 256, 232 P. 457, 36 A.L.R. 1435. The matters charged in appellant's petition constitute grounds, that if they had merit, would have been remediable by motion for a new trial and reviewable upon appeal therefrom. All the cases which have come to our attention concur in the conclusion that the writ will not issue for any cause for which the statute provides a remedy, and that its functions are strictly limited to an error of fact for which the statute provides no other remedy. Historically, it may be said that at the time the writ came into general use there was no remedy by appeal or by motion for a new trial, and the ordinary writ of error afforded to a considerable extent the remedy now available by appeal, and the writ of error coram nobis to a very limited extent the remedy now available upon motion for a new trial. The advent of these remedies by statutory enactment have supplanted this ancient writ in so far as its former scope is comprehended in and covered by the statutory remedies.

[4] Furthermore, appellant's contention that his plea of guilty should be set aside on the basis of mistake, ignorance, inadvertence and overreaching of his free will is unavailing because the record discloses that he was represented by counsel at all stages of the proceedings from arraignment to judgment.

Equally unavailing is appellant's claim that the evidence against him was procured by the officers through force and fear, because if such contentions were meritorious they furnished proper grounds for a motion for a new trial or an appeal.

[5,6] As a matter of legal principle, the rule has been frequently announced that, in order that it may be effective and within the possibility of favorable action thereon, a motion to vacate a judgment must be made "within a reasonable time" after such judgment has been rendered, and in this state, the concrete examples of what should be construed as "a reasonable time" would seem to point to the conclusion that in the matter now engaging our attention the delay has been so long that the prayer of appellant should not be granted. People v. Martinez, 88 Cal.App.2d 767, 773, 199 P.2d 375; People v. Black, 114 Cal.App. 468, 473, 300 P. 43; People v. Lumbley, 8

Cal.2d 752, 761, 68 P.2d 354. As was said in People v. Martinez, supra, 88 Cal.App.2d at page 773, 199 P.2d at page 379: “* * * An application for a writ of error coram nobis should be made within a reasonable time. Diligence is required. A convicted person is not permitted to allow years to pass during which witnesses die, disappear or forget, and his own imagination grows and expands. * * *” Appellant herein, for over a period of three years, which included a period of 16 months on parole, made no effort to seek a remedy for the errors which he now asserts existed since the time of the original judgment on March 19, 1952.

[8] The writ here sought serves a useful purpose, but also a limited one. It cannot be utilized to obtain adjudication of issues or errors that could have been remedied and corrected upon a motion for a new trial or upon an appeal from the judgment.

[9] Appellant challenges the claim that he was guilty of laches in filing his petition with the assertion that the basis of his writ arose after the holding in People v. Cahan, 44 Cal.2d 434, 282 P.2d 905, and that his delay was not deliberate. The grounds urged by appellant in his petition do not come within the purview of the case just cited. That case involved the question of illegal searches and seizure which was not involved in the case at bar. The grounds upon which appellant’s petition herein was predicated, if meritorious, could have been considered, remedied and corrected upon a motion for a new trial or upon an appeal from the judgment. Not having availed himself of these statutory remedies, a review is not authorized upon a writ of error coram nobis.

[10-14] If we should consider appellant’s petition as an original petition for a writ of habeas corpus it must be held that the grounds relied upon for issuance of the writ are insufficient. When, as here, the affidavit of complaint and commitment being sufficient, and the information states facts constituting an offense of which the court had jurisdiction, all subsequent irregularities or errors, if any occurred in the trial court, are matters for review upon motion for a new trial or on appeal, and habeas corpus will not lie on account thereof. The latter writ may not serve as a substitute for an appeal. In re Lindley, 29 Cal. 2d 709, 177 P.2d 918. It is only where the facts alleged indicate that the accused had no opportunity to present his contentions at the trial, or on appeal, that he may resort to the writ of habeas corpus. Had petitioner herein exhausted his remedy by motion for a new trial or by appeal (there being herein no question of the constitutionality of the statute under which he was convicted), habeas corpus might be available to him. But where, as here, all the matters set forth by appellant in his petition were known to him at the time of trial and could have been raised on motion for a new trial or on appeal from the judgment, or both, he cannot now resort to a writ of habeas corpus to serve the function of an appeal. In re Danford, 13 Cal.App. 741, 743, 110 P. 692; People v. Bronaugh, 100 Cal.App.2d 220, 223, 223 P.2d 256; In re Bell, 19 Cal.2d 488, 495, 122 P.2d 22. Furthermore, appellant is in Folsom State Prison, which is not within the habeas corpus jurisdiction of this court. People v. Martinelli, 118 Cal.App.2d 94, 98, 257 P.2d 37.

For the foregoing reasons, the order from which this appeal was taken is affirmed.

v.

The SUPERIOR COURT of the State of California, IN AND FOR the COUNTY OF LOS ANGELES, Respondent.

Civ. 21933.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 1, California.

Sept. 13, 1956.

Rehearing Denied Oct. 10, 1956.

Prohibition proceeding was brought in the District Court of Appeal to prevent the Superior Court of the State of California, in and for the County of Los Angeles, from trying petitioner on an information charging him with violation of the narcotics law. The District Court of Appeal, Nourse, J. pro tem., held that where petitioner failed to establish that officers did not have a warrant for his arrest, it was presumed that his arrest was lawful, and that the presumption was sufficient to support a finding by committing magistrate that arrest was lawful and that search as incident thereto was a reasonable one, and that Superior Court properly denied motion to set aside the indictment.

Alternative writ of prohibition discharged and peremptory writ denied.

Indictment and Information §140(2)

Where defendant failed to establish that officers, who found a capsule of heroin on defendant's person, did not have a warrant for his arrest, it was presumed that his arrest was lawful, and presumption was sufficient to support a finding by committing magistrate that the arrest of defendant was lawful and that search of defendant's person as an incident thereto was a reasonable one, and Superior Court properly denied defendant's motion to set aside indictment charging him with violation of narcotics law. West's Ann.Health & Safety Code, § 11500; West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 1963, subds. 1, 15, 33; West's Ann.Pen. Code, § 995.

Robert Thomas Baca, El Monte, for petitioner.

S. Ernest Roll, District Atty., Jere J. Sullivan, Lewis Watnick, Deputy Dist. Attys., Los Angeles, for respondent.

NOURSE, Justice pro tem.

Petitioner seeks a writ of prohibition to prevent the respondent court from trying him upon an information charging him with the violation of section 11500 of the Health and Safety Code, that court having denied his motion made pursuant to section 995 of the Penal Code to set aside that information.

It is petitioner's contention that the police did not have probable cause to believe that he had committed a felony and that therefore his arrest was illegal, and that the heroin found upon his person was illegally seized and was therefore improperly admitted into evidence by the committing magistrate.

The relevant facts, as shown by the evidence before the committing magistrate, are: The arresting officers had received, two or three days before the arrest, information from two sources that a person known only as "Al" and another known only as "Green Eyes" were selling narcotics from the hotel room in which petitioner was later arrested. This information had been received from two sources, one of which had supplied information to the officers before, but the officers had never made an arrest upon the basis of information given by this informant, and no testimony was given which would indicate that the informants were or were not reliable.

Prior to the arrest the officers had placed the hotel under surveillance and had seen quite a heavy traffic in and out of the hotel; and people in the traffic had been identified to the officers as addicts. On the day the arrest was made the arresting officers maintained a surveillance of the hotel, and they had observed two known narcotic users entering and leaving the hotel. The officers then entered the hotel and in a hallway thereof placed under arrest one Robert Rivera, the occupant of Room 8, and he gave his consent to the officers' entering his room. This they did. Upon entering Room 8 they found petitioner and one Frovo. They immediately placed both Frovo and petitioner under arrest, and upon searching petitioner found a capsule which was proved to contain heroin.

Over objection by counsel for petitioner the officers were then allowed to testify as to certain admissions made by petitioner. There was evidence that the officers did not have a warrant to search Room 8, but there was no direct evidence as to whether they had a warrant for the arrest of petitioner. There was no evidence that petitioner was the person known as "Al" or the person known as "Green Eyes," or that the officers placed petitioner under arrest under the belief that he was either of these persons. The capsule seized from petitioner's person was admitted into evidence by the committing magistrate over the timely objection of petitioner's counsel.

There can be little doubt that if there had been direct evidence that the arresting officers did not have a warrant for petitioner's arrest, the facts established by the evidence could not be held to constitute probable cause to believe that the defendant had committed a felony and thus made his arrest lawful. People v. Dixon, 46 Cal.2d 456, 296 P.2d 557; People v. Kitchens, 46 Cal.2d 260, 294 P.2d 17.

While it might well have been inferred by the committing magistrate from the evidence offered, that the officers did not have a warrant for petitioner's arrest, it was his function as the trier of the fact, and not ours, to draw that inference; and we must presume that he did not draw it. The petitioner having failed to establish that the officers did not have a warrant for petitioner's arrest, it is presumed that his arrest was lawful. Code Civ.Proc. § 1963, subds. 1, 15, 33; People v. Farrara, 46 Cal.2d 265, 294 P.2d 21. This presumption was sufficient to support a finding by the committing magistrate that the arrest was lawful and that therefore the search of defendant's person as an incident thereto was a reasonable one, and his admission of the capsule, which established the corpus delicti, into evidence was justified.

It follows that the respondent court properly denied petitioner's motion to set aside the indictment. Badillo v. Superior Court, 46 Cal.2d 269, 294 P.2d 23.

The alternative writ of prohibition heretofore issued is discharged, and a peremptory writ denied.

Plaintiff and Appellant,

v.

Miguel SOTO, Defendant and Respondent.

Cr. 3200.

District Court of Appeal, First District,
Division 1, California,

Sept. 4, 1956.

Prosecution for unlawful possession of heroin. The Superior Court, Alameda County, Donald K. Quayle, J., sustained defendant's motion to dismiss the information and the State appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Peters, P. J., held that where police officer received information that a narcotics party was being held in hotel room and was informed by a known narcotic user that such user had obtained narcotics in the room and that there were more narcotics in the room, officer had reasonable grounds for belief that registered occupant of room was guilty of felony and upon being admitted to room by defendant had reasonable grounds for belief that defendant was also guilty of unlawful possession of narcotics and therefore search of defendant and seizure of evidence thus obtained was not illegal.

Order reversed.

1. Indictment and Information ◊140(1)

In a proper case, the Superior Court may pass upon admissibility of evidence allegedly the product of an unlawful search or seizure in a proceeding to set aside an indictment. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 995.

2. Indictment and Information ◊140(1)

The scope of review under statute providing for setting aside of an indictment is to determine whether a magistrate has held the defendant to answer without reasonable or probable cause. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 995.

3. Indictment and Information ◊140(1)

Where the only evidence produced against a defendant at a preliminary hearing is incompetent and inadmissible there exists no reasonable or probable cause to hold defendant to answer, and therefore the competency of the evidence in such a situation is reviewable on a motion to set aside the indictment. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 995.

4. Indictment and Information ◊140(1)

On a motion to set aside an indictment on the ground of lack of reasonable or probable cause, the trial court has no power to pass on conflicts in the evidence. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 995.

5. Indictment and Information ◊140(2)

Admissions of a defendant after his arrest as to having spent the night in the room of a known narcotics user, and as to owning certain heroin and a needle, had to be disregarded on a motion to set aside his indictment on the ground of lack of reasonable or probable cause because of illegality of the only evidence introduced at his preliminary hearing. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 995.

6. Arrest ◊71

A search may be unlawful, although an arrest is legal.

7. Searches and Seizures ◊7(12)

The criterion as to the reasonableness of a search is whether or not there has been the commission of a public offense in the presence of a police officer, or whether, under the facts, the police officer has reasonable grounds to believe that a defendant may have committed a felony.

8. Arrest ◊63(4)

"Reasonable or probable cause" for making arrest and search means such a state of facts as would lead a man of ordinary caution or prudence to believe and conscientiously entertain a strong suspicion that an accused person is guilty of a crime.

Searches and Seizures ◊3(1)

The test of whether police have reasonable or probable cause for the search or arrest of a casual visitor in a room or house in which a known occupant has committed a felony, is whether there is reasonable cause for believing that such visitor himself, whoever he may be, also committed a felony.

13. Searches and Seizures ☞3(1)

Where police officer received information that narcotics party was being held in hotel room, and was informed by a known narcotic user that such user had obtained narcotics in the room and that there were more narcotics in the room, officer had reasonable grounds for belief that registered occupant of room was guilty of a felony and upon being admitted to the room by defendant had reasonable grounds for belief defendant was also guilty of unlawful possession of narcotics and therefore search of defendant and seizure of evidence thus obtained was not illegal.

14. Courts ☞97(1)

In view of fact that rules applicable to illegal searches are not based on due process, but are mere rules of evidence, District Court of Appeal is not bound by decisions of the United States Supreme Court on the subject.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., Clarence A. Linn, Asst. Atty. Gen., Arlo E. Smith, Deputy Atty. Gen., J. F. Coakley, Dist. Atty. of Alameda County, Oakland, for appellant.

George Nye, Public Defender, Enid Weseman, Asst. Public Defender, Oakland, for respondent.

PETERS, Presiding Justice.

Defendant was charged with unlawful possession of heroin, and with a prior conviction of the same offense. After being held to answer, defendant moved, under section 995 of the Penal Code, to dismiss the information. The trial court, on the ground that the sole evidence against defendant had been secured illegally, and was, therefore, inadmissible, dismissed the information. The People appeal.

[1-4] The first question presented is whether or not the Superior Court properly may pass upon the admissibility of evidence allegedly the product of an unlawful search or seizure in a proceeding under section 995. In a proper case, the Superior Court may do so. The scope of review under that section is to determine whether the magistrate has held the defendant to answer without reasonable or probable cause. When the only evidence produced against the defendant is incompetent and inadmissible, then there exists no reasonable or probable cause to hold him to answer. The competency of the evidence in such a situation is, therefore, reviewable on a motion made under section 995. Rogers v. Superior Court, 46 Cal.2d 3, 291 P.2d 929; Badillo v. Superior Court, 46 Cal.2d 269, 294 P.2d 23. But, on such a motion, the trial court has no power to pass on conflicts in the evidence. As was stated in Badillo v. Superior Court, 46 Cal.2d 272, 294 P.2d 25: "Accordingly, the information should not be set aside on the ground that essential evidence was illegally obtained if there is any substantial evidence or applicable presumption to support a contrary conclusion [citations], and in such cases the ultimate decision on admissibility can be made at the trial on the basis of all of the evidence bearing on the issue."

In the instant case, the only evidence before the trial court on the motion under section 995 of the Penal Code was the transcript of the preliminary hearing. At that hearing the only witness called was Officer Hilliard of the Oakland Police Department. It is our duty to ascertain whether his evidence discloses, without conflict, that the arrest and search of defendant were illegal.

Hilliard testified that about 8:30 a.m. on July 22, 1955, he was informed that another officer had received an anonymous telephone call to the effect that a narcotics party was going on in Room 37 of the Baldwin Hotel; that pursuant to that information he and another officer proceeded to the Baldwin Hotel; that the room clerk there informed him that the registered occupant of Room 37 was one Alphonso Garcia, also known as

"Wimpy"; that such a person was known to him as a narcotics user; that he then proceeded to Room 36, which adjoins Room 37, and interviewed the occupant; that this occupant stated that "for the past two weeks that a steady stream of people going in and out of Room 37 had bothered him, in fact at night had kept him awake most of the night," and that "there were peculiar sniffing noises coming from the room and he had heard conversation relating to narcotics and stuff"; that while he was talking to the occupant of Room 36 he saw a man by the name of Charles Shuck, a known narcotics user, come out of Room 37; that he asked Shuck what he was doing in that room and Shuck stated that he had gone to the room to use narcotics and had used heroin while in the room; that he asked Shuck if there were any more narcotics in the room; that Shuck replied that there were but that he did not know exactly where; that while he was talking to Shuck two other men approached Room 37; that he recognized one of the men as a known narcotics user by the name of Romero, also known as "Snake"; that he asked the men where they were going, and Romero stated that they were going to Room 37 to see "Wimpy"; that he and Romero then approached Room 37 and he knocked on the door; that a voice from inside asked who was there; that he replied "Me and Snake"; that the door was then opened by defendant Soto; that until that moment he did not know that Soto was in the room; that he proceeded into the room and notified Soto that he was under arrest; that he noticed "Wimpy" asleep in the bed and he awoke "Wimpy"; that while he was doing this, Soto started to put on his shoes; that he seized the shoes and found a hypodermic needle and eye dropper in one shoe and two packets of heroin in the other. Admittedly, the officers did not have a search warrant or a warrant of arrest.

[5] The defendant Soto was taken to the police department where he admitted that the heroin and needle belonged to him. At that time he stated that he had brought these articles to "Wimpy's" room the night preceding the arrest and had spent the night with "Wimpy". These admissions, on this motion, must be disregarded. Hall v. Superior Court, 120 Cal.App.2d 844, 262 P.2d 351; People v. Schuber, 71 Cal.App.2d 773, 163 P.2d 498.

Under this evidence, for the purpose of a motion under section 995 of the Penal Code, were the search and seizure illegal? That is the question.

[6,7] The parties first argue as to whether the arrest in the instant case was or was not a lawful one. That is not the decisive question involved. A search may be unlawful although the arrest is legal. People v. Brown, 45 Cal.2d 640, 290 P.2d 528. The real criterion as to the reasonableness of a search is whether or not there has been the commission of a public offense in the presence of a police officer, or whether, under the facts, the police officer has reasonable grounds to believe that the defendant may have committed a felony. See People v. Winston, 46 Cal.2d 151, 293 P.2d 40; People v. Rios, 46 Cal.2d 297, 294 P.2d 39; People v. Martin, 46 Cal.2d 106, 293 P.2d 52; People v. Blodgett, 46 Cal.2d 114, 293 P.2d 57; People v. Gale, 46 Cal.2d 253, 294 P.2d 13; People v. Johnson, 139 Cal.App.2d 663, 294 P.2d 189; People v. Villarico, 140 Cal.App.2d 233, 295 P.2d 76; People v. Martin, 140 Cal.App.2d 387, 295 P.2d 33; People v. Moore, 140 Cal.App.2d 870, 295 P.2d 969; People v. Rodriguez, 140 Cal.App.2d 865, 296 P.2d 38; People v. Moore, 141 Cal.App.2d 87, 296 P.2d 91; People v. Lujan, 141 Cal.App.2d 143, 296 P.2d 93; People v. Smith, 141 Cal.App.2d 399, 296 P.2d 913; People v. Sanders, 46 Cal.2d 247, 294 P.2d 10; People v. Dixon, 46 Cal.2d 456, 296 P.2d 557.

[8] Reasonable or probable cause has been discussed in many cases. Generally speaking, it means "such a state of facts as would lead a man of ordinary caution or prudence to believe, and conscientiously entertain a strong suspicion, that the person accused is guilty." People v. Smith, 141 Cal.App.2d 399, 296 P.2d 913, 915; see also People v. Villarico, 140 Cal.App.2d

233, 295 P.2d 76; People v. Rodriguez, 140 Cal.App.2d 865, 296 P.2d 38; People v. Moore, 141 Cal.App.2d 87, 296 P.2d 91; People v. Moore, 140 Cal.App.2d 870, 295 P.2d 969.

[9,10] In the instant case Officer Hilliard knew that the police had received an anonymous tip that a narcotic party was being held in Room 37 of the Baldwin Hotel. He discovered that Garcia was the registered occupant of that room. Then he learned from the occupant of an adjoining room that there was a steady stream of people going into Room 37, and that "sniffing" noises and conversation about narcotics came from the room. Then he learned from Shuck, a known user, that he had just used narcotics in that room, and that there were more narcotics in the room. He then recognized Romero, a known user, going to the room. Under such circumstances, if Garcia, the registered occupant of the room, was the person here involved, the arrest and search would clearly have been lawful, and respondent does not argue to the contrary. The law on this issue is clear. While an anonymous tip, of itself, cannot alone constitute reasonable grounds for a belief that a person is guilty of the commission of a felony, People v. Thymiakas, 140 Cal.App.2d 940, 296 P.2d 4, it is a factor to be considered. The police, in a proper case, may act on information received from others if the source is reliable. Willson v. Superior Court, 46 Cal.2d 291, 294 P.2d 36; People v. Boyles, 45 Cal.2d 652, 290 P.2d 535. When this factor is considered with the other information then known to Officer Hilliard it would appear that he had reasonable grounds to believe that a felony had been committed in that room. In People v. Maddox, 46 Cal.2d 301, 294 P.2d 6, the officers had defendant's residence under surveillance for about a month. They observed known narcotics users frequenting the premises. They were told by two visitors to the premises that they had just received a shot of heroin there. A search, based upon a forcible entry, was held to be lawful. A similar result was reached in People v. Sayles, 140 Cal.App.2d 657, 295 P.2d 579. There the police, knowing defendant was an addict, placed his home under surveillance. A paid informer told the police that defendant had narcotics in his home and had sold some to the informer. It was held that a search based on a forcible entry was legal because the officers had reasonable grounds to believe that defendant had committed a felony. See also Willson v. Superior Court, 46 Cal.2d 291, 294 P.2d 36; and People v. Villarico, 140 Cal.App.2d 233, 295 P.2d 76.

As already pointed out, if Garcia were the defendant in the instant case, the search would clearly have been a legal one. But he is not. Soto, a man the police officer, until his entry, did not know was in the room, is the defendant. Does that make any difference? Did the police have reasonable grounds to believe that Soto had committed a felony?

[11,12] There can be no doubt that under some circumstances the fact that the police have the reasonable and probable belief that the known occupant of a room or house has committed a felony will not justify the search or arrest of a casual visitor to that room or house. People v. Kitchens, 46 Cal.2d 260, 294 P.2d 17; People v. Sanders, 46 Cal.2d 247, 294 P.2d 10; People v. Schraier, 141 Cal.App.2d 600, 297 P.2d 81. But the rule is not absolute. Each case must turn on its own facts. The test is whether the police had reasonable cause for believing that the person arrested, whoever he may be, has committed a felony.

[13] In the instant case, for reasons already stated, the police officer had reasonable grounds to believe that the person or persons in Room 37 were in possession of narcotics. He had reasonable grounds to believe that the occupant or occupants of that room were committing a felony. The police officer thought that Garcia, the registered occupant of the room and who was known to the officer, was the culprit. But when the defendant Soto opened the door to the room, and the officer saw him in his bare feet, with Garcia asleep in the bed, he could reasonably conclude that Soto was not a mere innocent bystander or casual visitor. The officer had learned from Shuck that Shuck had just used narcotics in the room and that more narcotics were still there. The officer could reasonably conclude that Soto, the man who answered the door, had been in the room while Shuck had used the narcotics, and had furnished them to him. Accordingly, there existed "such a state of facts as would lead a man of ordinary caution or prudence to believe, and conscientiously entertain a strong suspicion, that the person accused is guilty." People v. Smith, 141 Cal.App.2d 399, 296 P.2d 913, 915.

[14] The respondent, in contending that reasonable grounds did not exist for his arrest and search, relies on several federal cases. Johnson v. United States, 333 U.S. 10, 68 S.Ct. 367, 92 L.Ed. 436; United States v. Di Re, 332 U.S. 581, 68 S.Ct. 222, 92 L.Ed. 210; Hernandez v. United States, 9 Cir., 17 F.2d 373. None of these cases involved facts such as ours. In the Johnson case the federal officers had been informed that unknown persons were smoking opium in a certain hotel. The officers could smell opium when they approached the suspected room. They arrested the occupants and a search disclosed opium. By a 5 to 4 decision the majority held the search to be illegal. The case is an argumentative authority in support of respondent, but we do not think the rule there adopted should be followed in this state. Inasmuch as the Supreme Court of this state has held that the rules applicable to illegal searches are not based on due process, but are mere rules of evidence, People v. Cahan, 44 Cal. 2d 434, 442, 282 P.2d 905, we are not bound by the decisions of the United States Supreme Court on the subject. As was said in the Cahan case, 44 Cal.2d at page 450, 282 P.2d at page 915: "In developing a rule of evidence applicable in the state courts, this court is not bound by the decisions that have applied the federal rule, and if it appears that those decisions have developed needless refinements and distinctions, this court need not follow them."

The California Supreme Court in People v. Michael, 45 Cal.2d 751, 753, 290 P.2d 852, has refused to follow the Johnson case in certain particulars. In People v. Bock Leung Chew, 142 Cal.App.2d 400, 298 P.2d 118, the other division of this court refused to follow the Johnson case in a factual situation where the basis of the suspicion for the arrest and search was much weaker than in the Johnson case. In the Chew case, Mr. Justice Dooling, speaking for the court, after referring to the facts and law of the Johnson case, stated, 142 Cal. App.2d 403, 298 P.2d 119: "With all due respect to the justices of that court [the United States Supreme Court] who joined in this holding, we cannot follow their reasoning and agree rather with the four justices who dissented." The Supreme Court of California has denied a hearing in the Chew case.

In the Di Re case an informer pointed out a particular individual as the possessor of counterfeit gasoline ration stamps. When this person was arrested, sitting beside him in the automobile was Di Re. Di Re was searched and counterfeit stamps were found on his person. The Supreme Court of the United States held that the arrest and search were not based on probable cause and were illegal. The mere presence of Di Re in the automobile was not, of itself, sufficient to create probable cause. Factually, the case differs from ours in that in the Di Re case the informer had definitely identified another individual as the sole and actual perpetrator of the crime. That is not so in the instant case. Here the reasonable suspicion was that the occupant or occupants of Room 37, whoever they might be, had committed the crime. This serves to distinguish the case. But, if the Di Re case stands for a rule contrary to the one stated in this opinion we do not think it is a sound rule, and we believe that it should not be followed.

In the Hernandez case, 17 F.2d 373, the narcotic agents had a house under surveillance. They saw the defendant come from the house accompanied by a known narcotics peddler. The two acted in a suspicious manner. Upon an arrest and search without a warrant, morphine was found in defendant's possession. The court held that there was no reasonable grounds for the search. The case is of little help in solving the instant one, differing as it does so materially on the facts.

For the foregoing reasons the order appealed from is reversed.

Ervln Scott ARMSTRONG, Petitioner,

v.

The SUPERIOR COURT of the State of California, IN AND FOR The COUNTY OF LOS ANGELES, Respondent, John Dolgner, Real Party In Interest.

Civ. 21920.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 1, California.

Sept. 13, 1956.

Action to recover damages for personal injury. Petitioner moved to quash service of summons. The Superior Court, County of Los Angeles, denied the motion and petitioner sought a writ of mandate requiring the court to issue an order quashing the service. The District Court of Appeal, Nourse, J. pro tem., held that where petitioner was served with a summons as a defendant designated in a complaint by a fictitious name, and the summons so served did not bear endorsement required by statute informing defendant that he was being served as the person sued under a specified fictitious name, the summons served was defective and its service was insufficient to give the Superior Court jurisdiction over petitioner.

Peremptory writ of mandate issued.

1. Appearance ⇨9(3)

Where petitioner for a writ of mandate to require superior court to issue an order quashing service of summons filed in the superior court a notice of special appearance and motion to quash the service, mere fact that he attempted to demonstrate that the court did not have jurisdiction of his person because he was not a party to the action by citing authorities which he mistakenly believed supported his contention did not change his appearance from a special one to a general one. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc., § 416.3.

2. Appearance ⇨9(1)

If a defendant by his appearance insists only upon the objection that he is not in court for want of jurisdiction over his person and confines his appearance for that purpose only, then he has made a "special appearance", but if he raises any other question, or asks any relief which can only be granted upon the hypothesis that the court has jurisdiction of his person, then he has made a "general appearance".

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "General Appearance" and "Special Appearance".

3. Parties ⇨51(4), 73

Under statute providing that a defendant may be designated by a fictitious name when the plaintiff is ignorant of defendant's true name, the plaintiff in an action to recover for personal injury had a right in good faith to allege that there were other tort-feasors than the named defendant, whose true names were unknown to him, and to thereafter amend his complaint so as to name those tort-feasors and serve summons upon them. West's Ann.Code Civ. Proc., § 474.

4. Limitation of Actions ⇨124

Mere fact that a complaint may not state a cause of action against fictitiously named defendants and that an amended complaint naming them might be barred by the statute of limitations does not prevent such fictitiously named defendants from being parties to an action. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc., § 474.

5. Process ⇨31

Where petitioner was served with a summons as a defendant designated by a fictitious name, and the summons so served did not bear an endorsement required by statute informing defendant that he was being served as the person sued under a specified fictitious name, the summons served was defective and its service was insufficient to give the Superior Court jurisdiction over petitioner. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc., § 474.

6. Process ⇨31

Statute providing that when a plaintiff is ignorant of the name of a defendant he may designate such defendant by any name, but that the copy of the first pleading or notice served upon such fictitiously designated defendant bear on the face thereof a notice informing such defendant that he is being served as the person sued under a specified fictitious name, is not directory but mandatory, and its effect is to deprive a court of the right to proceed against a defendant who is served with a summons omitting such notice. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc., § 474.

7. Mandamus ⇨187(4)

In proceeding by petitioner for a writ of mandate requiring superior court to issue an order quashing service of a summons, question of defect in summons served upon petitioner was properly before District Court of Appeal in view of fact that notice of motion to quash the summons advised superior court and plaintiff that the defect in the summons was one of the grounds upon which the motion would be made and in view of fact that plaintiff made no motion in superior court to strike an affidavit of petitioner which established the defect in the summons served upon him. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc., § 416.3.

8. Process ⇨158

Mere fact that a statute precludes a clerk of court from entering a default and the superior court from entering a judgment by default upon a person designated in a summons or other process under a fictitious name, who, when served, does not receive a process bearing a statutory endorsement informing him that he is the person sued under a specified fictitious name, does not mean that a person served with a summons defective under such statute is required to take his chance that neither the clerk nor the court will, inadvertently, act contrary to the terms of the statute, but he may move to quash service of such process. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 474.

Los Angeles, for respondent.

NOURSE, Justice pro tem.

Petitioner seeks a writ of mandate pursuant to section 416.3, Code of Civil Procedure, requiring respondent court to issue an order quashing the service of summons on petitioner in an action brought by one Dolginer to recover damages for personal injury.

Dolginer's action was commenced on December 8, 1954. The complaint named as defendants one Stover and Doe One and Doe Two. By paragraph I of the complaint it is alleged "That the defendants Doe One and Doe Two are fictitious, their true names being unknown to plaintiff and when the same are ascertained, leave of court will be asked to amend this complaint accordingly."

In the charging paragraphs of the complaint it is alleged that the defendants operated a certain automobile in a careless and negligent manner so as to cause the same to collide with plaintiff's automobile, and "That by reason of the aforesaid carelessness, recklessness and negligence of the defendants, and each of them" plaintiff's automobile was damaged, the plaintiff sustaining injuries to his person.

The petition here alleges, and its allegations are admitted by the demurrers of respondent and real party in interest, that on April 8, 1956, a copy of the summons and complaint was served upon petitioner and that the summons so served did not bear the endorsement required by section 474, Code of Civil Procedure. On April 17, 1956, petitioner filed in the respondent court a notice of special appearance and motion to quash service of summons upon the ground that he was not named as a defendant in the action and on the further ground that the summons did not bear the endorsement required by section 474 of the Code of Civil Procedure. Petitioner asked no relief from the court other than that the service of summons be quashed.

By his notice of motion to quash the service of summons, petitioner only designated, as the matters upon which his motion would be based, "all papers on file in this case and the attached Memorandum of Points and Authorities." In the exhibits to supplemental points and authorities filed with respondent court, petitioner filed with the court his affidavit, the facts stated in which establish the failure of the summons served upon him to be endorsed in accordance with section 474, Code of Civil Procedure. Thereafter the court denied his motion.

[1] It is the contention of respondent and real party in interest that petitioner made a general rather than a special appearance, and that therefore, irrespective of the merits of the points he raises here, the trial court acted properly in denying the motion. They base this contention upon the fact that the first ground stated by petitioner in his motion to quash constituted in effect a general demurrer to the complaint and therefore a request for relief from the court and a general appearance; and upon the fact that in the points and authorities filed by petitioner with the respondent court, defendants cited authorities to the effect that where a person is sued under a fictitious name and no attempt is made in the original complaint to state a cause of action against him, and later an attempt is made to amend the complaint as against him, the statute of limitations "is computed from the date of the alleged acts to the date of the filing of the amended complaint and not to the date of the filing of the original complaint."

This contention of respondent cannot be sustained. A reading of the notice of motion to quash makes it apparent that the only relief sought by petitioner was to quash service of summons upon him upon the grounds that the court had not thereby acquired jurisdiction of his person. The fact that he attempted to demonstrate that the court did not have jurisdiction of his person because he was not a party to the action by citing authorities which he mistakenly believed supported his contention did not change his appearance from a special one to a general one.

[2] The test as to whether an appearance is general or special is, "Did the party appear and object only to the consideration of the case or any procedure in it because the court had not acquired jurisdiction of the person of the defendant or party? If so, then the appearance is special. If, however, he appears and asks for any relief which could be given only to a party in a pending case, or which itself would be a regular proceeding in the case, it is a general appearance regardless of how adroitly, carefully or directly the appearance may be denominated or characterized as special. * * * The rule in this regard may be epitomized by saying that if a defendant by his appearance insists only upon the objection that he is not in court for want of jurisdiction over his person and confines his appearance for that purpose only, then he has made a special appearance, but if he raises any other question, or asks any relief which can only be granted upon the hypothesis that the court has jurisdiction of his person, then he had made a general appearance." Judson v. Superior Court, 21 Cal.2d 11, 13, 129 P.2d 361, 362; see also Hernandez v. National Dairy Products Co., 126 Cal.App.2d 490, 272 P.2d 799.

[3,4] Petitioner contends that the complaint here was insufficient to make him a party to the action and that therefore the service of summons upon him did not subject his person to the jurisdiction of the court. This contention cannot be sustained. The plaintiff, under provisions of section 474, Code of Civil Procedure, had a right in good faith to allege that there were other tort-feasors than the named defendant,¹ whose true names were unknown to him, and to thereafter amend the complaint so as to name those tort-feasors and serve summons upon them. If it be a fact that the complaint here does not state a cause of action against the fictitiously named defendants, and that therefore an amended complaint naming them might be barred by the statute of limitations, this did not prevent them from being parties to the action.

In support of his contention, petitioner cites Gates v. Wendling Nathan Co., 27 Cal. App.2d 307, 81 P.2d 173, and Stanley v. Kawakami, 127 Cal.App.2d 277, 273 P.2d 709. Petitioner misconceives the rule laid down by these cases. In neither of them was it held that a fictitious defendant, against whom a cause of action was not stated, could not be served with process and jurisdiction thus obtained of his person. All that the court held in each case was that if the original complaint did not purport to state a cause of action against the defendants sued under fictitious names, and the statute of limitations had run before they were served with process, then the action was barred by the statute.

[5,6] We believe, however, that the respondent court was in error in denying plaintiff's motion to quash the service upon the grounds that the summons served upon petitioner was fatally defective in not being endorsed so as to show that the petitioner was served as one of the persons sued under a fictitious name as required by section 474, Code of Civil Procedure, as amended in 1953. The provisions which were added to the section by the 1953 amendment provide in part as follows: "no default or default judgment shall be entered against a defendant" sued under a fictitious name "unless it appears that the copy of the summons or other process * * * served upon" the defendant bears upon its face the notice we have heretofore mentioned as lacking in the summons in question. [Emphasis added.] This statute is not directory but mandatory, and its effect is to deprive the court of the right to proceed against a defendant served with such a defective summons; that is to say, its effect is to make the service of such a defective summons insufficient to give the court jurisdiction over the person of the defendant.

Respondent has cited us to a number of cases arising under section 474, Code of Civil Procedure, before the addition to that section in 1953 of the provisions we have heretofore quoted, and in which it is held that the provision of the statute that after the discovery of the true name of a person sued under a fictitious name the complaint might be amended to state the true name, was only directory, and that omission to amend the complaint before the entry of a default judgment against such a defendant constituted error only and did not affect the jurisdiction of the court to enter a default judgment.

These cases are clearly not in point, for there the statute did not, by its terms, in any wise take away from the court the power to proceed, as does the matter added to the section by the amendment of 1953.

1. We do not pass upon the question as to whether or not the allegations of paragraph 1 of the complaint are sufficient to authorize an amendment to the complaint naming petitioner as a party to the action, though we note that the paragraph does not allege that John Doe One and John

Doe Two are persons whose names are unknown to the plaintiffs and who are therefore sued under said fictitious names, but that on the contrary the allegation is that they are fictitious persons; and the word fictitious means that which is not real but imaginary.

Counsel for the real party in interest assert that the question of the defect in the summons served upon the petitioner is not properly before us. This is so, they assert, because the affidavit of petitioner which established the defect in the summons served upon him was not part of the record upon which the notice of motion stated the motion would be based.

[7] This contention cannot be sustained. The notice of motion clearly advised respondent court and the real party in interest that the defect in the summons was one of the grounds upon which the motion would be made. The fact of the defect was a matter within the knowledge of the defendant, and he could not be taken by surprise by the proof of that fact by petitioner's affidavit. It was within the discretion of the trial court to, and it apparently did, receive this affidavit, and the real party in interest made no motion in that court to strike it from the files or to controvert it. He thus waived the defect in the notice.

Real party in interest also asserts that petitioner has a speedy and adequate remedy at law in the lower court, and that he is not injured by the denial of his motion to quash the summons. He says that this is so because the section precludes the clerk from entering a default, and the lower court from entering a judgment by default upon the service here made upon the petitioner; and that it is to be presumed that the clerk will not enter the default or the court enter a judgment, even should the clerk inadvertently enter a default.

[8] There is no substance in this contention. We do not think that it could be held that one who is served with a defective summons is required to take his chance that neither the clerk nor the court will, inadvertently, act contrary to the terms of the statute, and that he may not have notice of the entry of a judgment inadvertently entered against him until after his time to move to set aside that judgment has expired. To so hold would be to penalize the party for diligence in protecting his own rights.

Let a peremptory writ of mandate issue requiring the respondent court to enter its order quashing service of summons and complaint upon the petitioner in the action bearing number 637257 in that court.

Ernest TOMSON, by and through his guardian ad litem, Helen Tomson, and Helen Tomson, Plaintiffs and Appellants,

v.

Anthony KISCHASSEY, Gladys M. McPhall, William C. McPhall, Howard T. Kischassey and Helen M. Kischassey, Defendants and Respondents.

Civ. 5172.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

Sept. 7, 1956.

Action by passenger on bicycle for injuries resulting from a collision between the bicycle and an automobile on a street at night. The Superior Court, San Diego County, Joe L. Shell, J., rendered judgment for motorist and bicycle passenger appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Griffin, Acting P. J., held that refusal of trial court to instruct jury that if they found that driver of bicycle was negligent they must also determine whether driver's negligence should be imputed to passenger, and before it can be so imputed, they must find that passenger and driver were in joint or common possession and control of bicycle, in conjunction with the court's refusal to give instructions relating to the standard of care or conduct of children and the amount of caution required of a motorist and that of a bicycle driver constituted reversible error.

Judgment reversed.

Opinion, 299 P.2d 933, vacated.

1. Appeal and Error ⇨1064(1)

In bicycle passenger's action for injuries received when bicycle on which he was riding collided with automobile approaching from opposite direction, giving instruction that no person driving a motor vehicle shall knowingly permit any person to ride on any portion of vehicle not designed or intended for use of passengers, when considered with section of Vehicle Code which provides that any person riding a bicycle upon a highway shall be granted all the rights and shall be subject to all the duties applicable to the driver of an automobile, was not prejudicial error. West's Ann.Vehicle Code, §§ 31, 32, 452, 596.5.

2. Automobiles ⇨246(35)

In personal injury action by bicycle passenger who was riding tandem at time of collision with automobile approaching from opposite direction at night, where passenger was 15 years of age and operator of bicycle only 13, court should have given instruction relating to standard of care and conduct of children in conjunction with instruction that bicycle riders have the same right as motorists to use streets and that former are chargeable with only ordinary care for their own safety as persons of like age, intelligence and experience would exercise under like circumstances.

3. Automobiles ⇨246(10)

In bicycle passenger's action for injuries received when bicycle on which he was riding collided with automobile approaching from opposite direction, instruction that it was duty of motorist to be vigilant at all times and to keep vehicle under such control that to avoid a collision he could stop as quickly as might be required of him by eventualities that would be anticipated by an ordinarily prudent driver, and that it was the motorist's duty to exercise ordinary care to avoid placing himself and others in danger and to exercise ordinary care at all times to avoid a collision was insufficient.

4. Negligence ⇨93(8, 14)

Contributory negligence of a driver of a vehicle is not ordinarily imputable to his passenger or guest.

5. Negligence ⇨93(14)

Where there is nothing in common between a passenger and a driver of vehicle except a common destination and a common purpose in going there, the negligence of driver is not to be imputed to passenger.

6. Appeal and Error ⇨1067Negligence ⇨141(11)

In action by bicycle passenger who was riding tandem at time of collision with automobile, refusal to instruct jury that if they found that driver of bicycle was negligent, they must also determine whether his negligence should be imputed to the passenger, and that before it could be so imputed they must find that passenger and driver were then in joint or common possession and control of bicycle, in conjunction with court's refusal to give instructions relating to standard of care or conduct of children 13 and 15 years old riding on bicycle, and amount of caution required of driver of automobile and that of a bicycle driver, constituted reversible error. West's Ann.Vehicle Code, §§ 31, 32, 452, 596.5.

7. Appeal and Error ⇨207Trial ⇨125(4)

In personal injury action, reference in argument to jury to ability or inability of defendant to respond to money judgment is improper and such reference by defendant invites error on part of plaintiff to show that defendant is in fact insured, and any such conduct if prejudicial might require reversal of judgment if proper objection is made.

GRIFFIN, Acting Presiding Justice.

Plaintiffs and appellants, Helen Tomson and her son, Ernest Tomson (aged 15) through his mother as guardian ad litem, brought this action against defendants and respondents for claimed damages for injuries resulting from a collision on the night of June 10, 1952, between a bicycle operated by one John Simmons (aged 13) and on which Ernest was riding tandem and a car owned by defendants Gladys and William McPhail and operated by defendant Anthony Kischassey (aged 17). His parents are also named herein as defendants. The accident occurred on Garfield Avenue, the paved portion of which is 18 feet wide with 3-foot shoulders, near La Mesa. It runs in a general north-south direction. Chatham Street runs in an east-west direction and forms a "T" intersection with Garfield Avenue.

Anthony was driving the car east on Chatham and proceeded to turn north on Garfield. About that time he noticed two boys on bicycles proceeding northerly on Garfield, one near the center line and one near the east edge of the pavement. He said he noticed no boys approaching him on the west side of Garfield but apparently Ernest and John were riding in a southerly direction, without the aid of lights on John's bicycle, which he was steering. As Anthony started to pass the two cyclists, he proceeded on the west side of Garfield and came in collision with the bicycle on which Ernest was riding tandem. He was seated on a permanently attached luggage rack over the rear wheel. It knocked the boys to the ground and injured Ernest quite severely. The speed of the defendants' car was fixed at about 10-20 miles per hour at the time. Either John invited Ernest to ride on the rack of his bicycle to take Ernest home or Ernest asked John for a ride home on Ernest's bicycle because John's bicycle was not at the oil station where he expected it would be after the Boy Scout meeting. No money or other consideration was paid nor agreed to be paid for the ride. A jury verdict was rendered in favor of defendants. The principal complaint on appeal involves instructions which were given or refused and claimed misconduct of defense counsel.

[1] On voir dire examination of one juror, plaintiffs' counsel, after asking the same question of the five previous jurors without objection, propounded a question as to whether the juror had any prejudice, one way or the other, in the event the evidence showed two people were riding on the same bicycle. Objection was then made by defendants' counsel and he stated as a reason that there might be some question of law involved "concerning the propriety of that activity". The objection was overruled and the juror remarked that he had been informed that it was against the law for two children to ride on the same bicycle and if so, he "might be prejudiced in that matter". He was immediately informed that the court would admonish him as to the law and no further objection was made. It later admonished the jury to erase the form of objection from their minds since it had not then been established that such conduct was against the law and indicated that the court would later instruct on this subject. Thereafter the court gave, at the request of defendants, an instruction in the language of section 596.5 of the Vehicle Code, which provides:

"Unlawful Riding. No person shall ride, and no person driving a motor vehicle shall knowingly permit any person to ride on any vehicle upon any portion thereof not designed or intended for the use of passengers. This provision shall not apply to an employee engaged in the necessary discharge of his duty or to persons riding within or upon vehicle bodies in space intended for any load on said vehicle."

Plaintiffs' counsel contends that this was the only law in support of the juror's information that it was a violation of the law to ride tandem on one bicycle and that the section itself does not prohibit such an act.

In La Fleur v. Hernandez, 84 Cal.App.2d 569, 574, 191 P.2d 95, it was questioned whether that section was applicable where the passenger was riding on the handlebars of a bicycle. It concluded, however, that the error, if any, was not prejudicial.

Section 31 of the Vehicle Code defines a vehicle as a "device in, upon or by which any person or property is or may be propelled, moved or drawn upon a highway, excepting a device moved by human power * * *." That section especially eliminates a bicycle in the definition of a vehicle. Section 32 defines a motor vehicle and likewise excludes a self-propelled bicycle. The only section of the Vehicle Code which could possibly include it is section 452, which provides that every person riding a bicycle or riding or driving an animal upon a highway shall be granted all of the rights and shall be subject to all of the duties applicable to the driver of a vehicle, but this division (9) excepts those provisions which by their very nature can have no application. Section 596.5 is included within division 9 (traffic laws). It therefore appears that it might possibly apply to riding a bicycle upon a highway but it would be difficult to hold that it applied to a horse being ridden bareback and double. Apparently, in James v. Myers, 68 Cal.App.2d 23, 156 P.2d 69, a similar question arose where a motorcycle operator and his companion were riding on the single seat of the vehicle intended and designed for the exclusive use of the operator. The court held it was a violation of section 596.5 of the Vehicle Code. If it could be applied to a motorcycle under section 452, the trial court was justified in submitting the question of its application to a bicycle to the jury. No prejudicial error resulted in this respect.

[2] The trial court refused plaintiffs' proffered instruction in the language of BAJI 147 as to the standard of care or conduct of children, claiming it was "inapplicable". The reason it was inapplicable is not indicated. Here, the plaintiff was 15 years of age and the operator of the bicycle was 13. The evidence produced might well have justified the giving of this instruction. A similar instruction in Blanton v. Curry, 20 Cal.2d 793, 129 P.2d 1 (12-year-old child) and Kelley v. City & County of San Francisco, 58 Cal.App.2d 872, 137 P.2d 719 (13-year-old boy and a junior traffic officer acquainted with traffic and safety laws) was approved.

The court did give an instruction that bicycle riders have the same right as automobile drivers to the use of the streets and the former are chargeable with only such ordinary care for their own safety as a person of like age, intelligence and experience would exercise under the same or similar circumstances. The proffered instruction should have been given since the instruction given only partially covered the subject matter.

[3] The court also refused plaintiffs' proffered instruction in the general language of BAJI 138-A and 201-F, with modifications, in reference to the amount of caution required of the driver of a motor vehicle and also that of a bicycle rider. This type of instruction was approved in O'Brien v. Schellberg, 59 Cal.App.2d 764, 770, 140 P.2d 159. However, the proffered instructions modified the BAJI instructions to the extent that they may have been considered objectionable. The court did give a general instruction on this subject with the statement that it is the duty of the driver of a motor vehicle using a public highway to be vigilant at all times and to keep the vehicle under such control that to avoid a collision he can stop as quickly as might be required of him by eventualities that would be anticipated by an ordinarily prudent driver in a like position, and it is his duty to exercise ordinary care at all times to avoid placing himself and others in danger and to exercise ordinary care at all times to avoid a collision. This instruction only partially covered the subject matter.

A more serious question arises as to the refusal of the trial court to give plaintiffs' proffered instructions to the effect that if plaintiff was enjoying the hospitality of John Simmons and was riding on the bicycle for his own pleasure or on his own business without making any return to or conferring any benefit on him, other than the mere pleasure of his company, then plaintiff Ernest Tomson was a guest and the negligence of the driver is not then imputed to a guest. The court agreed, in chambers, to give an instruction in the general language of BAJI 210-E to the effect that if John was negligent and his negligence contributed in some degree as a proximate cause to the injury of plaintiff, the jury must determine whether John's negligence should be imputed to plaintiff, thus constituting contributory negligence on his part, and barring recovery by him; that to so impute negligence, it must find plaintiff and the driver were then in joint or common possession and control of the bicycle, with the two having equal rights to be heard in its control and management. The proffered instructions were refused as "covered by court's instruction on imputed negligence". Apparently the trial judge, when he came to this instruction, in reading it to the jury, did start to read it in the general language of BAJI 210-E, and then, for some unexplained reason, stopped and told the jury to strike it out. Apparently, no other or further instruction was given on the subject of imputed negligence. The instruction the court ordered stricken was not placed in the record on appeal among the "refused" instructions but, as pointed out in a petition for rehearing, it apparently was not given.

[4-6] The rule is well established that the contributory negligence of a driver of a vehicle is not ordinarily imputable to his passenger or guest. Pope v. Halpern, 193 Cal. 168, 173-174, 223 P. 470. Where there is nothing in common between a passenger and a driver of a vehicle except a common destination and a common purpose in going there, the negligence of the driver is not to be imputed to the passenger. Campagna v. Market St. Ry. Co., 24 Cal. 2d 304, 149 P.2d 281. In the instant case the jury was not instructed that if it found John was negligent, it must also determine whether his negligence should be imputed to plaintiff, and that before it could be so imputed it must find that plaintiff and the driver were then in joint or common possession and control of the bicycle. Plaintiff was entitled to have his or some adequate instruction given on this subject.

This fact, in conjunction with the other instructions refused, clearly constitute reversible error.

[7] Another serious question is jointly raised by counsel for plaintiffs and for amicus curiae. By stipulation, the argument to the jury and on the motion for new trial was not reported. Plaintiffs now claim that in the argument to the jury, defendants' counsel stated that his client was "a young man" and that "In the event you were to give plaintiffs a verdict of say $5,000.00, how much would you think Anthony could pay on such a judgment? $50.00 a week? Assuming that he could pay as much as $50.00 a week, it would take him 100 weeks to pay $5,000.00. Any higher verdict would take a comparable longer time to pay; and anything like $25,000.00 would be entirely out of the question for him to pay." In some sort of a hearing before the trial judge, after this appeal had been taken, counsel for plaintiffs endeavored to have counsel for defendants agree as to what was said in the argument to the jury in this respect. He denied that such statement was made and claims he only referred to how long it would take to earn $5,000, and that that sum would go a long way, and that he made no remark about defendant's ability to pay.

Had plaintiffs' claim affirmatively appeared as a part of the record of the argument to the jury, it would have been error for either counsel to refer to the ability or inability of a defendant in any such action to respond to the judgment rendered. By such conduct, counsel invites error on the part of plaintiff to show that defendants are in fact insured (which plaintiffs claim is a fact) and any such conduct, if prejudicial, might well call for a reversal of the judgment if proper objection is made at the time and a request made that the court instruct the jury to disregard the statement. Olsen v. Standard Oil Co., 188 Cal. 20, 204 P. 393; Drotleff v. Renshaw, 34 Cal.2d 176, 208 P.2d 969. Apparently, the authorized record before this court does not indicate that objection to the claimed argument of counsel was made at the time and no request was then made to the court to instruct the jury to disregard it. There was a conflict in the supplemental reporter's transcript as to what was said in the argument in this respect and the court made no finding on the subject.

Since a reversal of the judgment is otherwise required, on the next trial such claimed misconduct, if true, may well be avoided.

Judgment reversed.

Plaintiff and Respondent,

v.

Herbert DIAMOND, E. B. Corbin, and H.
Grabell & Sons of California, a corporation, Defendants,

E. B. Corbin, Appellant.

Civ. 21773.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 1, California.

Sept. 11, 1956.

Rehearing Denied Sept. 28, 1956.

Action by drawee bank against drawer of check, payee of check and endorser for declaratory judgment. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, John Gee Clark, J., entered judgment adverse to endorser, and endorser appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Nourse, J. pro tem., held that evidence sustained finding that endorser had notice of infirmity in check at time he took check from payee and that check was paid by bank by mistake.

Affirmed.

1. Declaratory Judgment ☞316

Drawee bank's complaint against drawer, payee and endorser of check which had been paid to endorser after drawer had ordered bank to stop payment was sufficient to state cause of action for declaratory relief determining if, at time of payment, drawer was indebted to payee or endorser or if endorser was then a holder for value and whether or not drawer was entitled to reimbursement from bank and bank was entitled to reimbursement from payee and endorser.

2. Declaratory Judgment ☞6

While court may under certain circumstances, in its discretion, refuse to accept jurisdiction and declare rights of parties, it is not obligated to so exercise its discretion where complaint shows that an actual controversy does exist.

3. Declaratory Judgment ☞6

Where a multiplicity of actions would result unless rights of parties were first declared and relief given accordingly in same action, it would be abuse of discretion to deny declaratory relief.

4. Declaratory Judgment ☞388

Where complaint stated cause of action for declaratory relief, court had jurisdiction of entire matter and jurisdiction to render money judgment.

5. Banks and Banking ☞227(2) Evidence ☞317(7)

In action by drawee bank against endorser to whom check was paid, testimony of officer of bank that order to stop payment had been received by bank and had been signed by drawer of check was material and was not hearsay.

6. Evidence ☞317(7)

In action by drawee bank against endorser to whom check had been paid after drawer had ordered payment to be stopped, testimony of drawer that neither he nor his corporation had been indebted to payee was part of res gestae and was not objectionable as hearsay.

7. Evidence ☞502

In declaratory judgment action by drawee bank against drawer, payee and endorser after drawer had ordered payment upon check stopped, it was within discretion of trial court to admit testimony of drawer as to conclusion that neither he nor his corporation had been indebted to payee and to allow endorser to cross-examine drawer to bring out facts from which contrary conclusion might be drawn.

8. Appeal and Error ⇨731(5)

Assignment of error that finding was contrary to evidence was defective in form where appellant made no attempt to direct attention of District Court of Appeal to evidence upon subject in question.

9. Banks and Banking ⇨227(3)

In action by drawee bank against endorser to whom check was paid after drawer had delivered to bank order to stop payment, evidence sustained finding that endorser had notice of infirmity in check at time he took check from payee and that check was paid by bank by mistake.

10. Bills and Notes ⇨335

Endorser who had notice of infirmity in check at time he took check from payee did not become a "holder in due course." West's Ann.Civ.Code, §§ 3133, subd. 4, 3137.

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Holder in Due Course".

11. Banks and Banking ⇨226

Drawee bank's complaint against endorser to whom check had been paid after drawer had delivered to bank order to stop payment was sufficient to raise issue of whether the check was paid by mistake, in view of allegation of facts from which mistake could be inferred, although complaint did not use the word mistake.

Hy Schwartz, Beverly Hills, for appellant.

Swanwick, Donnelly & Proudft, and Donald O. Welton, Los Angeles, for respondent.

NOURSE, Justice pro tem.

Appellant E. B. Corbin is one of the defendants in an action brought by respondent for declaratory and other relief. Appellant appeals from a money judgment rendered against him in the amount of $672.75, which was the full amount sought by the complaint.

Appellant makes five assignments of error. We shall treat them in the order in which they are set forth in the brief.

Appellant's first two points may be treated together as the second is but a corollary of the first. His first point is that the complaint does not state facts sufficient to state a cause of action for declaratory relief; his second point is that inasmuch as the complaint does not state a cause of action for declaratory relief, the court did not have jurisdiction to render the money judgment against him.

There is no merit in these points. By its complaint, the plaintiff alleged that prior to September 4, 1954, the defendant H. Grabell & Sons of California (hereinafter called Grabell) executed and delivered to the defendant Diamond a check dated September 15, 1952, in the amount of $672.75 drawn upon plaintiff bank; that on the 4th of September, 1952, Grabell delivered to the plaintiff bank a written order to stop payment upon its said check; that on February 5, 1954, appellant caused the check to be presented to respondent for payment, and at that time it bore the endorsements of Diamond and Corbin, and plaintiff thereupon paid said check through the clearing house; that said check had been negotiated from Diamond to Corbin at some time between the date of its execution and delivery to Diamond and prior to the payment of said check by respondent; that prior to the negotiation of said check by Diamond to appellant the date of the check had been changed from September 15, 1952, to September 15, 1953; that on the 3rd of March, 1954, defendant Grabell demanded of respondent return of said sum of $672.75, and thereupon plaintiff made demand upon Corbin for the return of said sum, and also made demand upon Diamond for the return to plaintiff or Grabell of said sum, but neither had returned any portion of said sum to either respondent or Gra-bell; that an actual controversy existed between respondent and the defendant concerning their respective rights under the check and under the circumstances, in that if Grabell was indebted to Diamond or to Corbin at the time respondent paid the check, or if Corbin was a holder for value at the time of the payment of said check, Grabell was not entitled to reimbursement in the amount of said check from respondent, but that if Grabell was not indebted to the defendant Diamond or appellant Corbin at the time the said check was paid, Grabell was entitled to reimbursement from respondent and respondent was entitled to reimbursement from Diamond and Corbin.

The respondent prayed that a judgment be rendered declaring the respective rights and duties of the parties, and that if it be determined that plaintiff was liable to Grabell it should also be determined that Diamond and Corbin were liable to plaintiff.

[1-3] It is evident from this statement that the allegations of the complaint showed that actual controversies existed between respondent and Grabell and between Grabell and the other defendants and between respondent and the other defendants, and that these controversies arose out of the check and the circumstances of its negotiation. It thus stated a cause of action for declaratory relief, and while the court may under certain circumstances, in its discretion, refuse to accept jurisdiction and declare the rights of the parties, Lord v. Garland, 27 Cal.2d 840, 168 P.2d 5; Pacific Electric Ry. Co. v. Dewey, 95 Cal.App.2d 69, 212 P.2d 255; Schessler v. Keck, 125 Cal.App.2d 827, 271 P.2d 588, it is not obligated to so exercise its discretion where the complaint shows that an actual controversy does exist; and in a case such as this where a multiplicity of actions would result unless the rights of the parties were first declared and relief given accordingly in the same action, it would be an abuse of discretion to deny relief. Kessloff v. Pearson, 37 Cal.2d 609, 233 P.2d 899; Columbia Pictures Corp. v. DeToth, 26 Cal.2d 753, 161 P.2d 217, 162 A.L.R. 747.

[5] Appellant's third point is that the court committed error in overruling his objections to certain testimony. He first complains that the witness Johnson, an officer of plaintiff bank, was permitted to identify the stop-payment order received by respondent from Grabell over his objection that it was "irrelevant, incompetent, immaterial, hearsay and not binding" on the defendant Corbin. That the evidence was material is self-evident, and it is likewise evident that it was not hearsay inasmuch as the witness did not testify to any conversation but merely to a fact—to-wit, the receipt of the stop-payment order by the bank, and the fact that when received it had been signed by Grabell.

[6] Appellant next complains that the defendant Grabell was permitted to testify that neither he nor his corporation had been indebted to Diamond, over his objection that the question called for the conclusion of the witness and was hearsay. The question did not call for hearsay, nor did the answer given constitute hearsay. The fact as to whether Grabell was indebted to Diamond was a circumstance directly connected with and determinative of the controversies between the parties and the declaration of the rights and obligations which the court was called upon to make. It was therefore a part of the res gestae and was not objectionable as hearsay. Further, the question did not call for any conversation, but for a fact within the knowledge of the witness.

[7] In a sense, the question did call for the conclusion of the witness; but the lack of indebtedness is a fact within the knowledge of the witness which he necessarily draws not from the existence of any fact but from the very want of facts. Here unless the witness were allowed to testify to the ultimate fact of there being no indebtedness, he would have to testify, in order to establish that fact, to the want of innumerable relationships¹ which might give rise to a debtor-creditor relationship. Practicality and common sense should govern in applying the rules of evidence, and we think it was within the discretion of the trial court to admit this evidence and allow the appellant to cross-examine the witness to bring out any facts from which a contrary conclusion might be drawn by the court (19 Cal.Jur.2d 14). The court here did not in any wise limit the appellant's right to cross-examine the witness nor did the appellant attempt to cross-examine so as to establish facts from which the conclusion of indebtedness might be drawn.

[8-11] Appellant next contends that finding XII of the trial court is contrary to the evidence. This assignment of error is entirely defective in form inasmuch as appellant makes no attempt to direct our attention to the evidence given upon the subject of the character of Diamond's title to the check or of Corbin's knowledge of it, and we would be justified in ignoring this assignment of error. We have, however, examined the transcript and find that the finding is amply sustained by the evidence.

By the finding in question, the court found that at the time Corbin took the check from Diamond, Corbin had notice of an infirmity in the instrument and a defect in the title of Diamond. By finding X the court had already found that there was an infirmity in Grabell's title in that he received the check subject to an agreement on his part that he would not negotiate it until certain machinery had been delivered to Grabell, and that this machinery was not delivered. Corbin testified that at the time he purchased the check from Diamond, Diamond told him of the conditions upon which he held the check and told him that he was not then entitled to cash it. Corbin thus had actual notice of an infirmity in Diamond's title and did not become a holder in due course. Civ.Code, § 3133, subd. 4, § 3137; Newton Nat. Bank v. Strand Baking Co., 224 Iowa 536, 277 N.W. 491; Anthon State Bank v. Bernard, 198 Iowa 1345, 201 N.W. 59, 61; C. I. T. Corp. v. Smith, 318 Ill.App. 46, 48 N.E.2d 735; General Securities Co. v. Sunday School Pub. Board, 22 Tenn.App. 590, 125 S.W.2d 160; West v. First Baptist Church of Taft, 123 Tex. 388, 71 S.W.2d 1091, 1093.

The court made further findings that Corbin did not act in good faith in purchasing the check and in failing to make inquiry of Grabell concerning the check; but these findings are of no importance inasmuch as the evidence clearly shows actual knowledge on Corbin's part of the infirmity in Diamond's title.

The last assignment of error made by appellant concerns finding XIII. By this finding the court found that the bank paid the check to Corbin by mistake. Appellant's attack on this finding is two-fold. He first claims that it is beyond the issues raised by the pleadings. It is true that the complaint does not use the word mistake and that it is far from a model pleading insofar as alleging mistake is concerned. It, however, alleged probative facts from which the ultimate fact of mistake could be inferred and it was therefore sufficient to tender that issue; and the finding was not beyond the issues raised and tried.

Appellant next contends that there was no evidence to support the finding. But the evidence shows the receipt of the stop notice by the bank, and its knowledge of it and the payment of the check; and the court was justified in drawing the inference that the bank must have acted inadvertently in paying the check despite the notice which was in its files. There is no merit in the assignment of error.

The judgment is affirmed.

Mandamus proceeding to compel Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Burnett Wolfson, J., to set aside order staying injunction pending national bank's appeal from judgment. The District Court of Appeal, White, P. J., held that national bank waived protection of federal statutory prohibition against state court injunction against national banks, by filing action under California statute to quiet title to personalty which, after trial on merits, was adjudged to be owned by bank subject to defendants' rights with which the bank was enjoined from interfering.

Peremptory writ issued.

Opinion, 300 P.2d 63, vacated.

1. Appeal and Error ⇨82(1), 112

An order of superior court staying injunctive provisions of a judgment pending appeal was a special order after final judgment and was appealable regardless of whether such order was void and regardless of whether such order was provided for by any of the prescribed methods of procedure.

2. Banks and Banking ⇨279

Federal statute providing that no injunction shall be issued against a national banking association or its property before final judgment in any action in any state court is for the protection of every national banking association, either solvent or insolvent. 12 U.S.C.A. § 91.

Banks and Banking ⇨279

National bank waived protection of federal statutory prohibition against state court injunction against national banks, by filing action under California statute to quiet title to personalty which, after trial on merits, was adjudged to be owned by bank subject to defendants' rights with which the bank was enjoined from interfering, and hence statute did not entitle bank to stay of injunction pending bank's appeal from judgment. 12 U.S.C.A. § 91; West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc., § 738.

Loeb & Loeb, John L. Cole, Alfred I. Rothman, Laurence M. Weinberg, Los Angeles, for petitioner.

Hugo A. Steinmeyer, Robert H. Fabian, W. H. Taylor, Jr., Los Angeles, for real party in interest, Bank of America Nat. Trust & Savings Ass'n.

WHITE, Presiding Justice.

Petitioner, Loew's Incorporated, seeks a writ of mandate requiring the Superior Court of Los Angeles County to set aside and vacate its order of June 6, 1956, " * * * that the motion of plaintiff (Bank of America) for a stay of injunction pending appeal be granted and that the operation and effect of that certain judgment heretofore entered in the above-entitled action on the 4th of April 1956 in Book 3070 at page 292 of Judgments in the Office of the County Clerk of Los Angeles County, California, be stayed pending the final determination of the appeal therefrom and 30 days thereafter and that the status quo shall be preserved during that period."

The petition seeking to prohibit the making of that order was filed herein on June 6, and on June 8 after the making of said order a supplementary petition seeking mandate in lieu of prohibition was filed.

The judgment so "stayed" was made in an action commenced by the Bank of America to quiet its title to certain personal property, and provides as follows:

"It Is Ordered, Adjudged and Decreed:

"1. Except as hereinafter otherwise specified in paragraphs 3 to 8, both inclusive, plaintiff, Bank of America National Trust and Savings Association, a national banking association, is the owner of the following described personal property, free and clear of all claims and demands whatsoever;

"All properties of every kind and character relating to the feature-length motion picture photoplay entitled 'Mr. Peabody and the Mermaid', hereinafter in this paragraph 1 called the 'Picture', based upon a story by Guy Jones and Constance Jones and a screenplay by Nunnally Johnson, having as principal players William Powell and Ann Blyth, and which was produced by Inter-John, Incorporated, including, but without limiting the foregoing general language, the following:

"(a) All of the literary, musical dramatic and other material upon which * * *

"(b) All physical properties of the picture * * *

"(c) To the extent necessary to complete the picture, all assignable rights * * *

"(d) All insurance * * *

"(e) All copyrights * * *

"(f) The right to exploit * * *

"(g) All rent, revenue, income, compensation and profits * * *

"2. * * * * *

"3. Plaintiff may not advertise or announce William Powell's name in general advertising or publicity * * *

"4. Plaintiff may not use William Powell's name or likeness in or in connection with any so-called 'commercial tie-ups' * * *

"5. Plaintiff may not cause or permit to be made or issued 16mm. or other non-standard prints of said motion picture except * * *

"6. Plaintiff shall give credit to William Powell as a star or co-star on all positive prints * * *

"7. Plaintiff may not double or 'dub' (as that term is understood in the motion picture industry) any of William Powell's acts, poses, plays or appearances, or his voice, either in English or in any foreign language or languages, unless * * *

"8. Plaintiff, its successors and assigns, are hereby enjoined, for the benefit of Loew's, its successors and assigns, from doing any act prohibited by any of the provisions of the foregoing paragraphs 3 to 7, both inclusive, and are ordered and directed, for the benefit of Loew's, its successors and assigns, to perform and observe the provisions of said paragraphs 3 to 7, both inclusive * * *

"9. * * *

"10. Except for and subject to the rights of Loew's arising out of the provisions of paragraphs 3 to 8, both inclusive, Loew's, and all persons claiming by, through or under it, are hereby perpetually enjoined and restrained from asserting any claim or demand whatsoever in, to or on the rights and properties described in paragraph 1, or any part thereof, or the proceeds derived therefrom, adverse to plaintiff."

In said quiet title action, trial upon the merits was completed, and the facts contained in the following summary were found true.

On and after January 20, 1948, Inter-John, Incorporated, a corporation, borrowed money from the Bank and gave a promissory note therefor, secured by a chattel mortgage upon the properties described in the judgment. Inter-John failed to pay off a portion of the loan and, pursuant to the chattel mortgage, the properties were sold at public sale and purchased by the Bank, which then commenced the instant action to quiet its title to said properties.

Inter-John's ownership of the properties so mortgaged by it and sold to the Bank was subject to the terms of a "loan-out agreement" between Loew's and Universal, and written instruments executed by Loew's, Universal and Inter-John in 1947. Under said contracts Inter-John had no right to do any of the things covered by the injunctive provisions of the judgment hereinbefore set forth.

From 1934 until 1953 Loew's and its predecessor, Metro-Goldwyn Mayer Corporation, had a contract with William Powell for all his services and were the owners of all the results and proceeds thereof. Large sums of money had been invested by them in building and maintaining his reputation and the value of the pictures in which he appears.

"The restrictive provisions * * * were included in the loan-out agreement for the purpose of protecting Loew's property rights in the services and performances of William Powell and in the results and proceeds thereof and for the purpose of protecting Loew's investment in Motion Pictures produced and to be produced by it in which William Powell appears."

Loew's had no knowledge of Inter-John's dealings with the Bank, but the Bank's representative knew of the loan-out agreement and the restrictions for the protection of Loew's investment therein contained.

Proposed findings, conclusions and judgment were served by mail on March 20, 1956 and dated and signed March 30, 1956, and the judgment was entered April 4, 1956. On or about April 6, 1956, petitioner duly served and filed notice of entry of said judgment.

The Bank's motion for a new trial was duly heard, considered and denied by order made and entered May 9, 1956. On May 22nd the Bank filed its notice of motion for reconsideration of order denying new trial, and on May 29, 1956, so moved.

Contemporaneously with its notice and motion for reconsideration of order denying plaintiff's motion for new trial, the Bank filed a notice of motion for "Stay of Injunction Pending Appeal", and so moved.

A minute order was made June 4 and entered June 7, 1956, reading as follows: "Motion for reconsideration of order denying plaintiff's motion of new trial denied. Motion for stay of injunction pending appeal granted".

[1] On June 6, 1956, the court made the order first hereinbefore quoted that the Bank's motion "for a stay of injunction pending appeal be granted", which order is sought to be vacated by this proceeding. On the same day the Bank appealed from the judgment. The real effect of the order is to modify the judgment so as to grant an injunction effective 30 days after the final determination of the appeal from the judgment, instead of the injunction included in the judgment effective from the date of the judgment. Said order of June 6 is "a special order after final judgment" and is "appealable regardless of whether it is void and regardless of whether it is provided for by any of the prescribed methods of procedure". Phelan v. Superior Court, 35 Cal.2d 363, 370, 217 P.2d 951.

The Phelan case, supra, is not authority for the Bank's statement that an appeal furnishes a plain, speedy and adequate remedy in lieu of the relief sought by the instant proceeding. In the Phelan case, the order, made after a final judgment for money, reduced the amount of money. The order, from the consequences of which petitioner seeks relief in the instant proceeding, is in effect an order that—although the Bank has no right to do certain things as already adjudged after a complete trial upon the merits—the Bank shall, nevertheless, not be restrained from doing those things until 30 days after the judgment shall have become final. Under the facts of the instant action, an appeal from the order "staying * * * the operation and effect of" the judgment could not preserve petitioner's rights under the judgment; and, in the event the judgment in favor of petitioner should be affirmed on appeal, the acts prohibited by the judgment might already have been done, so that, even if the Bank loses its appeal, the judgment could accomplish nothing except to quiet the Bank's title to the moving picture properties without regard to the limitations subject to which the Bank acquired the properties.

The Bank, in its answer, urges that "* * *" respondent superior court, having exercised its discretion to issue the order staying the injunctive provisions of the judgment, its act is not reviewable on mandamus", and in that regard cites the following cases: Hilmer v. Superior Court, 220 Cal. 71, 73, 29 P.2d 175; Lincoln v. Superior Court, 22 Cal.2d 304, 313, 139 P.2d 13; O'Bryan v. Superior Court, 18 Cal.2d 490, 496, 116 P.2d 49, 136 A.L.R. 595; Bauer v. Superior Court, 208 Cal. 193, 198, 281 P. 61; Kerr v. Superior Court, 130 Cal. 183, 185, 62 P. 479; People ex rel. Gesford v. Superior Court, 114 Cal. 466, 471, 46 P. 383; Friedland v. Superior Court, 67 Cal.App.2d 619, 623, 155 P.2d 90; Parker v. Superior Court, 16 Cal.App. 2d 580, 583, 60 P.2d 1021; Greene v. Superior Court, 133 Cal.App. 35, 38, 23 P.2d 785.

An examination of these cases discloses that many of them stem, directly or indirectly, from Strong v. Grant, 99 Cal. 100, 101, 33 P. 733, 734, decided in 1893, wherein it was said: "The rule is so well established that it may be said to be universal that the writ of mandamus cannot be used to correct the errors of a court in passing upon questions regularly submitted to it in the course of a judicial proceeding, or to control the exercise of its discretion."

And, while the general rule announced in Strong v. Grant, that a writ of mandate cannot be issued to correct the errors of a court in passing upon questions regularly submitted to it in the course of judicial proceedings or to control the exercise of its discretion undoubtedly obtains, it is not universally true that such writ will not issue to control such discretion or to require a judicial tribunal to which a matter for determination is submitted, to act in a particular way. * * *

"* * * 'Otherwise there would be an admitted wrong without a remedy. The writ issues in such case to prevent a failure of justice. And this is its ancient office. In the language of Lord Mansfield: "It was introduced to prevent disorder from a failure of justice and defect of police. Therefore it ought to be used upon all occasions where the law has established no specific remedy, and where, in justice and good government, there ought to be one." * * *'"

Each of the cases cited by the Bank in this regard is based upon the holding of Strong v. Grant, supra, or is distinguishable from the instant action. It would serve no useful purpose to consider them in detail here.

In Robinson v. Superior Court, 1950, 35 Cal.2d 379, 218 P.2d 10, 13, it appeared that a motion "was denied on the sole ground of lack of jurisdiction", and it was held that "if the effect is to preclude a hearing and judgment on the merits of a matter properly before the court, and there is no other adequate remedy, mandate will lie to test the question of jurisdiction. * * * a denial of relief on the sole ground of lack of jurisdiction is not a decision on the merits. * * *"

In the instant action there was a decision on the merits, and then an order nullifying that decision. The parties to an action are entitled to more than a trial on the merits; they are entitled to the relief accorded them by law. In the instant action, the trial court found petitioner entitled to injunctive relief, made its judgment accordingly, and denied the Bank's motion for a new trial.

The Bank's motion for the stay of judgment pending appeal was based upon the fact that it is a national bank, and its claim that no court of the State of California has the power to enjoin a National Bank in any respect whatsoever, and that the Bank cannot be subjected to any injunction, prior to the completion of the last appeal and the finality of the judgment. No other reason has been given, and we have been able to find none, for the trial court's order staying the effect of its judgment pending appeal.

If, as found by the court, the Bank's ownership of the motion picture properties is subject to certain limitations, certainly it would not preserve the status quo pending appeal to permit the Bank to do the very acts which it has no right to do, among them the manufacture of non-standard films and the sale and use of them for advertising purposes. Since it was found by the court that exceptions and limitations had been included in the agreements for the purpose of maintaining the value of pictures made and to be made starring William Powell, it cannot be presumed that such acts during the pendency of the appeal will not render the judgment worthless in the event it is eventually affirmed.

In support of its contention that the superior court had no power to issue an injunction against it, and that, therefore, the order staying said injunctive provisions of the judgment, is correct and should not be interfered with by this court, the Bank sets forth the following argument: "The pertinent provision of Section 91 of Title 12 of the United States Code [Annotated] reads as follows:

"* * * (N)o attachment, injunction, or execution shall be issued against such (national banking) association or its property before final judgment in any suit, action, or proceeding, in any state, county, or municipal court."

"It is respectfully submitted that the statute means just what it says, and the courts have so found."

An examination of the last cited statute, however, brings to light the fact that the language quoted is immediately preceded by the portion of the section here quoted, as follows:

"§ 91. Transfers by bank and other acts in contemplation of insolvency. All transfers * * * made after the commission of an act of insolvency, or in contemplation thereof, made with a view to prevent the application of its assets in the manner prescribed by this chapter, or with a view to the preference of one creditor to another, * * * shall be utterly null and void; and no attachment, injunction, * *."

[2] Despite the apparent intent of Congress as expressed in the statute, it has been held that Section 91 is for the protection of every national banking association, either solvent or insolvent. Pacific National Bank of Boston v. Mixter, 124 U.S. 721, 8 S.Ct. 718, 31 L.Ed. 567; Van Reed v. People's National Bank, 198 U.S. 554, 559, 25 S.Ct. 775, 49 L.Ed. 1161; Dennis v. First National Bank of Seattle, 127 Cal. 453, 454, 59 P. 777.

Each of the last above cited cases and others to which we have been referred involves an attachment before trial or other provisional remedy, while the instant proceeding concerns a prohibitory injunction after a complete trial upon the merits.

The question as to the error of the judgment in the instant action will, no doubt, be determined upon the Bank's appeal from the judgment now pending. Assuming, but not deciding, that the decisions last above cited are here controlling, the trial court was, nevertheless, authorized to "stay the operation and effect" of the judgment, or to correct judicial error therein, only in accordance with statutory procedure. Stevens v. Superior Court, 7 Cal.2d 110, 112-114, 59 P.2d 988. In the Stevens case, supra, a writ of prohibition issued to restrain the superior court from proceeding with a new trial after motion therefor had been denied, the order denying the motion for new trial had been set aside and vacated, and an order granting a new trial had been made some three weeks later. It was there held that the order denying the new trial was judicial and not a clerical error, and could not be corrected by the trial court in that manner.

In the instant action, an order denying a new trial was made four weeks before the stay of injunction was granted.

The bank's contention is that by its order "staying the injunctive provisions of the judgment" the court was not in any manner attempting to set aside or amend judicial error or to modify or vacate the injunction; that "all the superior court did was exercise its inherent power to stay the injunctive provisions of a judgment previously made". In support of this proposition, the Bank cites Tulare Irrigation District v. Superior Court, 197 Cal. 649, 660, 668, 671, 672, 242 P. 725; and City of San Diego v. Southern California Telephone Corp., 42 Cal.2d 110, 120, 266 P.2d 14.

In the Tulare case, supra, a writ of prohibition sought to prevent a stay of injunction was denied. There, the superior court made its findings and conclusions that the Lindsay-Strathmore Irrigation District should be permanently enjoined from pumping water from its land in the Tulare watershed to irrigate producing citrus groves outside of that watershed; that the owners of those groves would lose almost their entire value if and when their use of the water were so enjoined; and the superior court notified the parties that, because of defendant's intention to diligently and in good faith prosecute an appeal from the judgment to be made, and because without a stay of the injunction any appeal by defendant would be entirely nugatory and valueless, as a part of the judgment or concurrently therewith, the superior court would stay the effective date of said injunction pending final determination on appeal, and that "in making the contemplated order he intends to impose upon the defendant and appellant such terms and conditions as to him may seem just and equitable, and that such terms and conditions will, in his judgment, provide adequate security for compensating the complainants on account of any damage or loss * * *." [197 Cal. 649, 242 P. 735.]

City of San Diego v. Southern California Tel. Corp., 42 Cal.2d 110, 266 P.2d 14, 21, is an appeal from a judgment for the amount determined to be due the City from the Telephone Company for a new franchise as provided by a judgment which had become final after appeal, 92 Cal.App. 2d 793, 208 P.2d 27. On appeal, the amount determined by the superior court was held erroneous and the judgment reversed. The judgment which had already become final (from which the computation of the amount required as a prerequisite for a new franchise was to be made) "did not issue an injunction and thereafter stay its effect pending appeal. Instead, it provided that the injunction would not take effect until thirty days after the judgment became final. Until that time, there was nothing to be stayed. * * *"

At page 120 of 42 Cal.2d, at page 21 of 266 P.2d in the City of San Diego v. Southern, supra, the court said: "Since the judgment was affirmed on the previous appeal, the City is foreclosed from challenging the conditions attached to issuance of the injunction. * * * Aside from the rights of the company, it was clearly in the public interest that the trial court withhold issuance of an injunction and thus assure continued telephone service pending outcome of the appeal. * * *

"* * * The judgment did not give either the City or the company more or less rights in the interim than either had had under the expired franchise.

"The City contends that the trial court did not have power to stay its injunction unless * * *. A trial court is not so limited. It may protect the parties on appeal by providing that its injunction or order is stayed, under conditions that protect the appellant by preserving the subject matter of the appeal pending outcome thereof and at the same time protect the respondent by saving to it the benefits of the judgment in the event of an affirmance."

The Tulare and San Diego cases, supra, involved injunctions which by the provisions of the judgments themselves were not to become effective until a later date, and in each of those cases the trial court had found that, unless the effect of the injunction were so delayed, in the event of a reversal on appeal, the appellant's victory would be valueless. In each, the trial court also provided protection for respondent in the event of an affirmance.

In the instant action, there is no finding that the fruits of success on the appeal will be lost to appellant by permitting the injunction to become immediately effective as provided in the judgment, and no protection is provided for respondent's rights in the event of an affirmance. From the record in the instant proceeding it appears that the only ground suggested by the Bank for the order "staying the injunction" until "30 days after the judgment shall become final" is that "the plaintiff is a national banking association and no injunction will lie against it until after final judgment".

Clearly the cited cases are not applicable to the question here presented and no decisions in point have been found by our independent research.

We are in accord with the contention of the real party in interest, the Bank, that cases concerning the trial court's power to "set aside or amend judicial error or at least modify and vacate the injunction are not applicable" because the Bank concedes that its petition for a stay could not have been granted under the statutory provisions for modification of a judgment upon motion for a new trial or upon motion to set it aside for mistake or inadvertence. Therefore, we will not here discuss the cases cited by petitioner to that effect.

Because we regard the following cases as helpful in the determination of the issues with which we are here confronted, we shall discuss them:

Sontag Chain Stores Co., Ltd. v. Superior Court, 18 Cal.2d 92, 113 P.2d 689, was a proceeding in prohibition to restrain the Superior Court from entertaining a motion to vacate a judgment. That judgment "permanently enjoined the defendant labor unions from picketing or creating any disturbance in the vicinity of petitioner's stores". It had become final several months before the motion to vacate it was made upon the ground that the trial court "did not correctly apply the law to the facts then before it". Petitioner there seeking prohibition asserted "that the decree in controversy cannot be set aside for mere judicial error, error of law, or change of decision. * * *". At page 94 of 18 Cal.2d, at page 690 of 113 P.2d, Mr. Justice Edmonds, speaking for the court, said:

"As a declaration of the general rule, petitioner's statement is correct. It is well settled that a final judgment of a court of competent jurisdiction may not be impeached collaterally for mere errors or irregularities committed by the court in the exercise of its jurisdiction or in the course of the proceedings, even though the error is one of law, and appears on the face of the record. * * * The reason for the rule is that there must be an end to litigation, and hence it is the long established policy of the law to, so far as possible, prohibit the further contest of an issue once judicially decided and to accord finality to judgments.

"But the reason for the rule ceases and the rule fails to apply in the case of a preventive injunction of the type here under review. This is so because the decree, although purporting on its face to be permanent, is in essence of an executory or continuing nature, creating no right but merely assuming to protect a right from unlawful and injurious interference. Such a decree, it has uniformly been held, is always subject, upon a proper showing, to modification or dissolution by the court which rendered it. The court's power in this respect is an inherent one. Its action is determined by the facts and circumstances of each particular case, with a view to administering justice between the litigants, and it has the power to modify or vacate its decree when the ends of justice will be thereby served.

"* * * This inherent power * * * may be exercised either where there has been a change in the controlling facts upon which the injunction rested, or the law has been changed, modified or extended, or where there the ends of justice would be served by modification. * * *

"In California cases cited by petitioner, language may be found which is at variance with the views above expressed. [Citing cases.] But a review of these authorities reveals that, in many instances, the decree under consideration was not of the nature or classification of the one here in question, and also that earlier pronouncements have been modified or distinguished by later rulings. Tulare Irr. Dist. v. Superior Court, 197 Cal. 649, 130 P.2d 725; Wheeler v. Superior Court, 82 Cal.App. 202, 255 P. 275. For present purposes it is sufficient to state that no California case is cited which touches the precise point here under discussion, or which is here controlling. * * * 'Familiar equity procedure assures opportunity for modifying or vacating an injunction when its continuance is no longer warranted.'

In the Sontag case, supra, petitioner in seeking prohibition to prevent the vacation of the injunction, conceded that the injunction was erroneous under the law. That point is not conceded in the instant proceeding. On the contrary, petitioner here urges that Section 91 of Title 12 of the United States Code Annotated was inapplicable because: (1) There had been a final judgment entered by respondent court; and (2) The statute applies only to provisional remedies invoked prior to trial on the merits.

[3-6] Were it not that "execution" is prohibited as against a national bank in the same clause and upon the same terms as "injunction", we might be inclined to agree with petitioner. True, none of the cited cases construing and applying Section 91 involves an execution or an injunction which is part of a judgment on the merits. While an injunction may be granted prior to judgment, an execution may not. If the section is read as prohibiting the issuance of an execution prior to judgment, it has no meaning or effect whatever. Petitioner urges that by the word "execution" as used in Section 91, Congress referred to a writ "in the nature of attachment" issued prior to or without judgment under the laws of some states. But, Congress is presumed to have used the word "execution" in its generally accepted meaning. A writ of execution "is part of the remedy to effectuate the action by the enforcement of the judgment". United States v. Nourse, 9 Pet. 8, 34 U.S. 8, 27, 9 L.Ed. 31. An execution is the end of the law. It gives the successful party the fruits of his judgment. Southern California Lumber Co. v. Ocean Beach Hotel Co., 94 Cal. 217, 221, 29 P. 627; Painter v. Berglund, 31 Cal.App.2d 63, 70, 87 P.2d 360. Therefore, in order to make the section effective as to executions, the words "final judgment" must be held to refer to judgments from which no appeal can be taken and not merely judgments rendered. Using that construction in the instant action permits the portions of the judgment favorable to the bank—quieting its title to personal property, subject to certain rights of defendant, and enjoining defendant from claiming any other rights in or to said property—to stand; and, at the same time, nullifies the portion of the judgment enjoining the bank's interference with and destruction of the rights of defendants.

[7] However, by the filing of the instant action, the Bank waived any advantage it might otherwise have had under said Section 91 of Title 12 of the United States Code. As stated by Justice Bridges, speaking for the Supreme Court of Washington, State ex rel. Southern Alaska Canning Co. v. Superior Court for King County, 128 Wash. 100, 222 P. 203, 205: "That statute [Sec. 91] cannot have any weight here. Although the mortgagee was and is a national bank, it has undertaken in its foreclosure to take advantage of the statutes of this state, and it cannot take action under a part of that statute without being also bound by the other provisions of it.

"Being of the view that it was the duty of the court to issue the injunction, or restraining order * * * the writ applied for is granted." The writ sought and granted in the case just cited was to prevent the superior court from vacating its order restraining the bank from interfering with the property pending trial.

The instant action was brought by the Bank under the provisions of Section 738 of the Code of Civil Procedure of the State of California, which provides: "An action may be brought by any person against another who claims an * * * interest in * * * personal property, adverse to him, for the purpose of determining such adverse claim * * *."

[8-10] "Equitable principles apply in a quiet title action". Gonzalez v. Hirose, 33 Cal.2d 213, 217, 200 P.2d 793, 796. An action under Code of Civil Procedure 738 is brought to "finally settle and determine, as between the parties, all conflicting claims to the property in controversy, and to decree to each such interest or estate therein as he may be entitled to." Peterson v. Gibbs, 147 Cal. 1, 5, 81 P. 121, 123; Altman v. Blewett, 93 Cal.App. 516, 523, 269 P. 751; Hendershott v. Shipman, 37 Cal.2d 190, 194, 231 P.2d 481. Injunctive relief incident to a decree quieting title is an ancient remedy growing out of the "bill of peace" in a court of chancery. It is a proper inherent remedy to terminate expensive and troublesome litigation over the ownership and right of possession of property. An injunction is issued to prevent a multiplicity of judicial proceedings. Section 526, subd. 6, Code of Civil Procedure. "In an action to quiet title, even though defendant does not file a cross-complaint or ask for any affirmative relief, a decree declaring that defendant has title, and enjoining plaintiff from further setting up a claim thereto, is a proper form of judgment. [Citing cases.]" (Ridgway v. Ridgway, 95 Cal.App.2d 46, 50, 212 P.2d 6, 9.)

Mr. Justice Peters, speaking for the court, in Empire Star Mines Co. v. Butler, 62 Cal. App.2d 466, 530, 145 P.2d 49, 80, said: "Moreover, litigants are entitled to reasonable repose from future unnecessary litigation. The plain and direct manner of giving this repose is by enjoining the defeated party from continuing to perform the acts found to be wrongful. If he has no intent to continue the wrongful acts he is not injured by the decree. If he has such intent the injunction protects the successful party from the necessity of bringing successive actions for damages. Thus, in quiet title suits, in the discretion of the court, the decree frequently includes an injunctive provision."

The Bank commenced this action to quiet title and prayed that the court determine "all adverse claims of said defendants", that said defendants "be forever barred from asserting any claim or demand whatsoever in, to or on said property, or any part thereof, adverse to plaintiff", and further prayed that "the court grant such other and further relief as it may deem just and proper". Since the Bank prayed that the court adjudicate the rights of the respective parties, quiet the title in and to such property, and for the injunctive relief that defendants be barred from asserting any claim or demand whatsoever in or to said property in which the Bank's title was quieted, the latter waived any exemption it might otherwise have had from an injunction against its interference pending appeal with the rights of Loew's. Having invoked, by its complaint, the provisions of section 738 of the Code of Civil Procedure and injunctive relief being applicable to such quiet title action, the Bank cannot now be heard to stay the provisions of a judgment which they themselves asked for in their prayer. To permit the Bank so to do would be both unfair and inequitable.

The demurrer of the Bank, real party in interest, is overruled and it is ordered that a peremptory writ of mandate issue, requiring the respondent court to set aside and vacate its order of June 6, 1956, granting the motion of plaintiff Bank for stay pending appeal of the injunctive provisions of the judgment dated March 30, 1956, in action No. 599,919 in the respondent court.

Civ. 21604.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 3, California.

Sept. 13, 1956.

Rehearing Denied Oct. 4, 1956.

Hearing Granted Nov. 8, 1956.

The Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Victor R. Hansen, J., entered a judgment fixing inheritance tax, and the State Controller appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Vallée, J., held that where deceased, prior to his death, entered into an oral agreement with the natural parents of seventeen year old boy that if the boy would live with the deceased and consider himself the son of the deceased, deceased would treat the boy as if he were his natural son and would adopt him, and the boy lived with the deceased for twenty years, but there were no adoption proceedings in accordance with statute, and court correctly decided that boy was entitled to distribution of all of the estate of the deceased, the boy was not entitled to be treated as an adopted child of the deceased for inheritance tax purposes.

Judgment reversed with directions to render a judgment in conformity with opinion.

1. Adoption ⇨6, 21

Agreement between deceased prior to his death and parents of seventeen year old boy that if boy would live with deceased and consider himself the son of the deceased, the deceased would treat the boy as if he were his natural son and would adopt him was valid, and boy, who lived with deceased until his death, was entitled to distribution of all of the estate of the deceased. West's Ann.Prob.Code, § 1080.

2. Adoption ⇨1

Adoption exists only by virtue of the statutory law. West's Ann.Civ.Code, §§ 221-229.

3. Adoption ⇨1

The rights and obligations springing from adoption are entirely matters of statutory regulation. West's Ann.Civ.Code, §§ 221-229.

4. Adoption ⇨17

The mode prescribed by statute for adoption of a child is the measure of the power, and one claiming that an adoption has been accomplished, must show that the statute has been complied with. West's Ann.Civ.Code, §§ 221-229.

5. Adoption ⇨1

An adoption is effective only when it is done in the manner laid down by the Civil Code. West's Ann.Civ.Code, §§ 221-229.

6. Adoption ⇨3

Statutes governing adoption must be read into statutes of succession. West's Ann.Civ.Code, §§ 221-229; West's Ann.Prob.Code, § 257.

7. Adoption ⇨21

To establish a person's right to inherit from person claimed as an adopting parent, there must be proof of an act of adoption done in accordance with statute. West's Ann.Civ.Code, §§ 221-229; West's Ann.Prob.Code, § 257.

8. Adoption ⇨1

Only after adoption in conformity with the laws of the state do the person adopting and the person adopted sustain the legal relation of parent and child and have all rights and subject themselves to all duties of that relation. West's Ann.Civ.Code, §§ 221-229, 228.

9. Adoption ⇨21

Only an adopted child, who is deemed a descendant of one who has adopted him, is the same as a natural child for purposes of succession. West's Ann.Civ.Code, §§ 221-229; West's Ann.Prob.Code, § 257.

10. Taxation ⇨856

11. Taxation ⇨856, 889

Generally, the State assesses the privilege of succeeding, gives preferences, and computes inheritance tax on the interests of heirs, legatees, and devisees, and degree of relationship, if any, to deceased. West's Ann.Rev. & Tax.Code, §§ 13307, 13310, 13407, 14510.

13. Estoppel ⇨62(2)

When a party fails to take steps prescribed by the State to effectuate a statutory adoption, fact that agreement is enforced by permitting a child to take same share of estate as he would have taken had he been legally adopted, does not bar the State from standing on the facts as they actually exist in classifying the child for inheritance tax purposes. West's Ann. Rev. & Tax.Code, §§ 13307, 13310, 13407, 14510; West's Ann.Civ.Code, §§ 221-229; West's Ann.Prob.Code, § 257.

VALLÉE, Justice.

Appeal by the state controller from a judgment sustaining respondents' objections to the report of the inheritance tax appraiser, and fixing the inheritance tax.

On July 6, 1954 Judge Clark, in a proceeding to determine interests in the estate, rendered a decree that George Radovich has the equitable status of an adopted son of the decedent. On June 29, 1955 Judge Hansen, after hearing objections to the inheritance tax appraiser's report, rendered judgment fixing the inheritance tax, computing it by allowing George Radovich the status of a "Class A" transferee. It is from the latter judgment that the appeal was taken.

The deceased Jack R. Radovich died intestate on October 3, 1953, a resident of Los Angeles County. He had never married, had no issue of his body, and left no father or mother. Coadministrators of the estate were appointed.

In June 1954 George Radovich filed a petition to determine his interest in the estate. The petition was heard by Judge Clark. The facts as found by Judge Clark, which are not in dispute, are as follows:

In 1934 in Los Angeles when George Vukoye, now known as George Radovich, was about 17 years old, his natural parents and Jack Radovich entered into an oral agreement whereby Jack promised and agreed that if George would live with him and consider himself his son, Jack would treat George as if he were his natural son and would adopt him. The natural parents of George and George relied on Jack's promises and consented to the oral agreement. George went to Jack and lived with him until Jack's death. From the time George went to live with Jack he worked in Jack's liquor store until the latter's death.

Under the oral agreement Jack promised and agreed that if George would go to live with him and be his son, Jack would give George all of the rights of a natural son, would regard him as his own son, and would adopt him. The natural parents of George relied on the promises and agreed to and did relinquish to Jack all of their rights in George. From the time of the agreement until Jack's death, George performed all the duties of a child toward a parent and Jack publicly acknowledged George as his own son and heir to his estate. Since the agreement George has at all times been known as and has used the name of George Radovich and the same is presently his legal name. George, pursuant to the oral agreement and his performance thereof and by reason of the failure of Jack to fully perform the obligations assumed by him, occupies in equity the equitable status of an adopted son and by reason thereof is entitled to distribution of all of Jack's estate.

Jack never instituted any statutory proceedings in California or elsewhere for adoption of George.

In July 1954 Judge Clark rendered a decree that George, by reason of the oral agreement of adoption made with Jack and the performance of George thereunder, has the equitable status of an adopted son of Jack and is entitled to distribution of all of Jack's estate, save and except a part thereof which George had assigned in writing to blood relatives of Jack. This decree became final.

Thereafter the inheritance tax appraiser filed his report, found that George was a stranger to the blood of Jack, allowed a specific exemption of $50 as a "Class D" transferee, and computed the inheritance tax due at the rate of a stranger under sections 13310 and 13407 of the Revenue and Taxation Code. George and the administrators filed objections to the report under section 14510 of the Revenue and Taxation Code. The objections were heard before Judge Hansen, who found: the decree of Judge Clark had never been appealed from and was final; the same facts as found by Judge Clark; by reason of the decree of Judge Clark, George was able to succeed to the estate and be distributed the property thereof only by virtue of the establishment of his status as an adopted son and that George inherited the property "from the said estate" as a result of having the status of an adopted son; the determination made by Judge Clark was the determination that George was adopted when under the age of 21 years by the deceased in conformity with the laws of this state; George was able to succeed to the estate only by virtue of his having the status of an adopted son and not as a stranger; pursuant to section 13307 of the Revenue and Taxation Code, George as an adopted son was a "Class A" transferee. Judgment was rendered accordingly. The controller appeals.

The controller asserts the findings and decree of Judge Clark did not have the effect of an order of adoption as provided in sections 221 to 229 of the Civil Code; did not purport to determine that George was adopted by the decedent in conformity with the laws of this state; did not purport to fix and could not fix the status of George for the purpose of computing the inheritance tax so as to be binding on the controller; for the purpose of the tax laws, George is a stranger to the deceased and is a "Class A" transferee and within the class covered by section 13310 of the Revenue and Taxation Code.

George and the administrators contend the decree of Judge Clark is a judgment in rem, binding on the controller, and that that decree was tantamount to the finding of an adoption in conformity with the laws of this state.

A "Class A transferee" means one who is the lineal issue of the decedent and one "whose relationship to the decedent is that of a child adopted by the decedent in conformity with the laws of this State, provided such child was under the age of 21 years at the time of such adoption." Rev. & Tax.Code, § 13307. Generally a stranger to the blood of the decedent is a "Class D transferee". Rev. & Tax. Code, § 13310.

[1] There can be no question but that the agreement was valid and that Judge Clark correctly decided George is entitled to distribution of all of the estate of the decedent. In re Estate of Grace, 88 Cal. App.2d 956, 962-967, 200 P.2d 189, and cases there discussed. In any event, that decree is a final judgment. We will not reach the problem whether the decree rendered by Judge Clark is to be given the effect of res judicata in the proceeding to fix the inheritance tax since it merely adjudicated that George has the equitable status of an adopted son of Jack and is entitled to distribution of all of Jack's estate. We assume, solely for the purpose of this decision, that in the proceeding before Judge Hansen it was an adjudicated fact that George has the equitable status of an adopted son of Jack and is entitled to distribution of all of Jack's estate.¹

The findings in the inheritance tax proceeding that, by reason of the decree of Judge Clark, George was able to "succeed" to decedent's estate and be distributed the property of the estate only by virtue of his status as an adopted son; that he "inherited" the property of the decedent as a result of having the status of an adopted son; that the determination of Judge Clark was a determination that George "was adopted by the decedent in conformity with the laws of this state"; that he was able to succeed "only by virtue of his having the status of an adopted son and not as a stranger"; and that he was a Class A transferee, cannot be sustained.

In Wooster v. Iowa State Tax Commission, 230 Iowa 797, 298 N.W. 922, 925, 141 A.L.R. 1298, the court held that one who stood in the relation of an adopted daughter by estoppel—i. e., had been taken into the adoptive parents' home and treated as a daughter by the parents but had not been legally adopted—was not, by reason of the fact that the foster parents and those in privity with them were estopped to question her status as an adopted child, entitled to the right of inheritance as an heir by reason of a legal adoption as though the statutory proceedings for adoption had been fully complied with; that "taking a child into a family and treating it as natural offspring is not adoption." Wooster says a decree such as that made by Judge Clark does not change the status of either party but merely enforces a contract which has been fully performed by one side; that the principle involved is property recompense measured in the amount fixed in the statutes of descent and distribution.

[10-12] Will George be treated as a Class A transferee by reason of the fact that the transfer to him is made in pursuance of a contract entered into by the decedent? A cardinal purpose of the inheritance tax law is to coordinate the assessment of the tax as closely as possible with the substantive probate law regulating the distribution of the decedent's estate. In re Miller, 31 Cal.2d 191, 199, 187 P.2d 722. Generally speaking the state assesses the privilege of succeeding, gives preferences, and computes the tax on the interests of heirs, legatees, and devisees, and the degree of relationship, if any, to the decedent. Cohn v. Cohn, 20 Cal.2d 65, 67, 123 P.2d 833; 85 C.J.S., Taxation, § 1163, p. 981. There can be no estoppel as against the state in the fixing of inheritance taxes. "Resort to estoppel where the statutory requirements are not met would not only defeat the safeguards prescribed by the Legislature but would amount to the creation of a method of adoption—by private agreement of the parties—not recognized at common law or by statute." In re Adoption of Parker, 31 Cal.2d 608, 617, 191 P.2d 420, 425.

An Iowa statute gave a specified exemption to "legally adopted sons and/or daughters" in fixing the inheritance tax. Code of Iowa 1939, § 7312.1, I.C.A. § 450.9. Another statute specified the rate of tax when property passed to any child, "including a legally adopted child * * * entitled to inherit under the laws of this state". Code of Iowa, 1939, § 7313, I.C.A. § 450.10. In Wooster v. Iowa State Tax Commission, supra, 230 Iowa 797, 298 N.W. 922, 141 A.L.R. 1298, it was held that the state in making a classification for inheritance tax purposes is not in such privity with a foster parent as to be bound by an estoppel of such parent to question the status as an adopted child of one not formally adopted, and that a decree establishing the rights of a child under an agreement to adopt it, not performed on the part of the foster parents, is not a judgment in rem determining status so as to be binding upon the taxing authorities as respects exemption and rate of tax upon property received by an adopted child.

A Montana statute, R.C.M.1947, § 91-4409, prescribed a lower rate of inheritance tax when property passed to "any child adopted as such in conformity with law" than when the property passed to a stranger to the blood of the decedent. In re Clark's Estate, 105 Mont. 401, 74 P.2d 401, 114 A.L.R. 496, is on all fours with the case at bar. The facts were substantially the same. The trial court fixed the tax of George John Pale, a person in the shoes of George Radovich, on the basis that he was a stranger to the blood of the decedent. On review the court held, 74 P.2d 413:

"The courts have uniformly assumed the validity of executory contracts to adopt. 1 Am.Juris., § 16, p. 630. Contracts to adopt, not performed by effectual adoption proceedings during the life of the adoptive parent, will, upon the latter's death, be enforced to the extent of decreeing that the child is entitled to such right of inheritance from the estate of the adoptive parent as a natural child would enjoy, where the child in question has fully performed the duties to the adoptive parent, when circumstances require the relief as a matter of justice and equity. [Citations.]

"Since the courts will specifically enforce contracts to adopt where they have been performed by the child, at least to the extent of securing to the child the share of the estate which it would have inherited if the adoption were completed, it is argued that George John Pale was adopted in conformity with law. In 2 C.J. § 27, page 401, it is said: 'In upholding such a remedy, the courts do not hold that the child is entitled to the right of inheritance as an heir. They do not undertake to change the status of either party, but merely to enforce a contract which has been fully performed on one side.' * * *

"The distinction was pointed out in Burns v. Smith, 21 Mont. 251, 53 P. 742, 69 Am.St.Rep. 653. "The question that confronts us here is: Does the plaintiff claim to be an heir of the deceased? Or is not her claim adverse to the law? She is not an heir at law, nor does she claim under or through an heir of the estate. Whatever claim she has, we think, results and comes to her under the contract alleged to have been made with the deceased in his lifetime as set out in the complaint." [Citations.]

"The trial court correctly held that George John Pale was not a child adopted as such in conformity with law, and therefore its determination of the amount of tax due was correct in this respect."

See 2 C.J.S., Adoption of Children, § 27, p. 401.

Lamb's Estate v. Morrow, 140 Iowa 89, 117 N.W. 1118, 18 L.R.A.,N.S., 226, held that articles of adoption, not acknowledged, recorded, nor complying with the statutes, being insufficient to make the adoption valid, are insufficient to establish heirship in the adopting parents' property; and that a proceeding to assess an inheritance tax not being in equity, one claiming as an heir, under irregular adoption proceedings, cannot rely upon equitable circumstances.

[13] The inheritance tax law allows the status of an adopted child to be fixed by one method only—by statutory adoption. When such status has been thus fixed the adopted child becomes entitled to the classification and preference provided by the statute for property passing to a statutory adopted child. Manifestly when a party fails to take the steps prescribed by the state to effectuate a statutory adoption, the fact the agreement is enforced by permitting the child to take the same share of the estate as he would have taken had he been legally adopted does not bar the state from standing on the facts as they actually exist in classifying for inheritance tax purposes.

[14] The inheritance tax law excludes all grafting of children upon another family stock otherwise than by adoption proceedings conforming to the law of this state governing the subject. George has no statutory right to inherit or to succeed to the estate. His right comes solely from the agreement. The conclusion necessarily follows that he is not a child adopted by the decedent in conformity with the laws of this state. He does not have the status of an adopted child or any right of inheritance as such. Neither the decree of Judge Clark nor the facts found by Judge Hansen changed his previous status to that of an adopted child.

We hold George Radovich is not entitled to the preference or exemption and rate of inheritance tax of a child adopted by the decedent in conformity with the laws of this state, and is not a Class A transferee, but is a Class D transferee.

The judgment appealed from is reversed with directions to render a judgment in conformity with this opinion.

Prosecution for forgery arising out of defendant's alleged attempt to lull holders of junior trust deeds into a feeling of security by producing invalid receipts of first trust deed holder indicating that defendant was keeping up payments. The Superior Court of Los Angeles County, John G. Barnes, found defendant guilty of forgery and denied motion for new trial from which defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, White, P. J., held that testimony of corporate employee whose name was allegedly forged to trust deed payment receipt that she did not sign same nor authorize any person to do so, together with records of corporation showing no payments for which receipts were allegedly given, sufficiently sustained finding that receipt was false and that person who signed another's name to it did so without authority.

11. Criminal Law Ⓒ338(1)

In prosecution for forgery arising out of defendant's alleged attempt to lull holders of junior trust deeds into false sense of security by producing forged receipts evidencing payments to first trust deed holder, there was no error in refusal to admit irrelevant testimony to effect that first trust deed holder did not intend to require defendant to make payments on trust deed.

Jerry Giesler, Robert A. Neeb, Jr.,
Beverly Hills, for appellant.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., James L. Mamakos, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

WHITE, Presiding Justice.

In an information filed by the District Attorney of Los Angeles County, containing six counts, defendant was accused as follows: (1) Count I—the crime of Grand Theft in violation of Section 487, subdivision 1, of the Penal Code, a felony, in that on or about August 4, 1954, at or in the County of Los Angeles, the defendant did wilfully, unlawfully and feloniously take a certified check of the value of $5,400, which was the personal property of Zenith National Insurance Company; (2) Counts II, III, IV and V—the crimes of Forgery in violation of Section 470 of the Penal Code, a felony, in that on or about June 7, 1954, August 16, 1954, September 10, 1954, October 8, 1954, at or in the County of Los Angeles, the defendant, with intent then and there to cheat and defraud M. A. Showers, Morris Miller and Frank Fishman, did wilfully, unlawfully, fraudulently and feloniously make, alter, forge and counterfeit a certain receipt on each of the above dates in writing, for the payment of money, each in the sum of $5,407.20, and did then and there utter, publish and pass the same, knowing that said receipt was false, altered, forged and counterfeited, as aforesaid, with intent then and there to cheat and defraud the said M. A. Showers, Morris Miller and Frank Fishman; (3) Count VI—the crime of Forgery in violation of Section 470 of the Penal Code, a felony, in that on or about September 8, 1954, at or in the County of Los Angeles, with intent then and there to cheat and defraud Morris Miller and Bank of America National Trust and Savings, a corporation, did wilfully, unlawfully, fraudulently and feloniously make, alter, forge and counterfeit a certain Beneficiary's Statement, dated September 8, 1954, in connection with the Bank of America, Beverly-Wilshire Branch, Escrow No. 213-7141, and did then and there utter, publish and pass the same, knowing that said Beneficiary's Statement was false, altered, forged and counterfeited, as aforesaid, with intent then and there to cheat and defraud the said Morris Miller and Bank of America National Trust and Savings, a corporation, and M. A. Showers.

The defendant was arraigned, made a motion under Section 995, Penal Code, which the court granted as to Count I and denied as to the other counts, and he then entered his plea of "Not Guilty".

The cause was called for trial and a jury was selected and sworn. Pursuant to stipulation of counsel and the defendant personally consenting, trial by jury was waived and the jury was discharged.

By stipulation of counsel, and the defendant personally consenting, the evidence received by the court and jury was submitted to the court to determine the guilt or innocence of the defendant on Count V only. As to the remaining counts, II, III, IV and VI, the court declared a mistrial pursuant to stipulation of counsel. Thereafter, these latter counts were dismissed.

Defendant was found guilty of forgery as charged in Count V of the information. Motion for a new trial was denied and defendant was sentenced to imprisonment in the County Jail for the term of one year. Execution of sentence was suspended and defendant was granted conditional probation.

From the order denying his motion for a new trial and from "the verdict", defendant prosecutes this appeal.

The following will serve as an epitome of the evidence relating to Count V only (on which count alone defendant was convicted).

Four trust deeds came into existence relating to property on the corner of Rossmore and Rosewood Streets in Los Angeles.

The defendant was the last purchaser of this property and bought it on February 27, 1953.

On January 29, 1954, the Guarantee Mutual Life Company, holder of the first trust deed, sold the first trust deed to Zenith National Insurance Company. Up to and including January 4, 1954, the Hassen family, Erwin E. Hassen Foundation and Hassen Hospitals, Inc., were the only stockholders of Zenith Company.

After purchasing the property, the defendant stated to Mr. Morris Miller, a shareholder of the Country Club Villa Corporation, and holder of the second trust deed on the above property, that he could not make the payments on the first trust deed. Thereafter, the defendant and Miller had a number of conversations concerning payments on the three trust deeds, and later Miller filed an action against the defendant in August, 1953. This suit was settled and part of the settlement provided that the defendant shall pay the amounts which become due on the first trust deed and thereafter provide Miller with a receipt of such payment within ten days after such payment accrued.

Count V charges the defendant with having forged the name of M. A. Showers, cashier of Zenith National Insurance Company, on a receipt of the Zenith Company, showing that the October payment on the first trust deed was made. The defendant conveyed this receipt to Miller who believed that this receipt represented that the October payment on the first trust deed was in fact made.

Mrs. Cornwell, cashier of Zenith Company, who was M. A. Showers prior to her marriage and signed documents of the Zenith Company with her signature "Mary Ann Showers" or "M. A. Showers" testified that she did not sign the October corporate receipt, nor did she authorize any one any time to sign her name to that document, nor did she at any time receive $5,407.20 described in that document.

The records of Zenith Company revealed that no principal payments had been made on the first trust deed after March 1, 1954. People's Exhibit No. 8 represented a principal and interest payment on the first trust deed.

Mr. Miller discovered that the October corporate receipt, People's Exhibit No. 8, was not valid in November, 1954. Subsequently, the defendant admitted to Miller that he had given him an invalid receipt and described how he had copied the signature of "M. A. Showers" thereon. At a later meeting between Miller and the defendant, the defendant tried to "grab" an envelope in Miller's possession which contained a photostatic copy of the October corporate receipt which the defendant had given him.

As his first and main ground for reversal of the judgment and order in the instant case appellant earnestly contends that proof of the corpus delicti of the crime of forgery charged in Count V was lacking. In this regard appellant relies on the claim that in a forgery prosecution it must be shown that the instrument was false and that this is not proven until it is shown that the person who signed another's name did so without authority. People v. Whiteman, 114 Cal. 338, 344, 46 P. 99. That the only manner in which the prosecution could show lack of authority in this case would be to show that the Zenith Insurance Corporation itself gave no authority for the receipt here in question to be issued and that this required the prosecution to produce all of the minutes and by-laws of the corporation dealing with authority to act for the corporation, or to have shown by a complete set of minutes and by-laws what persons were authorized to do certain acts in behalf of the corporate entity. Corporations Code, section 832; People v. Hidalgo, 134 Cal.App. 293, 294, 25 P.2d 270. Appellant argues that the necessity for such proof assumes importance in this case because the corporation was admittedly a closely knit family corporation, founded by defendant and controlled by him and his family.

[1-6] While it is true, as contended by appellant, that it is a well established doctrine that no person can be convicted of a crime on extra-judicial admissions alone and that the corpus delicti must be proven independent of admissions, we are satisfied that the evidence, leaving entirely out of consideration the statements and admissions of appellant, sufficiently proves the corpus delicti. Proof of the corpus delicti does not necessarily involve or require proof that the crime charged was committed by the accused, People v. Cowan, 38 Cal.App.2d 231, 240, 101 P.2d 125; People v. Cowling, 6 Cal.App.2d 466, 471, 44 P.2d 441; People v. Wilt, 40 Cal.App.2d 124, 127, 104 P.2d 387; People v. Shapiro, 40 Cal.App.2d 321, 323, 104 P.2d 688; People v. Flores, 34 Cal.App. 393, 394, 167 P. 413, and it is well settled that the prosecution is not required to establish it by proof to the same degree of certainty as is required to establish the fact of guilt. Slight or prima facie proof is all that is necessary. It may also be proved by circumstances shown in evidence, or by inferences reasonably drawn therefrom; direct or positive evidence is not essential. When a prima facie case is presented that a crime was committed the evidence is sufficient. People v. Hudson, 139 Cal.App. 543, 544, 34 P.2d 741; People v. Clark, 70 Cal.App. 531, 544, 233 P. 980; People v. Wiesel, 39 Cal.App.2d 657, 664, 104 P.2d 70; People v. Van Scoyoc, 25 Cal.App.2d 416, 418, 77 P.2d 485; People v. Seymour, 54 Cal.App.2d 266, 275, 128 P.2d 726.

With the foregoing rules in mind the record reveals that there was before the court evidence that:

(1) After the appellant purchased the Casa Blanca Hotel (Rossmore and Rosewood Streets), thereby becoming obligated to make payments on the four trust deeds on that property, he became delinquent in his payments. This led to a suit by Miller, holder of the second trust deed, which was settled on condition that the appellant supply Miller with receipts of payments on the first trust deed within 10 days after they accrued.

(2) In October, 1954, appellant gave to Miller a receipt from Zenith National Insurance Company, holder of the first trust deed, signed by "M. A. Showers", cashier of Zenith Company, indicating that the October payment of $5,407.20 was made. Similar receipts for the months of June, August and September in similar fashion were earlier delivered to Miller by the appellant. Possessed of these receipts, Miller was secure in the belief that all the payments due on the first trust deed had been made up to and including October 8, 1954.

(3) Mrs. Mary Ann Cornwell, the former Mary Ann Showers, or M. A. Showers, cashier of Zenith Company, testified that the signature on the October, 1954, receipt was not her signature, and that she did not at any time authorize anyone to sign her name thereto, nor did she ever receive the $5,407.20 described thereon. In like fashion she testified in regard to June, August and September receipts. All the above receipts were written on stationery from memoranda pads of the type available and used by Zenith Company.

(4) The records of Zenith National Insurance Company do not reflect the first trust deed payments for the months of June, July, August, September and/or October, 1954. In fact, the records reveal that no principal payments on the first trust deed were made after March 1, 1954.

(5) In September, 1954, Miller attempted to borrow money on his second trust deed and pursuant thereto gave to the appellant a beneficiary statement obtained from the Bank of America for the defendant to take to Zenith Company to have that company insert thereon the balance remaining on the first trust deed. The defendant returned this document to Miller with the figure $290,000 in the appropriate space and bearing the signature "M. A. Showers". The defendant stated to Miller that he had observed "M. A. Showers" sign the document and, in Miller's presence, wrote thereon, "Witness E. E. Hassen" after Miller indicated that the document ought to have been witnessed.

Mrs. Cornwell testified that she did not sign the beneficiary statement, nor did she at any time authorize anyone to sign her name to that document.

(6) Miller discovered that the above corporate receipts, and the October, 1954, receipt, were invalid in November, 1954, and thereafter had several conversations with the defendant relative thereto. At one of these meetings the defendant attempted to "grab" an envelope in Miller's possession which contained photostatic copies of the above receipts.

All of the foregoing evidence was admissible under the stipulation after trial by jury had begun and when a jury was waived and the cause submitted to the court on Count V, at which time it was agreed that all of the evidence presented up to that time as to all counts was to be considered by the court in determining appellant's guilt or innocence as to Count V. In People v. McKenna, 11 Cal.2d 327, 332, 79 P.2d 1065, 1068, it is stated, "The crime of forgery consists either in the false making or alteration of a document without authority or the uttering (making use) of such a document with the intent to defraud. Sec. 470, Pen.Code. * * * the test is whether upon its face it will have the effect of defrauding one who acts upon it as genuine. [Citing cases.]"

Measured by the foregoing rules and the testimony hereinabove narrated, we are satisfied that the corpus delicti as to Count V was legally established. There can be no doubt that Morris Miller acted upon the fictitious receipt as being genuine and that it was given to him by appellant with intent to defraud.

[7] We are convinced that appellant's argument that since the receipts were corporate receipts the "lack of authority" element could only be proved by showing that the corporation itself gave no authority for issuance of the receipt lack substance. Conceding that the Zenith Company through its officers could authorize the issuance of corporate receipts the corporation was without power to authorize the signing by appellant of the name of "M. A. Showers". This was her personal signature and because she was an employee, the corporation was not authorized, without her consent, to assign the use of her personal signature to appellant or any one else. Appellant relies upon the case of People v. Hidalgo, 128 Cal.App. 703, 18 P.2d 391, and People v. Lundin, 117 Cal. 124, 48 P. 1024. These authorities do not aid appellant because they are easily distinguishable from the facts and circumstances present in the case now engaging our attention. The conviction in the Hidalgo case was reversed because the defendant was charged with having forged and passed a check drawn by "Baker Ice Co., L. Baker, H. Spencer" and there was no evidence at the trial that L. Baker or H. Spencer were not authorized to draw checks on this account. The bank records revealed that it was authorized to honor a signature by "J. M. McKenzie, Manager of the corporation, or any other, by said J. M.

McKenzie." (Emphasis added.) No showing was made that J. M. McKenzie did not authorize L. Baker and H. Spencer to draw the checks, which were the subject of the forgery. Moreover, the court stated that it was necessary for the prosecution to show that neither of these persons was authorized to sign the checks, and if authorized that neither of them had signed the checks or authorized his name to be signed by the defendant thereto. Since the prosecution made no such attempt, and since neither J. M. McKenzie nor any other officer of the corporation was called as a witness, the evidence failed to show lack of authority.

In the Lundin case the defendant was convicted of forgery for having passed a check signed by one John F. Johnson, but no testimony was introduced that the accused was not authorized to sign the name of the witness John F. Johnson to the check.

In the instant case, the witness Mary Ann Showers or M. A. Showers, whose name was signed to the receipt in question, not only testified that the receipts which purportedly bore her signature were not signed by her but that she did not either orally or in writing authorize any one to sign her name to those receipts. What stronger evidence of "lack of authority" could be presented?

Since the corpus delicti was adequately and legally established, we deem it unnecessary to here set forth in detail the voluminous evidence received while the cause was on trial before the jury other than to say that all of it was properly before the court in considering Count V, pursuant to stipulation as follows:

"Mr. Crail: Your honor please, as far as the People are concerned, we will stipulate that the case insofar as Count five is concerned, that the evidence thus far received may be submitted to the Court to determine the guilt or innocence of the defendant on that particular Count.

"The Court: Very well.

"Mr. Higgins (Attorney for defendant): We so stipulate, your Honor. You so stipulate personally, do you not, doctor?

"The Defendant: Yes.

"Mr. Higgins: I have explained to the defendant, your Honor, that all of the testimony that has been produced in this trial is to be considered by your Honor with reference to his guilt or innocence as to Count 5 of the Information. You understand that, do you, doctor?

"The Defendant: Yes.

[8] Suffice it to say that when all of the evidence is considered it reveals a course of conduct on the part of appellant teeming with fraud and replete with intrigue, deception and duplicity, all of which not only establish the corpus delicti but fully warranted the court in finding the accused guilty of the crime of forgery as charged in Count V of the information. As stated by respondent, it "convincingly displays the defendant's felonious intent to deceive and defraud the junior secured creditors. It was the defendant's intent to lull the holders of the junior trust deeds into a feeling of security by producing the invalid receipts of the first trust deed holder, indicating, thereby, that the defendant was keeping up these payments."

[9] It is also noteworthy that appellant did not take the witness stand, nor did he present any witnesses to testify in his behalf. From a reading of the record in this case we are impelled to the view that it presents a situation wherein the rule referred to as, "the rule of convenience or necessity" might properly be applied. The rule is thus stated in 16 Cor.Jur. 530, quoted with approval in People v. Osaki, 209 Cal. 169, 191, 286 P. 1025, and People v. Agnew, 16 Cal.2d 655, 663, 107 P.2d 601, 605, "Where the subject matter of a negative averment in the indictment, or a fact relied upon by defendant as a justification or excuse, relates to him personally or otherwise lies peculiarly within his knowledge, the general rule is that the burden of proof as to such averment or fact is on him.'"

[10] Particularly applicable to the case at bar is the language of the court in People v. Caldwell, 55 Cal.App.2d 238, 251-252, 130 P.2d 495, 502, as follows: "While the information accused appellant of a forgery necessitating proof that he did not have the authority * * * to affix the * * * name to the certificate or to the indorsement upon it, appellant did not take the stand to throw any light upon that subject. Under the circumstances * * appellant should have assumed some of the responsibility of defeating the accusation rather than of maintaining the attitude of expecting the prosecution to fail in its proof. * * * His proof of possession of any such authority would instantly have dispelled the web that entangled him, and if such proof existed it lay peculiarly within his knowledge." See also People v. Terrill, 133 Cal. 120, 65 P. 303.

That recognition of the rule of convenience does not deprive the accused of the presumption of innocence was the holding in People v. Cline, 79 Cal.App.2d 11, 15, 179 P.2d 89, while in People v. Osaki, supra, 209 Cal. at page 186, 286 P. at page 1031, our Supreme Court said: "It is consistent with all the constitutional protections of accused men to throw on them the burden of proving facts peculiarly within their knowledge and hidden from discovery by the Government. 4 Wigmore, Evidence, § 2486."

[11] Finally, appellant assigns as prejudicial error the action of the court in sustaining objections to certain questions propounded on cross-examination of the witness Edgar S. Wilkinson, President of Zenith Corporation. While we are not directed to any particular questions to which it is claimed that objections were erroneously sustained, we have examined the record and in the light of appellant's brief it appears that he was attempting to show that Zenith Corporation was arranging to acquire the trust deed in question for the express purpose of making it unnecessary for appellant to make payments of principal and that the only reason there was ever any foreclosure which affected the trust deed holders on the property was because the Insurance Commission questioned the transaction, "and this was all contrary to what Dr. Hassen (appellant) expected to happen". We fail to perceive the materiality of the testimony attempted to be elicited as being within the issues framed by the information or established by the evidence, and therefore conclude that the objections were properly sustained on that ground as well as on the ground, in some instances, that the questions called for hearsay testimony.

Appellant also contends he was entitled to ascertain from the witness what the latter knew about Zenith Corporation's arrangement to forego payments on the loan because of appellant's announced position that all of his acts were with the knowledge and consent of the insurance company officers. The objections to this line of questioning were properly sustained. The only "announced position" of appellant that we can find in the record was a statement made by defense counsel while arguing an objection to a question propounded to the witness Wilkinson on cross-examination. There is no testimony as to such a position in the record. Neither appellant himself or any other witness testified with reference thereto. And, as heretofore pointed out, the Zenith Corporation was without authority to authorize appellant to sign the name of Mary Ann Showers or "M. A. Showers" to the receipt in question without her consent.

[12] For the foregoing reasons, the attempted appeal from the "verdict" is dismissed since the trial by jury was waived, and for the further reason that the statute does not authorize an appeal to be taken from a verdict. The order denying defendant's motion for a new trial is affirmed.

Sept. 13, 1956.

Action on agreement allegedly signed by copartner when defendant was a member of the partnership. The Superior Court, San Diego County, Dean Sherry, J., rendered judgment for defendant. Plaintiff appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Griffin, Acting P. J., held that evidence supported finding that partnership was not in existence when the agreement was signed.

1. Partnership Ⓒ285

When a partnership is dissolved the authority of one partner to create a new obligation for the partnership is revoked and his agency for his copartner ends.

GRIFFIN, Acting Presiding Justice.

Plaintiff, as assignee of the claim of San Diego Neon Sign Company, a corporation (hereinafter referred to as the sign company) brought this action to recover, $2,771.50, plus interest and attorneys' fees, from defendants Raymond B. Beach, Mrs. Glenn R. Prescott, and James W. Thompson, individually and against the first two named as doing business as Beacon Inn, based upon a claimed assignment of a Neon sign agreement between the sign company and defendant Thompson. Beach defaulted and judgment was entered in plaintiff's favor against him. Thompson appeared by answer and cross-complaint, denied the allegations of the complaint and alleged, as against defendants Beach and Prescott, that if defendant Thompson was held liable under plaintiff's complaint he should have judgment against them accordingly. Trial was had and judgment was rendered in favor of plaintiff and against Thompson and Beach, but the trial court held that there was not sufficient evidence produced to show any liability on the part of Mrs. Prescott. Judgment was rendered in favor of Thompson on his cross-complaint against Beach alone. This appeal is by plaintiff from that portion of the judgment denying it any relief against Glenn R. Prescott.

The factual background shows that defendant Thompson and wife owned the Beacon Inn, near Cardiff. The sign company built, on his order, certain electric Neon signs and installed them upon the inn and leased these signs to Thompson under a 36-months lease at $111.50 per month. The latest agreement was dated October 20, 1952, and contained certain conditions showing that title to the signs always remained in the sign company; that upon default or sale of the premises all amounts became due and the owner could terminate all rights of the user to said signs; that all conditions thereof were binding on the assigns and the interest of the user would be transferrable only upon the written consent of the owner. On September 4, 1953, the Thompsons entered into an escrow agreement, individually signed by all parties, agreeing to sell to defendant Raymond B. Beach and Glenn Riley Prescott, as tenants in common, the Beacon Inn, and its fixtures and furniture, subject to certain deeds of trust and a chattel mortgage. Therein is a clause reciting:

"We, Thompson, will hand you Assignment of that certain Neon Sign Contract with the San Diego Neon Company, with an unpaid balance of $1500.00 no adjustment to be made; tem and conditions therein contained are hereby approved."

Immediate possession was to be given to defendants Beach and Prescott. It appears that defendants Prescott, and Beach as manager and operator, took over the inn about September 4, 1953. Thompson remained for about 30 days to acquaint Beach with its operation. Defendant Prescott returned to Arizona where she resided. She testified that she and Beach "entered into a partnership contemplating the purchase of the Beacon Inn" and that between September 4 and October 12, they were receiving profits and paying the current operating charges. Both defendants Beach and Mrs. Prescott, in accordance with the escrow agreement, on September 10, 1953, joined the seller in signing and publishing a notice of intention to sell and purchase the business under section 3440.1 of the Civil Code. Thereupon the sign company filed in escrow a statement of the amount claimed due under the lease. It then appears that on October 10th or 12th, 1953, defendant Prescott entered into an agreement with defendant Beach to sell her interest in the property to Beach and, according to the testimony of Beach and Mrs. Prescott, she "walked out" and was "out of the picture" and claimed that their purported partnership was then terminated. Thereafter Beach and Thompson ran the business. Beach subsequently sold it to a Mr. Mouzas, and operated it for him under lease until the Board of Trade took it over. During this period Mrs. Prescott and Beach signed amendments to the escrow agreement, including one dated September 9, 1953, authorizing the vesting of the property conveyed to Raymond B. Beach and Glenn Riley Prescott to show an undivided $16\frac{2}{3}$ interest in Beach and $83\frac{1}{3}$ interest in Prescott. On December 5, 1953, in accordance with their previous agreement, there was an amendment to the escrow agreement filed in the original escrow which was signed individually by defendants Beach, Thompson and Prescott, providing for a grant deed of Mrs. Prescott's interest in the property to Beach, assumption of certain obligations by Beach, and execution of a trust deed on the property in favor of defendant Mrs. Prescott, with interest thereon from October 12, 1953, the date of the claimed dissolution of partnership. The escrow, showing title in Mouzas, was finally closed in June, 1954.

The pivotal question upon which plaintiff claims Mrs. Prescott is liable for the balance of the payments on the Neon Sign Agreement signed by Thompson, is based upon a certain printed, undated "Assignment of Agreement" in evidence, which recites in general that the assignor, James W. Thompson (who concededly signed it) assigns unto "Raymond B. Beach & Glenn R. Prescott" all of his rights as user under the contract of October 20, 1952". Therein the assignee agrees also to be liable for payments of sums due thereon, plus attorneys' fees. Under the undated acceptance clause of the assignee appears the typewritten names "Raymond B. Beach & Glenn R. Prescott" and the printed word "By", followed by the signature of Raymond B. Beach. Then follows a paragraph signed by the sign company agent consenting to the assignment. As to each paragraph there is a printed space providing as follows: "Dated —, 19—". All three separate agreements were undated.

It is conceded that defendant Prescott never did sign this Assignment Agreement. She testified that she knew nothing about it until she was sued as a party defendant in this action on or about April 15, 1955. She denied specifically and generally that defendant Beach was her partner at the time of its execution and claimed he had no authority to execute it in her behalf; and that she did not approve nor ratify his actions in so doing. It is the testimony of Beach that the sign company called him into its office; that the assignment had been typed by the sign company and its agent directed him to sign at the place indicated; that he "signed it for himself" and did not intend to bind her and "figured she had to sign it too"; that he did not remember the date when he signed it but "it must have been in September or October, 1953"; and that he could not remember whether he was then in partnership with Mrs. Prescott.

The president of the sign company testified he did not know the date when the assignment was executed and did not know the date when he received it back from the title company. There is a letter in evidence written by the sign company to the escrow company dated September 15, 1953, enclosing their claim for $3,083, or requesting a signed Assignment of Agreement by all parties as per forms enclosed. There is another letter from the sign company dated December 8, 1953, stating that it was reducing its claim by $223 and upon receipt of said amount and the signed assignment it would release its claim in escrow.

It is the claim of the plaintiff that there was a partnership in existence at the time the assignment was signed; that Beach, as one of such partners, had the authority to sign for the partnership and to bind Mrs. Prescott under the assignment; that the partnership was not dissolved on October 12, but continued in existence until the close of the escrow; that if Beach was not so authorized, Mrs. Prescott was estopped to accept the benefits of the agreement without assuming the burdens; and that a quasi contract or ostensible agency arose by which she became bound by the agreement, citing such authority as Sections 2300, 2307, 2310 and 2311 of the Civil Code; Fairbanks v. Crump Irrigation & Supply Co., 108 Cal. App. 197, 291 P. 629, 292 P. 529; Ralphs v. Hensler, 97 Cal. 296, 32 P. 243; Corporation of America v. Harris, 5 Cal.App.2d 452, 43 P.2d 307; *Gaine v. The trial court found generally in favor of Mrs. Prescott's contentions and specifically found that on October 12, 1953, Beach arranged to buy her interest in the partnership and that to accomplish this, further amended instructions were filed in the same escrow; that the partnership only extended to October 12, 1953; that Glenn R. Prescott never signed nor executed said agreement; that Beach executed it for himself alone and not as an authorized act of hers or the partnership; that she never ratified his conduct; that payments were made in September and October on the contract by checks signed "Beacon Inn, Raymond B. Beach", and no payments were subsequently made; and that plaintiff produced no sufficient evidence showing the contract was signed by Beach during the time he was a copartner with Mrs. Prescott, and consequently she is not personally liable to pay plaintiff anything under the lease agreement.

Further, it should be noted that in the closing of the escrow, an auditor submitted a report on the conduct of the business between September 4, 1953, and October 12, 1953, and apportioned the debts between Beach and Prescott for that period in the final settlement.

[1-3] When a partnership is dissolved the authority of one partner to create a new obligation for the partnership is revoked and his agency for his copartner ends. Maryland Casualty Co. v. Little, 102 Cal.App. 205, 211, 282 P. 968. The evidence was sufficient to support the court's finding in this respect. Young v. Young Holdings Corporation, Ltd., 27 Cal.App.2d 129, 80 P.2d 723. It is scarcely necessary to add that a judgment cannot be reversed on appeal merely because the preponderance of the evidence may appear to be on the side of one party or the other, but only when there is a total absence of competent evidence to sustain material findings. Corporation of America v. Harris, 5 Cal.App.2d 452, 457, 43 P.2d 307.

[4] As to the claimed estoppel, the use of the signs for the short time between the date of the creation of the partnership and the date of its dissolution would not necessarily amount to an estoppel as a matter of law. No particular benefits were conferred upon Mrs. Prescott. The court found that the used signs had no trade-in value. Apparently Beach continued to use them for himself and while operating for the new owner, Mouzas. According to the evidence, the sign company endeavored to collect the amount due from them and never made any demand on Mrs. Prescott for the amount claimed due. On June 8, 1954, Thompson, through his attorney, demanded that Mouzas refrain from using his sign containing the name of "Thompson", which was in large letters, because it violated the agreement of sale. The sign company subsequently removed them on Mouzas' orders. Mouzas then ordered a new sign from the sign company.

[5] It does not affirmatively appear that Mrs. Prescott had full knowledge of the assignment transaction and therefore, with such knowledge, she acted in such a manner that it might be unquestionably inferred that she acquiesced in the transaction and accordingly created a quasi contractual right in favor of the sign company. It does not appear that an ostensible agency of Beach to sign the assignment for Mrs. Prescott arose. This was the only instrument in which it was claimed by anybody that he had such authority as her agent. In all other agreements, amendments to the escrow, and other transactions, the individual name of Mrs. Prescott was demanded and furnished.

[6] It is a general rule of law that where a third person relies upon an ostensible agency, he must give evidence of similar transactions in which the act of the agent was authorized or recognized. 1 Cal.Jur. p. 742, sec. 42.

The judgment in favor of defendant Prescott is affirmed.

Civ. 8834.

District Court of Appeal, Third District,
California.

Aug. 30, 1956.

Rehearing Denied Sept. 25, 1956.

Hearing Denied Oct. 24, 1956.

Wife's divorce action. The Superior Court, Sacramento, County, James H. Oakley, J., granted wife an interlocutory decree of divorce upon the ground of extreme cruelty, granted wife custody and support of children, alimony and made a division of property. Husband's motion for new trial was denied and he appealed from judgment on the motion. The District Court of Appeal, Schottky, J., held that where parties in divorce action were married eighteen years and had three minor children, the division of property and award of alimony sufficient so that it was not necessary that wife seek outside employment, was proper.

Judgment modified and affirmed.

1. Husband and Wife ⇨257

Where a spouse invests in a business before marriage and continues to operate the business after marriage, the division of profits into community and separate property is proportionate to what share of the profits originated from spouse's personal efforts and what share of the profits grew out of capital investment and this is determined from surrounding facts.

2. Husband and Wife ⇨249

Where husband invested in a business before marriage and after marriage wife worked in the business, location of business was changed with new furniture, fixtures and equipment added, profits from business were used to purchase a home and other property stipulated to be community property, worth of business multiplied and record did not disclose how separate property of husband was to be traced, original investment was so intermingled with community property as to constitute all community property.

3. Husband and Wife ⇨249

Where separate property of one spouse has been so intermixed with community property that the separate property cannot be traced, all the property is considered as community property.

4. Good Will ⇨1

A professional practice may, under certain circumstances, have a transferable good will attach to it.

5. Husband and Wife ⇨249

Where a general dental laboratory had been operated for more than twenty years and employed several men to do work for dentists practicing in a wide area and net income of business averaged $12,500 a year, good will attached to the business which could be counted as an asset of the community.

6. Divorce ⇨253

Where a dental laboratory business, established many years and serving a wide area, averaged $12,500 annual net income, a valuation of $25,000 for the good will of the business, used in determining community assets upon divorce, was not excessive.

7. Divorce ⇨240(5)

Where husband had a net income of between $15,000 and $20,000 per year, alimony award of $250 per month to wife was not excessive and was not an abuse of discretion.

8. Divorce ⇨252

In divorce action brought by wife under statute authorizing divorce for extreme cruelty, it was the right and duty of the court to divide the property in such proportions as a court, from all the facts of the case and the condition of the parties, deemed just. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 146, subd. 1.

9. Divorce ⇨240(2), 252

Where parties in divorce action, brought by wife on ground of extreme cruelty, were married eighteen years and had three minor children, a division of property and award of alimony sufficient so that it was not necessary that wife seek outside employment, was proper.

10. Divorce ⇨254

Where an interlocutory divorce decree purported to distribute community property between husband and wife, it would be modified by striking all words presently disposing of community property and inserting words to the effect that parties would be entitled at time of entry of a final decree, to portions of community property mentioned in the interlocutory decree.

Albert L. Wagner, and Thompson & Thompson, Sacramento, for appellant.

Pierce & Brown, Sacramento, for respondent.

SCHOTTKY, Justice.

Evelyn Mueller and Herman Mueller were married in 1935. Three children were born to them, Joan in 1936, Gary in 1939, and Neil in 1952. Differences arose between them, and after more than eighteen years of married life Mrs. Mueller filed an action for divorce. Following a trial she was granted an interlocutory decree of divorce upon the ground of extreme cruelty, was granted the custody of the children and was awarded alimony of $250 per month and support for the three children of $275 per month. The interlocutory decree also made a division of the property of the Muellers. Mr. Mueller's motion for a new trial was denied and he has appealed from said judgment.

Appellant husband does not challenge the decree in so far as it determines the marital status, the custody of the children or the amount awarded for their support, but appellant does make a vigorous attack upon the division of the property and upon the amount of alimony awarded respondent wife. Before discussing the specific contentions of appellant we shall give a brief summary of factual situation as shown by the record.

In 1926, when he was 19 years old, Mr. Mueller, a dental technician by trade, acquired a dental laboratory business for $6,500. He testified that at the time of his marriage in 1935 the value of all his property, including this business, including money in the bank, and everything except his 1931 Pontiac automobile, was $7,000, so it is apparent that there was little, if any, increase in the value of appellant's property between the date he purchased the dental laboratory business and the date of his marriage to respondent.

Mrs. Mueller started to work in the laboratory immediately after the marriage, doing general office work, stenography, and bookkeeping, and continued to work full time until the first child was born. After the birth of Joan and Gary, in addition to taking care of two children she continued for fifteen years to give one week a month to keeping the books.

During the marriage the size of the business increased greatly. Mr. Mueller employs five men in addition to himself. The laboratory does work for dentists as far north as Alturas, as far east as Reno, as far west as Fairfield, and as far south as Newman. The income from the business also increased tremendously.

At the time of the trial the property of appellant and respondent had increased to assets valued by the court at $128,883.89.

The court awarded respondent wife the following items of property:

The family home located at 2765 Land Park Drive, valued at	$26,750.00
Household furniture and furnishings valued at	5,000.00
A 1950 Cadillac automobile valued at	1,800.00
Stocks valued at	1,803.12
Cash in the sum of	6,092.82
Present cash value of certain life insurance policies	9,569.60

The court awarded appellant husband the following:

Real property on Unsworth Avenue, Sacramento, equity valued at	700.00
(Gross value $8,500.00, but subject to lien of $7,800.00)
Cabin at Thirty-Mile Stone, valued at	4,500.00
A one-third interest in Hamilton Jewelers, valued at	33,449.68
Proprietary interest in General Dental Laboratory, including book value of tangible assets of $10,215.76; one Chevrolet automobile, $1,050.00; and good will, $25,000.00; less accounts payable, $1,184.28; note payable to Anglo California National Bank, $11,000.00; also less accrued taxes and payroll, $999.62; valued at	23,081.86
Promissory note of Rose Hara valued at	10,896.33

The interlocutory decree provided further that "To equalize the respective distributing shares of the parties in and to the community property, defendant shall make, execute and deliver to plaintiff his promissory note in the sum of $10,301.16 payable in installments of not less than $100 per month, together with interest at the rate of five and one half per cent (5½%) per annum with unpaid balance due on or before seven (7) years from date," said note to be secured by a lien in favor of respondent upon the interest of appellant in Hamilton Jewelers.

Appellant's first contention is that the court erred in attempting to distribute the community property at the time of entering the interlocutory decree. He cites Gudelj v. Gudelj, 41 Cal.2d 202, 259 P.2d 656, and numerous other cases which lay down the rule that the portions of an interlocutory decree purporting to make an immediate distribution of property are erroneous. Respondent in reply does not question the rule but asserts that appellant should be estopped to make this contention because appellant's counsel at the trial "repeatedly asserted to the court that one of the objects of the trial would be to have the court make a present division of the community property." The record shows that prior to the taking of testimony there was a discussion between counsel for the respective parties and the court as to a division of the property, and while there was no specific mention of present or immediate distribution, the court could well have, and undoubtedly did, infer from the statements of counsel that the parties did desire an immediate division of the property. However, in the instant case it is stated in respondent's brief and not disputed by appellant in his reply brief that appellant has not delivered to respondent any of the property awarded to her in the interlocutory decree, and therefore the error complained of is one "which may and should be corrected by striking out the words of present disposition and inserting words to indicate that the disposition will be made in the

Appellant makes a number of contentions in his attack upon the division of the property. These contentions center upon the finding as to the proprietary interest in General Dental Laboratory, which, as hereinbefore set forth, was awarded to appellant. The dental laboratory business was found by the court to be community property and appellant points to the evidence that nine years prior to his marriage he purchased said business for $6,500 and argues that the court erred in failing to find what part of the business was his separate property. Respondent in reply points to testimony of appellant that at the time of the marriage the value of his business was $6,500 and points also to the fact that no testimony was introduced to trace any part of the $6,500 from the date of the marriage, or to show whether it was represented in fixtures or furniture which must have become obsolete or which may have been left when the business moved. Respondent points also to the testimony of appellant that the success and value of the business was due entirely to his skill and ability and argues that under the circumstances shown by the record, whatever may have been the separate interest of appellant in said dental laboratory business, it was hopelessly commingled with community earnings. Respondent quotes the following from In re Estate of Fellows, 106 Cal.App. 681, at page 684, 289 P. 887, at page 888:

"* * * it is incumbent upon the party contending for the separate estate to clarify the history of the property and to demonstrate, not to an exactitude, but to that degree of proof that clearly and convincingly satisfies an unprejudiced mind, that the property is separate property. Freese v. Hibernia Sav. & Loan Soc., 139 Cal. 392, 73 P. 172. The burden of proof is upon the claimant of the property as separate estate."

"In the absence of evidence to the contrary, it must be assumed that the horses were lost by death and that the tools, implements, etc., were discarded at some period during the twenty-seven years of married life, as useless."

[1] The general rule is well expressed in 10 Cal.Jur.2d, pages 686, 687:

"If, however, one of the spouses invests his or her separate property in a business and conducts that business during marriage, the resulting profits are community and separate property in proportion to the amounts attributable to that spouse's personal efforts and to capital investment, respectively.

"What amount of the profits of a business conducted by one of the spouses is due to the personal efforts of that spouse and what amount is attributable to his or her capital investment must, in each case, be determined from the surrounding facts and circumstances."

[2, 3] In the instant case the record shows that respondent worked with appellant in said business after the marriage, that the profits from the business were used to buy a substantial home and other property including real property, stocks and an interest in the Hamilton Jewelry Company. It was stipulated in open court that all of this property was community property, which indicates strongly that the parties after their marriage regarded said dental laboratory business and the profits thereof as community property. While it is true that appellant paid $6,500 for the business nine years prior to the marriage, it is also true that the location of the business was changed after the marriage and that new furniture, fixtures and equipment were added. In the absence of any evidence in the record to trace any of the property that was in the business at the time of the marriage, and in view of the manner in which the proceeds of the business were invested and regarded by appellant and respondent, the court may well have concluded that any portion of the present value of the dental laboratory business that could be said to be traceable back to original investment was so intermingled with undisputed community property that it should be regarded as community property. For as stated in 10 Cal.Jur.2d, pp. 702, 703:

"But the presumption in favor of community property applies to commingled property so that the burden of proof rests upon the party claiming a part as his separate property. Accordingly, if separate property or funds which have been commingled with community property cannot be traced, the entire mass is treated as community property."

[4] Appellant next contends that the court erred in determining that the value of the dental laboratory should include an amount of $25,000 which the court designated as good will. As hereinbefore set forth, the court found that the value of the business was $23,081.86, and in determining that value listed the tangible assets at $10,215.76, the Chevrolet at $1,050, the good will at $25,000, and listed the liabilities as accounts payable, $1,184.28, notes payable, $11,000, and accrued expenses, $999.62.

Appellant argues that no good will attaches to a business which, appellant states, depends solely on his personal skill and ability. Appellant asserts that "goodwill has uniformly been held not to attach to a business or profession dependent upon the personal skill or ability of the owner." However, we believe the general rule to be as stated in 24 Am.Jur. 808, as follows:

"Frequently, it has been held that salable good will can exist only in commercial or trade enterprises and that it cannot arise in a professional business depending upon the personal skill and confidence in a particular person. This view seems traceable to the early and narrow definition given to good will by Lord Eldon. The better doctrine, however, appears to be that good will also exists in a professional practice or in a business which is founded upon personal skill or reputation. Where a person acquires a reputation for skill and learning in a particular profession, as, for instance, in that of a lawyer, a physician, or an editor, he often creates an intangible but valuable property by winning the confidence of his patrons and securing immunity from successful competition for their business, and it would seem to be well settled that this is a species of good will which may be the subject of transfer."

And in 38 C.J.S., Good Will, § 6, page 953, it is said:

"No rigid and unvarying rule for the determination of the value of good will has been laid down by the courts; each case must be determined on its own facts and circumstances. The determination of the question must, within proper limits, be left to the jury, whose conclusion must rest on evidence legitimately tending to establish value and supporting the verdict.

"In determining the value the profits are necessarily taken into account, and the value is usually estimated at so many years' purchase on the amount of such profits."

[5] But even if we assume, as does appellant, that no good will attaches to a business which depends solely upon the personal skill and ability of an individual, it does not follow that no good will attached to the dental laboratory business here involved. For the record shows that this General Dental Laboratory business has been operated by appellant for more than twenty years; that appellant employs five men in addition to himself; that it does work for dentists as far north as Alturas, as far east as Reno, as far west as Fairfield and as far south as Newman; that the average net income of said business for the five-year period preceding the separation of appellant and respondent was approximately $12,500. We do not believe that the court was compelled to accept appellant's testimony that the business was dependent solely upon the personal skill and ability of appellant and that no good will value attached to the business. We believe that the question of whether or not good will attached to the dental laboratory business was one of fact for the trial court to determine, and that the court's determination that good will did attach is supported by substantial evidence.

[6] Appellant next contends that even if it be held that good will did attach to the dental laboratory business, the amount of $25,000 fixed by the court was grossly excessive.

The trial judge stated in his memorandum opinion:

"* * * Concerning the good will value, the evidence ranged from no value whatsoever to over $34,500.00. Concededly this item can be an estimate only. The Court is convinced there is substantial value, but is not willing to put it as high as did plaintiff's accountant. It being an estimate only, though a substantial one, the Court has assigned the $25,000.00 figure."

The testimony of George Harbinson, a certified public accountant called as a witness by respondent, was to the effect that good will of the so-called personal services businesses can be determined using two formulas: (1) the establishing of all or a percentage of one year's average gross income, (2) by ascertaining the average net income over a period of years, subtracting the portion allocable to salary and by capitalizing the difference over a period of years. The figure which Mr. Harbinson arrived at in applying both of these methods was $34,578.15. Capitalization was for four years.

There was testimony of witnesses for appellant which in many respects was contrary to the testimony of Mr. Harbinson, but it is evident that the trial court believed Mr. Harbinson's testimony that good will did attach to the dental laboratory business, although the court placed a lesser value on the good will than did Mr. Harbinson.

While there is much force in the able and earnest argument of appellant that no good will should attach to the dental laboratory business and that the value placed on the good will by the court was excessive, we believe that both issues were questions of fact for the trial court to determine. It was for the trial court to weigh and evaluate the evidence and a careful study of the record convinces us that there is substantial evidence to support the findings of the trial court.

[7] Appellant's final contention is that the sum of $250 per month awarded as alimony for respondent "is excessive and an abuse of discretion in view of the large value of the properties awarded to respondent and the numerous obligations imposed on appellant." He lists monthly payments that he is required to make, totaling the sum of $1,152, as follows:

Alimony payable to plaintiff,	$ 250.00
Maintenance payable for children,	275.00
Regular premiums due on $40,000.00 life insurance,	250.00
Installments on $10,301.00 note of defendant,	100.00
Interest of 5½% on foregoing note required,	56.00
Interest on $9,569.00 value policies, until paid,	52.00
Interest on $11,000.00 Anglo California Bank note,	50.00
Interest on $7,800.00 Anglo California Bank note,	42.00
One-third interest on Hamilton Jewelry note,	12.00
Maintenance of aged, needy mother, paid,	65.00

It should be noted that the $11,000 note to the Anglo California Bank was hereinbefore listed as a liability of the dental laboratory business that was awarded to appellant. It should be noted further that appellant lists the insurance premiums that he must pay in order to keep his life insurance, but respondent was awarded only $9,569.60 as the present cash value of said policies and the court ordered that appellant should keep said policies in force until respondent received this amount. There is nothing to prevent appellant from paying said amount by receiving the cash surrender value of said policies or using other funds to pay respondent said sum of $9,569.60 if he chooses to keep said policies in force.

The matter of the allowance of alimony is within the sound discretion of the court. In view of the fact that the record shows that appellant has a net income from all sources of between $15,000 and $20,000 per year, we do not believe that the court abused its discretion in awarding respondent the sum of $250 per month as alimony.

[8] It must be borne in mind that in the instant case the respondent was granted a divorce upon the ground of extreme cruelty. Subsection 1 of section 146 of our Civil Code provides:

"If the decree is rendered on the ground of adultery, incurable insanity or extreme cruelty, the community property shall be assigned to the respective parties in such proportions as the court, from all the facts of the case, and the condition of the parties may deem just."

The court had before it evidence as to all the property and income of appellant and respondent, and while it may be argued that it was the desire of the parties that the property should be divided as nearly equally as possible, it was still the right and duty of the court to divide the property in "such proportions as the court, from all the facts of the case, and the condition of the parties may deem just." For as stated in Lazar v. Superior Court, 16 Cal.2d 617, at page 620, 107 P.2d 249, at page 250:

"* * * A husband and wife may contract with one another concerning matters of property and support, Civ.

Code, secs. 158, 159; Huntsberger v. Huntsberger, 2 Cal.2d 655, 43 P.2d 258. But such agreements are subject to close scrutiny by a court in a subsequent divorce action and may be approved, modified or rejected by such court in the exercise of the powers given it under sections 139 and 146 of the Civil Code."

[9] We have hereinbefore held that the evidence was sufficient to support the court's determination that the dental laboratory business was community and also to support the valuation placed on the good will thereof. The court had a right to take into consideration the fact that appellant would receive and would continue to conduct the dental laboratory business from which the net income was in excess of $12,000 per year, and would also receive the one-third interest in the Hamilton Jewelry Company from which he would derive about $3,200 per year. The court also had a right to take into consideration the fact that respondent would receive the family home, furniture and furnishings, and automobile, valued at $33,550, and other property, from all of which there was little income. The respondent was awarded the custody of the three minor children aged 18, 15 and 2 years, and we do not believe that the court was required to make a division of the property and an award of alimony that would make it necessary for respondent, after eighteen years of married life and with the responsibility of caring for the minor children, to seek outside employment. We believe that upon the record in the instant case, even if a substantial part of the dental laboratory business could be considered the separate property of appellant and even if the valuation placed upon the good will was excessive, the division of the property by the court could not be held to be an abuse of discretion. For the trial court had all of the evidence before it and made what it deemed to be a proper division, and we cannot conceive how appellant would gain by a retrial of the division of the property.

[10] In view of the foregoing the interlocutory decree is modified by striking therefrom all words presently disposing of the community property and inserting words to the effect that upon the entering of the final decree the parties are entitled to have assigned to them the portions of the community property mentioned in the decree. As so modified the judgment is affirmed as of the date of its entry. Respondent to recover costs.

Civ. 17119.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California.

Sept. 11, 1956.

Mandamus proceedings by second lowest bidders on steel contract for contemplated bridge construction to restrain Director of Public Works from awarding contract to steel company which had submitted lowest bid, and to compel director to award contract to petitioning corporations. The Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco, Frank T. Deasy, J., entered order denying petition for writ of mandate and discharging alternative writ. Petitioners appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Peters, P. J., held, in part, that fact that bid on steel contract was submitted by bridge division of steel corporation, though corporation and not division held contractor's license, would not invalidate acceptance of bid and award of contract to steel corporation, where identity of bidder, as corporation, not division, was clear before acceptance, and objection was raised by second lowest bidders in their attempt to restrain award.

1. Mandamus ⇨92, 187(10)

Neither trial nor appellate court had power to order Director of Public Works to award steel contract for contemplated bridge construction to second lowest bidders, even if contract awarded to lowest bidder was, as claimed by second lowest bidders, a nullity, in view of fact that in notice to contractors director expressly reserved right to reject any and all bids, and of statute imposing duty on director to exercise judgment whether best interests of state would be served by award of contract to lowest bidder. West's Ann.Gov.Code, § 14335.

2. States ⇨98

Under statute providing that if Director of Public Works deems acceptance of lowest responsible bid not in best interests of state, he may reject bid and proceed by day's labor or advertise for other bids, and reservation of right of rejection in call for bids, Director of Public Works has duty of exercising his judgment whether it is in best interests of State to award contract to lowest bidder. West's Ann.Gov.Code, § 14335.

3. States ⇨98

The lowest qualified bidder on public contract has no legal right to compel the acceptance of his bid. West's Ann.Gov. Code, § 14335.

4. Bridges ⇨20(2)

Fact that bid on steel contract for contemplated bridge construction was submitted by bridge division of steel corporation, though corporation and not division held contractor's license, would not invalidate acceptance of bid and award of contract to steel corporation, where identity of bidder, as corporation, not division, was clear before acceptance, and objection was raised by second lowest bidders in their attempt to restrain award. West's Ann.Bus. & Prof.Code, § 7117.

5. States ⇨98

The competitive bidding statutes, and those requiring licenses for bidding on public works, are for the benefit of the public, and not for the benefit of bidders or licensees. West's Ann.Bus. & Prof. Code, § 7117.

6. Mandamus ⇨167

Where Director of Public Works alleged, in return to mandamus petition by second lowest bidders on steel contract seeking to restrain director from accepting bid by low bidding steel company, that steel company was the duly qualified and responsible low bidder for contract, this allegation constituted allegation that steel company's contractor's license had not been suspended or revoked, and controverted allegation of petition that steel company's license had ipso facto been suspended by its failure to notify state board of termination of employment of its designated responsible managing employee. West's Ann.Bus. & Prof.Code, § 7068(b).

7. Administrative Law and Procedure ⇨228

Failure to pursue an administrative remedy is, in most cases, a bar to court action. West's Ann.Bus. & Prof.Code, §§ 7068(b), 7090.

8. Licenses ⇨38

Statute requiring corporation holding public work contractor's license to notify state board within ten days of termination of employment of person corporation had designated as its responsible managing employee, and providing that if licensee fails to notify board, its license shall be ipso facto suspended, is not self-executing; statute means that when any of facts set forth in statute are made to appear to proper authorities, such authorities shall suspend license until failure to comply is remedied, and that such suspension shall date back to date of offense. West's Ann. Bus. & Prof.Code, § 7068(b).

9. Bridges ⇨20(2)

In view of fact that statute providing for ipso facto suspension of public works contractor's license of corporation which fails to notify state board of termination of employment of its designated responsible managing employee is not self-executing, statute did not excuse failure of second lowest bidders on steel contract for contemplated bridge construction to exhaust their statutory administrative remedy before resorting to court action to attack award of contract to steel company as lowest bidder. West's Ann.Bus. & Prof.Code, §§ 7068(b), 7090.

10. Licenses ⇨38

Statute providing that the suspension or revocation of license as a public work contractor may also be embraced in an action otherwise proper in any court involving licensee's performance of his legal obligation as contractor, is limited to cases where the question involved is the licensee's performance of his legal obligation as a contractor; statute does not apply to case of suspension of corporate license because of failure of corporation to notify state board of termination of employment of its designated responsible managing employee. West's Ann.Bus. & Prof.Code, §§ 7068(b), 7106, 7106.5.

11. Mandamus ⇨154(4)

Where petition, in mandamus proceeding by second lowest bidders on steel contract for contemplated bridge construction to restrain Director of Public Works from accepting bid of and awarding contract to lowest bidder, on claim that corporate lowest bidder's contractor's license had been automatically suspended by its failure to notify state board of termination of employment of its designated responsible managing employee, did not allege that petitioners had exhausted their available administrative remedy, under statute conferring disciplinary powers on registrar of contractors, petition did not state cause of action. West's Ann.Bus. & Prof.Code, §§ 7068(b), 7090.

12. Mandamus ⇨187(9)

Any claimed irregularity in proceedings before contractor's state license board, in reference to alleged failure of steel company to notify board of termination of employment of its designated responsible managing employee as required by statute, could not be corrected on appeal by unsuccessful contract bidders, from judgment refusing to restrain, by mandamus, director from accepting bid of steel company on steel contract for contemplated bridge construction, where unsuccessful bidders had not appealed from administrative determination which was adverse to their contention in mandamus proceedings. West's Ann.Bus. & Prof.Code, § 7068(b).

13. Evidence ⇨48

Undisputed fact that contractor's state license board had investigated complaint of unsuccessful bidders and had refused to take action against successful bidder, and that same issue unsuccessful bidders raised in mandamus proceeding had been passed upon by board, would be judicially noticed by court on appeal by unsuccessful bidders from judgment refusing to restrain, by mandamus, Director of Public Works from awarding contract to successful bidder. West's Ann.Bus. & Prof.Code, § 7068(b).

14. Mandamus ⇨174

Failure of court, in mandamus proceeding by unsuccessful bidders on steel contract for contemplated bridge construction to restrain Director of Public Works from awarding contract to successful bidder, to find on issue of suspension of contractor's license of incorporated successful bidder by its failure to notify board of termination of employment of its responsible managing employee, was not error, where board, having at least concurrent jurisdiction, had decided issue adversely to aggrieved bidders. West's Ann.Bus. & Prof.Code, § 7068(b).

PETERS, Presiding Justice.

Judson Pacific Murphy-Kiewit, a joint venture corporation,¹ brought this proceeding to prevent the state Director of Public Works from awarding a steel contract for the new Carquinez Bridge to the American Bridge Division, United States Steel Corporation, the lowest bidder, and to compel the Director to award the contract to Judson, the second lowest bidder. It is the main contention of Judson that American Bridge Division, United States Steel Corporation, was not properly licensed and qualified to bid on the work, and that, therefore, the contract should have been awarded to it.

The facts are that on October 14, 1955, the State Department of Public Works, Division of Highways, issued a notice inviting sealed bids for the steel work on the Carquinez Bridge. The notice provided that the bids would be opened on November 30, 1955, and that the award of the contract would be made within nine days thereafter. The notice expressly provided that the contract was conditional upon the issuance and sale of revenue bonds to be issued to finance the project. The bids were opened on November 30, 1955. American Bridge Division, United States Steel Corporation, an operating division of United States Steel Corporation, bid $9,-489,126. This was the low bid. Judson's bid, the second lowest bid, was $34,834.48 higher. The other two bids submitted were $2,000,000 and $4,000,000, respectively, higher than the lowest bid.

When the bids were opened, Judson orally protested the acceptance and filing of the low bid on the ground that American Bridge Division, United States Steel Corporation, had no contractor's license and therefore could not perform the work. A similar written protest was made by Judson on December 3, 1955.

The low bid reads as follows:

"Name of Bidder: American Bridge Division, United States Steel Corp.

"Business Address: 564 Market Street, San Francisco, Calif.

"Place of Residence: 525 William Penn Place, Pittsburgh 30, Penna."

The accompanying and required bidder's bond is made out similarly, and has attached to it a required list of officers and directors of the bidder. The list is admittedly the officers and directors of United States Steel Corporation. The low bidder also gave the number of its contractor's license as 128593 which admittedly is the contractor's license issued to United States Steel Corporation.

Within the nine days following the opening of bids, the State Highway Engineer requested an opinion of the Registrar of Contractors as to whether the contract could be awarded to the low bidder as named. The Registrar referred the inquiry to the Attorney General. He ruled that the low bid was valid, and that a contract properly could be awarded to the United States Steel Corporation based upon that bid. Thereupon, the State Highway Engineer recommended to the Director of Public Works that the low bid be accepted and that the contract be awarded to United States Steel Corporation. On December 7, 1955, the Director awarded the contract to United States Steel Corporation subject to the condition of the sale of revenue bonds.

1. A joint venture corporation consisting of several California corporations, and hereafter referred to as Judson.

On December 8, 1955, Judson filed a petition for mandate and for injunctive relief in an attempt to restrain the Director from awarding the contract to United States Steel Corporation, and to compel the Director to award the contract to Judson as the next lowest, qualified and responsible bidder.

On December 15, 1955, the United States Steel Corporation, by leave of court, filed a complaint in intervention. It alleged that it is a New Jersey corporation authorized to do business in California; that it was fully qualified and legally authorized to bid on the work here involved; and that it submitted a proper bid. An exhibit to the complaint in intervention is a letter from the Division of Highways to the intervener dated December 7, 1955, awarding the contract to intervener and requiring that such contract be executed in the name and under the seal of the United States Steel Corporation.

On December 16, 1955, several things occurred. Petitioner was permitted to amend its pleadings by adding a new paragraph, alleging that the bid of American Bridge Division, United States Steel Corporation, was submitted under a contractor's license issued to United States Steel Corporation; that such license qualified United States Steel Corporation to contract by and through its responsible managing employee, C. E. Webb; that petitioner is informed and believes and so alleges that C. E. Webb terminated his employment with intervener about May 19, 1955; that United States Steel Corporation failed to notify the Contractor's State License Board of such termination within 10 days as required by section 7068(b) of the Business and Professions Code; that under that section such failure, ipso facto, resulted in the suspension or revocation of the license of intervener.

Also on December 16th Durkee, as Director of Public Works, filed a demurrer and a return by way of answer, in which he averred that the bid was received from United States Steel Corporation, and not from any other entity; that American Bridge Division of the United States Steel Corporation is an 'operating' division of the company and not a separate entity; that United States Steel Corporation has a valid license numbered 128593; that United States Steel Corporation was qualified to bid on construction work in this state.

On the same date, December 16th, petitioner filed an answer to the complaint in intervention in which it made certain denials, and affirmatively alleged that at the time the challenged bid was submitted United States Steel Corporation was not a duly qualified and licensed contractor in this state.

On these pleadings the proceeding was taken under submission by the trial court. On December 21, 1955, the court entered its order denying the petition for a writ of mandate and discharging the alternative writ. Petitioner appeals.

[1] It will be noted that appellant in its petition prays that respondent be ordered to reject intervener's bid and be ordered to award the contract to Judson. It is quite clear that neither the trial court nor this court has the power to order respondent to award the contract to Judson, even if the contract awarded to United States Steel Corporation were a nullity. This is so because the notice to contractors expressly notified prospective bidders that the Director of Public Works reserved the right to reject any or all bids. Moreover, section 14335 of the Government Code provides that "If the director deems the acceptance of the lowest responsible bid or bids is not for the best interests of the State, he may reject all bids and proceed by day's labor or advertise for other bids in the manner required by this chapter."

[2, 3] It is apparent that were the court to order respondent to award the contract to Judson as the next lowest qualified bidder (assuming, contrary to the fact, that United States Steel Corporation was not qualified), it would be substituting the court's judgment and discretion for those of respondent.

ent. Clearly, the call for bids and the law confers on the Director the duty of exercising his judgment as to whether it is in the best interests of the state to award the contract to the lowest bidder. The lowest qualified bidder has no legal right to compel the acceptance of his bid. Charles L. Harney, Inc., v. Durkee, 107 Cal.App.2d 570, 237 P.2d 561; see also Stanley-Taylor Co. v. Board of Supervisors, 135 Cal. 486, 67 P. 783; Laurent v. City and County of San Francisco, 99 Cal. App.2d 707, 222 P.2d 274. At the oral argument appellant conceded that this is the law.

The basic question raised by appellant is whether or not the acceptance of the bid by, and the award of the contract to, respondent were proper and valid. The major argument of appellant is that the bid was submitted by the "American Bridge Division, United States Steel Corporation" and that no contractor's license has ever been issued to any such entity, and therefore that bidder is not qualified to do business in California. It is also pointed out that the records of the Registrar of contractors do not show that the American Bridge Division, United States Steel Corporation, was a part, segment or division of the United States Steel Corporation.

The point is highly technical and without merit. Admittedly, "American Bridge Division, United States Steel Corporation" has no license issued to it. We do know, and of this fact the court can take judicial notice, McPheeters v. Board of Medical Examiners, 74 Cal.App.2d 46, 168 P.2d 65, that until late in 1951 the American Bridge Company did have a license. The correspondence between the United States Steel and the Contractor's State License Board discloses that late in 1951 United States Steel applied for and received license 128593. Attached to the application for this license was the information that " * * * on December 31, 1951, the subsidiary operating companies of the United States Steel Corporation will cease doing business as individual and separate organizations, and will merge their activities into that of the United States Steel Company * * *" After listing the subsidiary companies, of which American Bridge Company was one, it is stated: "The former subsidiaries will continue their present identity as operating divisions of the United States Steel Company, with no substantial change in operating personnel or business policy." License 128593 was then issued to United States Steel Company, which designation was later properly changed to United States Steel Corporation.

[4] It is obvious that no serious objection has been or can be made to the manner in which the bid was accepted. If there ever was any doubt as to the identity of the low bidder it is quite clear that it was cleared away before the bid was accepted or the award made. Certainly, it is not a vital defect that United States Steel Corporation elected to submit its bid through one of its operating divisions. No one was misled. The corporation is the legal entity legally responsible for performance of the contractual obligations set forth in the contract. It is true that section 7117 of the Business and Professions Code requires the licensed contractor to act "in the name of the licensee as set forth upon the license," and that failure to do so subjects the licensee to disciplinary action. But such technical violation of the statute does not, per se, invalidate the contract.

[5] It must be remembered that competitive bidding statutes, and those requiring licenses for bidding on public work, are for the benefit of the public and not for the benefit of bidders or licensees. It certainly would amount to a disservice to the public if a losing bidder were to be permitted to comb through the bid proposal or license application of the low bidder after the fact, cancel the low bid on minor technicalities, with the hope of securing acceptance of his, a higher bid. Such construction would be adverse to the best interests of the public and contrary to public policy.

The other contention of the appellant came into the case as an apparent afterthought. The petition for mandate was filed December 8, 1955. The sole points raised in that petition were that the bid had been made by American Bridge Division, United States Steel Corporation, and that that entity was unlicensed, and that the purported acceptance by United States Steel Corporation was invalid. Then on December 16, 1955, appellant, in open court, was granted permission to add a new paragraph to its petition. It is there alleged that while United States Steel Corporation is licensed, such license designated one C. E. Webb as the responsible managing employee of the licensee; that on information and belief petitioner alleges that Webb terminated his employment with United States Steel Corporation on May 19, 1955; that the licensee failed to notify the Contractor's State License Board of such termination; that such failure, ipso facto, suspended the license under section 7068(b) of the Business and Professions Code.

[6] Appellant contends that this allegation was not controverted by respondent and intervener and stands undenied. This is not true. While no specific reference to the paragraph appears in respondent's return, also filed on December 16th, respondent does allege that United States Steel Corporation was the duly qualified and responsible low bidder for the contract. That necessarily constitutes an allegation that intervener's license had not been suspended or revoked.

[7] It should be mentioned that appellant did not make this objection at the time the bids were opened. Nor is it alleged that Judson made any complaint to the Contractor's State License Board, the agency which, by law, has licensing power, and the power to police the industry. The proper procedure for appellant to have followed was to first proceed before that Board. Section 7090 of the Business and Professions Code confers upon the Registrar power to investigate the actions of any contractor and to suspend or revoke a license "upon the verified complaint in writing of any person". This is the administrative remedy provided by the statute which appellant should have exhausted before filing its petition. Failure to pursue such an administrative remedy is, of course, in most cases, a bar to court action.

Appellant, while recognizing the rule requiring the exhaustion of administrative remedies, contends that that rule is not here applicable because, so it is argued, section 7068(b) of the Business and Professions Code operated to automatically suspend the license of United States Steel Corporation if Webb quit his employment and if the Board was not so notified. The section requires the applicant for a contractor's license to show experience and training in the field and provides that a corporation may qualify "by the appearance of the responsible managing officer or member of the personnel" of such corporation. The section then provides that if the individual qualifying "ceases for any reason whatsoever, to be connected with the licensee to whom the license is issued * * *, the licensee shall notify the registrar in writing within 10 days from such cessation, association or employment. * * *

"If the licensee fails to notify the registrar within the 10-day period, at the end of the period his license shall be ipso facto suspended. * * *

[8,9] It is obvious that this section is not self-executing. The phrase that the "license shall be ipso facto suspended" certainly does not mean that without action by the Board or the Registrar the license is revoked. If that were so, no one could be sure that a firm possessing an outstanding license was in fact licensed. Obviously, the section means that when any of the facts set forth in the section are made to appear to the proper authorities, such authorities shall suspend the license until the failure to comply is remedied and that such suspension shall date back to the date of the offense. The proper authority to determine this point is the Registrar. Thus, this section does not excuse the failure to allege the exhaustion of the statutory administrative remedy.

But, says appellant, the statute provides that the administrative remedy is not exclusive by conferring on the courts concurrent power to pass on the question. In this connection appellant refers us to section 7106 of the Business and Professions Code. That section provides:

"The suspension or revocation of license as in this chapter provided may also be embraced in any action otherwise proper in any court involving the licensee's performance of his legal obligation as a contractor." Section 7106.5 gives the Registrar "jurisdiction to proceed with any investigation" even though the matter is pending in a court.

[10,11] It is clear that this section does not apply to the suspension of a license under section 7068(b) of the Business and Professions Code. Section 7106, by its very terms, is limited to cases where the question involved is "the licensee's performance of his legal obligation as a contractor." Problems involving the "performance" of the "legal obligations" of a contractor only arise after the contractor has entered into a contract for the performance of some public work and some dispute has arisen. That is not this case. Certainly, it would be a strange rule of law that would permit a court to suspend or revoke a license in a proceeding such as the instant one in which the licensee was not even a party until it came in as an intervener. Disciplinary matters, such as a violation of section 7068(b) for this reason are left, and should be left, to the licensing board. If United States Steel Corporation did violate section 7068(b), obviously such violation was not connected with the "performance" of its "legal obligations" under any contract. Thus, the trial court properly determined the proceeding on the pleadings, holding, as a matter of law, that the amended petition did not state a cause of action because of the failure of the pleading to allege that an available administrative remedy had been exhausted.

It should be noted that attached to the intervenor's brief are certain appendices which show that on December 15, 1955, one day before the amended petition was filed in the Superior Court, appellant addressed a letter to the Registrar of contractors requesting an investigation of the very question here involved. The record shows that the Registrar, pursuant to this request, investigated the charge involving Mr. Webb. Under date of April 3, 1956, the Assistant Registrar notified appellant that the Registrar had investigated all of the facts in reference to the Webb matter; and that "The results of this investigation, including affidavits from the licensee and Mr. Webb, were presented to the Attorney General for interpretation and opinion * * *.

"* * * that in view of said Opinion, the agency finds no cause to institute a disciplinary action against the United States Steel Corporation as a licensee, and is, therefore, closing the matter."

The opinion of the Attorney General states that the office had received the affidavits submitted by United States Steel Corporation "in connection with the possible disassociation of Mr. C. E. Webb as Responsible Managing Employee of the corporation. We cannot say after a review of the record that a disassociation of the Responsible Managing Employee has occurred in this case which would require a notation upon the records of the Contractor's State License Board. We believe that the information contained in the said affidavits would indicate a compliance" with certain designated rules and regulations of the Board.

[12,13] Thus, the very issue appellant now claims should have been decided by the trial court in this mandamus proceeding has been passed upon by the licensing board. The proceeding before the licensing board was commenced one day before the issue was raised in the Superior Court. The licensing board, the agency primarily charged with the duty of policing contractors, on the advice of the Attorney General has found no violation, and so, of course, found no suspension of the license. At the oral argument appellant conceded that it had not appealed from this administrative determination. Any claimed irregularities in that proceeding cannot be corrected on this appeal. These matters are not disputed, and are matters of which this Court can take judicial notice.

[14] Thus, even if, contrary to the law, the failure to plead exhaustion of an available administrative remedy was not fatal, and if, contrary to the law, appellant's amended pleading and respondent's return did present an issue of fact which should have been decided by the trial court, we now know that the Board charged with the primary duty of making such an investigation, and which has at least concurrent jurisdiction with the courts, in a proceeding started before the issue was raised in a court, has decided the issue and found no violation. Thus, no error was committed by the trial court in failing to find on the issue.

The judgment appealed from is affirmed.

In the Matter of the ESTATE of Lucille

v.

Ruth Lelhy KERTZ, Petitioner and

Civ. 21797.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 3, California.
Sept. 13, 1956.

Rehearing Denied Oct. 4, 1956.

Hearing Denied Nov. 8, 1956.

Proceeding in the matter of the estate of deceased testatrix, wherein first testamentary trustee filed a petition to surcharge second testamentary trustee. The Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Burdette J. Daniels, J., entered an order adverse to the first trustee, and he appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Vallée, J., held that where first trustee filed petition to surcharge second trustee, and beneficiary of trust was given notice, she was made a party by the giving of such notice and was bound thereby, and therefore it was not essential, in order to give the Superior Court jurisdiction to hear and determine the petition, that beneficiary be named as a formal party litigant.

Order reversed.

22. Trusts ⇨240

If there are several testamentary trustees, each trustee is under a duty to beneficiary to use reasonable care to prevent a cotrustee from committing a breach of trust or to compel a cotrustee to redress a breach of trust.

Leland J. Allen, Los Angeles, for appellant.

Frye & Yudelson, North Hollywood, for respondent.

VALLÉE, Justice.

Appeal from an order settling the first accounts current of trustees and denying an amended petition of one trustee to surcharge another.

The decree of distribution in this estate, dated January 12, 1949, pursuant to a trust created by the will, distributed half of the estate to Ruth Leihy Kertz and Otto Hensel, husband of the decedent, as trustees with directions to pay the income of the trust to the decedent's daughter, Lucy Ann Allen, during her lifetime with remainder to Otto Hensel and Ruth Kertz.

In 1954 the trustees filed separate accounts current. Ruth Kertz filed objections to the account of Hensel. Hensel filed a petition to surcharge Ruth Kertz as trustee. The petition charged various acts of malfeasance on the part of Ruth Kertz; that there was a conflict of interests between her duties as trustee and her individual interests; that she had manipulated the assets of the trust so that no income could be paid to Lucy Allen; that no income had been paid to Lucy Allen except that on October 15, 1953 the trustees paid her $385.26 from the corpus of the trust; that she should have received at least $300 a month from the trust. The petition prayed that the court, among other things, determine the net income of the trust from the date of the decree of distribution and surcharge Ruth Kertz therewith. Ruth Kertz filed an answer and objections to the petition. Hensel filed a supplemental account and amended petition for the purpose of surcharging Ruth Kertz as trustee "with the income and assets belonging to the trust estate and withheld by her." The amended petition elaborated on the charges against Ruth Kertz, prayed for substantially the same relief and, in addition, for instructions to her.

All of the matters mentioned came on regularly for hearing before Judge Hansen on May 10, 1955. Counsel for Ruth Kertz objected to the hearing of the original and amended petition to surcharge on the ground the subject matter was outside the jurisdiction of the court. Judge Hansen found that all notices of the hearing had been given as required by law and that "the Court has jurisdiction to hear the Current Account of trustees, supplement account and petition re fees and surcharges," and continued all the matters.

On June 16, 1955 the various matters came on regularly for hearing before Judge Daniels. The court found "that notice of hearing on each of these matters was duly given as required by law." The court further found that "at no time was the said Lucy Ann Allen made and named as a party to any of these proceedings"; concluded that "the life beneficiary, Lucy Ann Allen, is a necessary party litigant to these proceedings and should have been included as such a party thereto," that "[t]his Court is without jurisdiction to entertain the petition to surcharge Ruth Leihy Kertz at this time"; and denied the petition to surcharge Ruth Kertz without prejudice. The petition to surcharge was denied by reason of the conclusion that Lucy Allen should have been "made and named" a party litigant. An order was made settling the accounts current of Hensel and Ruth Kertz. Hensel, as cotrustee and as a beneficiary of the trust, appeals from the order settling the accounts and denying the petition to surcharge Ruth Kertz.

The sole question for decision is: Was the court without jurisdiction to hear and determine the petition of Hensel to surcharge Ruth Kertz by reason of the fact that Lucy Allen, a beneficiary, was not named as a formal party in the petition to surcharge?

[1-4] When a trust created by will continues after distribution the superior court does not lose jurisdiction of the estate but retains jurisdiction for the purpose, among others, of settling the accounts and passing upon the acts of the trustee. Any trustee appointed to execute a trust created by will may from time to time, pending the execution of his trust, render for settlement his accounts and report his acts as such trustee. The account and report must give the names and post office addresses, if known, of the beneficiaries. The trustee may petition the court from time to time for instructions as to the administration of the trust. "The trustee shall cause notice of the hearing to be mailed to the beneficiaries at their last known addresses, as provided in said Section 1200, whether they have requested special notice or given notice of appearance or not." Prob.Code, § 1120. In the present proceeding both Judge Hansen and Judge Daniels found as a fact that notice of hearing on each of the matters before him was duly given as required by law.

[5,6] The superior court in the exercise of its probate jurisdiction has power to control trustees in the management of testamentary trusts. A trustee may invoke the jurisdiction of the probate court under section 1120. In re Estate of Prior, 111 Cal.App.2d 464, 472, 244 P.2d 697. The character and extent of the jurisdiction of the superior court sitting in probate is a matter under legislative control alone, and procedure by which that jurisdiction may be invoked and rights thereunder adjudicated is expressly laid down by statute. In re Estate of Davis, 136 Cal. 590, 597, 69 P. 412.

[7,8] The jurisdiction of the superior court sitting in probate under section 1120 is a jurisdiction in rem. Security-First National Bank v. Superior Court, 1 Cal.2d 749, 755, 37 P.2d 69. As such it is distinguished from a proceeding in personam in which the court obtains jurisdiction by personal service of notice on the party, or by appearance of the defendant. (20 Cal. Jur.2d 76, § 40.) The Probate Code prescribes the manner of giving notice of the hearing of each of the matters that were before the probate court. Prob.Code, § 1120. When the prescribed procedure is followed, notice that the proceeding is pending and will be had at a specified time and place is deemed to have been given to all interested persons. In Abels v. Frey, 126 Cal.App. 48, at page 53, 14 P.2d 594, at page 596, the court stated:

"By giving the notice prescribed by the statute, the entire world is called before the court, and the court acquires jurisdiction over all persons for the purpose of determining their rights to any portion of the estate, and every person who may assert any right or interest therein is required to present his claim to the court for its determination. Whether he appears and presents his claim, or fails to appear, the action of the court is equally conclusive upon him, "subject only to be(ing) reversed, set aside, or modified on appeal." The decree is as binding upon him if he fails to appear and present his claim, as if his claim, after presentation, had been disallowed by the court. * * *

"A person who is interested in the estate of a deceased person, who has had the notice required by law, becomes in point of law an actor in the proceedings, and is bound by the result."

Also see Ringwalt v. Bank of America, 3 Cal.2d 680, 684-685, 45 P.2d 967; In re Estate of Smith, 4 Cal.App.2d 548, 41 P.2d 565.

Security-First National Bank of Los Angeles v. Superior Court, 1 Cal.2d 749, at page 755, 37 P.2d 69, at page 72, declares:

"The filing of the petition setting forth the matters required by the Code sections noted [§ 1120, Probate Code; former § 1699 Code Civ.Proc.] vests jurisdiction in the probate court [citation], whether or not the allegations of the matters necessary to vest jurisdiction accord with the actual facts. [Citations.] The situation here presented calls for the same conclusions as in the case of Murray v. Superior Court, 207 Cal. 381, 385, 278 P. 1033, wherein it was held that the omission in the petition for the probate of the will of the names and addresses of the heirs, legatees and devisees, even if known to the petitioner, does not deprive the court of jurisdiction, and that, when the petition is silent as to such names and addresses, they must be deemed by the clerk to be unknown, and he is not required to mail copies of the published notice. The notice required by the sections is constructive notice to every one of the pendency of the proceedings, and a hearing had and order entered pursuant thereto is conclusive upon all parties in interest. [Citations.] Absence of a personal notice in such proceeding does not deprive any person in interest of any of his constitutional rights."

[9, 10] Analogous are the principles applicable in probate proceedings generally. The jurisdiction of the probate court was continuing and attached to the corpus of the trust when it passed from the executor to the trustees, and the law with respect to probate of decedents' estates applies. In re Estate of Smead, 16 Cal.2d 204, 206-207, 105 P.2d 589. Probate Code sections 1200 and 1202 provide for the giving of substantially the same notice to persons interested in the estate as does section 1120. Probate Code section 1200 provides that on the filing of an account of a trustee and on the filing of a petition of a trustee for instructions the clerk shall cause notice of the time and place of the hearing thereof to be posted at the courthouse of the county where the proceedings are pending at least 10 days before the day of hearing, and that at least 10 days before the day of hearing the person filing the account or petition must cause notice of the time and place of the hearing to be mailed to all persons who have requested notice or who have given notice of appearance in the estate and that "[p]roof of the giving of notice must be made at the hearing; and if it appears to the satisfaction of the court that said notice has been regularly given, the court shall so find in its order, and such order, when it becomes final, shall be conclusive upon all persons." Probate Code section 927 provides that any person interested in the estate may appear and file written exceptions to the account of an executor or administrator and contest the same. On the rendering of an account by an executor or administrator, if notice is posted as the law requires and the representative causes notice to be mailed or personally served on interested persons who have given notice of appearance or who have requested notice, jurisdiction of the res is conferred on the court and all interested persons are brought before it. And after such notice has been properly given it becomes the duty of all interested persons to keep themselves informed by diligent inquiry of subsequent continuances of the hearing. Prob. Code, § 1200; In re Estate of Bell, 58 Cal. App.2d 333, 336, 136 P.2d 804; Cf. In re Estate of Dam, 126 Cal.App. 70, 73-78, 14 P.2d 162.

In Lilienkamp v. Superior Court, 14 Cal.2d 293, at page 298, 93 P.2d 1008, at page 1010, it is said:

"Jurisdiction of the probate court is a jurisdiction in rem. The res is the decedent's estate, and the object of the probate and administration proceedings is to secure distribution to the persons entitled to share in the estate. Edlund v. Superior Court, 209 Cal. 690, 695, 289 P. 841. Jurisdiction is established when the appropriate petition has been filed and the notice required by the statute has been given. The usual method is by publication, or posting, as in the partial distribution proceeding here involved, or by both. By such method notice is deemed to have been given to all persons interested that the proceeding is pending. Where there is no statutory requirement therefor, personal notice to persons interested, although their interest appears, is not essential to give the probate court jurisdiction to distribute the estate to those entitled."

In re Estate of Loring, 29 Cal.2d 423, at page 429, 175 P.2d 524, at page 527, says:

"Section 1020 of the Probate Code requires that the estate be distributed only after notice has been given as provided in section 1200 of that code. The Lorings point out that under the latter section and section 1202 of the Probate Code they could have asked that special notice of the distribution proceedings be given them and contend that they are not bound by those proceedings, since they did not choose to ask for such notice. Section 1200 provides, however, in addition to the special written notice that any person interested in the estate may request, for a posted notice to 'All persons interested to appear * * * and show cause * * why the order should not be made.' Section 1200 further provides that, if the court finds in its order that notice has been regularly given, that order, 'When it becomes final, shall be conclusive upon all persons.' A posted notice is therefore sufficient to bind a beneficiary and it appears that it is because the Legislature contemplated that he would be bound by such notice that provision was also made as a protection against possible unfairness for him to request, if he wished to do so, that he be given special written notice of the proceedings."

[11-16] In a suit in equity to remove a nontestamentary trustee, a beneficiary of the trust is not necessarily an indispensable party. "Where persons are so interested in the controversy that they should normally be made parties in order to enable the court to do complete justice, but their interests are separable from the rest, they are necessary but not indispensable parties. On the other hand, one may be an indispensable party if his interest in the subject matter of the controversy is of such a nature that a final decree cannot be rendered between the other parties to the suit without inevitably affecting that interest. For example, where one person seeks to establish the amount of his share in certain property or in a particular trust fund, other persons with similar interests are indispensable parties." Bowles v. Superior Court, 44

Cal.2d 574, 583, 283 P.2d 704, 710. And failure to join a necessary party does not go to the jurisdiction of the court. (Id.) Nor, in the absence of a statute to the contrary, is it necessary to the exercise of jurisdiction to appoint a new trustee in case of a vacancy that the beneficiaries of the trust be joined in the proceeding or notified in advance of the court's action. Id., 44 Cal.2d at page 584, 283 P.2d at page 711. Further, in the present proceeding Lucy Allen is a represented party, represented by trustee Hensel; hence she is a party in legal effect and need not be "made and named" a formal party. "The principle applies to those who are indispensable to a complete determination of the controversy as well as to one who is merely a proper or necessary party, and we are of the view that the trustee removal action is a proper representative suit." Bowles v. Superior Court, 44 Cal.2d 574, 586, 283 P.2d 704, 712. Hensel, in seeking to have Ruth Kertz surcharged, is acting on behalf of Lucy Allen, the beneficiary.

[17-20] The petition to surcharge Ruth Kertz was but an exception to her account. Cf. In re Estate of Whitney, 124 Cal.App. 109, 11 P.2d 1107; In re Estate of Vokal, 121 Cal.App.2d 252, 263 P.2d 64. If on the hearing of her account it appeared she should have been surcharged for trust assets withheld by her, there can be no doubt but that the probate court had jurisdiction to do so. As an implied power stemming from the power to settle a trustee's account and determine what trust property he has in his hands, the superior court sitting in probate has jurisdiction to determine as against the trustee the amount of money and property of the trust estate which has come into his hands for the purpose of charging him therewith, and in determining that question to determine all issues necessarily incidental thereto. Bauer v. Bauer, 201 Cal. 267, 272, 256 P. 820; In re Estate of Fulton, 188 Cal. 489, 490, 205 P. 681. And an order entered in a proceeding under section 1120 pursuant to statutory notice is conclusive on all parties in interest. Security-First National Bank of Los Angeles v. Superior Court, 1 Cal.2d 749, 756, 37 P.2d 69.

[21] As found by the court, Lucy Allen was given the notice prescribed by section 1120. By the giving of that notice she was made a party to the proceedings and is bound thereby. It was not essential to give the probate court jurisdiction to hear and determine the petition to surcharge Ruth Kertz that Lucy Allen be named as a formal party litigant in the proceedings.

[22,23] If there are several trustees, each trustee is under a duty to the beneficiary to use reasonable care to prevent a cotrustee from committing a breach of trust or to compel a cotrustee to redress a breach of trust. (Rest., Trusts, §§ 184, 200, Comment d.) If there was a breach by Ruth Kertz it was the duty of Hensel to seek redress. It is the duty of Ruth Kertz to fully reimburse the trust estate and her cotrustee for all assets withheld by her, if any.

[24,25] The balance chargeable to the trustees cannot be ascertained until the petition to surcharge has been heard and determined. Since each trustee is chargeable with the entire estate and must account therefor, In re Estate of Whitney, 124 Cal.App. 109, 118-119, 125, 11 P.2d 1107, it was error to settle the accounts of the trustees before the court determined whether Ruth Kertz should be surcharged for all assets alleged to have been withheld by her.

The objection on the ground the court was without jurisdiction was made at the opening of the hearing. The court declined to rule on the objection at that time. It proceeded to take testimony for some three days, after which and the submission of briefs it ruled it was without jurisdiction. Appellant suggests that in the event of a reversal, in view of these facts we should direct that the matters be heard by the judge who heard the evidence in order that he may decide the issues and thus save time, expense, and repetition of evidence which has already been received. That is the function of the presiding judge of the superior court who, no doubt, on application will give the matter due consideration.

The order appealed from is reversed.

Civ. 16940.

District Court of Appeal, First District,
Division 2, California.

Aug. 29, 1956.

Rehearing Denied Sept. 28, 1956.

Hearing Granted Oct. 26, 1956.

Action for declaratory relief regarding rights of former subscribers of a reciprocal insurance exchange under agreement transferring its business to plaintiff indemnity company. Defendants brought cross-actions in such subscribers' behalf to recover plaintiff's insurance business on ground of disloyal diversion thereof from the exchange by an underwriters partnership, whose members substantially owned plaintiff's stock, as exchange's attorney in fact. From a judgment of the Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco, Albert C. Wollenberg, J., dismissing the complaint for declaratory relief and directing that declared net value of exchange's business, property and assets, returned to attorney in fact, be distributed thereby to such subscribers, defendants and cross-complainants appealed. The District Court of Appeal held that plaintiff, having illegally acquired exchange's business by breach of trust and in violation of law, could not retain profits subsequently secured from such subscribers as customers, but that cross-complainants could not recover plaintiff's anticipated future profits.

Judgment reversed, with directions.

1. Trusts ⇨247

Equity courts are concerned as much with preventing fiduciaries from benefiting from breaches of their trusts as with protecting trust beneficiaries from losses which they otherwise would not have sustained.

2. Trusts ⇨247

In considering remedies to be afforded trust beneficiaries for trustees' breaches of trust, courts look with particularly jealous eye on trust relation and hold trustees to highest standard of good faith.

3. Insurance ⇨12½

An indemnity company, illegally acquiring business of reciprocal insurance exchange, whose attorney in fact was a partnership members of which substantially owned company's stock, under invalid transfer and assumption agreement, cannot retain profits subsequently secured by company from exchange's former subscribers as customers because of such breach of trust and violation of law, though it might have obtained such customers in another way. West's Ann. Insurance Code, § 1101.

4. Trusts ⇨231(1)

A trustee's relation to trust estate prevents him from dealing therewith in such a way as to make personal profit for himself, and he is accountable for all profits obtained by him as result of pursuing such illegal course, though estate was not injured thereby.

5. Trusts ⇨231(1)

While restitution is ordinarily used to restore property to owner unjustly deprived thereof, a constructive trustee, receiving from beneficiary a benefit greater than loss suffered by beneficiary, must surrender such benefit, as trustee would be unjustly enriched if permitted to retain benefit, though not at beneficiary's expense.

6. Trusts ⇨231(1)

A trustee making a profit through violation of his duty to beneficiary can be compelled to surrender profit to beneficiary, though not made at his expense.

7. Trusts ⇨231(1), 247

Equity should not countenance reward of trustees for their violation of law by windfall of large sum of money which they would have been bound to pay beneficiaries had trustees' conduct been legal, if such result can be afforded by following established equitable principles, and one of recognized forms of relief is beneficiary's recovery of profits accruing to trustee who breaches his trust.

8. Appeal and Error ⇨1097(1)

Opinion of District Court of Appeal, holding that reciprocal insurance exchange's former subscribers had right to exchange's business taken over by indemnity company under invalid transfer and assumption agreement, though not to business built up by such company in general, and directing superior court to grant subscribers' representatives such relief as would enable them to recover for subscribers business and assets obtained by company in consequence of agreement, did not prevent representatives from recovering amount of profits made by company from such subscribers as customers, but was intended merely to direct that representatives recover whatever they might be entitled to in equity for wrongful taking over of exchange's business.

9. Insurance ⇨12½

The Insurance Code section, providing that insurer, suffering loss because of violation of section providing that insurer's officers shall not receive any money or valuable thing for negotiating, procuring or aiding in purchase or sale of property by or to insurer or be pecuniarily interested in any such purchase or sale, may recover damages sufficient to compensate insurer for such loss, does not preclude representatives of reciprocal insurance exchange's former subscribers from recovering for them amount of profits made by indemnity company from such subscribers as customers after company's wrongful acquisition of exchange's business under invalid transfer and assumption agreement; such profits being recoverable, not as damages, but by way of restitution. West's Ann. Insurance Code, §§ 1101, 1103.

10. Money Received ⇨1

Since purpose of restitution, sought either in equity or at law, is not to compensate plaintiff for his loss, but to restore what defendant received, courts look to inequity of allowing defendant to retain it rather than damage sustained by plaintiff.

11. Insurance ⇨12½

The statute declaring trustee, using or disposing of trust property in manner not authorized by trust, but in good faith, with intent to serve beneficiary's interests, liable only to make good whatever beneficiary lost by trustee's error, does not affect liability of indemnity company to reciprocal insurance exchange's former subscribers for profits made from them as customers by such company after acquiring business of exchange, whose attorney in fact was a partnership, members of which substantially owned company's stock, under transfer and assumption agreement in violation of Insurance Code, though company acted in good faith. West's Ann. Civ. Code, § 2238; West's Ann. Insurance Code, §§ 1101, 1106.

12. Criminal Law ⇨32

Ignorance of law is no excuse for its violation, but intentional doing of act prohibited by law is sufficient to constitute violation thereof.

13. Insurance ⇨12½

To ascertain indemnity company's net profits, secured from reciprocal insurance exchange's former subscribers as customers after company's wrongful acquisition of business of exchange whose attorney in fact was a partnership members of which substantially owned company's stock, under invalid transfer and assumption agreement, for purpose of determining amount recoverable from company by subscribers' representatives because of such breach of fiduciary duties and violation of statute, company's expenses properly allocable to such subscribers' policies should be deducted from premiums therefor. West's Ann. Insurance Code, § 1101.

14. Insurance ⇨12½

Since trust beneficiary's recovery from trustee of profits made thereby from breach of duty to beneficiary is allowed by way of restitution, regardless of beneficiary's loss, reciprocal insurance exchange's former subscribers' representatives cannot recover from indemnity company, acquiring business of exchange whose attorney in fact was a partnership members of which substantially owned company's stock, under invalid transfer and assumption agreement, company's anticipated future profits from such subscribers as customers. West's Ann. Insurance Code, § 1101.

15. Insurance ⇨12½

An equity court has power, in exercise of sound discretion, to reserve, in its judgment awarding reciprocal insurance exchange's former subscribers' representatives amount of net profits made from such subscribers as customers by indemnity company, to which exchange's business was transferred under invalid transfer and assumption agreement, right to award by supplemental judgments future profits made by company as they actually accrue. West's Ann. Insurance Code, § 1101.

16. Appeal and Error ⇨1078(1)

The District Court of Appeal should not decide, on appeal thereto from superior court's judgment, a question not briefed by parties.

17. Equity ⇨65(2)

Equity should not reward wrongdoer by giving him rights under contract illegally breached and repudiated by him, as no one can profit from his own wrong. West's Ann. Civ. Code, § 3517.

18. Insurance ⇨12½

Where liquidation of reciprocal insurance exchange under agreement transferring its business to indemnity company, stock of which was substantially owned by members of underwriters partnership acting as exchange's attorney in fact, proceeded to point of no return, so that parties could not be put in statu quo by restoration of going business to exchange, before District Court of Appeal held agreement illegal, courts cannot legalize liquidation ex post facto, nor treat it as legal by attributing it to underwriters' agreement, and hence cannot award company, as partnership's assignee, sum accumulated under such agreement to cover liquidation costs and partnership's compensation for services as liquidator.

19. Insurance ⇨12½

Representatives of liquidated reciprocal insurance exchange's former subscribers are entitled to reasonable value of exchange's business and assets transferred to indemnity company under invalid transfer and assumption agreement, but any reasonably necessary charges connected with such assets and all reasonable expenses necessarily involved in discharging exchange's obligations are properly deductible in determining net value of assets taken over by company, so that actual costs reasonably incurred by it in liquidating exchange's business should be allowed to it.

20. Insurance ⇨12½

Where underwriters partnership performed services as liquidator of reciprocal insurance exchange in good faith under underwriters' agreement providing for payment of percentage of premiums received by exchange as compensation for such services until an indemnity company took over exchange's business under illegal transfer and assumption agreement before expiration of many policies written by exchange, and thereafter ceased to perform such services because of good-faith belief that assumption agreement was valid and superseded underwriters' agreement, such company, to which partnership assigned its rights to such fees, should be allowed only portion thereof properly allocable to services performed by partnership before take-over as related to total services partnership would have performed had its services continued under underwriters' agreement until expiration of policies.

21. Interest ⇨22(1), 38(1)

Whether any interest should be charged on amount of judgment and, if so, how much, depends on particular circumstances, which may be such that mere restoration of property or its value thereof, without interest, would be all that justice requires.

22. Interest ⇨19(1)

Charging or withholding of interest on unliquidated amounts awarded by judgment lies in equity courts sound discretion.

23. Interest ⇨39(2)

Where legality of transfer and assumption agreement, under which reciprocal insurance exchange's business was transferred to indemnity company, stock of which was substantially owned by underwriters partnership acting as exchange's attorney in fact, was never questioned during period of over four years between effective date of agreement and decision of District Court of Appeal, on its own initiative, that agreement was void as violating Insurance Code, company should not be charged interest for such period on amount directed by subsequent judgment of such court to be distributed by partnership in liquidation of exchange to former subscribers thereof, especially as long and complicated accounting would be required to determine sum justly due such subscribers.

24. Interest ⇨22(1)

Generally, where accounting is required to determine sum justly due judgment creditors, interest thereon is not allowed them.

25. Insurance ⇨12½

The superior court did not err in failing to decree restoration of business of reciprocal insurance exchange as going concern many years after its absorption by indemnity company, to which exchange's business was transferred under illegal transfer and assumption agreement, but properly decreed restoration to exchange's former subscribers' representatives of money value of such business. West's Ann. Insurance Code, § 1101.

26. Insurance ⇨12½

The superior court did not err in failing to order restoration of reciprocal insurance exchange's name and insignia to it and enjoin use thereof by indemnity company, to which exchange's business was transferred under illegal transfer and assumption agreement, as it was no longer an exchange to which anything could be restored, and representatives of exchange's former subscribers would receive restitution of value of such business, with all assets of exchange, in amount to be determined after accounting, plus net profits to company from its illegal taking over of exchange's business, of which such name and insignia are part.

27. Insurance ⇨12½

In indemnity company's action for declaratory relief regarding rights of reciprocal insurance exchange's former subscribers under agreement transferring exchange's business to company in violation of Insurance Code section, a corporation filing petition, as one of exchange's owners, for judgment pursuant to decision of Court of Appeals reversing judgment for plaintiffs and against such subscribers' representatives as cross-complainants, with directions to grant cross-complainants relief enabling them to recover for subscribers business and assets obtained by company in consequence of agreement, was not entitled to order that corporation represent all subscribers in another trial on ground that cross-complainants were not properly representing them, as cross-complainants took only realistic approach to case.

28. Parties ⇨40(2)

In representative action, court is not bound to permit intervention of others of same class as plaintiffs, if their interests are being properly protected.

PER CURIAM.

This is the second appeal in this case. It is taken by defendants on behalf of the subscribers as of December 31, 1948, of Industrial Indemnity Exchange, a reciprocal insurance exchange.

Plaintiffs Industrial Indemnity Company, et al., hereinafter called "Company", originally brought an action for declaratory relief regarding the rights of subscribers of Industrial Indemnity Exchange, hereinafter called "Exchange", under an agreement by which the business of Exchange was transferred as a whole to Company for a price to be distributed to the subscribers. Cross-actions were brought in behalf of the subscribers. It was claimed that all of the insurance business transacted by Company belonged in equity to Exchange and that this business had been disloyally diverted by Industrial Underwriters, a partnership, the attorney-in-fact of Exchange, hereinafter called "Attorney", whose partners substantially owned the stock of Company. The court on the first trial found in nearly all respects for plaintiffs and against the cross-complainants.

On appeal this court concluded, Industrial Indem. Co. v. Golden State Co., 117 Cal.App.2d 519, 256 P.2d 677, 690, that the original action for declaratory relief should have been denied because the agreement to which it related was void as violating section 1101 of the Insurance Code. The respondents there contended, in an attempt to avoid the application of Insurance Code section 1101, that the agreement was not a beneficial sale of assets to the Company as prohibited by the Code but a transfer for the purpose of liquidation only. This court after reviewing the provisions of the "Transfer and Assumption Agreement" and commenting that the practical effect of the transaction was that Company acquired the whole business of Exchange as a going concern rejected this contention.

This court then reviewed the correctness of the denial of all relief to the cross-complainants. It was recognized that the attorney-in-fact in this situation was a fiduciary in relation to the subscribers and that the doctrine of corporate opportunities was applicable. It was further stated that the issues of good faith and of sufficient performance of contractual obligations are normally questions of fact. This court noted that the trial court made most elaborate findings as to all circumstances on which it based its holding that the cross-defendants did not breach their fiduciary duty. These findings were fatal to the appeal with respect to the claims of subscribers of Exchange to the business of Company since the appellants failed to show that they were not supported by the evidence. This court said: "Under these circumstances it is not for us to say that the ultimate findings of the court below are necessarily improper inferences nor can we hold as a matter of law, contrary to said findings, that the Attorney breached its fiduciary duty to subscribers when it engaged in the writing of workmen's compensation insurance through the medium of Company or that the business of Company was in equity the property of Exchange. We are the more satisfied that this result is not unjust because the gain by Exchange of all profits of the business of Company without participation in them by any of Company's insureds would have given the subscribers of the Exchange a windfall wholly out of line with the setup of such Exchange.

"However it does not follow that cross-complainants are not entitled to any relief. Although we hold that the subscribers of Exchange are not entitled to the business built up by Company in general—and then they are necessarily not entitled either to the business of its wholly owned subsidiary, Industrial Service Company, mentioned separately on appeal—they have a right to the business taken over by Company in consequence of the Transfer and Assumption Agreement, which we have held to be invalid. If they so desire they are entitled to have that matter wound up in these equity proceedings and for that purpose the judgment denying all relief on the cross-complaints will also have to be reversed."

This court concluded:

"The judgment is reversed with directions to the trial court to deny all declaratory relief to plaintiffs on the ground that the agreement as to which it is prayed for is void as contrary to law; if defendants-cross-complainants so desire, to grant them such relief as the court will deem fit to enable them to recover in their representative capacity for subscribers the business and assets obtained by Company in consequence of the agreement herein held to be invalid, and to wind up fully all matters relating thereto; to make, if defendants-cross-complainants so desire and they have made a showing that financial advantages have been obtained by the subscribers they represent because of their services and the services of their attorneys, such orders as the court will deem fit fixing and allowing compensation for said services and providing for payment thereof out of the funds and assets recovered; the cross-appeal of defendants in the cross-actions is dismissed; the respective parties to bear their own costs."

Following the filing of the remittitur in the Superior Court appellants filed their "Petition for Judgment and Decree Pursuant to the Opinion of the District Court of Appeal Herein." They asked the court to enter a decree determining the assets and the nature and value and extent of the business taken over by respondents in consequence of the transfer and assumption agreement and to award the same to themselves. They alleged that the District Court of Appeal directed that they be permitted to recover certain property in a representative capacity on behalf of all persons who were subscribers of the Industrial Indemnity Exchange on December 31, 1948; that the aforesaid property consisted of the business and assets obtained by the plaintiff, Industrial Indemnity Company, on January 1, 1949, in consequence of a transfer and assumption agreement held to be invalid; that said property was still in the possession of the said plaintiff, Industrial Indemnity Company, and its full amount and nature and extent had not been determined; that the District Court of Appeal had directed the Superior Court to grant appellants such relief as it deems fit to enable them to recover said property, to wind up fully all matters relating thereto, and to make such orders as it deems fit compensating appellants and their attorneys out of funds and assets recovered. An itemization of then known and discovered business and assets of Exchange for which recovery was sought followed. It was further alleged that there were other assets not yet discovered or identified which constituted the business of Exchange, and were the property and business of Exchange on December 31, 1948, and appellants sought leave to insert these items when ascertained.

Appellant Robert L. Johnson Corporation also filed a "Petition for Judgment and Decree Pursuant to Decision of the District Court of Appeal, and for Proceedings Thereunder." Appellant Johnson Corporation stated that it was bringing this petition in its own behalf, as one of the owners of Exchange, and as representative of all other similarly situated co-owners. On motion of appellants (all appellants except the Johnson Corporation will be referred to simply as "appellants") this petition of appellant Johnson Corporation was stricken from the files.

Appellant Johnson Corporation later moved the Superior Court for certain orders relating to this matter. On motion of respondents this motion of appellant Johnson Corporation was stricken from the files.

Respondents answered appellants' petition for judgment and decree and their amendment to that petition. After a lengthy trial the court made exhaustive findings of fact and set forth its conclusions of law. Judgment was entered to the effect that:

"1. That pursuant to the remittitur filed herein, Plaintiffs are not entitled to any declaratory relief in connection with the complaint for declaratory relief filed herein and any relief thereunder is denied on the ground that the agreement as to which it is prayed for is void as contrary to law and said complaint for declaratory relief is dismissed.

"2. That all business, property and assets of Exchange and subscribers at the Exchange obtained by Company in consequence of the Transfer and Assumption Agreement or at any time or in any manner have been returned to the Exchange and are now being held by Industrial Underwriters, the Attorney-in-Fact of Exchange, subject to the control and supervision of the Advisory Committee of the Exchange and the Insurance Commissioner of the State of California; That the Exchange is and has been since December 31, 1948, in liquidation; that the net value of the business, property and assets of Exchange is $323,300.39 and said sum includes all items of any value which are any part of the business, property or assets of the Exchange or the subscribers at the Exchange; that said sum shall be distributed, in liquidation of the Exchange, by Underwriters to those subscribers who had policies of insurance in effect with the Exchange as of December 31, 1948, on a basis whereby each of them will receive such proportion of said amount as his total earned premium on all policies of insurance placed with the Exchange since January 1, 1931 bears to the total earned premium since January 1, 1931 of all subscribers entitled to participate; that in determining the amount of the total earned premium of each such subscriber the Rules and Practices under Rule XV of the Manual of Rules, Classifications and Basic Rates published by the California Inspection Rating Bureau shall be used to determine the continuing identity of all subscribers in cases of changes in ownership or business form.

"3. That the Special Surplus Fund now being held by Industrial Underwriters shall be distributed and paid to Industrial Underwriters after full provision has been made, by reinsurance or otherwise to the satisfaction of the Insurance Commissioner of the State of California, for the liabilities of the Exchange.

"4. That the Exchange or the subscribers at the Exchange have no right, title or interest to or in any of the business, property or assets of Company.

"5. That pursuant to the terms of the remittitur filed herein and no financial advantage to the subscribers because of their services and the services of their attorneys having been realized, no compensation shall be awarded or allowed out of the $323,300.39 representing the net value of the business, property or assets of the Exchange herein provided to be distributed to the subscribers, for the services of Defendants and Cross-complainants or their attorneys.

"6. That all parties are to bear their own costs in this proceeding."

Appellants appeal from this judgment and appellant Johnson Corporation appeals from the judgment and from all intermediate orders, judgments and decrees. The subscribers of Exchange had a right to recover from respondents the business taken over by Company in consequence of the invalid transfer and assumption agreement. The remittitur from this court specifically directed the trial court, if appellants should so desire, to grant appellants "such relief as the court will deem fit to enable them to recover in their representative capacity for subscribers the business and assets obtained by Company in consequence of the agreement herein held to be invalid, and to wind up fully all matters relating thereto." The position of respondents, with which the trial court has agreed, is that the business and assets of Exchange taken over by Company in consequence of the transfer and assumption agreement consisted of the business in force on December 31, 1948, and the assets relating to this and prior business, subject to terms of certain Underwriters' Agreements to be discussed later. The value of this business was found to be $323,300.39 and this sum was awarded to appellants.

In their petition for judgment appellants stated in part:

"6) The aforesaid business and assets of the Industrial Indemnity Exchange [taken over by Company in consequence of the invalid transfer and assumption agreement] insofar as now known and discovered consist of the following items:

* * * * *

"j) The good-will and trade name and insignia of the Industrial Indemnity Exchange and in this particular petitioners pray in the alternative for injunctive relief prohibiting the plaintiff, Industrial Indemnity Company, from the further use of the good-will and trade name and the insignia of the Industrial Indemnity Exchange, together with an award for the reasonable value of the use of said good-will and trade name and insignia by the said plaintiff and for damages for the use thereof or in the alternative for the reasonable market value of the said good-will and trade name and insignia of the Industrial Indemnity Exchange as a going business on Dec. 31, 1948 (heretofore found by this Court not to exceed $1,574,569.23 (Finding LXXXV) in the sum of $....."

However, appellants later amended their petition and in place and stead of the above paragraph 6j inserted another paragraph in which they claimed certain net earnings, the present value of certain future net earnings, and the value of the trade name and insignia of Exchange. All reference to good will was deleted.

This court in its prior opinion recognized that Company by reason of the invalid agreement came into possession of more than certain physical assets and business of Exchange. It was stated: "By taking over all assets, assuming all liabilities, including all outstanding policies of the Exchange and becoming directly liable thereon to the policyholders, the Company acquired the whole business of the Exchange as a going concern and would therefore benefit by the increase of its clientele." It was noted that Company was receiving an advantage not consistent with the position of a mere liquidator and that the Insurance Commissioner originally took the position in this matter that the subscribers should receive "an amount representing a reasonable going concern value of the Exchange as measured by the Value to the Company of any Exchange business it might take over in the event of consolidation. * * *'" (The commissioner later changed his view somewhat apparently because of the identity between Attorney and Company, but this court stated that this would not change the fact that the Company acquired at least the investment and the going business.) It would seem from this that it was contemplated that appellants in a proper proceeding should be able to recover an amount to compensate them for the going concern value or the good will of Exchange which was received by Company as a result of the invalid agreement. However, relief of this sort was not sought by appellants.

It should be noted that the net worth of Exchange as of December 31, 1951, as computed in accordance with the provisions of the transfer and assumption agreement was $1,018,589.07. (At the time of the first trial this amount was estimated to be

$1,894,347.07.) If the agreement had not been held invalid this amount would have been paid, and distributed to the subscribers.

The result is that if the present judgment stands the Company will have in fact everything, for which it agreed in the invalid agreement to pay considerably more than one million dollars to the subscribers and will pay for it only $323,300.39.

As noted above the appellants by amendment abandoned their claim for any recovery for the value of the good will of their business as such and instead sought a recovery of the net profits derived by the Company from insurance written, and in the future reasonably expected to be written, for insureds of the Exchange at the time that its business was illegally taken over by the Company. Appellants justify this course by pointing out that, while the value of good will as such is largely speculative and difficult of exact proof, at the time of the second trial they had the actual experience of four full years of operation by the Company after it had taken over the business of the Exchange under the illegal contract and the amount of business actually done by the Company with the former subscribers of the Exchange, from which the net profits accruing to the Company from such business might be calculated by deducting from the total premiums so received by the Company a proper proportion of the Company's expenses of operation.

Respondents counter with the fact that they produced evidence, which the trial court in the findings accepted, negating any right to such recovery. This evidence may be summarized as follows: that it is the custom in the insurance business when an insurance company is purchased to value only current business and assets, no allowance being made for any going concern or good will value; that there is no such good will value because the insurance brokers review the situation annually and place their clients' insurance in whatever company, considering all relevant factors, seems most desirable and advantageous for their clients for the ensuing policy year; there was testimony of many of the largest former subscribers, aggregating approximately one-half the business done by the Company with former subscribers of the Exchange, that they placed their business with the Company, not because the Company had acquired the business of the Exchange, but solely because they were stockholders in the Company; as to the other former subscribers of the Exchange who placed their insurance with the Company there was testimony that their brokers would not advise their clients to place their insurance with the Company because it had acquired the business of the Exchange but would canvass the field and recommend the placing of such insurance with whatever company seemed most desirable for the clients uninfluenced by the fact that the Company had acquired the business of the Exchange; and furthermore that the Exchange had in any event decided to discontinue its business. From this it is argued that the finding that the Exchange suffered no loss and hence is not entitled to any of the profit from such business is amply supported.

In assaying the validity of this position it is relevant to consider the factual situation. The sale of the business to the Company was held by us on the former appeal to be in contravention of sec. 1101 of the Insurance Code because of the fiduciary relation existing between the parties. Even though the Company was acting in actual good faith and in ignorance of the illegal nature of the contract it nonetheless breached its fiduciary relation in attempting to acquire the business of the Exchange in violation of the express prohibition of the law. By its breach of the fiduciary relation, and violation of an express statute enacted for the protection of the Exchange in just such a situation, it could not divest itself of its character as a fiduciary toward the Exchange. It remained in the position of a fiduciary of the Exchange after the making of the illegal contract as before. It is unthinkable that a fiduciary by a breach of its trust could terminate its fiduciary relation or find itself in a more advantageous position than it was before because of such breach.

[1] We are thus faced with the question: Can the Company retain the profits which it secured from the former subscribers of the Exchange following its wrongful acquisition of the business of the Exchange in breach of its fiduciary duties and in violation of a statute designed to prevent it from doing just what it in fact did? Courts of equity have traditionally been concerned as much with preventing fiduciaries from benefiting from breaches of their trust as they have been with protecting beneficiaries from losses which they otherwise would not have sustained. Cases cited infra.

[2] It must never be forgotten in considering the remedies to be afforded beneficiaries for breaches of trust by their fiduciaries that courts look with a particularly jealous eye upon the trust relation and hold fiduciaries to the highest standard of good faith. In a case often since quoted from, Mr. Justice Cardozo used these words: "Many forms of conduct permissible in a workaday world for those acting at arm's length, are forbidden to those bound by fiduciary ties. A trustee is held to something stricter than the morals of the market place. Not honesty alone, but the punctilio of an honor the most sensitive, is then the standard of behavior. As to this there has developed a tradition that is unbending and inveterate. Uncompromising rigidity has been the attitude of courts of equity when petitioned to undermine the rule of undivided loyalty by the 'disintegrating erosion' of particular exceptions. [Citation.] Only thus has the level of conduct for fiduciaries been kept at a level higher than that trodden by the crown." Meinhard v. Salmon, 249 N.Y. 458, 164 N.E. 545, 546, 62 A.L.R. 1.

[3] The pertinent and controlling facts are simple and may be simply stated. By breach of its trust and in violation of the law, the Company illegally acquired the business of the Exchange. It retained its fiduciary character after the illegal acquisition as before. Following this illegal acquisition it acquired and benefited from a large portion of the insurance business formerly done by the Exchange. Under these circumstances it cannot lie in the mouth of the Company to say, "The Exchange lost nothing because it would not have had the business anyway. We gained nothing which we would not have gotten in any event and so we cannot be held liable." The fact remains that the Company illegally acquired the business of the Exchange. It kept and still has many of Exchange's customers. It put itself in the position to acquire those customers by its own breach of trust and violation of the law. To permit it to profit from those customers would permit it to reap a gain from its own breach of duty and illegal act. That it might have gotten these customers in another way if it had not breached its trust and violated the law does not undo the fact that it did breach its trust and violate the law and acquire them in that way. The Company illegally scrambled the eggs. Neither it nor the courts can unscramble them now, nor place Exchange in the position in which it was before. The Company must take the consequences of what cannot be undone. It cannot ask us to place it in the position in which it might have been if it had not illegally acquired and liquidated the business of the Exchange.

The Supreme Court of the United States said in Crites, Inc., v. Prudential Ins. Co. of America, 322 U.S. 408, 417, 64 S.Ct. 1075, 1080, 88 L.Ed. 1356: "In this type of situation 'the incidence of a particular conflict of interest can seldom be measured with any degree of certainty.' [Citation.] Proof of profits resulting from an irregular or conflicting course of conduct is sufficient."

So Mr. Justice Cardozo said in Meinhard v. Salmon, supra, 164 N.E. at page 547:

"The trouble about his conduct is that he excluded his coadventurer from any chance to compete * * *.

"No answer is it to say that the chance would have been of little value even if seasonably offered. Such a calculus of probabilities is beyond the science of the chancery."

[4] Herein follow two equally pertinent statements of the United States Supreme Court:

"It makes no difference that the estate was not a loser in the transaction * * *. It is the relation of the trustee to the estate which prevents his dealing in such a way as to make a personal profit for himself." Magruder v. Drury, 235 U.S. 106, 120, 35 S.Ct. 77, 82, 59 L.Ed. 151.

"The course taken was one which a fiduciary could not legally pursue. [Citation.] Since he did pursue it and profits resulted the law made him accountable * * * for all the profits obtained by him and those who were associated with him in the matter, although the estate may not have been injured thereby." Jackson v. Smith, 254 U.S. 586, 588-589, 41 S.Ct. 200, 201, 65 L.Ed. 418.

In Menefee v. Oxnam, 42 Cal.App. 81, 87-88, 183 P. 379, 382, the court used equally pertinent language: "Though it is the general rule that fraud without at least some slight injury is not ground for relief, this general rule is not an obstacle to recovery in cases of the kind here under consideration, even though there be a total absence of injury to the complaining party. * * * The rule that a coadventurer must act with utmost good faith, * * * is not intended to be remedial of actual wrong, but preventive of the possibility of it, and it matters not that there is no fraud meditated and no injury done."

[5,6] In Comment (d) to sec. 160, Restatement of Restitution, after pointing out that while ordinarily restitution is used to restore to a plaintiff property of which he has been unjustly deprived, the text continues (pp. 643-644): "There are some situations, however, in which a constructive trust is imposed in favor of a plaintiff who has not suffered a loss as great as the benefit received by the defendant. In these situations the defendant is compelled to surrender the benefit on the ground that he would be unjustly enriched if he were permitted to retain it, even though that enrichment is not at the expense of the plaintiff. Thus, if the defendant has made a profit through the violation of a duty to the plaintiff to whom he is in a fiduciary relation, he can be compelled to surrender the profit to the plaintiff, although the profit was not made at the expense of the plaintiff".

[7,8] To make the nice calculations by hindsight which respondents ask us to make in this case would reward their violation of the law by a windfall of thousands of dollars which they would have been bound to pay if their conduct had been legal. Equity should not countenance such a result if by following established equitable principles it can be avoided. One of the recognized forms of relief is the recovery of the profits accruing to the fiduciary who breaches his trust. Restatement Trusts, sec. 205 (b); 2 Scott on Trusts, sec. 170.25, p. 909, sec. 205, p. 1098, sec. 206, pp. 1105-1106, sec. 462.2, p. 2318. There is nothing in our former opinion preventing appellants from recovering these profits. We intended in that opinion no more than to direct that appellants be allowed whatever recovery they might be entitled to in equity for the wrongful taking over of the business of the Exchange. We did not consider, much less decide, the extent and nature of that relief.

[9,10] Respondents argue that section 1103 of the Insurance Code fixes the measure of recovery for a violation of section 1101 and that the recovery of these profits cannot be brought within its terms. Section 1103 provides: "Whenever an insurer is injured or made to suffer loss by reason of any violation of the provisions of section[s] 1101 * * * such insurer may recover * * * damages sufficient to compensate such insurer for such loss."

The section deals only with damages. The profits in question are recoverable not as damages but by way of restitution, and as we have seen without regard to loss suffered by the beneficiary. The rule was clearly stated by the court in Speed v. Transamerica Corp., D.C., 135 F.Supp. 176,

187, 188, quoting from Prosser on Torts: "When restitution is sought either in equity or at law a much more liberal policy has been adopted. Since the purpose is not to compensate the plaintiff's loss but to restore what the defendant has received, the courts look to the inequity of allowing him to retain it rather than to the damage which the plaintiff has sustained."

[11, 12] Nor can section 2238, Civil Code avail respondents. That section reads: "A trustee who uses or disposes of the trust property in any manner not authorized by the trust, but in good faith, and with intent to serve the interests of the beneficiary, is liable only to make good whatever is lost to the beneficiary by his error." Here respondents' good faith may not be questioned, but they nevertheless violated an express statute enacted for the protection of the Exchange. Ignorance of the law is traditionally no excuse for its violation. It is sufficient that the violator intentionally does the act which the law prohibits. People v. Dillon, 199 Cal. 1, 7-9, 248 P. 230.

It follows that respondents were guilty of something more than the use and disposition of trust property in a "manner not authorized by the trust" which is dealt with in section 2238 Civil Code. They dealt with the trust property in violation of an express statute in a manner forbidden by the law and made a crime by section 1106 Insurance Code. Under the circumstances of this case section 2238 Civil Code is inapplicable. To apply it would permit respondents to reap a benefit from their own violation of the law.

[13] We give no consideration on this appeal to the proper calculation of such net profits other than to say that the expenses of the Company properly allocable to these policies should be deducted from the premiums to ascertain such profits. The court made no finding of the amount of such net profits in the judgment appealed from. On another trial it will make such finding based on its weighing of the evidence that may be produced on the subject at that trial.

[14] A consideration of the fact that the recovery from a fiduciary of profits made from his breach of duty to his beneficiary is allowed by way of restitution without regard to the beneficiary's loss demonstrates that there can be no recovery for anticipated future profits in the circumstances of this case. It is the profits actually accruing to the fiduciary from his breach which are the subject of restitution. Respondents cannot be made to restore what they have not received. To allow an amount for anticipated future profits would be to allow damages, not restitution, and damages are based on loss or injury to the plaintiff. Since in this case the court has found on substantial evidence that Exchange suffered no loss of profits there can be no award for such future loss by way of damages, as obviously there can be none by way of restitution.

[15, 16] Appellants suggest that the trial court in its judgment might reserve the right by supplemental judgments to award such future profits as they actually accrue. We have no doubt of the power of a court of equity to do this in the exercise of its sound discretion. Whether if the court refuses to do this such profits as they accrue may be made the basis of future action by appellants is something which has not been briefed by the parties and which we should not decide on this appeal.

[17, 18] In the Underwriters' Agreement there was a provision for the accumulation of a fund to go to the attorney-in-fact in case of liquidation of the Exchange to cover costs of liquidation and compensation to the attorney-in-fact for his services as liquidator. This amounts to $592,322.21. His rights to this amount have been assigned by the attorney-in-fact to the Company. Following the first decision of this court holding the sale of the business of Exchange illegal, the Insurance Commissioner licensed the attorney-in-fact to continue the liquidation of the Exchange. The trial court found that the Exchange had been liquidated in accordance with the Underwriters' Agreement and that this fund was the property of the Company under the assignment to it by the attorney-in-fact. The parties argue the question whether the void Assumption Agreement terminated the Underwriters' Agreement, appellants claiming that it did, citing Pennsylvania Water & Power Co. v. Consolidated Gas, etc., 4 Cir., 186 F.2d 934; and Virginia Dare Transportation Co. v. Norfolk Southern Bus Corp., 4 Cir., 176 F.2d 354, and respondents arguing that it did not, citing 17 C.J.S., Contracts, § 287, p. 674; Indiana Flooring Co. v. Grand Rapids Trust Co., 6 Cir., 20 F.2d 63; Carson v. Sinking Fund Commission, Pa.Com.Pl., 2 Lyc. 3; and Tearney v. Marmiom, 103 W.Va. 394, 137 S.E. 543. This question seems somewhat beside the point. The undisputed and undisputable fact is that neither the attorney-in-fact nor the Company acted or purported to act under the Underwriters' Agreement in liquidating the Exchange. The liquidation of the Exchange was accomplished in violation of law and of the rights of the subscribers of the Exchange by the Company acting under the illegal Assumption Agreement and as owners of the business of the Exchange. What respondents are in effect saying is: "True we acted under an illegal agreement in liquidating the Exchange as its owners. But now that the court has held the agreement illegal and that we are not the owners of the business, it is proper for the court to treat our illegal conduct as if it had been legal and put us in the same position after the fact of our illegal conduct as we would have been if we had not proceeded to liquidate the business illegally but instead had liquidated the business legally under the Underwriters' Agreement." Equity should not reward the wrongdoer by giving him rights under a contract which he himself illegally breached and repudiated. It is a settled principle of equity that no one can profit from his own wrong. Section 3517 Civ.Code.

If a court could have acted promptly enough to set aside the illegal Assumption Agreement before the illegal liquidation had proceeded to the point of no return; it is possible that the attorney-in-fact might have then proceeded with the liquidation under the terms of the Underwriters' Agreement, but by the time this court had held the Assumption Agreement illegal in 1953, the illegal liquidation had proceeded to a point where the parties could not be put in statu quo by the restoration of the going business to them. Equity was compelled to give them restitution in value, not in kind, and to allow the liquidation theretofore carried on in violation of express law to proceed to its conclusion. That is not to say that what had been done illegally was thereby rendered legal. The liquidation under the illegal Assumption Agreement was and remains illegal and it is that illegality that is at the heart of this action. Ex post facto the courts cannot legalize that illegal action nor treat it as if it had been legal by now attributing it to another agreement under which, but for the illegal Assumption Agreement, it might have been legally taken.

[19] However, we are satisfied that in striking the balance between the parties the actual costs reasonably incurred by respondents in liquidating the business should be allowed to them. Appellants are entitled to the reasonable value of the business and assets illegally taken over by the Company, but any reasonably necessary charges connected with those assets are properly deductible therefrom. All reasonable expenses necessarily involved in discharging the obligations of the Exchange are properly deductible in determining the net value of the assets taken over.

[20] What we have said necessarily disposes of the claim to an amount of compensation provided in the Underwriters' Agreement to be paid to the attorney-in-fact as compensation for his services calculated on a percentage of the premiums actually received by the Exchange. When the business was taken over illegally by the Company the policy years on many of the policies written by Exchange had not expired and it was impossible to determine the exact amount of the premiums on which the compensation of the attorney-in-fact should be based. The attorney-in-fact assigned his rights to these fees to the Company and the trial court found that the Company was entitled to them. Appellants attack this finding on the ground that the Underwriters' Agreement under which they were payable was terminated by the illegal Assumption Agreement.

Respondents argue that since they took over the business in January 1, 1949, and continued the services formerly performed by the attorney-in-fact, the entire fee was earned by the services of the attorney-in-fact performed up to that date and the services performed by the Company after that date. Both parties seem to us somewhat to miss the mark. In our judgment respondents should be compensated for the portion of the services actually performed by the attorney-in-fact under the Underwriters' Agreement up to the date of the take-over by the Company. But the Company was not acting as attorney-in-fact under the Underwriters' Agreement after January 1, 1949, in reinsuring these existing policies of the Exchange and running out their terms. Respondents admit this fact in their brief on page 49 when they say: "Since the company was handling this business after January 1, 1949 for its own account, it obviously did not draw a separate check to its own order out of its own funds in payment of this fee." Since "the Company was handling this business after January 1, 1949 for its own account" it just as obviously was not handling it as attorney-in-fact under the Underwriters' Agreement on the Exchange's account. Here again respondents are asking us to treat as legally done under the Underwriters' Agreement what in fact was illegally done under the Assumption Agreement. The proper allocation of fees to the attorney-in-fact should take into account the services actually performed by the attorney-in-fact for the portion of the policy years that he acted as attorney-in-fact as related to the services performed by the Company for the balance of the respective policy years. Respondents should be credited only with the portion of the contractual fees properly allocable to the services actually performed by the attorney-in-fact as related to the total services that he would have performed in connection with the various policies if his services had continued under the Underwriters' Agreement until the end of the policy years.

We regard this allocation as equitable for the following reasons: The attorney-in-fact in good faith performed the services, for which he was to be compensated, up to the effective date of the take-over. Thereafter he ceased to perform those services only because he believed in good faith that the Assumption Agreement was legal and valid and superseded the Underwriters' Agreement. In doing equity between the parties the attorney-in-fact should be paid for the services actually performed in good faith by him pursuant to the Underwriters' Agreement, but no compensation should be allowed for the illegal conduct of respondents after the effective date of the take-over. The contract furnishes the measure of compensation spread over the entire life of each policy. That measure can only be effectively applied under the facts of this case by an allocation of a portion of the compensation equal to the portion of the services performed by the attorney-in-fact while he was acting under the Underwriters' Agreement.

The trial court allowed no interest on its award. In this connection it seems important that respondents were not acting in bad faith but under the mistaken belief, bolstered by the approval of the Insurance Commissioner, that the Assumption Agreement was a valid and legal one.

[21] In Title Ins. and Trust Co. v. Ingersoll, 158 Cal. 474, 489, 111 P. 360, 366 (a trust case) we read:

"The question whether any interest should be charged, and, if any, how much, depends on the circumstances of the particular case, and they may be such that a mere restoration of the property, or its value, without any interest, would be all that justice would require. Wheeler v. Bolton [92 Cal. 159, 172, 28 P. 558.]”

[22] So this court recently held that in equity the awarding or refusal to award interest on unliquidated amounts is discretionary with the court. Leonard v. Huston, 122 Cal.App.2d 541, 265 P.2d 566.

That the courts generally agree that the charging or withholding of interest in such cases lies in the sound discretion of a court of Equity see 90 C.J.S., Trusts, § 338, p. 584 and cases cited in notes 60 and 61.

[23, 24] It must be borne in mind that more than four years elapsed between the effective date of the Assumption Agreement and the decision of this court in 117 Cal.App.2d 519, 256 P.2d 677. During that entire period no question was ever suggested of the illegality of the Assumption Agreement. This court was the first to raise the question on its own initiative. The charging of interest for this period would penalize respondents for their good faith action in ignorance of a law of which appellants were equally ignorant. Following this the case required, and will on another trial require, a long and complicated accounting. Under the circumstances we believe that the following language from Stockton Theatres, Inc., v. Palermo, 121 Cal.App.2d 616, 632, 264 P.2d 74, 85 is particularly applicable:

“Whether, therefore, it would be just and equitable that interest be charged from the date the remittiturs were returned upon such sum as after a long and complicated accounting might have been found then to have been due presented a question calling for judicial discretion in determining what equity required. This, therefore, we think presented an issue peculiarly for the trial court to determine in so far as the allowance of interest upon the amount ultimately found due be concerned, and we cannot say on this record that the trial court abused that discretion or in the refusal to allow interest prior to judgment failed to do equity. Generally speaking, where an accounting is required in order to arrive

Upon another trial the question of allowing interest or not, upon the whole or any part of the judgment, and if allowed, from what date or dates it should run on any amount or amounts, will be again a matter upon which the trial court may exercise its sound discretion. It is clear from the authorities cited on this point that the code sections on interest cited by appellants are not binding upon a court of equity in this type of case.

[25] Appellant Johnson argues that the trial court erred in allowing Company to absorb Exchange and in not decreeing the restoration of the business of Exchange as a going concern. Nobody can uneat an apple. Exchange had ceased to be a going concern years before the second trial and Company had in fact absorbed it. The course pursued by the other appellants was the only realistic one left to pursue because the only thing that the court could effectively decree was a restoration in terms of money of the value of a business that was gone beyond the recall of any decree of court. Appellant Johnson does not offer any workable suggestion by which the impossibility of restoring what no longer exists could be accomplished.

[26] This appellant further argues that the name and insignia of Exchange should have been restored to it and the Company enjoined from using them. One answer is that there is no longer an Exchange to which anything could be restored. The Exchange is gone beyond recall. This action on the cross-complaint is one in a representative capacity on behalf of former subscribers of the Exchange. A second answer is that on another trial cross-complainants will get restitution of the value of the business of Exchange, together with all of its assets in an amount to be determined after an accounting pursuant to the directions of this court, plus the net profits accruing to Company from its illegal taking over of the business. The name and insignia are a part of the business so taken over and if of any value, which respondents dispute, are a part of the business and assets compensated for in this fashion.

[27, 28] Finally, appellant Johnson asks us to order that it represent all subscribers on another trial on the ground that the other appellants have demonstrated that they are not properly representing them. As we said above, the other appellants have taken the only realistic approach to the case and we find no good reason to supersede them. The court did not err in dismissing appellant Johnson's cross-complaint. In a representative action, such as this, the court is not bound to permit the intervention of others of the class if their interests are being properly protected. Mann v. Superior Court, 53 Cal.App.2d 272, 280-281, 127 P.2d 970.

The judgment is reversed with directions to the trial court to retry the case and award judgment in accordance with the principles herein expressed. Appellant Johnson to bear its own costs of appeal. The other appellants to recover their costs of appeal from respondents.

codicils of the last will and testament of deceased. The Superior Court, San Diego County, C. M. Monroe, J., entered judgment denying the petition and petitioner appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Mussell, J., held that evidence sustained finding of trial court that deceased was of unsound mind when she executed documents in question.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Wills ⇨55(1)

In proceeding on petition for probate of two holographic documents claimed to be codicils of the last will and testament of deceased, evidence sustained finding of trial court that deceased was of unsound mind when she executed documents in question.

2. Wills ⇨386

Upon appeal from a judgment denying probate of a will because of mental incompetency, District Court of Appeal is not required to inquire beyond whether findings and decision of the trial court are amply supported by competent and legally sufficient evidence.

3. Wills ⇨386

Weight of conflicting testimony in a proceeding on a petition for probate of two holographic documents claimed to be codicils of the last will and testament of deceased was for the trial court.

4. Wills ⇨384

In proceeding on petition for probate of two holographic documents claimed to be codicils of the last will and testament of deceased, there was no prejudicial error in admission of testimony of a psychiatrist whose qualifications were stipulated to by counsel and who answered hypothetical questions as to deceased's mental capacity based on circumstances testified to by various witnesses, the weight of his testimony being for the trial court.

George R. McClenahan, San Diego, for appellant.

Luce, Forward, Kunzel & Scripps, San Diego, for respondents.

MUSSELL, Justice.

Appellant Harriet Palmer filed a petition for probate of two holographic documents claimed to be codicils to the last will and testament of Willinore M. Fosselman, deceased. A contest was filed to the admission of said instruments by the respondents Charles F. Salkeld, as executor, and Adele Marsh Rowe, as an heir, claiming that the testatrix was of unsound mind at the time of the execution of the two documents and therefore lacked testamentary capacity. A trial of this issue was had by the court without a jury and judgment was entered denying appellant's petition. Harriet Palmer, the beneficiary named in the two documents involved, appeals from the judgment on the ground that there is no substantial evidence to sustain the decision of the trial court that the testatrix was of unsound mind when she executed the said documents; that the court committed prejudicial error in admitting the testimony of Dr. Lengyel, a psychiatrist; and that the court erred in giving undue weight to the testimony of certain witnesses called by the contestants.

Willinore M. Fosselman died in San Diego on March 25, 1955. At the time of her death she was 88 years of age and had resided in San Diego since about April 1, 1950. Prior to that date she had resided in New York and there maintained with the Bankers Trust Company of New York a security-custodian account which, at the time of her death, was of the approximate value of $460,000. Until the time of her death, her financial affairs were largely under the supervision and control of Charles F. Salkeld, vice-president of said Bankers Trust Company.

On or about April 1, 1950, Mrs. Fosselman fell in the U. S. Grant Hotel in San Diego and suffered a fracture of her left hip. She was immediately treated by Dr. R. L. Hippen and was taken to her room on a stretcher. Later, she was removed to the Mercy Hospital where she remained for approximately seven weeks. While she was in the hospital, she became quite confused, developed "a uremia", and for a time was in a coma. She was moved from the hospital to a residence in San Diego, purchased with her funds, and was attended there by Dr. Hippen until her death.

Dr. Hippen testified that Mrs. Fosselman was "what we generally call a senility problem. She wasn't able to care for herself entirely and she on several occasions became somewhat irrational"; that her mental progress was one of gradual deterioration and she was unable to comprehend what was going on around her; that she was never completely associated about time and "got all mixed up"; that she would occasionally know she was in San Diego or California but frequently thought she was back in New York City; that she did not associate the persons around her as nurses and never quite comprehended who they were or what they were and frequently got them mixed up with people she had known in the past; that she thought she was rather destitute and frequently was disappointed when he came to see her because she was afraid she would not be able to pay his bill; that from 1952 on she was suffering from "senile dementia", a generalized softening of the brain due to the impaired blood supply; that in this opinion from 1952 on she was unable to understand or comprehend the nature and extent of her property and the situation with reference to the people who might have been natural objects of her bounty; that her decline was accelerated by her fall in the hotel; that she had a cardiac failure and he had to give her medicine to relieve the swelling in her ankles and feet and to control a cardiac irregularity which she had developed; that perhaps from 1953 on she completely forgot about fracturing her hip, forgot she was ever in the hospital, and she was not able to discuss it at all.

After Mrs. Fosselman was released from the hospital and removed to her home, around the clock nursing care was provided for her and Mrs. Palmer, the proponent herein, was one of the nurses so engaged. She commenced work in the spring of 1952 and worked daily from 7:00 a. m. until 3:00 p. m. until the date of Mrs. Fosselman's death on March 25, 1955. She testified that on January 12, 1955, Mrs. Fosselman stated that there was something she wanted to do before she forgot it and handed her (Mrs. Palmer) a piece of paper, stating, "Here, honey, you read this." Mrs. Palmer read it and replied, "Well, you don't have to do anything for me", and Mrs. Fosselman said, "Well, I know it. Do you think it is all right?" Mrs. Palmer replied, "Yes, it is." Mrs. Fosselman then stated, "Now, if you don't think this is all right, you take it to a lawyer and have it checked." The document which Mrs. Fosselman had handed to Mrs. Palmer was holographic and was as follows:

"When I die, I want this house to be given to Mrs. Harriet Palmer for her to live in if she chooses.

"Willinore Fosselman
"4656-49th St."

Mrs. Fosselman then took the document to the living room and later brought it back to Mrs. Palmer, stating, "Now you are not to open this until after I die or pass away." Mrs. Palmer kept the document until after the death of Mrs. Fosselman and it is one of the two documents which were offered as codicils of the last will and testament of Mrs. Fosselman.

The day after the death of Mrs. Fosselman, according to the testimony of Mrs. Palmer, she found in the left hand corner of a drawer of Mrs. Fosselman's desk, wrapped up in Kleenex, and all sealed, another writing, dated June 17, 1953, and reading as follows:

"I give and bequeath to my friend, Harriet Palmer, the sum of ten thousand 10,000 June 17th 1953 to be paid to her after my death (death).

"Willinore M. Fosselman
"4656-49th St.
"San Diego, Cal."

This is the second document which was offered as a codicil to the last will of Mrs. Fosselman. No one had ever seen the document dated January 12, 1955, except Mrs. Palmer and her attorney until it was offered in evidence herein. Mrs. Fosselman had never discussed such codicils with her business representatives, her attorney, her doctor, or her nurses. The document dated June 17, 1953, was never seen or known to anyone until it was found tucked away in the desk drawer of Mrs. Fosselman after her death.

Charles F. Salkeld visited Mrs. Fosselman several times in San Diego during the last five years of her life. He testified that on his last visit in 1954 she could not recognize him; that she started deteriorating in October, 1950; that she was forgetful and confused; that at times she thought she was in New York; that she remembered old events but did not remember anything recent; that she constantly thought she didn't have enough money and when he tried to explain to her "it was hopeless, she couldn't absorb it"; that from the fall of 1952 on she was not aware of the nature and extent of her property or of the nature of her relationship to those who would be the natural objects of her bounty or to the people who would be affected by any wills or codicils; that she referred to members of her family as being alive when they were in fact dead; that she had the idea she owned a house in New York when she had never owned one there.

Edgar A. Luce, one of the attorneys representing Mrs. Fosselman, testified that he had visited her on the average of once a week from the time she was in the hospital until the time of her death and he recited many facts which indicated to him that she was mentally unsound. He testified that she became very confused, distracted, forgetful, repetitious and senile. He gave his opinion, as an intimate acquaintance of Mrs. Fosselman, that she did not understand or comprehend the nature and character of her property; that she was definitely mentally incompetent during all the time he knew her; that she did not know anything about her property, business affairs, or who was living or who was dead among her family; that she told him Mrs. Palmer had worked for her mother in Kansas City; that he told her this was not true; that Mrs. Palmer lived in San Diego, had never been in Kansas City and that the period of time to which she referred was before Mrs. Palmer was born.

Lola R. Stephens, one of the nurses in constant attendance on Mrs. Fosselman from June, 1950, until the time of her death, testified as to many incidents, actions and statements of Mrs. Fosselman and stated that she stated many times that Mrs. Palmer had worked for her mother, although Mrs. Stephens repeatedly corrected her; that Mrs. Fosselman could not comprehend or understand any reading; that she was confused as to where she was; that she thought her brothers would pay her bills; that she hid her money in her stockings and other places, was constantly worried about finances, and was confused most of the time.

Mr. Lumpkin, who acted as Mrs. Fosselman's chauffeur, testified that she thought she had known Mrs. Palmer in Kansas City and further stated that she did not know if she were in San Diego or New York and wanted to be driven down to the lake or the river. Two other witnesses, Cecilia Burns and Mrs. Rose Ellis, testified to incidents showing confusion, lack of intelligence and comprehension and a gradual deterioration on the part of Mrs. Fosselman.

Dr. Carl Lengyel, county psychiatrist and head of the psychopathic ward of the San Diego county hospital, and whose qualifications were stipulated to by counsel, answered a long hypothetical question which was submitted to him setting out the circumstances testified to by the various witnesses and stated that in his opinion from 1952 until the time of her death Mrs. Fosselman was of unsound mind and was suffering from brain disease due probably from cerebral arteriosclerosis and senile changes and that during that period she did not comprehend the nature of her property nor the extent thereof. He described in detail her symptoms which indicated the unsoundness of her mind and stated that he believed that she was intellectually impaired to the point that she was of unsound mind and that in his opinion she was insane during that period. The facts related to the doctor in the hypothetical questions asked of him were not objected to by counsel.

Several neighbor women who occasionally called upon Mrs. Fosselman when she was living in San Diego testified in behalf of Mrs. Palmer that they did not believe Mrs. Fosselman was insane although they admitted many of the incidents related by the contestant's witnesses such as constant repetition and confusion of mind on the part of Mrs. Fosselman.

[1] We conclude there was substantial evidence herein to sustain the decision of the trial court that the testatrix was of unsound mind when she executed the disputed documents.

As is said in Re Estate of Frank, 102 Cal.App.2d 126, 128-129, 226 P.2d 767, 768:

"The function of an appellate court is no different on an appeal from a judgment denying probate of a will because of mental incompetency than in any other case. 'All conflicts must be resolved in favor of the respondent and all legitimate and reasonable inferences indulged in to uphold the verdict if possible. When two or more inferences can be reasonably deduced from the facts, the reviewing court is without power to substitute its deductions for those of the trial judge or jury. In re Estate of Bristol, 23 Cal.2d 221, 143 P.2d 689; In re Estate of Teel, 25 Cal. 2d 520, 154 P.2d 384.' In re Estate of Trefren, 86 Cal.App.2d 139, 142, 194 P.2d 574, 575."

[2] We are satisfied that the findings and decision are amply supported by competent and legally sufficient evidence, and beyond this we are not required to go. Rodgers v. Roseville Gold Dredging Co., 135 Cal.App.2d 6, 10, 286 P.2d 536.

[3] While several neighbors and friends of Mrs. Fosselman testified that they did not believe that she was insane, such testimony merely created a conflict in the evidence and the weight to be given to such testimony was for the trial court. Hughes v. Grandy, 78 Cal.App.2d 555, 567, 177 P.2d 939.

In re Estate of Sexton, 199 Cal. 759, 764-765, 251 P. 778, 780, the rule is stated:

"A testator is of sound and disposing mind and memory if, at the time of making his will, he has sufficient mental capacity to be able to understand the nature of the act he is doing, to understand and recollect the nature and situation of his property, and to remember and understand his relations to the persons who have claims upon his bounty and whose interests are affected by the provisions of the instrument. In re Estate of Motz, supra [136 Cal. 558, 69 P. 294]; In re Estate of Dole, 147 Cal. 188, 81 P. 534; In re Estate of Huston, 163 Cal. 166, 124 P. 852; In re Estate of De Laveaga, 165 Cal. 607, 133 P. 307; In re Estate of Casarotti, 184 Cal. 73, 192 P. 1085. The actual mental condition of the testator at the time of the execution of the will is the question to be determined. In re Estate of Perkins, 195 Cal. 699, 235 P. 45; 26 Cal.Jur. 635."

In the instant case there was substantial evidence that Mrs. Fosselman did not have the sound and disposing mind and memory required by this rule at the time she executed the documents involved herein.

[4] We find no prejudicial error in the admission of the testimony of Dr. Lengyel, psychiatrist. The weight of his testimony was for the determination of the trial court.

The judgment is affirmed.

NEW PLASTIC CORPORATION, Defendant and Respondent.

C. A. 9054.

Appellate Department, Superior Court,
Los Angeles County, California.

Aug. 28, 1956.

Advertiser's action against manufacturer for services rendered under a contract which manufacturer repudiated. The Municipal Court of the Los Angeles Judicial District, John G. Barnes, J., entered judgment for manufacturer and advertiser appealed. The Appellate Department of the Superior Court, Bishop, P. J., held that where manufacturer signed a contract for advertising of its products for a period of one year, the price for which was to be paid in monthly installments, and then repudiated such contract during its life but advertiser continued performance thereof, such advertiser was entitled to recover balance of the contract price owed less cost of performance that could have been avoided by advertiser's not completing such performance after repudiation.

1. Damages ⇐62(4)

Either party to an executory contract has the power to stop performance of the contract by giving notice or direction to that effect and subjecting himself to liability for damages, and upon receipt of such notice the other party cannot continue to perform and recover damages based upon full performance.

2. Damages ⇐62(4)

Party to an executory contract which has been repudiated during its lifetime, must mitigate damages so far as he can without loss to himself.

3. Damages ⇐62(4)

Where manufacturer signed a one year contract with advertiser for advertising of product at a price to be paid in monthly installments and before such contract expired manufacturer repudiated same but advertiser continued to fully perform until expiration date, advertiser was entitled to recover balance of contract price owed by manufacturer less amount of expense that could have been avoided by failure to perform after repudiation.

4. Evidence ⇐589

A court trying a case without a jury, is entitled to reject testimony of plaintiff even though she is otherwise unimpeached.

5. Damages ⇐62(4)

Where executory contract has been repudiated by one of the parties during its lifetime and savings which other party could have effected by ending performance thereof appeared so small as compared to damages for which such party would be liable if she had misjudged legal effect of notice of repudiation, in determining amount of damages for which repudiating party is liable, cost added by full performance of contract is not to be deducted.

6. Damages ⇐189

In determining amount of cost which could have been saved by party's stopping performance of executory contract after repudiation thereof by other party, it is not required that cost be established with mathematical exactness.

Sallie T. Seaver, Los Angeles, for appellant.

Murchison & Cumming, Los Angeles, for respondent.

BISHOP, Presiding Judge.

Plaintiff sought in vain to recover for services rendered under a contract repudiated, during its life, by the defendant. We have not had the benefit of findings, nor of any opinion by the trial court, to indicate to us the theory on which its judgment was based. As we should do, In re Estate of Rule, 1944, 25 Cal.2d 1, 10, 152 P.2d 1003, 1007, 155 A.L.R. 1319, we made the best use of the evidence that we could, to support the judgment, but nevertheless we have reached these conclusions: that the plaintiff was entitled to damages for defendant's repudiation of the contract; and that the failure of the plaintiff to produce evidence satisfactory to the trial court, by which one factor in the established formula for such damages could be ascertained with accuracy, did not warrant the judgment that plaintiff take nothing.

The plaintiff was the only witness and the defendant, as the respondent on this appeal, does not question her story—indeed accepts it as true (with an exception to be noted). For fifteen years, the plaintiff has conducted the business of keeping some eleven hundred architects and engineers acquainted with the products of some one hundred and twenty manufacturers. On her staff she has ten trained college men who familiarize themselves with these products and then, by literature, word of mouth and demonstration, carry their information regularly and frequently to the architects and engineers. The bill for this service is footed by the manufacturers.

In March, 1953, the defendant, a manufacturer, signed up for a year's service, payable at the rate of $60 per month. Without any fault being found with plaintiff's performance, but for reasons applicable to itself alone, on August 29, of the same year, the defendant wrote plaintiff a letter expressing its desire to cancel its contract. To this plaintiff replied that she only took subscribers for a year, and that that was the contract. She continued her services throughout the year for which the defendant had contracted and it made some payments after the date of its letter of repudiation. The pleadings and the evidence agree that only $420 was paid of the $720 promised.

[1,2] From the circumstances narrated, the conclusion might have been reached that the defendant acquiesced in plaintiff's insistence that the contract was binding for a year. But in this event the plaintiff would have had judgment for $300, so we must presume that the trial court did not favor this theory, but was of the opinion that the defendant, without legal reason, but with the power the law recognizes, had repudiated its contract with the plaintiff while it yet had some months to run. The principle that governs the situation here presented is thus stated in Bomberger v. McKelvey, 1950, 35 Cal.2d 607, 613-614, 220 P.2d 729, 733: "It is the general rule in California and in practically all other jurisdictions that either party to an executory contract has the power to stop performance of the contract by giving notice or direction to that effect, subjecting himself to liability for damages, and upon receipt of such notice the other party cannot continue to perform and recover damages based on full performance. [Citing cases.] This is an application of the principle that a plaintiff must mitigate damages so far as he can without loss to himself. See 5 Williston on Contracts, Rev.Ed.1937, § 1298, p. 3694."

[3] If, resolving all inferences in favor of the judgment that the evidence warrants, we come to the conclusion that this was one of the cases in which the party who fully performs, after a repudiation by the other party, may not recover the reward for full performance, the result is not a denial of any reward, but only that any cost of performance that could have been avoided must be deducted. Certainly, by full performance, the plaintiff did no harm to the defendant and did not forfeit any of her rights. At most, she incurred an expense which she could have avoided, and to the extent that this can be established, a deduction must be made from the $300 that would otherwise be due her.

Upon which party lies the burden of proving the amount to be deducted? We find it stated in Marconi Wireless Telegraph Co. v. North P. S. Co., 1918, 36 Cal.App. 653, 655, 173 P. 103, 104: "There is a class of cases in which if the obligor to the contract repudiates it before the obligee has had an opportunity to perform, the contract price is prima facie the measure of damages, and matters of mitigation and reduction must be shown by the obligor."

The court then cites a number of cases, the last one being Ware Bros. Co. v. Cortland Cart & C. Co., 192 N.Y. 439, 85 N.E. 666, 22 L.R.A.,N.S., 272, concerning which it said: "In the last-mentioned case an advertiser desired to cancel its contract with a publisher under which the latter was to publish an advertisement once a month for 12 months for a certain sum to be paid when the contract was fully performed. The publisher refused to consent to the cancellation and continued the publication for the entire period, and upon the advertiser declining to pay therefor brought an action for the contract price. Upon the trial the plaintiff proved the contract and its performance, and rested. Thereupon the defendant produced evidence to the effect that it had canceled the contract, and rested. It was held that the contract was prima facie the measure of damages, and the rule applied that where a contract for future employment had been entered into and afterwards revoked by the employer, in an action for breach of contract the damages are prima facie the amount of wages for the full term, and the burden of proof is upon the defendant to show facts in mitigation of damages." These words were then quoted from the opinion in the New York case: "The distinguishing feature in this case, as we regard it, is that the publishing of an advertisement in a periodical is the same as the publishing in a daily or weekly newspaper, which involves the investment of no additional capital or the use of any material other than the ink used and the paper upon which it is printed, and these articles are of such trivial value as not in our judgment to change the character of the contract from one for services to be rendered."

The Marconi case was cited in Landon v. Hill, 1934, 136 Cal.App. 560, 568, 29 P.2d 281, 284, and Carrier v. Piggly Wiggly, 1936, 11 Cal.App.2d 180, 185, 53 P.2d 400, 402, as authority for the conclusion that the burden of proving mitigation of damages was on the defendant. It is to be noted, however, that the Marconi case, because of its facts, lined itself up with those cases that hold that the burden that is upon the plaintiff to prove his damages includes the burden of proving the expense incurred in fulfilling a repudiated contract.

[4] It seems to us that our case falls within the rule first recognized in the Marconi case rather than within the latter. But even if we are wrong in so concluding, the judgment should not be affirmed. The only evidence upon the question of the saving that might have been made by acquiescing in defendant's repudiation of the contract was that of the plaintiff whose theory was that it cost her no less to serve 119 subscribers than to perform her contracts with 120 after the initial expenditure of time by her staff in getting acquainted with defendant's products. Evidently the trial court did not find her testimony convincing. The plaintiff, of course, was an interested party and the trial court was free to reject her testimony on that ground even though she was otherwise unimpeached. Odenthal v. Lee, 1952, 113 Cal.App.2d 666, 669, 248 P.2d 937, 939. If that to which she testified is not a correct theory for the measurement of the cost that she could have saved by non-performance, after defendant's repudiation, what theory is there that warranted the trial court in saying that the cost may have equalled $300, and so the plaintiff was entitled to nothing? We wish we had some intimation of the line of reasoning followed by the trial court, for we are sure its judgment was not an arbitrary decision. Respondent's brief fails to cause us to question our conclusion that even in the absence of any acceptable evidence, the finding is inescapable that the plaintiff could not have saved herself as much as $300 by rendering no service after defendant's repudiation. A judgment for some sum, then, should have been awarded the plaintiff.

[5,6] Upon a new trial it may be that the trier of fact will conclude that the little, if any, saving that the plaintiff could have effected by ending her service to the defendant appeared so small as compared to the damages for which she would be liable if she misjudged defendant's letter, and it was not a legal repudiation of its contract, that common sense dictated that she had better perform fully. In such a case, the cost added by full performance is not to be deducted. See Bomberger v. McKelvey, supra, 35 Cal.2d 607, 614, 220 P.2d 729, 733-734. It is not to be expected, moreover, that that cost can be established with mathematical exactness, but this is not required. Ross v. Frank W. Dunne Co., 1953, 119 Cal.App.2d 690, 700-702, 260 P.2d 104, 110. Hensler v. City of Los Angeles, 1954, 124 Cal.App.2d 71, 87, 268 P.2d 12, 23-24.

The judgment is reversed. The appeal from the non-appealable order denying motion for new trial is dismissed.

Sept. 21, 1956.

Rehearing Denied Oct. 17, 1956.

Prosecution for possession of marijuana. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Clement D. Nye, J., entered judgment of conviction and defendant appealed. The Supreme Court, Schauer, J., held that where police officers went to defendant's apartment without a warrant but were given permission by him to search the premises and search disclosed defendant's possession of marijuana, defendant was precluded from claiming that evidence was illegally obtained because of lack of probable cause for an arrest.

Affirmed.
Opinion, 295 P.2d 517, vacated.

1. Searches and Seizures ⇨7(27)

Where prosecution showed that defendant freely consented to search of his apartment which disclosed evidence claimed to have been illegally obtained, it was not necessary for prosecution to show that the search and seizure were reasonable as incident to a proper arrest.

2. Searches and Seizures ⇨7(28)

Where police officers, without any show of force or coercion, called upon suspected defendant at his home and asked to search premises to which defendant consented, a holding as a matter of law that defendant had acted because of an unlawful assertion of authority by the officers would be unjustified.

3. Criminal Law ⇨395

Where police officers went to defendant's apartment without a warrant but were given permission by defendant to search the premises and search disclosed defendant's possession of marijuana, defendant was precluded from claiming that evidence was illegally obtained because of lack of probable cause for an arrest without a warrant. West's Ann.Health & Safety Code, § 11500.

4. Criminal Law ⇨303

Power of the trial court to strike or dismiss increased penalty proceeding as to a prior conviction, is within authority granted by statute providing that court may of its own motion or upon application of prosecuting attorney and in furtherance of justice, order an action to be dismissed. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 1385.

5. Criminal Law ⇨303

Under statute providing that court may of its motion or upon application of prosecuting attorney order an action to be dismissed, the authority to dismiss the entire action includes the power to dismiss or strike out a part. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 1385.

6. Criminal Law ⇨303

The striking or dismissing a charge of prior conviction regardless of whether it has been admitted or established by evidence, is not equivalent of the determination that defendant did not in fact suffer conviction and does not wipe out such prior convictions or prevent them from being considered in connection with later convictions. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 1385.

7. Constitutional Law ⇨52

Adjudication of guilt of substantive crime and judicial determination of factors which results in increased punishment, are inherently within the province of the court even as the punishment which may or must follow the offense adjudicated, either with or without a punishment augmentation factor, is essentially for the legislature, except as it may vest an area of discretion in the court or an administrative body. West's Ann.Health & Safety Code, § 11712.

8. Criminal Law ⇨1202(1)

Conduct of prosecuting attorney in remaining silent when trial court announced its intention to strike the prior conviction of defendant for purposes of sentencing, amounted to an assent to the ruling.

9. Criminal Law ⇨1023(1)

Order of trial court in criminal prosecution striking charge of prior conviction for purposes of sentencing defendant, was an appealable order. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 1238, subs. 1, 6.

10. Criminal Law ⇨1136

Where state failed to appeal from order of trial judge striking from record prior conviction of defendant for purposes of sentencing, state's action indicated an acquiescence in order and sentence which followed, and state was precluded from raising propriety of trial court's action in defendant's appeal from conviction. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 1238, subs. 1, 6.

11. Criminal Law ⇨1136

Purpose of statute providing that on appeal by defendant, court may, when requested, consider and pass on all rulings of trial court adverse to state is intended to give the people the right, on an appeal by the defendant where a judgment of conviction is reversed, to raise points that might be involved on a re-trial, but statute was not designed to give the people a right in the nature of an appeal which is governed by other sections of the code. West's Ann. Pen.Code, § 1252.

Cletus J. Hanifin, El Monte, for appellant.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., and Robert S. Rose, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

SCHAUER, Justice.

Defendant appeals from a judgment of conviction of violation of section 11500 of the Health and Safety Code by possession of marijuana. He contends that the judgment should be reversed because evidence which he asserts was illegally obtained was admitted over his objection.

The People do not appeal, but they ask reversal of the judgment for the purpose of having defendant's sentence increased.

They contend that the trial court erred in ordering that the charge of a prior conviction of violation of section 11500 of the Health and Safety Code, a misdemeanor, which was alleged in the information and admitted by defendant, be "stricken [in effect, set aside or dismissed] in the interest of justice," and in sentencing defendant to the county jail. It is the position of the People that section 11712 of the Health and Safety Code (hereinafter quoted), which provides the punishment for violation of section 11500, requires that one who admits a prior conviction "of any offense described in this division [div. 10, Health & Saf. Code]" be sentenced to state prison. Specifically, they request "that the judgment be reversed and the case remanded with directions to enter judgment in accordance with [the People's construction of] * * * Section 11712."

We have concluded that the arguments of both parties are without merit.

Claimed Illegal Search and Seizure

Defendant was tried by the court without a jury. The following facts appear from the testimony of John Storer, a narcotic inspector: "At approximately 11:00 o'clock p.m." on March 28, 1955, Inspector Storer and three other officers, without warrant, went to defendant's apartment "To make a narcotic investigation." Also "at approximately 11:00 o'clock p.m." on that date Storer arrested defendant. When the arrest took place in relation to the other events herein described does not appear from the record; according to defendant's opening brief it took place following the discovery of the narcotics hereinafter described.

The officers had "prior information that narcotics were used on those premises." The source of this prior information does not appear.

The officers knocked and "defendant came to the door and opened it a small distance and asked who was there, and Inspector Hollingsworth stated, 'We are officers. We would like to talk to you.' The defendant stepped back and said, 'Just a moment.' He opened the door, turned on the light, and we walked into the room. I then asked him if his name was Robert Burke and he said it was." Defendant did not state that the officers could enter the apartment "but his implication was plain. * * * Officer Hall asked him if he had ever been arrested for narcotics, and the defendant said * * * he had been arrested in 1950. Officer Hall then asked him, 'Do you have any narcotics here at the present time?' And the defendant said no. Officer Hall then said, 'You don't mind then if we search your apartment do you?' And the defendant said, 'No, go ahead.'"

In their ensuing search of defendant's apartment the officers found leafy marijuana and partially smoked marijuana cigarettes. Defendant freely admitted to the officers that the material was marijuana, that he had purchased it a week before, and that he had smoked some of it.

The marijuana was admitted in evidence over defendant's objection that it was obtained in violation of the exclusionary rule enunciated in People v. Cahan (1955), 44 Cal.2d 434, 282 P.2d 905. The trial court in admitting the evidence declared, "There was certainly no need for a search warrant here, because the defendant, according to the testimony of this witness, consented to the search, and the officers had a reasonable ground to believe a crime was committed there."

It is defendant's position that there was no showing of reasonable cause to justify the arrest without warrant, and thereby to justify the search without search warrant as incident to a lawful arrest, since Inspector Storer testified merely that the officers had "prior information that narcotics were used on those premises," without disclosing the source of such information. (See Willson v. Superior Court, (1956), 46 Cal.2d 291, 294 P.2d 36; People v. Boyles (1955), 45 Cal.2d 652, 656, 290 P.2d 535 [since the court must determine whether the arresting officer acted upon reasonable cause, the officers must testify to the information upon which they acted].)

[1, 2] It was not necessary here, however, for the People to show that the search and seizure were reasonable as incident to a proper arrest, for they showed that defendant freely consented to the search of his apartment which disclosed the evidence which defendant has since claimed was illegally obtained. It was not unreasonable for the officers, without any show of force or coercion, to call upon the suspected defendant at his home, or to ask him questions, or to accept defendant's statement, "No, go ahead," in answer to the inquiry, "You don't mind then if we search your apartment do you?" Under the circumstances here, as under those in People v. Michael (1955), 45 Cal.2d 751, 754, 290 P.2d 852, a holding that as a matter of law defendant acted because of an unlawful assertion of authority by the officers would be unjustified. (See also People v. Martin, (1955), 45 Cal.2d 755, 761, 290 P.2d 855.)

[3] Defendant relies upon Amos v. United States (1921), 255 U.S. 313, 41 S.Ct. 266, 65 L.Ed. 654, and Johnson v. United States (1948), 333 U.S. 10, 68 S.Ct. 367, 92 L.Ed. 436. The officers here did not come to defendant's home, as it was determined that they came in the Amos case, (at page 317 of 255 U.S., at page 267 of 41 S.Ct.), "demanding admission to make search of it under Government authority." And as was said in People v. Michael (1955), supra, at page 753 of 45 Cal.2d at page 853 of 290 P.2d concerning the Johnson case and other cases, "Whether in a particular case an apparent consent was in fact voluntarily given or was in submission to an express or implied assertion of authority, is a question of fact to be determined in the light of all the circumstances. Since the cases that have determined this question under varying factual circumstances are difficult if not impossible to reconcile [citations], and may reflect imperfectly the factual situations before the courts that decided them, they point to no compelling solution in the present case." We conclude that defendant has shown no ground for reversal of the judgment.

The People's Request for Reversal Based on the Trial Court's Claimed Violation of Section 11712 of the Health and Safety Code

Section 11712 of the Health and Safety Code (as amended 1953) provides: "Any person convicted under this division [div. 10, which includes § 11500] for having in possession any narcotic * * * shall be punished by imprisonment in the county jail for not more than one year, or in the state prison for not more than 10 years.

"If such a person has been previously convicted of any offense described in this division * * * the previous conviction shall be charged in the indictment or information and if found to be true by the jury, upon a jury trial, or if found to be true by the court, upon a court trial, or is admitted by the defendant, he shall be imprisoned in the state prison for not less than two years nor more than 20 years." (Italics added.)

The information alleged and on arraignment for plea defendant admitted a prior conviction of "Violation of Section 11500, Health and Safety Code * * *, a misdemeanor." When defendant came before the court for sentence his counsel requested that upon the showing made "the Court in this particular case strike the prior for the purposes of sentencing"; the prosecuting attorney did not oppose this request;¹ and the court ordered that "the [charge of] prior conviction [is] stricken in the interest of justice" and sentenced defendant to the county jail.

1. The following colloquy took place with reference to the striking of the prior conviction:

"Mr. Karch [defendant's counsel]:
* * * [I]n the past there have been cases where a prior has been struck just for the purpose of sentencing. I humbly request that the Court * * * strike the prior for the purposes of sentencing
* * *

"The Court: Mr. Crail [deputy district attorney], the Court has jurisdiction in this case to send the man to the County Jail, does he not?

"Mr. Crail: Not with a prior narcotic.

The procedure of "striking," or setting aside or dismissing, a charge of a prior conviction (or any of multiple counts or allegations of an indictment or information) at the time of sentence is not expressly provided for by statute but it is commonly used in trial courts, not only where the prior conviction has not been legally established, but also where the fact of the conviction has been shown but the trial court has concluded that "in the interest of justice" defendant should not be required to undergo a statutorily increased penalty which would follow from judicial determination of that fact. (See, recognizing procedure of dismissing charges of prior conviction, In re Bartges (1955), 44 Cal.2d 241, 244-245, 282 P.2d 47; People v. Coyle (1948), 88 Cal. App.2d 967, 973, 200 P.2d 546; People v. Ysabel (1938), 28 Cal.App.2d 259, 260, 82 P.2d 476; People v. Chadwick (1906), 4 Cal. App. 63, 74, 87 P. 384, 389.)

[4-6] The power to strike or dismiss the proceeding as to a prior conviction is within the power referred to in section 1385 of the Penal Code, which provides that "The court may, either of its own motion or upon the application of the prosecuting attorney, and in furtherance of justice, order an action to be dismissed. * * *." The authority to dismiss the whole includes, of course, the power to dismiss or "strike out" a part. (Cf. People v. Superior Court (1927), 202 Cal. 165, 173, 259 P. 943.) The striking or dismissal of a charge of prior conviction (regardless of whether it has or has not

"The Court: It's possession and not sale.

"Mr. Crail: That doesn't make any difference.

"The Court: Do you have that Section there? There's been some amendment on it.

"Mr. Karch: If the Court please, that is what counsel had in mind when he requested—

"The Court: Yes, in reference to the striking of the prior, I wasn't quite sure. In the interest of justice, I am going to strike the prior."

been admitted or established by evidence) is not the equivalent of a determination that defendant did not in fact suffer the conviction (see People v. Simpson (1944), 66 Cal.App.2d 319, 329, 152 P.2d 339; People v. Horowitz (1933), 131 Cal.App.Supp. 791, 794, 19 P.2d 874); such judicial action is taken, in the words of defendant's counsel, "for the purpose of sentencing" only and "any dismissal of charges of prior convictions * * * does not wipe out such prior convictions or prevent them from being considered in connection with later convictions". (People v. Coyle (1948), supra, 88 Cal.App.2d 967, 973-974, 200 P.2d 546.)

The People argue that by providing in section 11712 of the Health and Safety Code that if a prior conviction, whether of misdemeanor or felony, "is admitted by the defendant, he shall be imprisoned in the state prison" (italics added) the Legislature intended to take from the court the power to dismiss or strike a charge of prior conviction if the defendant admits the charge. According to the People, the trial court was required to sentence defendant to state prison and the judgment should be reversed for the purpose of directing it to do so.

[7] Section 11712 is based upon section 7 of the former State Narcotic Act (Stats. 1929, ch. 216, § 7, as am. Stats. 1935, ch. 813, § 5c). Section 7 provided in material part that a person convicted of illegal possession of drugs "shall upon conviction be punished by imprisonment in the county jail or in the State prison for not more than six years; provided, however, than any person convicted [of such possession] * * * shall be imprisoned in the State prison for not less than six months nor more than ten years if such person has been previously convicted of a felony * * *" (Italics added.) The People rely upon People v. Rose (1938), 26 Cal.App.2d 513, 518, 79 P.2d 737, where the appellate court (not in connection with the problem now under discussion) said that a state prison sentence for one previously convicted of felony was "mandatory" and that "in determining the amount or nature of the penalty to be inflicted, the legislature may require the courts to take into consideration the persistence of the defendant in his criminal course." (Italics added by the People.) In the Rose case, however, the trial court "found for the prosecution on the issue of the prior conviction" (at page 515 of 26 Cal.App.2d, at page 738 of 79 P.2d). That case (and also In re Shull (1944), 23 Cal.2d 745, 749, 146 P.2d 417, and In re Basuino (1943), 22 Cal.2d 247, 250, 254, 138 P.2d 297) concern records which disclose an express or implicit judicial determination against defendant of the factor (prior conviction in the Rose and Basuino cases, possession of a deadly weapon in the Shull case) from which increased punishment follows. The cited cases—and the statutes referred to—do not purport to divest the trial court (or to hold that the court constitutionally could be divested) of the power to control the proceedings before it insofar as the essentials of the judicial process are concerned; i. e., to find the defendant guilty or not guilty of any offense charged, or of a lesser included offense, or to dismiss the action in toto or to strike or dismiss as to any or all of multiple counts or charges of prior conviction. The statutes in question do validly—and in respect to constitutionally vested judicial power they neither purport to nor validly could do more than—prescribe the sentence which must be imposed upon the appropriate adjudication of guilt of the substantive crime and judicial determination of the factor which results in increased punishment. Such adjudication and judicial determination are inherently and essentially the province of the court even as the punishment which may or must follow the offense adjudicated, either with or without a punishment augmentation factor, is essentially for the Legislature except as it may vest an area of discretion in the court or an administrative body. (See People v. Gowasky (1927), 244 N.Y. 451 [155 N.E. 737, 749, 58 A.L.R. 9, 17].)

The statute provides that defendant "shall be imprisoned in the state prison" whether the conviction is "found to be true by the jury, upon a jury trial, or * * * found to be true by the court, upon a court trial, or is admitted by the defendant" (Health & Saf. Code, § 11712). The People concede that "the court has the power to strike its own findings"; but they assert that "striking a prior conviction 'in the interest of justice' * * * constitutes error where the prior conviction was not a finding of the court." Whether such action constitutes error must be resolved in any particular case upon the record in that case. The admission, conceivably, could have been inadvertent; mistaken, or deliberately false; it is, at most, evidence which must be considered in the judicial process.

[8] In the trial court the People did not object to the striking of the charge of prior conviction or advance the construction of section 11712 which they now urge. Rather, the conduct of the prosecuting attorney in remaining silent (as to that aspect of the requested action) when the trial court announced its intention to strike the charge (see footnote 1, ante, p. 7) amounted to assent to the ruling. (See Exposita v. United Railroads (1919), 42 Cal.App. 320, 323, 183 P. 576; People v. Ganger (1950), 97 Cal.App.2d 11, 13, 217 P.2d 41; People v. Montgomery (1940), 41 Cal.App.2d 574, 577, 107 P.2d 291; Cummings v. Cummings (1929), 97 Cal. App. 144, 149, 275 P. 245.)

[9,10] Furthermore, the People failed to appeal, although the order striking the charge of prior conviction was in its nature one of the orders specified as appealable either by paragraph 1 or by paragraph 6 of section 1238 of the Penal Code. That statute provides that the People may appeal "1. From an order setting aside the indictment, information, or complaint; * * * 6. From an order modifying the verdict or finding by reducing the degree of the offense or the punishment imposed." The trial court's action was in substance "an order setting aside [a part of] the * * * information"; having set aside that part of the information charging a prior conviction the court properly made no finding on that issue. The People contend, implicitly or explicitly, not only that it was error to set aside the charge but that on the record the court was bound to let the information stand as filed, to accept the defendant's admission, and to make a finding and to enter sentence in accord therewith. If for purposes of this decision we accept the People's above stated contention then it would follow that the purpose and ultimate effect of the court's order were the same as those of "an order modifying the verdict or finding by reducing the degree of the offense or the punishment imposed." Regardless of whether the action of the trial court be regarded as "an order setting aside [a part of the] * * * information" or as "an order modifying the verdict or finding by reducing the degree of the offense or the punishment imposed," it would appear that the People, if they were successfully to attack such action, must not only not have assented to it but must have taken an appeal. The failure of the People to appeal, like their silence when the dismissal order was made, indicates acquiescence in the order and the sentence which followed. (See American Enterprise, Inc., v. Van Winkle (1952), 39 Cal.2d 210, 221, 246 P.2d 935.)

[11] The People argue that their failure to appeal is immaterial because of the provision of section 1252 of the Penal Code that "On an appeal by a defendant, the appellate court shall, in addition to the issues raised by the defendant, consider and pass upon all rulings of the trial court adverse to the State which it may be requested to pass upon by the Attorney General." But the "statute here involved was intended to give the People the right, on an appeal by the defendant, when a judgment of conviction is reversed, to raise points that might be involved on a retrial.

The statute was not designed to give the People a right in the nature of an appeal. The right of appeal is governed by other sections of the code." (Italics added.) (People v. Zelver (1955), 135 Cal.App.2d 226, 236-237, 287 P.2d 183.)

For the reasons above stated, the judgment is affirmed.

Prosecutions of two municipal plaster inspectors for agreeing to receive bribes upon agreements that condemned plastering work would be approved. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Ralph K. Where the opposition has assailed the testimony of a witness as being of recent fabrication, an exception to the hearsay rule allows the admission of evidence of statements prior to the claimed fabrication and consistent with the testimony of the witness at the trial, not to prove the facts of the case, but as tending to show that the witness has not been controlled by motives of interest, and that he has not fabricated something for the purpose of the case.

In order to render admissible evidence of statements or conduct prior to the claimed fabrication of a witness as an ex-ception to the hearsay rule, it is not neces-sary that the party desiring to impeach should expressly state that he seeks to prove a fabrication of a recent date, but it is sufficient if the record indicates a pur-pose to prove a recent fabrication.

Evidence sustained convictions of municipal plaster inspectors for agreeing to receive bribes upon agreements that condemned plastering work would be approved. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 68.

Deputy Dist. Atty., Los Angeles, for respondent.

SHENK, Justice.

This is an appeal by the defendants Vincent Raymond Walsh and Joseph M. Stewart from judgments of conviction on two violations of section 68 of the Penal Code and from orders denying their motions for a new trial. Section 68 provides in its pertinent part as follows: "Every * * * employee * * * of the State of California, county or city therein * *, who asks, receives, or agrees to receive, any bribe, upon any agreement or understanding that his * * * action upon any matter then pending, or which may be brought before him in his official capacity, shall be influenced thereby, is punishable by imprisonment in the State prison * * *."

The defendants were employed by the City of Los Angeles as building inspectors. Their assignments were to "spot check" plastering jobs and to pass upon the quality of workmanship and compliance otherwise with the local plastering requirements. If an inspector finds that work does not conform to those requirements he has authority to order a work stoppage on the particular job pending its correction. After the defects in a rejected job have been corrected, he is supposed to approve it in writing by an endorsement on the prior stop order. The contractor has a right of appeal from a stop order through administrative channels but pending the appeal the job would remain at a standstill, or if completed the contractor could not obtain a certificate that the building was ready for occupancy.

The offenses were charged in two indictments, both of which applied to each defendant. The events resulting in the first charge began on February 5, 1954, when the defendants jointly inspected an apartment under construction in San Pedro. They assumed to decide that the plastering was unsatisfactory and mailed a copy of a job order to the general contractor which required that he: "Remove non-conforming interior plaster or submit test holes of interior plaster at spots indicated by plastering inspector. Do not apply third exterior coat of plaster until inspected by J. Stewart V. Walsh." On March 3rd it came to the defendants' attention that the order had not been complied with but that all of the plastering work had been completed. Walsh wrote out a duplicate order and arranged to meet Stubblefield, the plastering subcontractor, on the job, on March 5th. On that day the defendants and Stubblefield discussed the matter at the location of the job. Walsh stated to Stubblefield that he would require tests to be made at four different spots which would cost the subcontractor $60 per test, but that he "heard that you were willing to fix the job up." Stubblefield asked if the price of one test would be sufficient. Walsh requested $125, stating that they had to pay off someone else and promised that if Stubblefield worked with them he could have a job fixed almost anywhere in the city. He threatened to make Stubblefield tear off all the plaster if he told anyone about the deal. Stewart was present during this conversation and made no objection. Thereafter Stewart drove Walsh and Stubblefield to a bank in San Pedro. Stubblefield went in alone, made out and cashed a check drawn to cash in the sum of $125, then returned to the car and, in the presence of Stewart, handed Walsh the proceeds of the check. Stubblefield made no changes in the plaster work. Walsh endorsed the job order: "Cured O.K. 3-8-54 Walsh."

Robert M. Fisk, Richard P. B. Tyson, Pasadena, John J. Bradley, Max Solomon, Los Angeles, for appellants.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., Clarence A. Linn, Chief Asst. Atty. Gen., Raymond Momboisse, Deputy Atty. Gen., S. Ernest Roll, Dist. Atty., William E. McGinley,

In the second indictment it was charged that another plastering subcontractor in Culver City was required to pay a bribe. After inspecting that job on March 10, 1954, Stewart told the general contractor that the plastering was not satisfactory, gave him his business card and requested that the plastering subcontractor get in touch with him. The general contractor telephoned the message to the Ace Building Materials Company, and a Mr. Hilty of that company telephoned Mrs. Griffin, the wife of the plastering subcontractor. Upon receipt of the message Griffin consulted Hilty and his partner and was told by them to "do like the rest of them do", to "square it" by paying the inspector, and to keep his mouth shut. They suggested $50 as a payment that would probably satisfy Stewart. Thereupon Griffin telephoned the district attorney's office and reported the incident. He was told to "stall" the inspectors as much as he could so that the department could go to work on the matter, and if unsuccessful in obtaining a delay to use his own judgment and to advise what happened. Griffin telephoned Stewart at his home and arranged to meet him or one of his associates on the job the next morning. On that day Walsh instead of Stewart appeared and told Griffin that the plastering must be rejected, that "these jobs are usually taken care of" and asked "could you stand $50.00?" When asked why so much was demanded Walsh replied that there was someone else who had to be taken care of and stated, after receiving the money, "Well, this should handle you for a while to come." Griffin paid Walsh with the proceeds of a check for $50 which he had cashed for that specific purpose while en route to the appointment.

Immediately after paying Walsh, Griffin reported to the district attorney's office. The following day Griffin was interrogated by officials of the city Building Department with regard to the incident. Several days later Griffin telephoned Walsh and asked why the job had not been approved. Walsh said, "You know why, you s— of a b—," and hung up. The job had not been approved prior to trial but there was evidence that it had withstood laboratory tests.

The defendants pleaded not guilty to both indictments. Over their objection the cases were consolidated for trial. Separate appeals were taken from the judgments and from the orders denying the motions for a new trial.

[1] It is contended that the court erred in admitting in evidence the $125 check cashed by Stubblefield on March 5, 1954, and the $50 check cashed by Griffin on March 11, 1954, on the ground that the checks were incompetent, irrelevant, immaterial and self-serving. However, those checks were competent evidence to prove that the witnesses had such sums in their possession at the time of the alleged bribes and otherwise to corroborate their account of events which they testified took place. There was evidence that the proceeds of the checks in question found their way into the defendants' possession. The testimony connecting the checks with the defendants and the transactions involved was not remote or speculative, Cf. People v. Bissert, 71 App.Div. 118, 75 N.Y.S. 630, but was direct, positive and substantial. People v. Vollmann, 73 Cal.App.2d 769, 792, 167 P.2d 545; People v. Graves, 137 Cal.App. 1, 11, 29 P.2d 807, 30 P.2d 508; Taylor v. State, 44 Ga.App. 387, 161 S.E. 793, 801; State v. Emmanuel, 42 Wash.2d 799, 259 P.2d 845. There was no error in admitting the checks.

The defendants next urge that the court committed prejudicial error in admitting certain evidence claimed to be self-serving and hearsay. The contention arises out of attempts by the prosecution to rehabilitate their witnesses Stubblefield and Griffin. On cross-examination of these witnesses the defendants attempted to show that their testimony might have been fabricated and that they might have been biased and prejudiced towards the defendants. On redirect examination of the witness Stubblefield, the prosecution was allowed, over objection, to introduce certain prior consistent statements of the witness for rehabilitating his testimony. The court at that time instructed the jury that the evidence was being admitted not to prove the truth of the statements but for the limited purpose of refuting any suggestions or inferences that the witness had "fabricated" his testimony at the trial or that his testimony had been actuated by bias or ulterior motives. The rehabilitating evidence showed that Stubblefield had placed an endorsement on the back of the $125 check before he cashed it, reading "paid Vince Walsh $125.00 for fixing job 38 & Pacific, San Pedro job." Also evidence was introduced to the effect that Stubblefield had, on a prior occasion, told his general contractor that he had paid the inspector $125 to clear the job.

Likewise there was an attempt on cross-examination to impeach the testimony of the prosecution's witness Griffin and to show a recent fabrication on his part. As rehabilitating evidence, after such cross-examination, the prosecution introduced a check stub made out by Griffin at the time he wrote the $50 check with the notation thereon "L. A. City Inst. Pay-off $50.00", and he was allowed to explain that "Inst." meant "Inspector." Also, a store clerk who had cashed the check testified that Griffin had remarked at the time that it was for the purpose of a pay-off. Again, the jury was admonished by the court that this evidence was admitted for the limited purpose of "refuting the suggestions or inferences, if any, that this witness had beforehand or at the trial fabricated his testimony, or that his testimony was actuated by bias or ulterior motives, and it is introduced and received into evidence to prove the state of mind of this witness on a date prior to this trial for the purpose of determining whether his state of mind at that time was the same as disclosed at this trial, and to prove that his testimony at this trial was not a fabrication."

At the conclusion of the trial the court instructed the jury again as to the limited purposes for which rehabilitating evidence had been admitted, using substantially the same language as above set forth and as approved in People v. Weatherford, 78 Cal.App.2d 669, 697, 178 P.2d 816.

[2] It is the rule generally and in this state that where the opposition has assailed the testimony of a witness as being of recent fabrication, an exception to the hearsay rule allows the admission of evidence of statements or conduct prior to the claimed fabrication and consistent with the testimony of the witness at the trial, "not to prove the facts of the case, but as tending to show that the witness has not been controlled by motives of interest, and that he has not fabricated something for the purposes of the case." People v. Kynette, 15 Cal.2d 731, 753-754, 104 P.2d 794, 806; see also Sweazey v. Valley Transport, Inc., 6 Wash.2d 324, 107 P.2d 567, 111 P.2d 1010, 140 A.L.R. 93.

The defendants contend that the court improperly applied the "prior consistent statement" rule; that an express limitation upon the use of this exception to the hearsay rule is that such prior remarks must have been made "prior to the time the motive of interest existed", People v. Kynette, supra, 15 Cal.2d 731, 754, 104 P.2d 794, 806; Mason v. Vestal, 88 Cal. 396, 398, 26 P. 213; Barkly v. Copeland, 74 Cal. 1, 5, 15 P. 307; that it is evident that these witnesses were as much biased and prejudiced at the time they made the prior statements as they were during the trial, and that the jury was confused and misled by the instructions of the court that the evidence was admissible to refute inferences that the witnesses had "at this trial" fabricated their testimony or that "at this trial" their testimony was actuated by bias or ulterior motives.

There is no question but that on cross-examination the defense endeavored to bring out that the witnesses Griffin and Stubblefield were motivated by personal interests, were biased and had fabricated their testimony at least in part. It may be assumed that the witnesses' bias and prejudice against the defendants originated at the time of or prior to the time they were forced to pay the bribes. But in addition to showing such bias and prejudice the cross-examination pursued by the defense was designed to create inferences of fabrication which originated after the time of the bribes and after the making of the writings and statements claimed to have been improperly admitted for the purpose of rehabilitation. Thus the witness Stubblefield was questioned at length as to whether he presently disliked the defendant Stewart; whether he had testified differently before the grand jury; whether it was not now his purpose to "get even" for having been forced to pay the bribes; whether he and the witness Griffin had not discussed the testimony they would give at the trial after appearing before the grand jury and since the trial began; whether the $125 check he cashed immediately before paying the bribes was signed in the manner it normally would have been if actually drawn and cashed at the time he claimed, and whether the whole transaction actually ever took place. In the case of the witness Griffin, he was interrogated on cross-examination as to his associations and discussions with Stubblefield and a police lieutenant for the purpose of creating an inference that his testimony was influenced by such discussions. In another instance a conflict had arisen as to the manner in which Stewart first met Griffin in connection with the matter. A slip of paper was offered in evidence containing the notation of a message purportedly given by Hilty to Mrs. Griffin over the telephone and asking that Griffin call Stewart. The paper contained, among other things, the notation "Wa. 4287." Stewart's residence telephone number was Walnut 4287. Griffin testified that he had called that number and talked to someone who had identified himself as Stewart, with regard to the job order. On cross-examination Griffin was asked whether he had inserted the number on the paper "since the trial began", and whether he ever actually gave Walsh the proceeds of the $50 check or any currency at all.

[3, 4] With reference to the questioned rulings and instructions it is to be noted that it is not necessary that the party desiring to impeach should expressly state that he seeks to prove a fabrication of recent date. It is sufficient if the record indicates a purpose to prove a recent fabrication. Davis v. Tanner, 88 Cal.App. 67, 78-79, 262 P. 1106; Griffin v. Boston, 188 Mass. 475, 74 N.E. 687; Baber v. Broadway & S. Ave. R. Co., 9 Misc. 20, 29 N.Y.S. 40; Sweazey v. Valley Transport, Inc., supra, 6 Wash.2d 324, 107 P.2d 567, 111 P.2d 1010, 140 A.L.R. 152 and cases collected at pages 153-154. In the present case inferences of fabrication since the alleged bribes could be fairly drawn by the jurors in addition to those which would tend merely to impeach the witnesses' general reputations or otherwise cast doubt upon their testimony. We find no error in admitting evidence of prior consistent statements for the limited purpose of refuting inferences of subsequent fabrication and to show a prior state of mind consistent with that shown by the witnesses when testifying. However if there was any error in ruling on the admissibility of the evidence a review of the record discloses no miscarriage of justice resulting therefrom.

[5] Error is asserted because of the refusal of the court to admit evidence to rehabilitate defense witness Hilty. The cross-examination of Hilty did not develop bias and prejudice or inferences of recent fabrication on his part and rehabilitating evidence was therefore not admissible.

[6] It is contended by the defendant Walsh that for the purpose of impeachment it was improper to elicit the fact that he refused on the advice of counsel to answer certain questions before the grand jury upon the ground that his answers would tend to incriminate him. At the trial he was accorded permission to fully explain his conduct before the grand jury. The use of evidence of a defendant's prior refusal to testify before a grand jury because of fear of self-incrimination does not, as this defendant claims, violate the constitutional privilege, People v. Kynette, supra, 15 Cal.2d 731, 750, 104 P.2d 794, and the fact that he acted on the advice of counsel does not destroy its admissibility. People v. Jones, 61 Cal.App.2d 608, 627, 143 P.2d 726; People v. Sanchez, 35 Cal.App.2d 231, 235, 95 P.2d 169; People v. Graney, 48 Cal.App. 773, 775, 192 P. 460.

[7] It is also contended that the court erred in giving at the request of the prosecution four instructions on the law of entrapment. Those instructions correctly state the law on that subject and appear to have been applicable in the present case as to the Griffin incident. Griffin testified that he consulted the district attorney before paying the bribe; that he proceeded under instructions from the district attorney; that he would not have paid the $50 except upon the advice of the district attorney's office, and that he did not pay the bribe for the purpose of clearing the job but as an aid to law enforcement officers. The defendant Walsh asserts that the matter of bribery originated with Griffin. Proper instructions on entrapment under such circumstances cannot be said to create an inference that the act charged was in fact committed or to confuse the jurors as to the primary issue of the case. People v. Jackson, 42 Cal.2d 540, 268 P.2d 6. While the instructions were not expressly limited to the Griffin incident and there was no evidence of entrapment as to the Stubblefield incident, it does not appear that the jury would likely be confused by such lack of limitation.

Other claims of error are without merit.

[8] The evidence of bribery on the part of the defendants is abundantly sufficient to support the verdicts and judgments. They were given a fair trial and have advanced no sufficient reason for a reversal.

The judgments and orders are affirmed.

SCHAUER, Justice (dissenting).

In my view it was error to receive in evidence, over the objection of defendants, the self-serving and unsworn writings of the complaining witnesses. Furthermore, as I read the record, the instructions on entrapment were not applicable to any issue before the court and it was error to give them.

For further elucidation and strong documentation of the law supporting the views above stated, reference is made to the opinion prepared for the District Court of Appeal by Presiding Justice Shinn, concurred in by Justices Wood (Parker) and Vallée, and reported in 286 P.2d 915.

For the reasons above stated I would reverse the judgment.

Action by beneficiary to recover on life policy. The Superior Court, County of Marin, Jordan L. Wood, J., held that instruction which told jury that false answer in insurance application does not give rise to defense of fraud when true facts, if known to insurer, would not have made contract less desirable to insurer, but which failed to include element of the probable and reasonable influence of the true facts upon insurer, was prejudicial error where evidence disclosed insurer in instant case would have made a complete investigation as to applicant's physical condition if insurer had known true facts.

In action on life policy, wherein insurer alleged policy was unenforceable because of false and material misrepresentations made by insured at time insurance contract was entered into, insurer, which pleaded and tried case upon theory of actual fraud, could not complain of instruction which submitted case to jury on theory that insurer had to prove an intent on part of applicant to deceive the insurer. FRED B. WOOD, Justice.

Judgment was rendered upon a verdict against the defendant in favor of plaintiff, the beneficiary of an insurance policy issued upon the life of her husband, Dr. Sidney J. Cohen. Defendant has appealed from the judgment and from an order denying its motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict.

Defendant by its answer admitted the issuance of the policy and the payment of premiums but declared a rescission of the contract and tendered the return of premiums paid, predicated upon asserted false statements of Dr. Cohen concerning his medical history, made in writing upon an application form which became a part of the policy.

In support of its motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict, defendant claims the evidence is overwhelmingly in its favor, leaving no question of fact for determination by the jury, particularly the issues of falsity and materiality of the representations and of waiver by the insurer. Plaintiff, upon the other hand, contends there was a conflict of evidence upon the several issues and that the verdict is amply supported.

[1,2] We need only to consider one of those issues, the question whether Dr. Cohen made the alleged misrepresentations "with intent to deceive" the defendant "or to induce" defendant "to enter into the contract", Civ.Code, § 1572. Our examination of the record convinces us that the evidence does not demonstrate, as a matter of law, the existence of such an intent. No extended review of it is necessary because defendant does not claim proof of such intent as a matter of law. Instead, it contends that Dr. Cohen's intent in making the representations is not an issue. In its opening brief, defendant says "All that the company need show is that the applicant concealed or misstated his medical history" and "Whether or not he had an actual intent to deceive is beside the point." P. 27. Upon the same ground, defendant criticizes an instruction given by the court which treated actual fraud as an issue and listed the elements thereof which defendant must prove, including proof "that the applicant intended the insurance company to rely on the misrepresentation or concealment." Concerning this defendant says "The implication that the Company had to prove an intent to deceive is wrong" and "the instruction is wrong too in suggesting that the Company had to prove that the applicant intended that the Company should rely on the misrepresentation or concealment." A.O.B., p. 32.

In support of this argument defendant invokes section 331 of the Insurance Code, which states that concealment, "whether intentional or unintentional," entitles the injured party to rescind insurance. But it pleaded and tried the case on the theory of "actual fraud."

It alleged that in his written application for insurance Dr. Cohen represented that his then present condition of health was good, that he had never had a special heart study or an electrocardiogram, and that there had never been any suspicion of nor had he ever had or been treated for pains in the chest or any disease of the heart or blood vessels.

It then alleged that each of the representations was false and untrue, each was known to Dr. Cohen to be false and untrue at the time of making it, each was made by him for the purpose of inducing defendant to rely thereon and upon said reliance to issue to him said policy of insurance, defendant did rely upon each thereof, defendant had no knowledge of the falsity of any thereof until after his decease, and that each of the representations was material to the risk in that defendant would not have issued the policy had it known that they were false or untrue. These are averments essential to the pleading of a case of "actual fraud" as defined in section 1572 of the Civil Code. See 23 Cal.Jur.2d 27 and 164, Fraud and Deceit, §§ 11 and 66.

Having thus tendered the issue of actual fraud, including the question of Dr. Cohen's intent, defendant tried the case on that theory. For example, during the course of the trial when considering an objection defendant had made to a certain question, the judge indicated that a proper ruling "would depend upon the precise nature of the claim of the defendant in this case," saying "there are two kinds of misrepresentation, one intentional and one not intentional" and "now, if the insurance company here claims actual fraud—" at which point defendant's counsel said, "that's what we do, your Honor," and in response to a further comment by the judge, "the claim is direct deception upon the contract * * *—in any event, to answer your Honor's question, frankly, the company does, of course, depend upon the answers and claims actual fraud." (Emphasis added.)

Having pleaded and tried the case upon the theory of actual fraud, defendant is in no position to invoke a different theory upon appeal. The order denying the motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict must be affirmed.

[3] Defendant challenges as prejudicially erroneous three instructions on materiality which told the jury that an incorrect answer on an insurance application (the concealment or the misrepresentation of a fact) is not material, does not give rise to the defense of fraud when the true fact, if known to the insurance company, "would not have made the contract less desirable to the insurer."

Defendant claims such an instruction is incomplete, failing as it does to include the element of the probable and reasonable influence of the true facts upon the insurer

"in making his inquiries"; that it should not be confined, as each of these instructions was confined, to the influence of such facts upon the insurer "in forming his estimate of the disadvantages of the proposed contract," quoting from section 334¹ of the Insurance Code.

This point seems well taken. The expression "would not have made the contract less desirable to the insurer" directs attention only to the insurer's "estimate of the disadvantages of the proposed contract" and, by its failure to mention, withholds from the jury consideration and determination of "the probable and reasonable influence of the facts" upon the insurer "in making his inquiries", in conducting his investigation of the applicant's medical history.

Plaintiff counters with the statement that the questioned instructions are based upon and use the very words of a statement recently made by our Supreme Court in Ransom v. Penn Mutual Life Ins. Co., 43 Cal.2d 420, 427, 274 P.2d 633, 637: "An incorrect answer on an insurance application does not give rise to the defense of fraud where the true facts, if known, would not have made the contract less desirable to the insurer. [Citations.]" But there, it would appear, the sole question was the probable effect of the true facts upon the desirability of the proposed contract to the insurer, not the probable influence thereof upon the "inquiries" the insurer would have made if it had known those facts. This is reflected in the statement which immediately follows the statement above quoted: "The electrocardiogram showed that Ransom's heart was 'essentially normal,' and defendant does not claim that this part of the medical history, if known, would have influenced it to consider the risk less desirable." 43 Cal.2d at page 427, 274 P.2d at page 637.

In our case, however, the "probable and reasonable influence" of the true facts upon the insurer in determining the desirability of the contract was not the sole question. Equally in issue was the probable influence of such facts upon the insurer "in making his inquiries." Clearly, the questioned instructions were erroneous.

1. Section 334 applies to concealments. Section 360 of the same code makes section 334 applicable to representations.

Were they prejudicially erroneous? It would seem so.

Dr. Cohen failed to mention certain physical examinations given him by the Army in 1943 and 1946 and an electrocardiogram taken in 1943; nor did he state what any of the Army reports of such examinations indicated. Plaintiff concedes that there is a conflict in the evidence concerning the significance of the Army findings (for example, whether they indicated an organic disease or a functional disorder, arteriosclerosis or mere emotional tension), saying in part: "There is a direct conflict in the evidence on the question of whether there was a connection between the findings of the cause of death as reported in the autopsy and the findings of the Army physical examinations. Appellant had the burden of proving such connection * * * and whether it succeeded was a pure question of fact to be determined by the jury." R.B., pp. 33-34. That bears directly upon the question: What would have been "the probable and reasonable influence" of those examinations and the nature of those findings upon the defendant "in making his inquiries"? There is evidence that knowledge of the fact that an applicant had taken an Army physical and had been accepted for induction, commissioning or honorable discharge without indication of waiver or other limitation, would not influence the defendant, would not stimulate it to investigate further. Because of the difficulty and the time consumed in obtaining military records of physical examinations of an applicant, the company customarily did not seek to obtain them unless the applicant's answer provided a reason for so doing. If those answers indicated a service connected disability or an examination which showed defects covered by the questions asked of the applicant, defendant's underwriting department would request the applicant to produce his health record from the Army before processing the application. Specifically, electrocardiograms, abnormal pulse records, and abnormal blood pressure readings are referred to home office doctors to review. Here, for example, asked if he ever had a health or physical examination, Dr. Cohen answered "U. S. Army induction 1944." He had in addition been examined by Army doctors several times in 1943 and again in 1946. Asked if he ever had a special heart study or an electrocardiogram, he said "No." Instead, he had had a heart study by X-ray and an electrocardiogram. The latter, according to one of the experts, was "definitely abnormal" pointing to the coronary arteriosclerosis found at the autopsy; according to another expert it was suggestive of heart disease. Asked if there had been suspicion of abnormal pulse, any disease of the heart or blood vessels or a high blood pressure, he said "No." Yet, there is evidence that he was examined several times in 1943 for high blood pressure and abnormal pulse, and that in 1944 he accepted an Army commission stating "Waiver is granted for unstable blood pressure, tachycardia, systolic apical murmur." The 1944 Army report stated "blood pressure this examination is of the same order as previously."

There is evidence that if Dr. Cohen had answered the application questions truthfully, a full investigation would have been made by the defendant.

We conclude, therefore, that the instructions in question were prejudicially erroneous.

The judgment is reversed and the order denying the motion for judgment notwithstanding the verdict is affirmed.

Rehearing Denied Oct. 10, 1956.

Hearing Denied Nov. 14, 1956.

Action for injuries sustained by one riding in automobile driven by defendant when it went out of control and catapulted into a canyon. From a judgment of the Superior Court of San Diego County, C. M. Monroe, J., on a jury's verdict for defendant, plaintiff appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Burch, J. pro tem., held that whether plaintiff gave defendant compensation for ride and hence was a passenger, rather than guest of defendant, was question of fact for jury.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Appeal and Error ⇨842(1)

On appeal from judgment on general verdict for defendant in action for injuries sustained by plaintiff while riding in automobile driven by defendant, plaintiff is entitled to ruling on question whether he was a passenger in automobile as matter of law, though plaintiff's failure to prove by preponderance of evidence that defendant was guilty of negligence proximately contributing to injuries justified verdict for defendant. West's Ann.Vehicle Code, § 403.

2. Appeal and Error ⇨1062(4)

Trial court's submission to jury as fact question of issue, which is one of law on record, as to whether plaintiff, suing for injuries sustained while riding in automobile driven by defendant, gave defendant compensation for ride, and hence was passenger, rather than defendant's guest, results in error prejudicial to plaintiff, where jury returns general verdict for defendant, though record shows that verdict would be supported because of plaintiff's failure to establish defendant's negligence. West's Ann.Vehicle Code, § 403.

3. Automobiles ⇨245(24)

In action for injuries to one riding in automobile driven by defendant, it was jury's function to draw one of two possible inferences, warranted by evidence, on question whether plaintiff conferred on defendant a benefit constituting compensation for ride, and hence was a passenger, entitled to protection of general law of negligence, or went along, at his own request, for fun of ride, and hence was defendant's guest, required to prove that injuries were caused by defendant's intoxication or wilful misconduct in order to recover damages. West's Ann.Vehicle Code, § 403.

4. Automobiles ⇨245(24)

In action for injuries to one riding in automobile driven by defendant, evidence, including defendant's testimony on examination under civil procedure code section, presented fact question for jury as to whether plaintiff was a passenger, giving defendant compensation for ride, or a guest of defendant. West's Ann. Code Civ.Proc. § 2055; West's Ann.Vehicle Code, § 403.

5. Automobiles ⇨181(2)

A "passenger" in automobile is a person giving driver compensation for ride, as distinguished from "guest", carried gratuitously, within Vehicle Code provision that no person accepting ride in vehicle as guest, without giving compensation therefor, has right of action against driver for personal injury sustained during ride, unless he establishes that injury resulted from driver's intoxication or wilful misconduct. West's Ann.Vehicle Code, § 403.

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Guest" and "Passenger".

6. Automobiles ⇨181(1)

An automobile driver is liable for ordinary negligence proximately causing injuries to or death of passenger in automobile.

7. Automobiles ⇨181(2)

Whether automobile operator received any advantage of value from carrying a rider, whether rider paid money to operator for ride, whether operator and rider shared expenses, and whether they were engaged in some undertaking or making trip together, must be considered in determining ultimate fact as to whether some benefit, realized or expected, flowed or would flow to operator, so as to constitute giving of compensation to him for ride, thereby rendering rider a passenger, rather than guest, in automobile. West's Ann.Vehicle Code, § 403.

8. Appeal and Error ⇨1064(4)Trial ⇨228(3)

In action for injuries to alleged passenger in automobile driven by defendant, uses of definitive word "the" instead of indefinite article "a" in instruction that questions whether parties shared expenses and were engaged in some undertaking or making trip together must all be considered by jury in determining whether "the thing which actuated the giving of that ride" was some benefit to defendant, and that test was whether "the motive in giving the ride" was some advantage or something of value flowing to defendant because of parties' agreements and undertakings, were not misleading and prejudicial to plaintiff. West's Ann.Vehicle Code, § 403.

9. Appeal and Error ⇨1067

In action for injuries to one riding in automobile driven by defendant when it went out of control and catapulted into a canyon, defendant's failure to preserve for future evidence of cause of failure of automobile's steering apparatus a part of broken bolt, which he and a mechanic in defendant's garage testified was probably defective because of crystallization, did not constitute wilful suppression of evidence, so that trial court's failure to instruct jury as to disputable statutory presumption that evidence wilfully suppressed would be adverse, if produced, was not error prejudicial to plaintiff, though res ipsa loquitur doctrine applied. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 1963, subd. 5.

BURCH, Justice pro tem.

Plaintiff Jack Baker sues defendant Anton Novak to recover for damages he received when the "jeep" in which the parties were riding went out of control and catapulted into a canyon. The accident occurred at about 4:30 p. m. November 11, 1954, while Novak was driving the "jeep" in an easterly direction on U.S. Highway 76 at a point approximately 6 miles southeast of a junction known as Rincon Springs in San Diego County.

Trial by jury resulted in a general verdict for defendant. Plaintiff appeals from the judgment entered upon the verdict.

[1,2] The complaint alleges that plaintiff was a passenger at the time of the accident. He contends upon appeal that the court committed prejudicial error in failing to instruct the jury that plaintiff was a passenger as a matter of law, whereas, the court, considering the question was in conflict, left the matter to the jury as a question of fact. Plaintiff is entitled to a ruling on whether or not plaintiff was a passenger as a matter of law, even though the jury's general verdict could find support in plaintiff's failure to prove to the jury by a preponderance of the evidence that defendant was guilty of negligence which proximately contributed to his injuries, and thereby justifying the verdict for defendant. Although the record indicates that the jury might have based its verdict on the absence of negligence, it appears to be settled law, though with some debate, that prejudicial error results "in submitting to the jury as a question of fact" an issue on compensation for a ride "that on the record was one of law", Huebottter v. Follett, 27 Cal.2d 765, 770, 167 P.2d 193, 196, even though the record shows the verdict would be supported because of failure to establish negligence.

[3] In considering the question of status as guest or passenger within the meaning of Vehicle Code Section 403 (the guest law) we center our attention upon the phrase therein requiring "compensation". The terms "guest", "passenger", and "compensation" are legal concepts in relation to the guest statute which carry the meanings given to them, respectively, by a long line of decisions from which it appears that the circumstances of each case fit more readily into one or the other of the two categories, guest or passenger, covered by the statute. Conceivably a rider may give a stipulated compensation, money or something else of value, to the driver, and come under the protection of the general law of negligence. But conceivably also the driver, motivated by sheer good will, may invite or permit to ride the well-known "hitchhiker" who loses his right thereby to compensatory damages for negligence, but must prove injuries caused by the driver's intoxication or wilful misconduct. These various decisions have been reviewed exhaustively in Martinez v. Southern Pacific Co., 45 Cal.2d 244, 288 P.2d 868, and the line of demarcation there drawn indicates to us that the jury could in this case draw an inference that Mr. Baker was either one or the other. It is the function of the jury to draw that one of the two possible inferences supplied by the evidence offered upon the decisive question: Did Mr. Baker confer upon Mr. Novak a benefit within the meaning of compensation as used in the statute, or did Mr. Baker at his own request go along for the fun of the ride. The ultimate fact to be determined is whether he did or did not give compensation for the ride.

[4] The record discloses evidence for and against the legal concepts of "passenger" and "guest". The parties were friends. Novak testified: "Well I think I have known him (Mr. Baker) about a year before this accident' * * *. The first time I ever met him was he stopped in at the station and wanted to know if he could leave a little radio he had there for some money, take his wife to the hospital. So I give him enough money to take her up to the doctor. And a few days later he picked his radio up * * *. Yes, he brought Dean (Mr. Dean Cabbie, Mr. Baker's son-in-law) down one day and asked me if I would give him a job, and I did." Novak and Cabbie went on a uranium hunt in the fall of 1954, but found no uranium. Novak and his wife had been on two uranium hunts before that, but none was found.

"Q. Now when you returned from your trip with Mr. Cabbie you arrived back a short period before you went on your trip with Mr. Baker; is that right? A. Yes, four days, I guess.

"Q. Was Mr. Baker working there at the station when you got back? A. Yes, he was.

"Q. And did Mr. Cabbie then take over? A. Yes.

"Q. Now was Mr. Baker living there on your premises when you first came back from the trip? A. Well, he had a small truck, he had a bed in back of it, and he lived there, I guess * * *.

"Q. Now when you originally planned to go on this second trip after coming back from Arizona with Mr. Cabbie did you originally plan to go with Mr. Baker or with your wife? A. I was planning on taking my wife. Then Jack wanted to go so I took Jack. * * *

"Q. Did you have any conversation with Mr. Baker before leaving about sharing of expenses or groceries or gas and oil? A. No.

"Q. Did Mr. Baker contribute anything toward the purchase of the groceries? A. He never gave me anything.

"Q. Did he pay you anything for the gas and oil? A. No.

"Q. Did he say to you that he would? A. There was nothing mentioned about he would or he wouldn't."

On examination under section 2055 of the Code of Civil Procedure Mr. Novak testified that the trip was headed for Palm Springs as a likely place to find uranium and that this was at Mr. Baker's suggestion; that they were equipped with a Geiger Counter, a couple of small shovels, bed rolls and a tent. Mr. Novak had previously testified in a deposition:

"Q. Was Jack Baker sharing the expenses of the trip, the ride? A. Yes.

"Q. And what was he to give you for that or what did he give you? A. Well, he put in half the gas and half the groceries and that was it * * *."

The witness continued under section 2055, supra:

"Mr. Cabbie and I got back on a trip before Jack and I left on this one. And him and I shared expenses. * * *. Dean had $13 and I put the rest of the money into the trip. So I figured this would be the same way. That would be all. There was nothing mentioned about money or anything else."

A suggestion is also made that certain work was performed by Mr. Baker with others upon the jeep, putting in new rings and giving it a general overhaul, and that this, being in anticipation of the trip, was contributed as far as Mr. Baker was concerned, as compensation, to bring him into the category of a passenger and not a guest. We think we have quoted sufficiently from the record to show that the parties evidenced a situation with regard to "compensation" which would make the question one of fact and not one of law. The probative facts, in our view, do not establish as a matter of law that Mr. Baker was a passenger or that he was a guest. The hunt by Mr. Novak for uranium may have been purely by way of recreation from work, and he may have acceded to Mr. Baker's request to go along solely to accommodate a wish of a friend and to enjoy his company. Many people we think might envisage such a trip as pure fun, and Mr. Baker could be among them for all we find in the record. We think the court properly left the question to the jury insofar as the Geiger Counter, pick and shovels affected the issue.

[5, 6] "The designations 'passenger' and 'guest' have been adopted for the purpose of distinguishing a person who has given compensation within the meaning of section 403 of the Vehicle Code from one carried gratuitously." Thompson v. Lacey, 42 Cal.2d 443, 444, 267 P.2d 1, 2; Whitmore v. French, 37 Cal.2d 744, 746, 235 P.2d 3. Under this section one who is a guest in the automobile of another cannot recover against the driver for injuries or death unless he establishes that the injuries or death proximately resulted from the intoxication or wilful misconduct of the driver; but where one is a passenger, the driver is liable for ordinary negligence proximately causing the injuries or death. Follansbee v. Benzenberg, 122 Cal.App.2d 466, 470, 265 P.2d 183, 42 A.L.R.2d 832." Martinez v. Southern Pacific Co., 45 Cal.2d 244, 249-250, 288 P.2d 868, 871.

As for the new rings and repair work on the jeep by the parties, again Mr. Baker's part is not necessarily to be taken as compensation for the ride. Gratitude for other and different accommodations than the trip, that he had received from Mr. Novak, may have been his motive. He kept his own truck on the premises and lodged therein. He had been befriended when his wife was ill. He had been casually employed at times around the station. The jury would have to judge which motive actuated Mr. Baker, friendship or a bargain for the ride. Assuming such an implied finding by the jury for the purposes of appellant's contention on appeal, we find no error in submitting to the jury the question as one of fact. Martinez v. Southern Pacific Co., 45 Cal.2d 244, 288 P.2d 868.

[7,8] Appellant objects to the following instruction as containing prejudicial error in the use of the phrases "the motive in giving the ride and "the thing that actuated the giving of the ride". It is appellant's contention that the use of the article "the" instead of the article "a" constituted the error; that there need be only "a" benefit for the ride to make the rider a passenger. The instruction follows:

"Now you will note that what the law refers to is that there must flow to the operator of the automobile a consideration for the giving of the ride. That doesn't have to be a payment of money; but it can be anything, any advantage of value to the operator of the automobile. So that it is not to be determined solely by whether the parties share the expenses. It is not to be determined solely by whether or not they were engaged in some undertaking together or making a trip together. But all those things are to be taken into consideration by the jury in determining as a matter of fact whether in giving to the party the ride in the vehicle the thing which actuated the giving of that ride was either some benefit which could flow to the operator of the car or by reason of the arrangement the parties had made he anticipated would flow to him. Now that might be any sort of an advantage, any sort of a thing that would persuade the giving of the ride, as long as it was something that operated or was expected to operate as a valuable advantage to the party operating the car. So it will be apparent to you that the mere fact that the parties may have been interested in the same thing or that they may have undertaken to share expenses, isn't necessarily the test. It is the question whether or not the motive in giving the ride was because of some advantage or something of value that either did flow to the operator of the car or that he anticipated would flow to him by reason of the agreements and undertakings of the parties."

What the court is speaking of here is the single concept of "compensation" for the ride as specified in section 403 of the Vehicle Code. As the instruction points out, this single concept is a fact to be judged by numerous probative facts among which are stated any advantage of value; whether or not a payment of money be made; whether or not expenses are shared; whether or not they were engaged in some undertaking together or making a trip together; all these matters were to be taken into consideration in determining that ultimate fact, to wit: "some benefit which would flow to the operator of the car", realized or expected. The instruction then explains the types of benefit or advantage that would measure up to the requirements of "compensation". We find nothing misleading in the uses of the definitive word "the" instead of the indefinite article "a". The matter was before the trial court on consideration of a motion for new trial and we adopt as a part of this opinion the remarks of the trial judge. The Honorable C. M. Monroe there said on the point:

"Plaintiff argues that the jury might have construed this language as meaning that in order to establish the relationship of passenger the plaintiff would be compelled to prove that the sole and only reason actuating the giving of the ride was the expectation of some gain or advantage on the part of the owner of the vehicle. No case has been cited in which this distinction has been carefully spelled out. It might be argued on the contrary, that if any expectation of any advantage or gain entered into the transaction in any degree whatever such fact would constitute the recipient of the ride a passenger. In such event it might be reasoned that practically any time that a person took another into his automobile the latter became a passenger. I think it is fair to state that it is knowledge common to everybody that in all such transactions a number of reasons may be involved. Thus when a man proffers an accommodation to a friend he may entertain in the back of his mind some thought that the friend may in the future be of some value to him. So when we speak of 'motivating influence' we mean something which is actually a moving cause of the ride and not some minor consideration that may have possibly entered the mind of the owner of the automobile. I do not feel that this instruction could have been misunderstood or misinterpreted by the jury."

We find nothing in McCann v. Hoffman, 9 Cal.2d 279, 70 P.2d 909, in conflict, as to this point, with Whitmore v. French, 37 Cal.2d 744, 235 P.2d 3, or Thompson v. Lacey, 42 Cal.2d 443, 267 P.2d 1, or Martinez v. Southern Pacific Co., 45 Cal.2d 244, 288 P.2d 868. Where the context calls for the demonstrative and particular article, "the" that word is used. When, however, the court is directing its attention variously to one of several motives influencing conduct it uses the indefinite article "a".

[9] The court instructed the jury on the effect of the production of weaker evidence when it was in the power of the party to produce stronger evidence. The court gave no instruction under the rule stated in section 1963, subd. (5) of the Code of Civil Procedure, viz.: "That evidence wilfully suppressed would be adverse if produced". It is argued that the failure to give the latter instruction constituted prejudicial error, on the theory that the case was one for the application of the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur and the defendant had not furnished evidence explaining the accident and therefore plaintiff was entitled to an instruction that defendant's negligence was responsible for the accident. On the question of negligence the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur concededly applied. As to the evidence offered by defendant to explain the accident it does not import the element of wilful suppression.

In Dierman v. Providence Hospital, 31 Cal.2d 290, 188 P.2d 12, plaintiff received his injuries from an explosion while in surgery and the doctor was using a hot iron to cauterize the wound. The Dierman case states the rule (quoting from the syllabus):

"Where the doctrine of res ipsa loquitur is applicable and, in addition to the prima facie showing of negligence, it is admitted or appears without dispute that defendant has it in his power to produce substantial evidence material to the issue of negligence but fails to do so, it must be presumed that such evidence, if produced, would have been adverse to defendant, and under such circumstances the evidence is insufficient to support a verdict for defendant and plaintiff is entitled to a directed verdict."

In the instant case the defendant made an affirmative showing that while descending a grade and negotiating a curve at a lawful and proper speed, "suddenly and without warning" his steering apparatus failed him and he was unable to bring the jeep to a stop before it plummeted over the bank. Not until some nine or ten days later, when defendant was released from the hospital, did he have an opportunity to again see or inspect the jeep. When he got it back to his garage in San Clemente an inspection revealed that a broken bolt, a part of which was found buried in the front axle, was probably defective through crystallization. The other part of the bolt was never found. The portion recovered was placed by defendant in a tool box at a time when no action was pending or anticipated. When the trial was in prospect defendant hunted for and failed to find the part of the bolt. Eleven months had elapsed, the jeep had been repaired and was sold. The mechanic who removed the imbedded part testified that in his opinion the bolt was crystallized and that the failure of the part was due thereto. Plaintiff himself testified that he had worked at the overhaul of the jeep shortly before the trip. We see in this no wilful suppression of evidence, and clearly the showing made takes the case out of the quoted rule of the Dierman case, supra. We agree with the trial court that the jury would be justified in finding the explanation in this evidence, and that the failure to have preserved the part for future evidence was in no way blameworthy.

The PEOPLE of the State of California,
Plaintiff and Respondent,

v.

Charles Basil WHEAT, Defendant and Appellant.

Cr. 5609.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 3, California.

Sept. 14, 1956.

Rehearing Denied Sept. 28, 1956.

Defendant was convicted by the Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Clement D. Nye, J., for burglary of the first degree, and appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Parker Wood, J., held that evidence supported trial court's finding that burglary occurred in nighttime, so as to constitute first degree burglary.

Judgment affirmed.

Burglary ☞41(5)

In burglary prosecution, evidence supported trial court's finding that burglary occurred in nighttime, so as to constitute first degree burglary. West's Ann.Pen Code, § 460.

Charles Basil Wheat, appellant, in pro. per.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., and William E. James, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

PARKER WOOD, Justice.

Defendant was charged with burglary. It was also alleged in the information that he had been convicted on seven prior occasions of a total of eight felonies, and that he had served terms of imprisonment therefore in state prisons. Defendant denied those allegations. Trial by jury was waived. He was adjudged guilty, and the offense was fixed as burglary of the first degree. The allegations as to prior convictions were found to be true. Defendant appeals from the judgment.

Appellant contends that the evidence was not sufficient to support the finding that the offense was burglary of the first degree. He asks that the judgment be modified by reducing the degree of burglary from first degree to second degree.

Section 460 of the Penal Code provides, in part: "1. Every burglary of an inhabited dwelling house or building committed in the night time * * * is burglary of the first degree. 2. All other kinds of burglary are of the second degree."

The question on appeal is whether the evidence was sufficient to support a finding that the burglary was committed in the nighttime.

Mrs. Burnand testified that on September 28, 1955, she was living in a one-family, two-story house at 2361 Hollyridge Drive in Los Angeles. About 8 p. m. of that day, she and her husband retired to bed; before she retired she examined the doors of the house, and everything was locked and in order; about midnight she heard noises in the house; she "heard sorts of things like they were dropping, stumbling around", she did not do anything about the noises because she was very tired and thought the noises might be her imagination or the people across the road; when she went downstairs in the morning she saw that the suitcase, which was at the foot of the stairs, had been opened and everything had been thrown out of it, and her valuables which had been in the suitcase were missing; the missing valuables were a diamond brooch, two gold bracelets, gold earrings with Greek coins, circle diamond earrings, and $55 or $60; she also noticed that the doors of a room on the bottom floor were open; the gold earrings with Greek coins (Exhibit 1), shown to her while she was a witness, were her earrings which were missing on September 29.

A police officer, who arrested defendant in San Francisco on October 5, 1955, testified that the circle diamond earrings (Exhibit 2) were in defendant's shirt pocket.

Another police officer testified that he first saw Exhibit 1 (the gold earrings with Greek coins) in a house on East 24th Street in Los Angeles; defendant was with the officer at that time, and defendant said that the house was his residence; defendant told the officer that he opened the door of the Burnand house with a pry bar, went into the house, opened the suitcase at the foot of the stairs, took articles of jewelry from the suitcase, put them in his pocket, went out of the house, and stayed in the weeds until it became light enough for him to walk down the street without being noticed; defendant also said that Exhibits 1 and 2 came from the house, and that he thought it was daylight when he entered the house—he figured it was around 6 a. m. when he entered.

Defendant did not testify and did not call any witness in his behalf.

Appellant argues to the effect that there was no positive testimony that he entered the house in the nighttime; that the testimony of Mrs. Burnand was not definite as to where the noises were or as to the time when she heard them; and "it is logical that perhaps the burglary was committed late the next morning."

The trial judge could reasonably have found from the evidence herein that the burglary occurred in the nighttime. The evidence supports the judgment.

The judgment is affirmed.

H. R. REEVES, Plaintiff and Appellant,

v.

Charles S. HUTSON, American Supply Company, a corporation, Defendants and Respondents.

Civ. 16783.

District Court of Appeal, First District,
Division 1, California.

Sept. 14, 1956.

Rehearing Denied Oct. 11, 1956.

Hearing Denied Nov. 8, 1956.

Action was brought for services rendered and for money had and received. Plaintiff secured a default judgment. The Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco, Harry J. Neubarth, J., entered an order quashing execution, an order dismissing the action, and an order denying motion to restrain defendants from transferring or mortgaging certain property or to post bond, and plaintiff appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Peters, P. J., held that where period from commencement of action to date of entry of dismissal of action was five years and four months plus, but during period of five months and 14 days it was impracticable or futile to bring the action to trial because defendants had not complied with conditions of order setting aside default judgment in favor of plaintiff, action should not have been dismissed under section of the Code of Civil Procedure making mandatory the dismissal of an action unless such action is brought to trial within five years after plaintiff has filed his action.

Order quashing execution affirmed, order dismissing action reversed, and appeal from order denying motion to restrain defendants or require them to post bond dismissed.

1. Appeal and Error ⇨113(1)

An unconditional order granting a motion to vacate a final judgment is an appealable order. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc., §§ 473, 663.

2. Appeal and Error ⇨82(3)

If conditional order setting aside default judgment is self-executing, so far as the conditions are concerned, it is a final order and is appealable. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc., §§ 473, 663.

3. Appeal and Error ⇨82(3)

If order setting aside default judgment on condition contemplates a second order unconditionally vacating the judgment, then the original order is interlocutory and non-appealable. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc., §§ 473, 663.

4. Appeal and Error ⇨113(3)

Judgment ⇨569

Where order setting aside default judgment, though somewhat ambiguous, was susceptible to the reasonable interpretation that it was self-executing, the order was appealable, and, in absence of a timely appeal from such order, the issues determined by it were res judicata. West's Ann. Code Civ.Proc., §§ 473, 663.

5. Appeal and Error ⇨82(3)

Judgment ⇨569

Order refusing to set aside default judgment and to restore judgment was a special order after final judgment and was appealable, and, in absence of a timely appeal therefrom, issues determined by it were res judicata. West's Ann.Code Civ. Proc., §§ 473, 663.

6. Appeal and Error ⇨82(3)

Judgment ⇨569

If conditional order setting aside default judgment was interlocutory in nature and not appealable, then subsequent order finding that there had been compliance with the conditional order and denying a motion to set aside the default judgment was an order after final judgment and appealable, and, in absence of timely appeal therefrom, issues determined by it were res judicata. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc., §§ 473, 663.

7. Appeal and Error ⇨113(2)

Generally, an order vacating or refusing to vacate an appealable order is itself an appealable order if it presents facts which were not reviewable on appeal from the first order. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc., §§ 473, 663.

8. Appeal and Error ⇨82(3)

If conditional order setting aside default judgment was a final self-executing order, it operated to set the default judgment aside, and subsequent order finding that there had been compliance with the conditional order and denying a motion to set the default judgment aside, could not be a special order after final judgment, because no judgment was then on the books, and the subsequent order would not be appealable. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc., §§ 473, 663.

9. Tender ⇨26

Where defendants' attorney wrote plaintiff's attorney requesting a cost bill, and, when none was forthcoming, defendants' attorney wrote court and, on instructions from court, deposited with clerk more than enough to cover attorney's fees of plaintiff's attorney and costs, and plaintiff's attorney was so notified, there was a valid tender of attorney's fees and costs. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc., § 2074.

10. Tender ⇨26

Where defendants' attorney wrote plaintiff's attorney requesting a cost bill, and, when none was forthcoming, defendants' attorney wrote court and, on instructions from court, deposited with clerk more than enough to cover attorney's fees of plaintiff's attorney and costs, and plaintiff's attorney was so notified, and plaintiff made no objections to the tender, the failure to object amounted to a waiver of any infirmities in the procedure adopted. West's Ann. Code Civ.Proc., §§ 2074, 2076; West's Ann. Civ.Code, § 1501.

11. Judgment ⇨172

Where order of April 28 conditionally setting aside default judgment required defendants to make certain books available to plaintiff, and on June 19 defendants' attorney informed plaintiff's attorney that the books were then in the possession of defendant's attorney and could be seen at his office or at the office of the accountant, the delay from April 28 to June 19 could not be held to be unreasonable as a matter of law. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc., §§ 2074, 2076; West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 1501.

12. Execution ⇨161

Where there was no default judgment in effect on date when court quashed execution because there had been compliance by defendants with conditions of conditional order setting aside the default judgment, the order quashing the execution was proper.

13. Dismissal and Nonsuit ⇨60(1)

Section of the Code of Civil Procedure, making mandatory the dismissal of an action unless the action is brought to trial within five years after plaintiff has filed the action cannot automatically be applied in every case, since there are court-created exceptions. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc., § 583.

14. Dismissal and Nonsuit ⇨60(3)

The period during which it is "impossible," "impracticable" or "futile" to try the action must not be included in the five year period of statute making mandatory the dismissal of an action unless the action is brought to trial within five years after plaintiff has filed his action. West's Ann. Code Civ.Proc., § 583.

15. Dismissal and Nonsuit ⇨60(6)

Where period from commencement of action to date of entry of dismissal of action was five years and four months plus, but during period of five months and 14 days it was impracticable or futile to bring the action to trial because defendants had not complied with conditions of order setting aside default judgment in favor of plaintiff, action should not have been dismissed under section of the Code of Civil Procedure making mandatory the dismissal of an action unless such action is brought to trial within five years after plaintiff has filed his action. West's Ann.Code Civ. Proc., § 583.

16. Appeal and Error ⇨781(4)

Affirmance of order quashing execution on default judgment, which was set aside, rendered moot the denial of motion by plaintiff to restrain defendants from disposing of property or to post a bond pending appeal, and appeal from order denying the motion to restrain defendants or to require them to post bond would be dismissed.

17. Appeal and Error ⇨491

Appeals from order quashing execution and from order of dismissal are not orders directing the payment of money, and determination of question whether a bond should be required clearly rested within sound discretion of trial court. West's Ann. Code Civ.Proc., §§ 942, 949.

18. Appeal and Error ⇨491

Trial court did not err in denying plaintiff's motion to restrain defendants from disposing of property or to post a bond pending appeal by plaintiff. West's Ann. Code Civ.Proc., §§ 942, 949.

Lorne M. Stanley, San Francisco, for appellant.

Howard C. Ellis, Bernard B. Glickfeld, San Francisco, for respondents.

PETERS, Presiding Justice.

Plaintiff secured a default judgment against defendants. Subsequently the default was set aside. Thereafter, the trial court entered an order quashing execution, an order dismissing the action, and an order denying plaintiff's motion to restrain defendants from disposing of property or to post bond. From these three orders plaintiff appeals.

The facts are somewhat confusing. On October 18, 1949, plaintiff brought an action in San Francisco against defendants for $13,563.14 for services rendered and for money had and received. Service was had on defendants in Santa Cruz County on October 19, 1949. About November 15, 1949, the attorney for defendants, Howard Ellis, secured from Lorne Stanley, attorney for plaintiff, an extension of time to plead to December 19, 1949. Defendants failed to plead within the time thus extended. On December 21, 1949, plaintiff caused defendants' default to be entered and judgment on default was entered on December 28, 1949. Ellis learned of the entry of the default on January 4, 1950, and moved to have it set aside on January 12, 1950. With this motion defendants filed their proposed answer denying liability and various affidavits. Ellis' affidavit filed in support of the motion avers that when he secured the extension in November of 1949 he and Stanley were on friendly terms, and he, Ellis, believed that Stanley would not take a default without some warning; that during this period, both before and after the action was filed, there were settlement discussions between counsel; that between October, 1949, and January 4, 1950, affiant was overwhelmed with an accumulated press of business and out of his office much of the time; that because of his secretary's neglect and inadvertence the date of the extended time to plead was not put on his calendar, nor was the file placed on his desk; that affiant discovered on January 4, 1950, that through oversight the time for answering had expired; that he immediately telephoned Stanley to request additional time to plead and was then informed of the entry of the default judgment; that affiant requested that the default be set aside by stipulation, but Stanley refused to so stipulate.

The motion to set aside the default was opposed. On April 28, 1950, Judge Theresa Meikle caused to be entered an "Order Setting Aside Default and Default Judgment Upon Condition." This order reads, in part, as follows:

"That the default and default judgment heretofore entered in the above-entitled matter be and the same is set aside upon the following express terms and conditions:

"1. That the Defendants pay to Plaintiff for and on account of costs incurred in said action the costs as taxed herein;

"2. That the Defendants pay to the attorney for Plaintiff the sum of $200.00 as part consideration of this order—The default not to be set aside until the payment of costs and attorney fees is paid;

"3. That the books and records of the Defendant corporation be brought from its principal place of business in the County of Santa Cruz to the City and County of San Francisco and made available for the inspection by the attorney for Plaintiff, at the office of the certified accountant at all times;

"4. That the [Defendants] be * * * restrained from transferring any of [their] assets other than in the ordinary course of business pending the trial of the issues * * *

No appeal was taken from this order, but on November 26, 1951, some 19 months after it was entered, plaintiff moved to have it set aside and the judgment restored on the ground that the conditions contained in the order had not been performed. Stanley so averred. Ellis filed a counter-affidavit alleging that he and his clients had complied with the order; that on May 12, 1950, he wrote Stanley requesting a cost bill; that he received no reply; that on May 31, 1950, he wrote to Judge Meikle informing her that he was holding $200 in his trust account for disposition of the matter, and requesting instructions as to its disposition; that Judge Meikle, under date of June 5, 1950, suggested that the money be deposited in court and Stanley notified; that on June 9, 1950, affiant deposited $225 with the clerk of the court and Stanley was notified; that plaintiff made no demand for the money or for the books of defendant, and never submitted a cost bill; that the books and records of defendants have been available; that on June 19, 1950, affiant notified Stanley that the books of defendants were in affiant's office and could be seen in affiant's office or in the office of the named accountants; that on November 29, 1951, affiant withdrew the money deposited with the clerk and sent Stanley a check for $215.75 for the attorneys' fees and costs and again told him that the books were available at the accountant's office; that Stanley refused to accept the check.

On December 4, 1951, Judge Sweigert denied the motion to set aside the order setting aside the default and to restore the judgment. No appeal was taken from this order.

Nothing further occurred until December 1, 1954, on which date plaintiff, ex parte, secured an order from Judge Neubarth for a writ of execution, and levied on certain property of defendants located in Santa Cruz County. Defendants secured several ex parte stays of execution, and then, on January 3, 1955, moved to quash the execution and moved to dismiss the action. The affidavit of Ellis filed in support of the motions avers that all the conditions of the order of April 28, 1950, have been complied with, and that the action should be dismissed because more than five years had elapsed since its commencement. Affidavits of the accountants also averred that the books of defendants, describing them, were available for inspection at their office, but that no demand for such inspection had ever been made. Plaintiff filed cross-affidavits averring that the books in the possession of the accountants were not complete. On January 28, 1955, Judge Neubarth filed an order quashing the execution. This is one of the orders appealed from, and involved on this appeal.

On February 21, 1955, Judge Neubarth entered an "Order Dismissing Action of Plaintiff Pursuant to Section 583 of the Code of Civil Procedure," expressly finding that defendants had complied with all conditions of the order of April 28, 1950; that Judge Sweigert had so determined by his order of December 4, 1951; that no judgment existed since defendants had complied with the April 28, 1950, order; that the action was commenced on October 18, 1949, and more than five years have elapsed since its commencement. Plaintiff has appealed from this order.

On March 14, 1955, plaintiff moved for an order restraining defendants from transferring or mortgaging certain property upon which plaintiff had previously levied, or to post bond, until the validity of the order of February 21, 1955, could be finally determined. This motion was denied March 16, 1955, by the late Judge Deasy. Plaintiff has appealed from this order.

[1-4] Appellant first attacks the validity of the order setting aside the default made on April 28, 1950, on the ground that the supporting affidavits do not show the required inadvertence, mistake, surprise or excusable neglect. This attack assumes that the validity of that order is reviewable on this appeal. This assumption appears to be contrary to the applicable law. Of course, an unconditional order made under either section 473 or section 663 of the Code of Civil Procedure granting a motion to vacate a prior judgment is an appealable order, being a special order after final judgment. Colby v. Pierce, 15 Cal.App.2d 723, 59 P.2d 1046; Casner v. Superior Court, 23 Cal. App.2d 730, 74 P.2d 298; Harth v. Ten Eyck, 12 Cal.2d 709, 87 P.2d 693. In the instant case, the order setting aside the default was made subject to certain conditions. In such event, if the conditional order is self-executing, so far as the conditions are concerned, it is still a final order and is appealable. Paul v. Walburn, 135 Cal.App. 364, 26 P.2d 1002. On the other hand, if the order setting aside the default on condition contemplates a second order unconditionally vacating the judgment, then the original order is interlocutory and non-appealable. Hayes v. Pierce, 18 Cal.App.2d 531, 64 P.2d 728; Aalwyn's Law Inst. v. San Francisco, 39 Cal.App. 365, 178 P. 966. While it must be conceded that the order of April 28, 1950, is somewhat ambiguous, it is susceptible of the reasonable interpretation that it is self-executing. The very first sentence of the order provides that the default judgment "is set aside." Then the order provides that the "default not to be set aside until the payment of costs and attorney fees." These become express conditions precedent which, upon performance, made the order immediately effective. The conditions in the order about inspection of the books were not made conditions precedent but were made simple directives or orders. So construed, which construction is reasonable, the order of April 28, 1950, was a self-executing order that set aside the default the moment the conditions precedent—the payment of costs and attorney fees—were performed. It was, therefore, in our opinion, an appealable order.

[5] But even if the order of April 28, 1950, be considered as an interlocutory order, and therefore non-appealable, then there would be no doubt at all that the order of December 4, 1951, refusing to set aside the default and to restore the judgment was a special order after final judgment and appealable. Had such an appeal been taken the appellate court could then have reviewed the validity of the April 28, 1950, order, assuming that order was interlocutory in nature. Thus, under no theory, can the validity of that order now be passed upon.

[6] Appellant's second contention is that the supporting affidavits fail to show compliance with the order of April 28, 1950. There is grave doubt that this issue can be reviewed on these appeals. On December 4, 1951, Judge Sweigert expressly found that there had been compliance with the order of April 28, 1950, and denied a motion to set the default aside. If the order of April 28, 1950, was interlocutory in nature, then the order of December 4, 1951, was an order after final judgment and appealable. Hayes v. Pierce, 18 Cal.App.2d 531, 64 P.2d 728. Since it has long since become final, the issues determined by it are res judicata. Lake v. Bonyng, 161 Cal. 120, 118 P. 535.

[7] On the other hand, if the order of April 28, 1950, was a final order and therefore appealable, the problem is not quite so clear. Generally speaking, an order vacating or refusing to vacate an appealable order is itself an appealable order if it presents facts which were not reviewable on appeal from the first order. Valentin v. Valentin, 93 Cal.App.2d 588, 209 P.2d 654. Under this theory, the order of December 4, 1951, would be appealable even if the order of April 28, 1950, was a final self-executing order.

[8] On the other hand, it can be argued that if the April 28, 1950, order was a final self-executing order, it operated to set the judgment aside, so that the order of December 4, 1951, could not be a special order after final judgment, no judgment then being on the books. See Colby v. Pierce, 15 Cal. App.2d 723, 59 P.2d 1046, for a discussion of a somewhat similar situation. If this theory is sound, the order of December 4, 1951, would not be appealable and could be now reviewed.

On its merits, the affidavits show compliance with the conditions of the April 28, 1950, order. Those conditions were four in number—payment of attorney fees, payment of costs, inspection of the books and restraint on conveyance of defendants' property. The order expressly provided that the "default not to be set aside until the payment of costs and attorney fees." Thus, these two conditions are expressly made conditions precedent. Ellis' affidavit, already summarized, clearly shows a valid tender of performance of these two conditions. The other two conditions—permit inspection of the books and prohibiting conveyance of the property—would appear to be directives and not conditions precedent to setting the default aside. But if inspection of the books was a condition precedent, the affidavits, already summarized, show compliance.

[9,10] Plaintiff contends that the deposit of money with the clerk of the court was not a legal tender of the costs and attorney fees, citing Rauer's Law & Collection Co. v. Sheridan Proctor Co., 40 Cal. App. 524, 181 P. 71. But the situation here is quite different from what it was in that case. Here, it is averred, Ellis wrote Stanley requesting a cost bill. When none was forthcoming, Ellis wrote the court and on instructions from the court deposited with the clerk more than enough to cover the attorney's fees and costs, and Stanley was so notified. Under section 2074 of the Code of Civil Procedure this would appear to be a valid tender. Plaintiff made no objections to the tender. This failure amounted to a waiver of any infirmities in the procedure adopted. Sec. 2076, Code Civ.Proc.; Sec. 1501, Civ.Code; Fogler v. Purkiser, 127 Cal.App. 554, 16 P.2d 305; Latimer v. Capay Valley Land Co., 137 Cal. 286, 70 P. 82; Kelley v. Russell, 50 Cal.App.2d 520, 123 P.2d 606; Wolff & Co. v. Canadian Pac. Ry. Co., 123 Cal. 535, 56 P. 453.

[11] So far as the inspection of the books is concerned, Ellis informed Stanley as early as June 19, 1950, that the books were then in his possession and could be seen at his office or at the office of the accountant. Plaintiff made no demand to see the books until 1955. Certainly, defendants' delay from April 28th to June 19, 1950, cannot be held to be unreasonable as a matter of law. Moreover, section 1501 of the Civil Code, and sections 2074 and 2076 of the Code of Civil Procedure contain a complete answer to plaintiff's arguments on this point.

[12] Thus, whether the orders of April 28, 1950, and December 4, 1951, were or were not appealable, they were proper orders. Therefore, the order now directly under discussion—the order of Judge Neubarth of January 28, 1955, quashing the execution—was clearly proper and should be affirmed, because on that date there was no judgment in effect.

[13] We now turn to the order of February 21, 1955, also by Judge Neubarth, which dismissed plaintiff's action under section 583 of the Code of Civil Procedure. That section makes mandatory the dismissal of an action "unless such action is brought to trial within five years after the plaintiff has filed his action". Here the action was filed on October 18, 1949, and the motion to dismiss was filed January 3, 1955, a period of 5 years and 3 months. Obviously, more than five years had elapsed. But section 583 cannot automatically be applied to every case. There are court-created exceptions. One such exception is here applicable.

[14, 15] In the instant case there was a substantial period during which the default judgment was in existence—from its entry on December 28, 1949, to at least June 12, 1950, when Ellis notified Stanley that the money had been deposited in court. That period amounts to five months, 14 days. During that period it was "impracticable," or "futile" to bring the action to trial. That period, therefore, must be excluded in computing the five-year-period. It is well settled that the period during which it is "impossible," "impracticable" or "futile" to try the action must not be included in the five-year-period. De Mota v. Superior Court, 130 Cal.App.2d 58, 278 P.2d 537; Rose v. Knapp, 38 Cal.2d 114, 237 P.2d 981; Christin v. Superior Court, 9 Cal.2d 526, 71 P.2d 205, 112 A.L.R. 1153; In re Estate of Morrison, 125 Cal.App. 504, 14 P.2d 102; City of Pasadena v. City of Alhambra, 33 Cal.2d 908, 207 P.2d 17. The period from the commencement of the action to the date of entry of the dismissal was five years and four months plus. It is obvious that if five months and 14 days be deducted from that period, less than five years had elapsed at the time of dismissal. Thus, the order of February 21, 1955, dismissing the action must be reversed.

[16-18] Plaintiff also appeals from the order of March 16, 1955, denying his motion to restrain defendants from disposing of property or to post a bond pending appeal. Plaintiff, however, makes no separate argument on this appeal to this point. The reason is obvious. With the affirmance of the order quashing execution the issues presented by the denial of the motion to restrain defendants became moot. Moreover, inasmuch as the appeals from the order quashing execution and from the order of dismissal are not orders "directing the payment of money" within the meaning of section 942 of the Code of Civil Procedure, the determination of whether a bond should be required clearly rested within the discretion of the trial court under section 949 of that code. Certainly, it is not an abuse of discretion, as a matter of law, to not require the successful party to a proceeding to protect the unsuccessful one during an appeal by the unsuccessful party.

For the foregoing reasons:

1. The order of January 28, 1955, quashing execution is affirmed;
2. The order of February 21, 1955, dismissing the action is reversed;
3. The appeal from the order of March 16, 1955, denying the motion to restrain defendants or to require them to post bond, being moot, is dismissed;
4. Each side on this appeal to bear his or its own costs.

It is so ordered.

Stanley LONG, Plaintiff and Appellant,
v.

George E. NEWLIN, Rhea E. Foust, and
J. C. Therlot, Defendants and Respondents.
Civ. No. 21552.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 1, California.

Sept. 19, 1956.

Rehearing Denied Oct. 15, 1956.

Hearing Denied Nov. 14, 1956.

Action was brought for money had and received. The Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Lloyd S. Nix, J., entered an order granting motions of defendants for a new trial, and the plaintiff appealed. The District Court of Appeal, White, P. J., held that where an accounting would be meaningless and accomplish nothing, since partnership had been rescinded because of alleged fraud and partnership agreement was void ab initio, granting of motions of defendants for new trial on grounds of insufficiency of evidence to show that it was not necessary to have an accounting, was error.

Order reversed.

1. New Trial §6

A motion for new trial rests peculiarly within the discretion of the trial court.

2. Appeal and Error §977(3, 5)

The granting or denial of a motion for new trial cannot be disturbed on appeal, in absence of a clear showing of abuse.

3. Appeal and Error §854(6)

Where order granting motions of defendant for new trial provided that motions were granted on the grounds of insufficiency of the evidence to show that it was not necessary to have an accounting, it could not be successfully contended on appeal that order may have been granted for insufficiency of the evidence to support the findings.

4. Money Received §18(1)

In action for money had and received, on ground that defendants by false and fraudulent representations obtained money from plaintiff's assignor to form partnership, plaintiff, in order to recover, had burden of proving assignment to plaintiff, payment of money to defendants by plaintiff's assignor, that payment was made under false representations, and rescission on discovery of alleged fraud.

5. Partnership §104

Action for money had and received, on ground that defendants by allegedly false and fraudulent representations obtained from plaintiff's assignor a certain sum of money to form a partnership, could be maintained over objection of defendants that one partner cannot bring an action against another except for dissolution of a partnership, since the very existence of the partnership was in issue, and effect of election of plaintiff's assignor to avoid the contract of partnership for alleged fraud was to place the parties, as between themselves, in the position as though no partnership ever existed. West's Ann.Civ.Code, §§ 1688, 1689 subd. 1; West's Ann.Corp.Code, § 15039, subd. (c).

6. Partnership ⇨259½

A contract of partnership can be rescinded in the same manner and for the same causes as other contracts. West's Ann.Civ.Code, §§ 1688, 1689, subd. 1.

7. Contracts ⇨274

The effect of a rescission of a contract is to void the contract ab initio. West's Ann.Civ.Code, §§ 1688, 1689, subd. 1.

8. New Trial ⇨70

Where an accounting would be meaningless and accomplish nothing in action for money had and received, since partnership had been rescinded because of alleged fraud and partnership agreement was void ab initio, granting of motions of defendants for new trial on grounds of insufficiency of evidence to show that it was not necessary to have an accounting, was error. WHITE, Presiding Justice.

This is an action upon a common count for money had and received. It was instituted to recover the sum of $40,000 allegedly had and received by defendants for the use of J. F. Burke, plaintiff's assignor. By their answers defendants denied any indebtedness to plaintiff or his assignor.

The cause was tried upon the theory that defendants by false and fraudulent representations obtained from J. F. Burke the sum of $36,276.55 to form a partnership or joint venture to promote a certain tool, made to wash perforations and to wash out sand from behind perforations in oil wells, thereby increasing their production.

That upon discovering the alleged falsity of the representations, plaintiffs' assignor rescinded the transaction. The cause proceeded to trial before the court sitting without a jury resulting in a judgment for plaintiff in the sum of $36,276.55. Each defendant moved for a new trial, which motions were granted through entry by the court of the following order: "the motion of defendant Rhae E. Foust for a new trial herein, and the motion of defendants George E. Newlin and J. C. Theriot for a New Trial herein heretofore submitted July 22, 1955, are granted upon the grounds of insufficiency of the evidence to show that it was not necessary to have an accounting."

From such order plaintiff prosecutes this appeal.

[1-4] We deem it unnecessary to narrate in detail the factual background surrounding this litigation because the sole question presented to us on this appeal is whether it was necessary to have an accounting of the business before plaintiff could recover. If it was then the motions for a new trial were properly granted. Defendants urge that the motions for a new trial having been granted on the ground of insufficiency of the evidence, the order should not be disturbed under the well established rule that a motion for a new trial rests peculiarly within the discretion of the trial court and cannot be disturbed on appeal in the absence of a clear showing of abuse. With that rule we are in thorough accord, but it is not applicable here because the order is expressly limited to the ground of insufficiency of the evidence as to the legal necessity for an accounting and will be reversed where it appears from the record that under the law, an accounting between the parties was not required. Such limitation in the order precludes the contention on appeal that the order may have been granted for insufficiency of the evidence to support the findings. McGinty v. Morgan, 122 Cal. 103, 105, 54 P. 392; Parker v. Wormack, 37 Cal.2d 116, 123, 230 P. 2d 823. In the instant proceeding, in order to recover, the burden rested upon plaintiff to prove, (1) assignment to plaintiff; (2) payment of money to defendants by plaintiff's assignor; (3) that payment was made under false representations; and (4) rescission upon discovery of fraud. Upon the trial, the court determined that plaintiff had met the foregoing burden and that decision is not here open to question because the motions for a new trial were granted solely upon the ground that plaintiff offered insufficient evidence as to the necessity for an accounting. This presents a legal question as to whether, when a contract of partnership is rescinded it is extinguished and whether under such circumstances the rule that a partner cannot maintain an action at law against his co-partners on a partnership transaction applies.

[5-7]. We are satisfied that respondents' contention that one partner can not bring an action against another except for dissolution of partnership can not be sustained, where as here, the very existence of the partnership is in issue. In the case at bar, when appellant's assignor determined that he had been the victim of false and fraudulent representations he took immediate steps to rescind the contract. Civil Code, Section 1689, Subdivision 1, authorizes a party to rescind a contract when his consent was obtained by fraud, while Section 1688 of the same code provides that a contract is extinguished by its rescission. And a contract of co-partnership can be rescinded in the same manner and for the same causes as other contracts. 68 C.J.S., Partnership, § 13, page 422. The effect of a rescission is to void the contract ab initio. In other words, the effect of the election of plaintiff's assignor to avoid the contract of partnership for the fraud practiced upon him is, that, as between the parties there has never existed any co-partnership, although of course, having held himself out as an apparent member of the partnership prior to rescission thereof, appellant is not excused from his liability to the creditors of the co-partnership. Under Corporations Code, Section 15039, Subdivision (c), the party entitled to rescind a partnership is also entitled to be indemnified by the person guilty of the fraud or misrepresentation against all debts and liabilities of the partnership.

[8] We are persuaded that the reason for requiring an accounting as a condition precedent to an action at law between partners is not present in the case now engaging our attention. The principal reason for requiring an accounting and settlement between co-partners as a condition precedent to an action at law by one against another is that a dispute of that nature ordinarily involves the taking of a partnership account to determine whether the plaintiff is not liable to refund more than he claims in the particular action and because in partnership transactions a partner does not as a rule become a creditor or debtor of the co-partner but of the firm. In the present case, an accounting would be meaningless and accomplish nothing: As pointed out by appellant, "The taking of an account in this case could not in any manner, shape or form change the liability of defendants to return the money to plaintiff which they obtained from him by fraud. If the account should show the partnership business was run at a loss the defendants would still owe plaintiff his money and if the partnership business was run at a profit the defendants would still owe plaintiff his money. When plaintiff elected to rescind the transaction it avoided the contract and as between the parties it was as if they had never been partners." None of the cases relied upon by respondents militate against what we have herein stated. True, the cited cases held, as contended by respondents, that partners may not sue "one another at law in respect to any of the business of the partnership or to recover damages from one or the other of the co-partners for a breach of the partnership agreement", but none of the cases hold that a partner remains a partner after rescission of the contract of partnership.

We are impressed that the action now engaging our attention comes within the rule announced in 40 Am.Jur. 400, as follows:

"The test is whether the damages resulting from the breach of the covenant or stipulation in the partnership agreement belongs exclusively to the other partners and not to the firm and can be assessed without taking an account of the partnership business; when this test can be met, an action at law lies at the instance of the injured partner against the other for the damages sustained."

The order granting a new trial is reversed.

Civ. 21484.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 3, California.

Sept. 12, 1956.

Action was brought to replace lost stock certificates under the Corporations Code, and the individual defendants filed a cross complaint seeking the same relief.

The Superior Court of Ventura County, Charles F. Blackstock, J., entered judgment adverse to the plaintiffs, and they appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Vallée, J., held that where plaintiff's ancestor wrote corporation that he had sold stock in corporation to defendants' ancestor, and that shares standing in name of plaintiffs' ancestor properly belonged to defendants' ancestor, and that corporation should reissue stock certificates to defendants' ancestor, letter was effective to transfer title to stock, though there was no delivery of stock certificates.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Appeal and Error ⇨232(2)

Where defendants offered in evidence a ledger of deceased as an ancient document, and plaintiffs conceded that the ledger was more than 30 years old, that it was in the handwriting of the deceased, and that it was found among deceased's effects, and plaintiffs did not object to admission of the ledger on ground that proper foundation had not been laid, but objected that the offer was irrelevant, incompetent, immaterial, and hearsay, plaintiffs' objection to the evidence was not sufficient to preserve for review the point that a proper foundation was not laid for the reception of the ledger in evidence. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc., § 1963.

2. Appeal and Error ⇨231(1)

Error cannot be predicated on the overruling of an objection when the particular grounds of the objection are not stated, unless they are obvious or otherwise known to the court.

3. Appeal and Error ⇨231(1)

To entitle an objection to notice, it must not only be on a material matter, affecting substantial rights of the parties, but its point must be particularly stated.

4. Appeal and Error ⇨231(1)

Where an objection is in general terms, and alleged defect could have been cured by party making the offer, if the reason it was objected to had been given, a reviewing court will not consider a claim that trial court erred when precise ground of objection was not clearly or at all specified.

5. Trial ⚡84(3)

Where defendants offered in evidence a ledger of deceased as an ancient document, and plaintiffs conceded that the ledger was more than 30 years old, that it was in the handwriting of the deceased, and that it was found among deceased's effects, and plaintiffs did not object to admission of the ledger on ground that proper foundation had not been laid, but objected that the offer was irrelevant, incompetent, immaterial, and hearsay, trial court did not err in overruling objection to the reception of the ledger in evidence, though allegedly a proper foundation had not been laid. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc., § 1963.

6. Evidence ⚡372(1)

An ancient document is admitted in evidence as proof of the facts recited therein, provided that the writer would have been competent to testify as to those facts. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc., § 1963.

"Laches" is not mere delay, but delay that works a disadvantage to another.

Where there was no proof that defendants in any manner induced or suffered plaintiffs to do or abstain from asserting their claim to lost stock certificate, or that they had been prejudiced in any way by lapse of time on part of defendants in asserting their claim to lost stock certificate, defendants' cross action to have lost stock certificates replaced was not barred by laches. West's Ann.Corp.Code, § 2482 et seq.

10. Equity ⚡71(1)

Lapse of time alone is not sufficient to bar a suit to quiet title

11. Limitation of Actions ⚡5(3)

Generally, statutes of limitations have no application to an action to establish a lost instrument.

12. Limitation of Actions ⚡95(1)

Where neither plaintiffs nor defendants had any knowledge of their respective claims to lost certificates of stock until notice was given by corporation shortly prior to filing of action by plaintiffs to replace lost stock certificates, defendants' cross action for the same relief was not barred by either three year or four year statutes of limitations. West's Ann.Code, Civ.Proc., §§ 337, 338; West's Ann.Corp.Code, §§ 2482 et seq., 2483.

West's Ann.Civ.Code, §§ 1624, 1624a(3).

15. Corporations ⚡114

Where stockholder wrote corporation that he had sold stock in corporation to third person, and that shares standing in name of stockholder properly belonged to third person, and that corporation should reissue stock certificates to third person, letter was effective to transfer title to stock, though at time statute imposed a stockholder's liability on registered owner of corporate stock, and though there was no delivery of stock certificates. West's Ann. Civ.Code, § 1059, subds. 1, 2.

VALLEE, Justice.

Appeal by plaintiffs from an adverse judgment in an action to replace lost stock certificates for 5,000 shares of stock of defendant Tapo Oil Company, a California corporation, brought pursuant to section 2482 et seq. of the Corporations Code.¹ The cause went to trial on the amended complaint of plaintiffs, called the "Stewart heirs," the answer and cross-complaint of defendants other than Tapo Oil Company, called the "Conger heirs," and the answer of plaintiffs to the cross-complaint. Tapo appeared as a stakes holder. Each side sought to have new certificates of stock issued to them in place of the admittedly lost certificates.

By stipulation two defenses were added to the answer of the Conger heirs: the statute of limitations and laches; and three defenses were added to plaintiffs' answer to the cross-complaint: the statute of limitations, laches, and the statute of frauds.

No witnesses were called at the trial. The parties stipulated to these facts:

On May 15, 1900, W. L. Stewart purchased 5,000 shares of the stock of Tapo Oil Company, represented by certificates numbers 138, 139, 140, 141, and 142, for 1,000 shares each. The shares were registered in his name on the share register of the corporation and are still so recorded.

tificates in question. E. L. Conger died in 1914. His estate was probated in Los Angeles County but neither the inventory nor the decree of distribution referred to the certificates. Plaintiffs are the descendants of and the successors in interest of W. L. Stewart. Defendants, other than Tapo, are the descendants of and the successors in interest of E. L. Conger. All parties had made diligent search for the certificates and they had not been found and were lost. No shares of stock are registered in the name of Conger on Tapo's books. The only certificates registered in the name of Stewart are the ones specified in the pleadings. The value of the shares of stock at any purchase, sale or assignment, which may have been made, was in excess of the then applicable statute of frauds. No documents which are material to the action are known to exist other than the letter of December 4, 1912 and the account book to be referred to.

Counsel for the Conger heirs then offered in evidence an account book kept by E. L. Conger in his lifetime.² The book is a ledger. It contains a number of pages referring to shares of stock in various corporations. On the upper half of page 175 is the account of Uncle Sam Oil Co. Three lines lower on the debit side of the ledger, in the column describing the shares, appear in ink the words "Tapo Oil Stock" and in pencil on the next line below it in the column used for showing amounts paid, "$1000." Four lines lower is the notation: "East Whittier Oil Stock." The lower half of the page is the account of Columbia Oil Co. The entries for Uncle Sam Oil Co. and Columbia Oil Co. begin in the year 1900. The last entry made relative to Uncle Sam was on March 20, 1900.

2. Counsel for the Conger heirs characterized the ledger thus: "This is a record that commences in the year 1886, I think, and carries about every transaction that a man could have made at that time with respect to the operation of his home and his business. The defendants'

On the alphabetic index page lettered "N" and "O" of the ledger is found:

"Oil Stock.	Central Co.	167.—123.
" "	Uncle Sam.	175.
" "	Park. Crude Oil Co.	173.
" "	Columbia	175
" "	United Petroleum Co	176.
" "	Taho.	175.
" "	East Whittier	175

The first notation made relative to Omaha Water Bond was on July 10, 1908. The ledger was carefully and well kept, even the number of eggs laid by chickens on respective days was noted.

Plaintiffs' counsel stipulated the ledger was found among the effects of E. L. Conger; it was kept in Conger's handwriting; and the particular entry "Tapo Oil Stock $1000." was in his handwriting. He did not stipulate that it was under the date 1900 or that it was made on that or any other date.

Defendants offered the ledger in evidence as an ancient document. Over plaintiffs' objection it was admitted.

The court found: the ledger was and is an ancient document kept in the handwriting of Conger and "the entry therein 'Tapo Oil Co. $1000' was and is an entry made in the handwriting of said deceased E. L. Conger, and that said entry was and is a record referring to his purchase of said aforementioned certificates for stock of the Tapo Oil Company for the total sum of One Thousand Dollars ($1000.00)."

The court concluded the letter of December 4, 1912 was on the date of its delivery to Tapo "a sale, transfer and assignment of all the right, title and interest" that W. L. Stewart had or ever has had in and to the certificates to Conger; the action predecessor in title was a minister of the Universalist Church. I think he was rather well known in this community. He shows here when he bought gas, when he bought grain for his chickens, and he shows what he paid for them."

is brought pursuant to section 2482 et seq. of the Corporations Code and Tapo was by virtue of the letter authorized and directed by Stewart to issue and cause to be delivered to Conger certificates for 5,000 shares of its stock as the property of Conger. No finding of fact or conclusion of law was made on the issue of the statute of limitations or laches. A finding against such issues is implicit in the court's conclusion with respect to the letter of December 4, 1912.

The court decreed the Conger heirs are the owners of the 5,000 shares of stock; ordered Tapo to cancel certificates 138 to 142 inclusive and to issue new certificates to the Conger heirs; and ordered them to deliver to the court a bond for $5,000 to indemnify Tapo against loss or liability, pursuant to section 2485 of the Corporations Code.

Plaintiffs' points are: 1. The cross-action is barred by laches. 2. The cross-action is barred by the 3-year or, at most, the 4-year statute of limitations, Code Civ. Proc. §§ 337, 338. 3. The conclusion that the Stewart letter of December 4, 1912 was an enforceable contract of sale violates the statute of frauds. 4. The court erred in admitting the ledger as an ancient document.

We first consider whether the court erred in admitting the ledger in evidence as an ancient document. Code of Civil Procedure, section 1963, provides:

"All other presumptions are satisfactory, if uncontradicted. They are denominated disputable presumptions, and may be controverted by other evidence. The following are of that kind: * * *

"34. That a document or writing more than 30 years old is genuine, when the same has been since generally acted upon as genuine, by persons having an interest in the question, and its custody has been satisfactorily explained".

Plaintiffs concede it was shown the ledger was more than 30 years old and that it was in the handwriting of E. L. Conger. These concessions and their stipulation that it was found among Conger's effects carry with them the inference that it is genuine. They argue a proper foundation was not laid for its reception in evidence in that it was not shown it "has been since generally acted upon as genuine, by persons having an interest in the question," and its custody was not satisfactorily explained. However, plaintiffs did not object on the ground a proper foundation had not been laid. Their objection was, "I object to the introduction of the evidence upon the ground that the offer is irrelevant, incompetent and immaterial and is hearsay." Counsel's argument in support of the objection is set forth in the margin.³ Obviously the evidence was relevant, material, and competent; and the rule permitting the reception of ancient documents in evidence is an exception to the hearsay rule.

[1-5] Plaintiffs' objection to the evidence was not sufficient to preserve the point on review. We do not inquire whether there was such a defect in the foundation for admission of the ledger as would have made it the duty of the court to have sustained a proper objection. The court was not given an opportunity to pass on the objection urged here. Error cannot be predicated on the overruling of an objection when the particular grounds of the objection are not stated, unless they are obvious, or otherwise known to the

3. "The basis of my objection is that the document does not show when the entry was made; it does not show that the books were carefully kept or what they were intended to be a record of all of Mr. Conger's transactions. The statement of $1,000.00 does not show whether he paid it, received it, valued it, or what. The entry does not show that this was a purchase from Mr. Stewart. It merely shows 'Tapo Oil stock, $1,000.00,' and may well have been no more than a jotting down of something he was to remember. There is too little to show to make it admissible, to tie it in to this litigation, to these shares of stock."

court. "To entitle an objection to notice, it must not only be on a material matter, affecting the substantial rights of the parties, but its point must be particularly stated. This is not only a statutory regulation, but it is the uniform rule, so far as we are aware, of all Courts of Record. The party, as the authorities say, must lay his finger on the point of his objection to the admission or exclusion of evidence." Kiler v. Kimbal, 10 Cal. 267, 268. And see People v. Modell, 143 Cal.App.2d 724, 300 P.2d 204; People v. Tolmachoff, 58 Cal.App.2d 815, 826, 138 P.2d 61. Where an objection is in general terms and the alleged defect could have been cured by the party making the offer if the reason it was objected to had been given, a reviewing court will not consider a claim that the trial court erred when the precise ground of objection was not clearly or at all specified. The court did not err in overruling the objection to the reception of the ledger in evidence.

they served to import verity to the facts written therein. The true rule is that an ancient document is admitted in evidence as proof of the facts recited therein, provided the writer would have been competent to testify as to such facts. 32 C.J.S., Evidence, § 745, p. 662; 4 Annotation 6 A.L.R. 1437, 1444.

"The deed of October 6, 1862, aforesaid, purported to convey the full title to the property described, including the ditch. Having been executed more than 50 years before the present controversy arose, it comes within the rules of evidence applicable to ancient deeds, and hence the recitals therein relating to the property conveyed are competent evidence of the facts recited, even against strangers to the title. [Citations.] It is also competent as a declaration of the grantor while in possession, as evidence that he then claimed full ownership of the ditch and water right." Also see Ames v. Empire Star Mines Co., Ltd., 17 Cal.2d 213, 224, 110 P.2d 13.

The entries in the ledger tend to show, as the court found, that E. L. Conger purchased the Tapo stock and paid $1,000 for it. They further tend to show he purchased the stock after May 1900.

[7-10] The cross-action is not barred by laches. "Laches is not mere delay, but delay that works a disadvantage to another.

4. "Ancient documents may be admitted in evidence as proof of the facts recited therein, provided the writers would have been competent to testify as to such facts. Such documents may, therefore, be received to prove or disprove title or possession, or the location of a boundary line, or the existence of a highway or right of way. They may also be admitted to prove matters of pedigree, heirship or widowhood; or to prove or disprove the identity of persons or land, or the existence of a power, or the authority of an executor or administrator to sell.

"A recital in an ancient deed or will of any antecedent deed or document, consistent with its own provisions, will after the lapse of a long period be presumptive proof of the former existence of such deed or document, especially in a case where nothing appears to rebut such presumption. Ancient documents coming out of the proper custody, and purporting on their face to show exercise of ownership, such as leases or licenses, have been admitted as being in themselves acts of ownership and proof of possession." 32 C.J.S., Evidence, § 745, p. 662.

A person is guilty of laches only where he has, by his conduct or negligence and delay, induced or suffered another to do or abstain from something, whereby the latter might be injured should he be allowed to enforce his rights." Carlson v. Lindauer, 119 Cal.App.2d 292, 309, 259 P.2d 925, 934. There was no proof that the Conger heirs in any manner induced or suffered plaintiffs to do or abstain from asserting their claim, or that they have been prejudiced in any way by the lapse of time. Assuming, as plaintiffs argue, that the cross-complaint states a cause of action to quiet title to the stock certificates, that cause is not barred by laches. "Lapse of time alone is not sufficient to bar a suit to quiet title." Carlson v. Lindauer, supra, 119 Cal.App.2d at page 310, 259 P.2d at page 934.

Plaintiffs assert that because the court concluded the letter of December 4, 1912 was, on the date of its delivery to Tapo "and is now, a sale, transfer and assignment of all right, title and interest" which Stewart "had or ever has had in and to" the certificates to Conger, the Conger rights arose by reason of the letter and the right of action is barred by the 4-year statute of limitations treating the cause of action as one on a written contract, or barred by the 3-year statute if the cause of action be considered as one to quiet title. The cause of action stated in the cross-complaint is one to replace lost stock certificates. It is not predicated on a written contract and is not barred by the 4-year statute.

[11, 12] The cross-action is not a suit to quiet title except in an incidental sense. Section 2483 of the Corporations Code provides the complaint in an action to replace lost certificates shall set forth that the owner "does not know of any person, firm, or corporation that claims or may claim any interest in the certificate who is not specifically named as a defendant." The contention that the cross-action is barred by the 3-year statute is based on the fact that the cross-complaint, in addition to stating the action was brought to replace lost certificates, said it was brought to establish the title to the certificates. This was merely a statement of a purpose of the action and not an allegation of fact. The cross-complaint pleaded the facts required by Corporations Code section 2483 in this sort of action.⁵ The judgment follows the statute. It decrees that the Conger heirs are the owners of the certificates, that Tapo issue new certificates, and that the Conger heirs give a bond. Neither Corporations Code section 2482 nor its predecessor, Civil Code section 328, which authorizes an action to replace lost certificates, limits the time within which such an action may be commenced. See Gallaher v. Iowa Oil Co., 139 Cal. App. 100, 33 P.2d 439, a proceeding commenced approximately 28 years after the loss and destruction of certificates, holding that the shareholder was not barred. The general rule is that statutes of limitations have no application to an action to establish a lost instrument. 53 C.J.S., Limitations of Actions, § 97, p. 1072. Neither plaintiffs nor defendants had any knowledge of their respective claims to the certificates of stock until notice was given by Tapo shortly prior to the filing of the complaint by plaintiffs. The parties are in identical positions. Neither has been harmed by the delay of the other.

5. Corporations Code, section 2483, reads: "The plaintiff shall set forth in a verified complaint all of the following:

"(a) The facts and circumstances relating to the loss or destruction of the certificate.

"(b) That he has not assigned, endorsed, transferred, hypothecated, or in any way disposed of the certificate except to a party defendant.

"(c) That he does not know of any person, firm, or corporation that claims or may claim any interest in the certificate who is not specifically named as a defendant.

"(d) A description of the certificate, giving so far as known the number of the certificate, the number of shares, and the name of any person in whose name the certificate may be registered."

Finally, plaintiffs claim the letter of December 4, 1912 is not an enforceable contract in that it violates the statute of frauds. It is said it does not state the price paid or to be paid. The claim is based on the erroneous premise that the statute of frauds is applicable.

[13, 14] During the time in question Civil Code, section 1624, read:

"The following contracts are invalid, unless the same, or some note or memorandum thereof, be in writing and subscribed by the party to be charged, or by his agent:

* * * * *

"Four—An agreement for the sale of goods, chattels, or things in action, at a price not less than two hundred dollars, *unless the buyer accept or receive part of such goods and chattels, or the evidences, or some of them, of such things in action, or pay at the time some part of the purchase money; * * " (Italics added.) Code Am. 1873-74, c. 612, p. 241, § 190.

This section expressly provides an exception where "the buyer * * * pay[s] at the time some part of the purchase money". Section 1624 has no application to an executed contract. Kreling v. Walsh, 77 Cal.App.2d 821, 832, 176 P.2d 965. Everything said by Stewart in his letter of December 4, 1912 evidences a fully executed, as distinguished from an executory, contract. He specifically said "I sold" 5,000 shares of Tapo stock to Conger. He said he had no shares in Tapo and had had "none since I made sale to Mr. Conger"; that the shares standing in his name "properly belong to Mr. E. L. Conger." He stated in effect that Tapo should "re-issue" the certificates to Conger. The statement that Conger had informed him he had not received the certificates clearly indicates Conger had paid the purchase price. There is nothing in the letter indicating the necessity of the performance of any act by Conger to complete the sale.

See Mills v. Jackson, 19 Cal.App. 695, 698, 127 P. 655; Rest. of Cont., §§ 178, 205. And the inference from the entries in the ledger is that Conger had paid Stewart $1,000 for the stock before the letter was written. The inference is also patent from the foregoing that Conger had accepted and assented to the passage of title to him. Civ.Code, § 1624a(3).

[15] It is argued the letter did not transfer title to Conger because it was not delivered to him. The letter is a confirmation of an earlier transfer of the shares from Stewart to Conger and, if necessary, a memorandum of what had transpired between them. Civil Code, section 1059, provides:

"Though a grant [which includes a transfer of shares of stock, (Civ.Code, §§ 1039, 1053)] be not actually delivered into the possession of the grantee, it is yet to be deemed constructively delivered in the following cases:

"1. Where the instrument is, by the agreement of the parties at the time of execution, understood to be delivered, and under such circumstances that the grantee is entitled to immediate delivery; or,

"2. Where it is delivered to a stranger for the benefit of the grantee, and his assent is shown, or may be presumed."

It appears from the letter it was understood by the parties that Tapo was to re-issue the shares in the name of Conger, and thus effect a delivery. And, further, the letter was delivered to Tapo for the benefit of Conger, since it may be inferred it was to issue the certificates and deliver them to Conger. These consequences follow, contrary to the argument of plaintiffs, notwithstanding the fact that at the time in question the statute imposed a stockholder's liability on the registered owner of corporate stock. It is not essential, as between the parties, to the transfer of shares of stock that the certificates be delivered. Young v. New Pedrara Onyx

Co., 48 Cal.App. 1, 17, 192 P. 55; Warfield v. Basso, 62 Cal.App. 47, 51, 216 P. 48. The cross-action is not barred by the statute of frauds.

Wallace H. LITTLE and Julia W. Little,
Defendants and Respondents.

Civ. 21469.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 1, California.

Sept. 17, 1956.

Hearing Denied Nov. 14, 1956.

Action for death of plaintiff's minor son by drowning as result of falling or jumping from diving board into private swimming pool on defendant's residential property. From a judgment of the Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Kurtz Kauffman, J., dismissing the action, plaintiffs appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Fourn, J., held that a swimming pool and diving board are not attractive nuisances, so that defendants were not liable under attractive nuisance doctrine.

Judgment affirmed.

Doran, J., dissented.

1. Negligence ⇨39

A swimming pool and diving board do not constitute "attractive nuisance", so that owners of residential property are not liable under attractive nuisance doctrine for death of 4½ year old boy by drowning after falling or jumping from diving board into private swimming pool on such property.

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Attractive Nuisance".

2. Negligence ⇨32(4), 33(3)

A child's tender age, rendering it incapable of looking out for its own safety, raises no duty not otherwise existing to such child, and responsibility for avoiding injury to child trespassing on defective or dangerous premises lies with child's parents or legal custodian rather than proprietor of such premises.

3. Negligence ⇨33(3)

A landowner owes no other duty to child trespassing on land than to adult trespasser thereon, in absence of circumstances bringing case under attractive nuisance doctrine.

4. Negligence ⇨23(1), 39

The attractive nuisance doctrine is exceptionally harsh rule of liability, which is not to be extended.

5. Negligence ⇨23(1)

To constitute "attractive nuisance," a contrivance must be artificial and uncommon, as well as dangerous.

6. Negligence ⇨23(1)

The owner of a thing dangerous and attractive to children is not always and universally liable for injury to child tempted by such attraction.

7. Death ⇨24

Negligence ⇨95(1)

Parent and Child ⇨7(1)

It is parents' duty to guard and warn their children against common dangers existing in order of nature, and parents failing to do so cannot hold others responsible for resulting injuries to or deaths of children.

8. Negligence ⇨39

A body of water, natural or artificial, is not "attractive nuisance" subjecting owner thereof to liability for deaths by drowning of trespassing children attracted thereto, as it is of common and ordinary nature.

9. Negligence ⇨23(1), 39

The primary duty to exercise care for infant's safety is on parents thereof, and their neglect will not convert into an attractive nuisance a dangerous situation which would not be so classed as to older children.

Moss, Lyon & Dunn, Charles B. Smith and Henry F. Walker, Los Angeles, for respondents.

FOURT, Justice.

Plaintiffs commenced an action to recover damages for the death of a minor son who fell into the private swimming pool on defendants' residential property. To an amended complaint the defendants demurred and the same was sustained with leave to amend. No amendment was made and judgment of dismissal was entered. This appeal is from the judgment of dismissal.

A fair résumé of the matters set forth in the amended complaint are as follows: On or about August 31, 1954, the swimming pool in question contained water to a depth of about nine feet at one end, with a diving board extending over the water. Small children played on the property adjacent to the property of the defendants. The pool and diving board could be seen by the children from the adjacent property and this was known to the defendants. On the date heretofore mentioned Christian McLean Wilford, the four and one-half year old son of plaintiffs, and some other small children, were attracted onto the property of the defendants by the diving board and pool. Christian McLean Wilford and one other small boy began to play upon the diving board which was similar to a see-saw or teeter-board in that it had an "up-and-down" motion when jumped upon. The pool was so constructed that it was difficult for a child to hold onto the sides of the pool. The boy and his companions were too young to appreciate the danger involved in playing on the diving board and in the pool. In the course of play the lad fell or jumped from the diving board into the water and drowned. Neither of the plaintiffs knew, nor had reason to know that there was a swimming pool in the neighborhood, or that the property of the defendants was not fenced or enclosed in any manner to keep children or others away from the pool. A fence or other enclosure could have been installed at a relatively small cost. It was then alleged that the defendants were negligent in not properly enclosing the pool and that this negligence resulted in the death of plaintiffs' son to their damage in the sum of $50,000, together with expenses in the sum of $992.06.

[1] It is appellants' contention that California has adopted the rule of law generally referred to as the "Attractive Nuisance Doctrine", or the "Rule of the Turntable Cases", as set forth in the Restatement of the Law of Torts, and cites as authority for such contention the case of Copfer v. Golden, 135 Cal.App.2d 623, 627-628, 288 P.2d 90, and the cases cited therein. It is our opinion, however, that a swimming pool and diving board is not an attractive nuisance as that term is generally used. The California Annotations to the Restatement of the Law of Torts contain the following language (at pages 141-142):

"§ 339. Artificial conditions highly dangerous to trespassing children

"* * * (b) Ponds or reservoirs: There is no liability for drowning of children in ponds or reservoirs under the attractive nuisance doctrine. (See a possible exception under the "siphon cases" infra.) Peters v. Bowman, 1896, 115 Cal. 345, 47 P. 113, 598, 56 Am.St.Rep. 106 is the leading decision. In this case the water collected on a vacant lot by reason of an embankment erected by the city in grading a street. Polk v. Laurel Hill Cemetery Ass'n, 1918, 37 Cal. App. 624, 174 P. 414, a child of eight drowned in an unguarded reservoir in a cemetery being used as a park. Reardon v. Spring Valley Water Co., 1924, 68 Cal.App. 13, 228 P. 406, a five year old boy drowned after a fall from a rowboat which was allowed to remain unfastened in a negligently guarded reservoir. The court refused to hold that the presence of the boat brought the case within the doctrine.

"(c) 'Siphon' cases: There are several decisions but in only one was the doctrine held applicable. (1) Sanchez v. East Contra Costa Irr. Co., 1928, 205 Cal. 515, 271 P. 1060. In the other two cases there is an obvious effort to pattern after the rules announced in this opinion. Plaintiff's son, aged five, was drowned in a canal when he fell into it after trying to wet his handkerchief. The body was found in a 'siphon' which carried the water under a cross stream. The court held that defendant had created a concealed danger in the nature of a trap (siphon) to those who lived close by, and one that could easily be guarded. (2) Melendez v. City of Los Angeles, 1937, 8 Cal.2d 741, 68 P.2d 971. The demurrer to the complaint was sustained and on appeal this action of the court was affirmed. The court cited and approved Restatement § 339 as an exception to the rule of nonliability but held the doctrine not applicable. The complaint alleged that plaintiff's two sons were drowned in a pool of water in a storm drain: One son, aged 11, was on a raft and fell into the water and into a deep hole concealed and unknown to him. The other son, aged 13, went to his rescue and was similarly drowned. The decision held that the deep hole was not an artificial contrivance of the possessor of the land and the precedent followed is Beeson v. City of Los Angeles, infra."

[2-4] In the recent case of Lake v. Ferrer, 139 Cal.App.2d 114, 293 P.2d 104, hearing denied in the Supreme Court, March 28, 1956, plaintiffs' son of two and one-half years was attracted to the defendant's swimming pool and trespassed upon the defendant's property, fell into the swimming pool and drowned. Plaintiff parents did not know of the pool's existence and had not been told of it. In the Lake case, the plaintiffs relied for authority upon section 339 of the Restatement of Torts and practically all of the cases cited in the instant case, plus several others. It was held that the attractive nuisance doctrine did not apply under allegations considerably stronger than those presented in the instant case. The court, among other things, said, 139 Cal.App.2d at page 117, 293 P.2d at page 105:

"* * * "The following from 38 American Jurisprudence 779 is applicable: 'The accepted view is that the tender age of a child, rendering it incapable of looking out for its own safety, does not raise a duty where none otherwise exists. * * * It is said that the responsibility for avoiding injury to a trespassing child from defective or dangerous premises lies with the parent or legal custodian of the child rather than with the proprietor of the premises.' In 19 California Jurisprudence 624 a similar statement occurs: 'In the absence of circumstances which bring a case under the attractive nuisance doctrine, it is said that an owner of land owes no other duty to a child who is trespassing * * * than he owes to an adult trespasser.'"" * * * It is pointed out that, 'Our courts hold the attractive nuisance doctrine is an exceptionally harsh rule of liability and is not to be extended. As expressed in Whalen v. Streshley, 205 Cal. 78, 81 (269 p. 928, 929, 60 A.L.R. 445): 'Unless the case falls within the doctrine of the turntable cases—a doctrine which this court and others have refused to extend—the plaintiff may not recover, and we are of the opinion that there is no analogy between those cases and the instant one. In the case of Peters v. Bowman, 115 Cal. 345, 47 P. 113, 598, this court refused to extend the rule of the turntable cases to a pond of water, and characterized that rule as an exceptionally harsh rule of liability.'""

[5] There are several elements to the doctrine of attractive nuisance in this state. The contrivance must be artificial and uncommon, as well as dangerous, Hernandez v. Santiago O. G. Ass'n, 10 Cal.App. 229, 233, 293 P. 875, and as held in Doyle v. Pacific Elec. Ry. Co., 6 Cal.2d 550, 552-553, 59 P.2d 93, 94:

"* * * Thus in Loftus v. Dehaif, 133 Cal. 214, 218, 65 P. 379, 380, it was said by this court: 'But it by no means follows, as has been said, that anything or everything which a jury may find or a court may determine to be attractive as a playground or plaything for children casts a responsibility of guard and care upon the owner of that thing. Moving street cars and moving vehicles upon the street are irresistibly attractive to many children, and thousands daily imperil their lives by climbing on and off of them while in motion. Venturesome boys and even girls make playgrounds of unfinished buildings, climb perilous heights, and scamper over insecure boards and rafters. If an owner became responsible merely because children were attracted, it would burden the ownership of property with a most preposterous and unbearable weight.'

"* * * There is nothing uncommon about a ladder. * * * The ladder was dangerous, but it was not uncommon, * * *"

[6,7] In Peters v. Bowman, 115 Cal. 345, 355, 47 P. 113, 598, 599, the court said:

"A turntable is not only a danger specially created by the act of the owner but it is a danger of a different kind to those which exist in the order of nature. A pond, although artificially created, is in nowise different from those natural ponds and streams, which exist everywhere, * * *. A pond cannot be rendered inaccessible to boys by any ordinary means. Certainly no ordinary fence around the lot upon which a pond is situated would answer the purpose; and therefore, to make it safe, it must either be filled or drained, or, in other words, destroyed. * * * The owner of a thing dangerous and attractive to children is not always and universally liable for an injury to a child tempted by the attraction. * * * As to common dangers, existing in the order of nature, it is the duty of parents to guard and warn their children, and, failing to do so, they should not expect to hold others responsible for their own want of care. * * *"

[8] Courts in California have held repeatedly that a body of water, natural or artificial, is not such a thing as may be held to constitute an attractive nuisance. It may be attractive to children but it is also of a common and ordinary nature of that which is to be found anywhere. Polk v. Laurel Hill Cemetery Ass'n, 37 Cal.App. 624, 634, 174 P. 414; Reardon v. Spring Valley Water Co., 68 Cal.App. 13, 228 P. 406; Peters v. Bowman, supra, 115 Cal. 345, 269 P. 928; King v. Simons Brick Co., 52 Cal.App.2d 586, 126 P.2d 627; Demmer v. City of Eureka, 78 Cal.App.2d 708, 178 P.2d 472; Betts v. City & County of San Francisco, 108 Cal.App.2d 701, 239 P.2d 456; Ward v. Oakley Co., 125 Cal.App.2d 840, 271 P.2d 536. In the Ward case, affirming a judgment based on the sustaining of a demurrer to the complaint without leave to amend, it was stated, 125 Cal.App.2d at page 845, 271 P.2d at page 540:

"It is settled that a body of water, natural or artificial, does not constitute an attractive nuisance which will subject the owner to liability for trespassing children who are attracted thereto and are drowned. [Citing cases.]"

Appellants here have advanced an argument very similar to that presented in the case of Meyer v. General Electric Company, 46 Wash.2d 251, 280 P.2d 257. In the Washington case plaintiffs' two year and eight months old child trespassed onto defendant's premises and was drowned when he fell into an artificial ditch on said premises. In reversing a judgment for the plaintiff, the court said, 280 P.2d at pages 258-259:

"The deceased infant's age eliminates any question of contributory negligence, and we are not concerned with the ordinary duty of care of an owner of property toward a known trespasser. The defendant is not liable unless the doctrine of attractive nuisance applies.

* * * * *

"This state adheres to the attractive nuisance doctrine. However, our question is: Under what circumstances will a watercourse constitute an attractive nuisance?"

"It is the weight of authority that a natural watercourse is not an attractive nuisance."

sance, and that an artificial one is not if it has natural characteristics. * * *

"* * * It was not unnaturally dangerous, had no element of deception or of an inextricable trap, and, in fact, presented no danger by reason of being artificial that was different in any way from that of a natural watercourse. We hold, as a matter of law, that it was not an attractive nuisance.

* * * * *

[9] "The presence of danger to an unattended infant is not necessarily a test of anything but the need of parental care. An infant is afraid of nothing and in danger of everything when left to his own devices. The primary duty of care is upon the parents of an infant. [Citing case.] Their neglect will not convert a situation admittedly dangerous to an infant into an attractive nuisance which would not be so classed as to older children."

The judgment is affirmed.

v.

CITY OF LOS ANGELES, a municipal

Respondents.

Civ. 21993.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 1, California.

Sept. 21, 1956.

Hearing Denied Nov. 14, 1956.

Action against a city. From a judgment of the Superior Court, Los Angeles County, for defendant and minute orders of such court denying plaintiff's motions for a new trial and to vacate judgment, plaintiff appealed. On defendant's motion to dismiss the appeals, the District Court of Appeal, Nourse, J. pro tem., held that notice of appeal from judgment, filed over 60 days after entry of judgment, was too late, that notice of intention to move for new trial, filed 10 days before filing of superior court's fact findings and conclusions of law, was a nullity and could not extend time for appeal from judgment, that notice to vacate judgment, filed over 60 days after entry thereof, did not extend time for notice of appeal therefrom, and that minute orders were not appealable.

Motions granted.

1. Appeal and Error ⇨351(1)

A notice of appeal from judgment, filed over 60 days after entry of judgment, was too late, in absence of extension of time for filing of such notice under rule on appeal. West's Ann.Rules on Appeal, rule 3(a).

2. Appeal and Error ⇨345(1)

New Trial ⇨117(2)

A notice of intention to move for new trial, filed by plaintiff ten days before filing of Superior Court's fact findings and conclusions of law, was a nullity and could not extend time for appeal from judgment for defendant, though defendant treated notice as proper and court purported to act on it. West's Ann.Rules on Appeal, rule 3(a).

3. Appeal and Error ⇨345(1)

A notice, filed by plaintiff over 60 days after entry of judgment for defendant, to vacate it, was ineffectual if treated as motion for new trial to extend time for notice of appeal from judgment. West's Ann.Rules on Appeal, rule 3(a).

4. Appeal and Error ⇨110, 113(1)

Superior Court's minute orders, denying plaintiff's motion for new trial and motion to vacate judgment for defendant were not appealable. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc., § 963.

5. Appeal and Error ⇨653(1)

Plaintiff's application to District Court of Appeal for order directing Superior Court clerk to permit plaintiff to file amended notice to prepare transcript after dismissal of plaintiff's appeal from judgment for defendant need not be considered by District Court of Appeal. West's Ann. Rules on Appeal, rule 4.

Marie Arthur, in pro. per.

Roger Arnebergh, City Atty., Edwin F. Shinn, Deputy City Atty., Los Angeles, for respondents.

NOURSE, Justice pro tem.

Plaintiff has appealed from a judgment rendered in favor of the defendant City of Los Angeles, from a minute order denying her motion for a new trial, and from a minute order denying her motion to vacate the judgment appealed from. Defendants and respondents have moved to dismiss the appeal from the judgment upon the ground that the notice of appeal was not filed within time, and to dismiss the appeals from the two orders mentioned upon the grounds that they are not appealable orders.

Each of the motions to dismiss must be granted.

The findings of fact and conclusions of law and the judgment appealed from were filed January 6, 1956, and the judgment was entered on January 10.

Plaintiff's notice of intention to move for a new trial was served and filed on December 27, 1955. Her so-called notice of intention to vacate the judgment was filed on March 12, 1956, or 61 days after the entry of the judgment.

[1] Her notice of appeal was not filed until June 12, 1956.

The time within which plaintiff was entitled to file a notice of appeal from the judgment entered against her expired on March 10, 1956, unless that time was extended under the provisions of rule 3(a) of the Rules on Appeal.

[2] The notice of intention to move for a new trial was filed on December 27, 1955, or ten days before the findings of fact and the conclusions of law were made and filed. This notice was therefore "a nullity and ineffectual for any purpose" and could not extend the time within which appellant might appeal from the judgment. It was not given vitality by reason of the fact that the defendant treated it as a proper notice or by reason of the fact that the court purported to act upon it, Tabor v. Superior Court, 28 Cal.2d 505, 507, 170 P.2d 667.

[3] Plaintiff's notice to vacate the judgment, which was filed on March 12, 1956, if treated as a motion for new trial was ineffectual to extend the time within which she might give notice of appeal from the judgment inasmuch as it was not filed within 60 days after the entry of the judgment, rule 3(a), Rules on Appeal.

[5] Appellant has applied to this court for an order directing the clerk of the superior court to permit her to file an amended notice to the clerk to prepare a transcript under rule 4 of the Rules on Appeal. Inasmuch as her appeal from the judgment must be dismissed, her application need not be further considered by us.

The motions of respondents to dismiss the appeals from the judgment, from the order denying appellant's motion for a new trial, and from the order denying her motion to vacate the judgment, are granted.

LACHMILLER ENGINEERING COMPANY, a California corporation, Defendant and Appellant.

Civ. 21696.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 2, California.
Sept. 20, 1956.

Proceeding upon motion to discharge attachment. The Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Jerold E. Weil, J., denied motion on condition that certain substituted bond be posted, and that levy would be released on certain property. Defendant appealed from order. The District Court of Appeal, Fox, J., held that where attachment bond was insufficient because authority of agent, who signed bond for surety, was limited to amount less than amount of bond, and plaintiff, on hearing on defendant's motion to discharge attachment, agreed to release defendant's business, and that only defendant's bank account would remain subject to attachment, and to replace bond with new one in amount equal to 10% of amount of claim, court properly allowed plaintiff to post such substituted bond.

Order affirmed.

1. Principal and Agent ⇨155(2)

Where authority of attorney in fact who executed $21,000 attachment bond in behalf of surety was limited to $10,000, and limitation of agent's authority was matter of record, principal was bound to extent of $10,000. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 2333.

2. Attachment ⇨136

Where surety was bound to extent of $10,000 on $21,000 attachment bond executed by his agent, whose authority to execute bond was limited to $10,000, attachment bond was not void, and could be amended upon other party's motion to discharge attachment. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 2333; West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc., § 558.

3. Attachment ⇨137

Where attachment bond was insufficient because authority of agent, who signed bond for surety, was limited to amount less than amount of bond, and plaintiff, on hearing on defendant's motion to discharge attachment, agreed to release defendant's business, and that only defendant's bank account would remain subject to attachment, and to replace bond with new one in amount equal to 10 per cent of amount of plaintiff's claim, court properly allowed plaintiff to post such substituted bond. William A. Sherwin, Richards D. Barger, Los Angeles, for appellant.

FOX, Justice.

Defendant appeals from that part of an order which denied its motion to discharge an attachment.

Plaintiff brought this action to recover for services rendered and on two promissory notes in the total amount of $30,652.79. He caused a writ of attachment to be issued and levied on defendant's place of business (and a keeper put in charge) and on its bank account of approximately $14,000. He posted a bond in the amount of $21,000 executed by a corporate surety. The authority, however, of the attorney in fact who signed the bond on behalf of the surety was limited to $10,000. The limitation of the agent's authority was a matter of record. Upon discovery of this information defendant moved to discharge the writ of attachment on the ground, inter alia, that it was "improperly and irregularly" issued in that the person who executed the document was without authority to sign a bond in that amount. At the hearing on defendant's motion, plaintiff proposed to release all property under attachment except the bank account and to replace the bond with a new one in the amount of $3,065.28, being 10 percent of the amount of plaintiff's claim. The court thereupon denied the motion to discharge the attachment on condition a bond in the sum of $3,065.28 be posted forthwith and the levy immediately released on everything except the bank account. The condition was complied with by plaintiff. It is from the order denying its motion to discharge the attachment that defendant appeals.

[1,2] Defendant's position is that "the purported bond filed herein was void because the person pretending to act for the bonding company had no authority to do so" and that "the undertaking being void it cannot be amended because it never existed." In arguing that the initial bond was void defendant overlooks the provisions of section 2333 of the Civil Code, which provides that "When an agent exceeds his authority, his principal is bound by his authorized acts so far only as they can be plainly separated from those which are unauthorized." In this matter the agent was expressly authorized to sign bonds up to $10,000. He was not, however, authorized to execute bonds beyond that amount. It is thus obvious that his authorized act can be "plainly separated" from his unauthorized act; and that since he was authorized to execute a bond up to $10,000 the principal was bound to that extent under the quoted code section. See Walker v. Peake, 153 S.C. 257, 150 S.E. 756, and cases there collected; also, Wilson v. Beardsley, 20 Neb. 449, 30 N.W. 529; and Guaranty Trust Co. of New York v. Koehler, 8 Cir., 195 F. 669. It therefore follows that the bond was not void, and was subject to amendment under the provisions of section 558, Code of Civil Procedure.¹

Actually, however, what transpired in this case was not an amendment of the bond but rather the substitution of another and different bond. After hearing the matter, the trial judge concluded that since the business was to be released and only the bank account remain subject to the writ a bond in an amount equal to 10 percent of plaintiff's claim would be adequate protection to defendant.

[3] The posting of a substituted bond was entirely proper. Section 1057, Code of Civil Procedure, provides that whenever an undertaking has been given in any action and it is thereafter made to appear to the court that any surety on such undertaking is insufficient, the court may order the giving of a new undertaking. The principle of posting a substitute bond was sustained in Poswa v. Brittain, 4 Cal.App.2d 554, 41 P.2d 345. The principle was also recognized in Bone v. Trafton, 31 Cal.App. 30, 159 P. 819, which was an attachment case. At page 32 of 31 Cal.App., at page 820 of 159 P., the court stated "* * * there is ample authority holding that, where a statute permits the correction of an original undertaking, or the substitution of a new one, it has the effect of validating the proceeding from its inception." (Emphasis added.)

Defendant relies on Alexander v. Superior Court, 91 Cal.App. 312, 266 P. 993, and Fairbanks, Morse & Co. v. Getchell, 13 Cal.App. 458, 110 P. 331. Neither of these cases is applicable in the instant matter. In the Alexander case the plaintiffs in the attachment proceeding undertook to become their own sureties on the attachment bond. Such a purported undertaking was a nullity, and there was nothing to amend. The court pointed out, 91 Cal.App. at page 316, 266 P. at page 994, that "no effort was made to execute an undertaking with sureties. Had an undertaking irregular in form been filed, we would have been presented with an entirely different problem, and one which the amendment to section 558, Code of Civil Procedure, was intended to reach." In the Getchell case the affidavit

1. Section 558, Code of Civil Procedure, reads: "If upon such application, it satisfactorily appears that the writ of attachment was improperly or irregularly issued it must be discharged; provided that such attachment shall not be discharged if at or before the hearing of such application, the writ of attachment, or the affidavit, or undertaking upon which such attachment was based shall be amended and made to conform to the provisions of this chapter."

for the attachment was void. Being so, the court held it was not subject to amendment under section 558. As we have pointed out above, the bond in the instant case was not void. The situation, therefore, could be corrected by either an amendment or the substitution of a new bond.

The order is affirmed.

Cr. 5516.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 1, California.
Sept. 17, 1956.

Defendant was convicted of burglary and grand theft. From judgment and sentence of the Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Thomas L. Ambrose, J., defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Fourth, J., held that the evidence was sufficient to establish the corpus delicti and that convictions were supported by substantial evidence.

Appeal from sentence dismissed and judgment affirmed.

1. Criminal Law ☞563

A prima facie showing that alleged act was the result of a criminal agency is all that is required to establish the corpus delicti, which need not be established by evidence as clear and convincing as that necessary to establish guilt.

2. Criminal Law ☞552(1)

Criminal intent may be demonstrated by the circumstances and facts shown in evidence.

3. Burglary ☞41(2)

Larceny ☞56

Evidence that warehouse window had been broken and that tires and wheels of a value in excess of statutory requirement for grand theft, had been taken from warehouse without the knowledge or consent of owner and sold to a dealer was sufficient to establish the corpus delicti in prosecution for burglary and grand theft. West's Ann.Pen.Code, §§ 459, 487, subd. 1.

4. Criminal Law ☞409

Where the corpus delicti had been established by prima facie proof, extrajudicial admissions allegedly made to police officer, freely and voluntarily, by defendant, realizing to whom he was speaking, were admissible in prosecution for burglary and grand theft. West's Ann.Pen.Code, §§ 459, 487, subd. 1.

5. Burglary ☞41(1)

Larceny ☞55

That stolen tires had been sold by defendant to dealer at less than their value was evidence of defendant's guilt in prosecution for burglary and grand theft. West's Ann.Pen.Code, §§ 459, 487, subd. 1.

6. Criminal Law ☞1023(10)

An appeal does not lie from a sentence.

FOURT, Justice.

This is an appeal by the defendant Ennis "on all statutes taken from the judgment of the Superior Court in and for The County of Los Angeles Department 43, the Honorable Judge Ambrose, Presiding taken from the sentence imposed this day of July 19, 1955."

"Appellant deposes and says that he is a pauper, without funds and wishes to be excluded from the cost of the above said transcripts and any legal data pertaining to this case."

Present counsel for the defendant was appointed by this court.

An information was filed May 24, 1955, in the Superior Court of the State of California charging appellant, Patrick William Ennis, and his codefendant, Carl Selby, with two counts of burglary in violation of section 459 of the Penal Code, and in count 3 with grand theft in violation of section 487, subd. 1, Penal Code, a felony. As to appellant, the information also charged four prior felony convictions.

Appellant entered a plea of not guilty and denied the prior convictions alleged in the information. On June 22, 1955, trial was had, and at such time it was stipulated between the parties that the People's case in chief might be entered upon testimony and evidence as submitted at the preliminary hearing, all stipulations entered into by the parties at the time of the preliminary hearing to be deemed entered into for the purpose of the trial, and each party reserving the right to offer additional testimony. Appellant and his co-defendant, with counsel present, were found guilty as to counts 2 and 3. Appellant then admitted the four prior convictions as alleged. Count 1 was dismissed. A probation officer's report was ordered and filed and the appellant was sentenced to the state prison for the term prescribed by law, the sentences to run concurrently.

A substantial résumé of the facts is as follows. On May 2, 1955, a window was discovered broken at the warehouse of Howard F. Ward, Incorporated. At the same time, it was noticed that a stack of tires located near the broken window was greatly diminished. On May 4, 1955, Howard K. Ward, an owner of Howard F. Ward, Incorporated, went to the address of Don McCready, where he identified a quantity of tires and wheels as being the property of Howard F. Ward, Incorporated. These tires were identified by the name of the particular Eastern manufacturer and by means of government chalk marks on the wheels.

On several occasions the codefendant, Carl Selby, accompanied by the appellant, Patrick Ennis, had sold a quantity of tires and wheels to Don McCready, who owned and operated McCready's Service Center. On April 27, 1955, McCready gave Selby a check for $85 in payment of a quantity of tires and wheels. Again on April 28, 1955, McCready gave Selby a check for $52 in payment for a quantity of tires and wheels. On a third instance, April 29, 1955, another payment for tires and wheels in the amount of $95 was made to Selby. At the time of the transactions enumerated, both Selby and appellant were present, both having taken the tires to the McCready place of business.

The appellant admitted to Roy M. Saunders, a Los Angeles police officer, that he had broken a window of the warehouse, that he had climbed in the window and handed the tires out to Selby, and that they had taken these tires to the McCready Service Center. The appellant admitted entering the warehouse and taking eight or ten tires on as many as seven or eight occasions.

The appellant testified that he had merely aided Selby in transporting the tires and wheels from the residence of Selby to McCready's Service Center. He further testified that it was his impression that Selby had come into possession of the tires through Selby's brother. The appellant also denied knowledge of his making any admission regarding his entering the burglarized premises, or knowledge that the property was taken from the warehouse of Howard F. Ward, Incorporated.

It is appellant's contention that there was a failure to establish or prove the corpus delicti of either burglary or grand theft, and that the admissions or confession of the appellant were made while he was not conscious of what he was saying, being then and there afflicted with the illness of delirium tremens.

[1] The corpus delicti need not be established by evidence as clear and convincing as that necessary to establish guilt. A prima facie showing that the alleged act was the result of a criminal agency is all that is required. People v. Van Scoyoc, 25 Cal.App.2d 416, 77 P.2d 485; People v. Wiesel, 39 Cal.App.2d 657, 664, 104 P.2d 70. As stated in People v. Seymour, 54 Cal.App.2d 266, at page 275, 128 P.2d 726, at page 731: "* * * It is also well settled that slight or prima facie proof of the corpus delicti is all that is necessary. * * *

[2,3] In the case before us evidence was submitted to show that the window was discovered broken at the warehouse on or about May 2, 1955, that tires and wheels belonging to the company were found at the premises of McCready's Service Center, and that property was taken from the warehouse without the knowledge or consent of the owners. Intent may be demonstrated by the circumstances and facts shown in evidence. People v. Ross, 105 Cal.App.2d 235, 233 P.2d 68; People v. Turley, 119 Cal.App.2d 632, 259 P.2d 724; People v. Smith, 84 Cal.App.2d 509, 190 P.2d 941. It was further established that sixty-two tires were recovered by the victim, approximately half of the tires being mounted on wheels; also, that payment was made by McCready for fifty tires and that twenty-one tires also delivered were not paid for. There was further testimony that the tires were of the value of $15 each, and the value of each wheel was $4 or $5. It is immediately apparent that the property was taken without the knowledge or consent of the owners, and that such property was of a value in excess of the statutory requirement for grand theft.

[4] The officer testified that he had a conversation with the appellant about 11:30 o'clock in the morning of May 5, 1955; that the statements made by the appellant were freely and voluntarily given; that he was coherent and realized who he was talking to. The corpus delicti having been established by prima facie proof, the extrajudicial admissions were admissible as the People's evidence. Thereupon it was testified that the appellant had said that he had broken the window to the warehouse; that he had climbed in the window and handed the tires out to Selby, and that they had then taken the tires to Don McCready's Service Center, and that this course had been followed several times.

[5] The tires were sold to McCready for $5 per tire, with the exception of one, which was sold for $7. The appellant himself indicated that he was aware that the tires were sold quite a bit below the retail price. The fact that the tires were sold below value is evidence to show the guilt of the defendant. People v. Von Moltke, 118 Cal.App. 568, 571, 5 P.2d 917.

[6] An appeal does not lie from a sentence.

[7] We are of the conclusion that the corpus delicti was amply established by the People, and further, that there was substantial evidence to support the finding of guilt by the trial court.

The purported appeal from the sentence is dismissed, and the judgment is affirmed.

The District Court of Appeal has discretion to extend time within which appellant must pay fees to clerk, and to deny motion to dismiss appeal because of failure to pay fees of clerk within statutory time. West's Ann.Rules on Appeal, rules 4, 5 and subd. (c).

7. Appeal and Error ⇨371

Where appellant had acted upon order of Superior Court extending her time to pay fees to clerk for more than 90 days, though superior court lacked power to grant extension, in view of discretion of District Court of Appeal to extend that time and to deny motion to dismiss appeal upon that ground, court would exercise discretion to allow appeal to be heard upon its merits. NOURSE, Justice pro tem.

Plaintiff and appellant has appealed from an order of the superior court granting the defendant's motion to stay further proceedings and prohibiting the entry of a final judgment of divorce after the expiration of one year from the entry of the interlocutory decree adjudicating that appellant was entitled to divorce from respondent.

Respondent has moved to dismiss this appeal on four grounds: (1) that the order appealed from is not appealable; (2) that the notice of appeal was not timely; (3) that the superior court was powerless to extend the appellant's time to pay the fees of the clerk beyond ninety days; and (4) that the fees of the clerk were not paid within the time required by rule 5(c) of the Rules on Appeal.

We have reached the conclusion that the motion to dismiss the appeals should be denied.

The relevant facts are:

On November 16, 1954, an interlocutory decree of divorce was entered whereby it was decreed that appellant was entitled to a divorce from respondent and which further awarded the custody of the minor child to the plaintiff and required the defendant to support that child. It also awarded certain community property to appellant.

On November 9, 1955, respondent served and filed a notice of motion for an order to stay further proceedings in the action and to prohibit the entry of a final decree of divorce.

On November 17, 1955, the court granted this motion and its order was entered in the minutes on November 21, 1955. The order did not require the preparation or filing of any further order.

On January 20, 1956—that is, on the sixtieth day after the entry of the order in the minutes of the court—appellant filed her notice of appeal from that order.

On January 30, 1956, appellant served and filed her request for transcript pursuant to rules 4 and 5 of the Rules on Appeal. On February 20, 1956, the clerk gave to appellant a notice designating the estimated cost of the preparation of the clerk's transcript. On February 29, an order was made permitting appellant to file a settled statement of the oral proceedings, this statement to be served and filed on or before March 12, 1956, the time for settlement to be fixed by the trial judge, and the time to fix and deposit clerk's fees for transcript was extended to ten days following the date upon which the transcript was settled.

On April 4 the proposed settled statement was filed, and on May 18 the engrossed settled statement of oral proceedings was filed. On June 20, 1956, an order was made for additions to the transcript on appeal (the clerk's certificate filed with this court does not state whether these additions were to the clerk's transcript or were additions to the engrossed settled statement).

On July 2, 1956, the court made an order extending appellant's time to pay the fees of the clerk to August 1.

Is the order appealed from an appealable order?

[1,2] This question must be answered in the affirmative. It must be so answered for two reasons. The interlocutory decree of divorce was a final judgment insofar as it adjudicated the right of appellant to a divorce from respondent, Suttman v. Superior Court, 174 Cal. 243, 244, 162 P. 1032; Claudius v. Melvin, 146 Cal. 257, 79 P. 897; In re O'Connell, 80 Cal.App. 126, 130, 251 P. 661, and the order here appealed from was a special order made after that final judgment, affecting appellant's rights under that judgment. It is therefore made one of the orders as to which section 963, subdivision 2, Code of Civil Procedure, grants the right of appeal.

[3] Further than this, the order in question is, in effect, itself a final judgment, for it terminated the action as between the parties. Under that order no final decree of divorce could be entered and therefore it could not be reviewed on an appeal from a judgment. It was therefore appealable as a final judgment under paragraph 1 of section 963, Code of Civil Procedure. Zoller v. McDonald, 23 Cal. 136; De la Montanya v. De la Montanya, 112 Cal. 101, 119, 44 P. 345, 32 L.R.A. 82; Dollenmayer v. Pry- or, 150 Cal. 1, 3, 87 P. 616; Hibernia Sav. & Loan Soc. v. Ellis Estate Co., 216 Cal. 280, 282, 13 P.2d 929; Cugat v. Cugat, 102 Cal.App.2d 760, 762, 228 P.2d 31; Valentin v. Valentin, 93 Cal.App.2d 588, 592, 209 P.2d 654.

Was the notice of appeal timely?

[4] This question must also be answered in the affirmative. The certificate of the clerk which constitutes the record before us states that the order was entered on November 21, 1955. We understand this to mean that that was the date of the entry in the permanent minutes of the court. Plaintiff's time to file her notice of appeal did not commence to run until such entry, rule 2(b) of the Rules on Appeal, and inasmuch as her notice of appeal was filed on the sixtieth day after that entry, it was timely.

The other two points made by appellant may be considered together.

[5] It was beyond the power of the superior court to extend the appellant's time to pay the fees of the clerk for more than ninety days, and therefore the court could not here extend appellant's time to pay these fees beyond May 30, 1956.

[6, 7] The appellant, however, acted upon the orders of the court extending her time beyond that date; and as it is within our discretion to further extend that time and to deny the motion to dismiss the appeal because of the failure to pay the fees of the clerk within the statutory time, we exercise that discretion to the end that the appeal may be heard upon its merits.

The motion to dismiss the appeal is denied provided that within ten days after the filing of this opinion the appellant pays to the clerk of the superior court the fees designated by him for the preparation of the clerk's transcript on appeal and files with the clerk of this court the receipt of the clerk of the superior court for such payment. If such be not filed within said time, then the appeal is dismissed without further opinion.

Jose Angel MENDEZ, Defendant and Appellant.

Cr. 5630.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 1, California.

Sept. 18, 1956.

Defendant, who had been convicted of possession of a preparation of heroin, filed a motion in the nature of a petition for writ of error coram nobis to vacate or set aside the judgment. The Superior Court of Los Angeles County, David Coleman, J., entered an order denying the motion, and the defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Fount, J., held that motion was properly denied.

Order affirmed.

1. Criminal Law §997(16)

Where defendant, on motion in the nature of a petition for writ of error coram nobis to vacate or set aside judgment, did not present by affidavit or other proof any matter in support of charges contained in motion, and defendant stated no ground for relief requested, court was justified in denying the motion without a hearing. West's Ann.Health & Safety Code, § 11500.

2. Criminal Law §997(1)

A motion in the nature of a petition for writ of error coram nobis to vacate or set aside a judgment is a remedy of narrow scope, and the function of such a motion is to secure relief, where no other remedy exists, from a judgment rendered while there existed some fact which would have prevented its rendition if it had been known to the trial court and which, through no negligence or fault of defendant, was not brought forward before the rendition of judgment.

3. Criminal Law §997(2)

On motion in the nature of a petition for writ of error coram nobis to vacate or set aside a judgment, relief does not lie for errors cognizable by appeal from the judgment or an order denying a motion for a new trial.

4. Criminal Law §997(6)

A motion in the nature of a petition for writ of error coram nobis to vacate or set aside a judgment does not lie to correct errors of law made at the trial.

5. Criminal Law §997(11)

Applicant for a motion in the nature of a petition for writ of error coram nobis to vacate or set aside a judgment must show that facts upon which he relies were not known to him and could not, in exercise of due diligence, have been discovered by him at any time substantially earlier than time of his motion for the writ.

6. Criminal Law §997(4)

Alleged fact that evidence introduced against defendant at the trial of prosecution for possession of a preparation of heroin was illegally obtained was not ground for relief in the nature of a writ of error coram nobis. West's Ann.Health & Safety Code, § 11500.

7. Criminal Law §997(5)

Alleged denial of effective aid of counsel to defendant in prosecution for possession of a preparation of heroin could not be raised in a proceeding in the nature of a petition for writ of error coram nobis. West's Ann.Health & Safety Code, § 11500.

8. Criminal Law §997(2)

A motion in the nature of a petition for writ of error coram nobis to vacate or set aside a judgment does not lie to redress any irregularity occurring at the trial, if the irregularity could have been corrected by a motion for new trial or by appeal.

9. Criminal Law §997(4)

Charge that there was insufficiency of evidence and failure to prove the corpus delicti in prosecution for possession of a preparation of heroin did not state matter within scope of motion in the nature of a petition for writ of error coram nobis to vacate or set aside a judgment. West's Ann.Health & Safety Code, § 11500.

10. Criminal Law §997(11)

On motion in the nature of a petition for writ of error coram nobis to vacate or set aside a judgment, the mere naked allegation that a constitutional right of defendant in prosecution for possession of heroin had been invaded would not suffice. West's Ann.Health & Safety Code, § 11500.

11. Criminal Law §997(11)

Application in the nature of a petition for writ of error coram nobis to vacate or set aside a judgment should make a full disclosure of the specific facts relied on and not merely state conclusions as to the nature and effect of such facts.

12. Criminal Law §997(15)

On motion in the nature of a petition for writ of error coram nobis to vacate or set aside a judgment, it is not necessary for the trial judge to accept as true any statement contained in defendant's affidavits in support of the motion.

13. Criminal Law §997(16)

Question whether motion in the nature of a petition for writ of error coram nobis to vacate or set aside judgment was to be followed by a hearing appropriate to the issues raised was entirely within the discretion of the trial court.

FOURT, Justice.

This is an appeal from an order denying defendant's motion to annul, vacate and set aside a judgment.

In an information filed by the District Attorney of Los Angeles county, the defendant was charged with violation of section 11500 of the Health and Safety Code and it was alleged that on or about October 13, 1954, defendant had in his possession a preparation of heroin. Four prior convictions were also alleged in the information. Defendant was duly arraigned and entered a plea of not guilty and denied the prior convictions as alleged. Thereafter, the defendant, the district attorney and defense counsel waived trial by jury, and by stipulation the People's case was submitted on the preliminary transcript. Exhibits were introduced and the defendant testified in his own behalf. When the matter was submitted, the court adjudged the defendant guilty as charged. It was stipulated that the prior convictions could be determined from the probation report.

Subsequently, the first and second priors having been dismissed, the third and fourth priors (violations of the Deadly Weapons Control Act, Pen.Code, § 12000 et seq. and the State Narcotic Act, Health and Safety Code, § 11000 et seq.) were found to be true. Probation was denied and defendant was sentenced to the state prison for the term prescribed by law. Judgment was entered January 14, 1955. No appeal was taken from the judgment.

On or about August 2, 1955, a motion to annul, vacate and set aside the judgment was filed.

The defendant stated that the grounds for the motion were: (1) that the trial court violated defendant's constitutional rights when it sanctioned and failed to "provide relief for the police action of forcefully, illegally, and without warrant, breaking-in the door, entering and searching petitioner's domicile"; (2) that the court denied defendant "due process and equal protection of law" when it "convicted the petitioner without proving the corpus delicti beyond a reasonable doubt"; and (3) that defendant was denied due process and equal protection by not being represented by or having effective and adequate legal counsel.

On August 3, 1955, the motion to annul, vacate and set aside the judgment was denied. There were other proceedings taken and disposed of in Mendez v. Superior Court, 137 Cal.App.2d 465, 290 P.2d 270, with which we are not concerned at this time.

Defendant contends now that a full hearing should have been accorded him on his application. Respondent contends that the appellant did not state any ground entitling him to the requested relief; that he was accorded a hearing and that the court properly denied his application.

[1] On the appeal presented to this court the defendant claims that the court denied him due process of law when it denied his motion to annul, vacate and set aside the judgment, contending that he should have had a hearing on his motion. The defendant did not present by affidavit or other proof any matter in support of the charges contained in his motion. Defendant further stated no ground for the relief requested, and the court was, in our opinion, justified in denying the motion without a hearing. People v. Croft, 134 Cal.App.2d 800, 802, 286 P.2d 479.

[2] Our examination of the record in this case reveals that the defendant has misconceived the scope of the requested relief. A motion to vacate or set aside a judgment in the nature of a petition for writ of error coram nobis is a remedy of narrow scope. The function of such an application is to secure relief, where no other remedy exists, from a judgment rendered while there existed some fact which would have prevented its rendition if it had been known to the trial court and which, through no negligence or fault of the defendant, was not brought forward before the rendition of judgment. People v. Gennaitte, 127 Cal. App.2d 544, 548, 274 P.2d 169.

[3] It is well settled that such relief does not lie for errors cognizable by appeal from the judgment or order denying a motion for a new trial. People v. Adamson, 34 Cal.2d 320, 326, 327, 328, 210 P.2d 13.

[4, 5] As was said in People v. Ayala, 138 Cal.App.2d 243, 245-246, 291 P.2d 517, 518: "It would be a salutary thing if the applicants for this writ could be made to understand its narrow scope. It does not lie to correct errors of law made at the trial. * * * The applicant for the writ 'must show that the facts upon which he relies were not known to him and could not in the exercise of due diligence have been discovered by him at any time substantially earlier than the time of his motion for the writ; otherwise he has stated no ground for relief.””

[6] One of the alleged or claimed grounds of the defendant is that the evidence introduced against him at the trial was illegally obtained. This is not a ground for relief in the nature of a writ of error coram nobis.

[7] Likewise, it is well established that a claim of denial of effective aid of counsel may not be raised in a proceeding in the nature of a petition for writ of error coram nobis. People v. James, 99 Cal.App.2d 476, 479, 222 P.2d 117; People v. Krout, 90 Cal.App.2d 205, 208, 202 P.2d 635.

[8, 9] It is well settled that the remedy sought in the court below does not lie to redress any irregularity occurring at the trial that could be corrected by a motion for a new trial or by appeal. Thus, the charge that there was insufficiency of the evidence and a failure to prove the corpus delicti of the crime does not state matter within the scope of the requested relief. People v. Bible, 135 Cal.App.2d 65, 69, 286 P.2d 524.

[10, 11] The mere naked allegation that a constitutional right has been invaded will not suffice. “The application should make a full disclosure of the specific facts relied upon and not merely state conclusions as to the nature and effect of such facts.” People v. Stapleton, 139 Cal.App.2d 512, 293 P.2d 793, 794.

[12] There was nothing in the petition filed in the trial court in this instance warranting the trial court to grant the requested relief, but even had there been affidavits in support of the motion it was not necessary for the trial judge to accept as true any statement contained in any such affidavits. People v. Kirk, 98 Cal.App.2d 687, 692, 220 P.2d 976.

[13] In this case the defendant did not state any ground for the setting aside of the judgment or produce any proof of any fact constituting legal ground for setting aside the judgment or for the writ of error

coram nobis. Whether the defendant’s petition was to be followed by a hearing appropriate to the issues raised was entirely within the discretion of the court below. People v. Block, 134 Cal.App. 217, 218, 25 P.2d 242.

It is our opinion that the motion was properly denied and the appeal from the order of denial is without any merit whatsoever.

The order of the superior court in denying the motion of the defendant is affirmed.

Rehearing Denied Sept. 26, 1956.

Hearing Denied Oct. 17, 1956.

Proceeding on motion to vacate judgment of conviction. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Herbert V. Walker, J., entered order denying motion and defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Ashburn, J., held that motion was equivalent of application for writ of error coram nobis, and where petition did not complain of any incident of original conviction, but merely of fact that between time he had been originally convicted of burglary and time his probation was revoked and sentence ordered to run, legislature had passed law revoking any credits earned for good behavior in prison, though he did not claim to have earned any such credits, defendant did not show himself entitled to any relief.

Affirmed.

1. Criminal Law Ⓒ999(1)

A motion to vacate judgment of conviction is the equivalent of an application for a writ of error coram nobis.

2. Criminal Law Ⓒ997(5)

Coram nobis is not the proper vehicle for vindicating constitutional right; that is the function of a motion for new trial, appeal or habeas corpus.

3. Criminal Law Ⓒ1001

An order of court revoking probation granted upon conviction of crime and ordering sentence to run is an order merely revoking suspension of execution of judgment and not a new judgment. Pen.Code, 1203.2.

ASHBURN, Justice.

[2] Appellant's major contention is that a 1947 amendment to Penal Code, § 2926¹ is unconstitutional, in that it deprives him of certain credits previously earned. The authorities establish that coram nobis "is not the proper vehicle for vindicating constitutional rights; that is a function of motion for new trial, appeal or habeas corpus." People v. Ayala, 138 Cal.App.2d 243, 246, the terms of prisoners are shortened by the allowance of credits, provision is made in this act for an earlier parole date and for an earlier discharge date in the case of this latter class of prisoners." Said Chapter also amended § 2926, Penal Code, to read as follows: "The provisions of this article are to apply to all prisoners serving sentence on December 31, 1947, in the state prison, to the end that at all times the same provisions relating to credits shall apply to all such inmates thereof. No prisoner received on or after January 1, 1948, at any state prison or institution under the jurisdiction of the Director of Corrections shall receive or be allowed any credits provided for in this article or under Section 2789 of this code." Stats.1947, pp. 2944-2945.

1. Prior to 1947, § 2926 read: "The provisions of this article are to apply to all prisoners now serving sentence in the State prison, to the end that at all times the same provisions relating to credits shall apply to all the inmates thereof." Stats.1941, p. 1107. By Chapter 1381 of the 1947 Statutes the legislature provided, in § 1: "It is the intention of the Legislature, recognizing the inconsistency of applying a statutory system of credits to a prison term fixed under the indeterminate sentence law, to abolish by this act the statutory system of credits now in use in the prisons of this State. * * * Where the person is received at a state prison or institution under the jurisdiction of the Director of Corrections on or after January 1, 1948, it is the intention of the Legislature that no statutory credits be allowed him. As

If coram nobis were an appropriate remedy the instant petition would be factually insufficient. "It would be a salutary thing if the applicants for this writ could be made to understand its narrow scope. It does not lie to correct errors of law made at the trial. Its purpose is to secure relief, where no other remedy exists, from a judgment rendered while there existed some fact which would have prevented its rendition if the trial court had known it and which, through no negligence or fault of the defendant, was not then known to the court. (Citing cases.) The applicant for the writ "must show that the facts upon which he relies were not known to him and could not in the exercise of due diligence have been discovered by him at any time substantially earlier than the time of his motion for the writ; otherwise he has stated no ground for relief." (People v. Shorts, 1948, 32 Cal.2d 502, 513, 197 P.2d 330, 336.)' People v. Adamson, 34 Cal.2d 320, 326, 210 P.2d 13, 15. * * * The applicant must allege facts which establish a right to the writ within its recognized narrow confines. Mere conclusions or generalities will not suffice." People v. Ayala, supra, 138 Cal.App.2d 243, 245, 246, 247, 291 P.2d 518. It affirmatively appears that appellant does not complain of any incident of his original conviction. He claims a deprivation of earned credits for good behavior; but it is not shown that in fact he entered prison on or after January 1, 1948, or that he had actually earned any credits before that date. The petition consists of generalities which do not suffice to make a showing entitling one to the writ.

On October 17, 1938, appellant in the Los Angeles superior court entered a plea of guilty to the charge of burglary, which crime was fixed as first degree, and on November 2, 1938, defendant was sentenced to the state prison for the term prescribed by law. Execution was suspended and probation granted for a period of five years. No appeal was taken or attempted. Probation was revoked and restored twice prior to December 6, 1948. Petitioner having been imprisoned in San Quentin pursuant to conviction of burglary in the San Francisco superior court, the Los Angeles court on November 30, 1953, made an order containing this: "Probation having been heretofore revoked, the sentence imposed on November 2, 1938, committing this defendant to the State Prison for the term prescribed by law is ordered in full force and effect. This sentence is ordered to run concurrently with sentence Defendant is now serving. Defendant is remanded into the custody of the Director of Corrections at the California State Prison at San Quentin."

[3] Appellant admits and asserts that he is lawfully imprisoned and not entitled to habeas corpus. His interesting objective is disclosed at page 18, opening brief: "Appellant concedes that the irregularity of which he complains was not in the trial in 1938—but in the application of the penalty after the trial—after subsequent legislation had been enacted to the detriment of appellant. A retrial could not change the situation of the appellant, hence, it would be useless. While the discharge of the appellant releases from the information one guilty of a felony, this misfortune is one for which the State Legislature alone is responsible. Appellant urges that it is better that he escape punishment entirely for the 1938 offense than for the courts of this State, under the guise of subserving the ends of justice assume that they may rise higher than the law and disregard the plain mandate of both the Federal and State Constitutions." The contention is that, as the 1947 amendment to Penal Code, § 2926 abolishes the right to good behavior credits earned prior to the amendment, the order of November 3, 1938, imposes a new sentence to be served without possibility of credits. Actually the order is but one revoking suspension of execution of judgment, not a new judgment. In re Dearo, 96 Cal.App.2d 141, 214 P.2d 585. Section 1203.2, Penal Code, concludes with these words: "[B]ut if the judgment has been pronounced and the execution thereof has been suspended, the court may revoke such suspension, whereupon the judgment shall be in full force and effect, and the person shall be delivered over to the proper officer to serve his sentence, less any credits herein provided for."

[4] The punishment for first degree burglary is fixed at not less than five years with no maximum specified. Pen.Code § 461, subd. 1. Appellant's remedy is to have his sentence fixed or refixed when he has served the lawful term, whatever that may be, and if dissatisfied to review the matter on habeas corpus at that time. In re Seeley, 29 Cal.2d 294, at page 302, 176 P.2d 24, at page 29, says: "The rule is settled in this state in accord with the weight of authority that 'where a court has jurisdiction of the person and of the crime, the imposition of a sentence in excess of what the law permits does not render the legal or authorized portion of the sentence void, but leaves only such portion of the sentence as may be in excess open to question and attack. In other words, the sentence is legal in so far as it is within the provisions of law and the jurisdiction of the court over the person and offense, and only void as to the excess when such excess is separate and may be dealt with without disturbing the valid portion of the sentence.'" 29 Cal.2d at page 303, 176 P.2d at page 30: "No difficulty is likely to arise in ascertaining the lawful portion of the sentence which should have been imposed upon the petitioner. Section 461 of the Penal Code fixes the punishment for first degree burglary as imprisonment in the state prison for not less than five years. Since no maximum is there prescribed the petitioner has failed to show that he is entitled to his release at this time. The proper course to pursue is for the constituted authority to refix the sentence of the petitioner in accordance with the declaration of his rights as stated in this opinion." This is but one of a consistent line of cases announcing and applying the same rule. In re Morck, 180 Cal. 384, 181 P. 657; In re Rosencrantz, 205 Cal. 534, 541, 271 P. 902; In re Seeley, supra, 29 Cal.2d 294, 302, 176

[5] Appellant, as above shown, is not entitled to a writ of coram nobis and the time for habeas corpus has not arrived.

The order is affirmed.

Hearing Denied Oct. 17, 1956.

Defendant was convicted of furnishing narcotics to a minor. The Superior Court of San Diego County, John A. Hewicker, J., entered judgment on the verdict and an order denying a motion for new trial, and the defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Mussell, J., held that where police officer with the consent and at the request of defendant's roommate entered premises where defendant and roommate resided, to get some of the belongings of defendant's roommate, and while there the police officer observed a marihuana cigarette butt and an eyedropper, needle, and spoon, all of which contained heroin, and defendant then entered and told officer to go ahead and look around, and officer took defendant to jail, and then returned and picked up the eyedropper, needle and spoon, they were not obtained by unlawful search and seizure, and were properly admitted in prosecution.

Judgment and order affirmed.

1. Arrest ☞71

It is immaterial to the lawfulness of a search and seizure that seizure of paraphernalia used in the commission of a crime may have preceded rather than followed arrest.

2. Arrest ☞71

A search without a warrant is valid if it is incident to a lawful arrest, is reasonable, and is made in good faith.

3. Arrest ☞71

Criminal Law ☞395

Where police officer with the consent and at the request of defendant's roommate entered premises where defendant and roommate resided, to get some of the belongings of defendant's roommate, and while there the police officer observed a marihuana cigarette butt and an eyedropper, needle, and spoon, all of which contained heroin, and defendant then entered and told officer to go ahead and look around, and officer took defendant to jail, and then returned and picked up the eyedropper, needle and spoon, they were not obtained by unlawful search and seizure, and were properly admitted in prosecution of defendant for furnishing narcotics to a minor. MUSSELL, Justice.

Defendant was charged in an information with having furnished narcotics to a minor in violation of section 11714 of the Health and Safety Code, a felony, in that on or about the 22nd day of January, 1956, in said county of San Diego, he did "wilfully, unlawfully and feloniously furnish or administer and give to Nancy Cook, who was then and there a minor of the age of 17 years, a narcotic." Trial was had by the court without a jury and defendant was found guilty of the offense charged in the information. His motion for a new trial and his application for probation were denied and he was sentenced to the state prison for the time prescribed by law. He appeals from the judgment and from the order denying his motion for a new trial. His sole contention is that the trial court erred in admitting into evidence certain exhibits on the ground that they were obtained by unlawful search and seizure.

A summary of the evidence, viewed in the light most favorable to the People, People v. Spreckels, 125 Cal.App.2d 507, 509, 270 P.2d 513, is as follows: On January 22, 1956, at about 6:00 p. m., Nancy Cook, aged 17, met the defendant at a hamburger stand in San Diego. She then went with the defendant to his residence at 2887 Boston Avenue, arriving there at about 7:00 p. m. En route, Nancy and the defendant discussed narcotics and Nancy informed the defendant she would like some heroin. After listening to some records in defendant's residence, they went into the bathroom where the defendant had a glass of water, a paper containing a brownish-white powder, a lighter, an eyedropper, a needle and a silver spoon. He cut the brownish-white powder with a knife and placed the substance on a silver spoon, then used cotton as a means of adding water to the substance in the spoon, heated the spoon with the lighter, drew liquid from it into the eyedropper and attached the needle to the dropper. He then took a belt from the doorknob on the bathroom door and placed it around his arm, inserting the needle into his arm. He then put the belt around Nancy Cook's right arm and inserted the needle in her arm three times, after which he placed the belt around her left arm and inserted the needle in it four times, injecting fluid into her arms. Fifteen minutes after these injections Nancy felt slightly nauseous and in forty-five minutes she felt drowsy. She and the defendant again listened to some records and waited for another girl (Chris McCracken) to arrive. Chris then returned and the two girls went out to get something to eat, after which Nancy returned to her home.

On January 22, 1956, Loel L. Boggs, who had been taken into custody by Sgt. Gibbs of the San Diego police department and was in the custody of H. H. James, a United States Probation Officer, requested Gibbs to obtain his (Boggs') clothing at 2887 Boston Avenue in San Diego. At the San Diego jail Boggs also asked officer James to obtain for him a pair of blue suede shoes and some clothing from the address on Boston Avenue. Officer James conveyed this request to Sgt. Gibbs and on January 23, 1956, at about 4:00 p. m., he went to 2887 Boston Avenue to pick up the clothing as requested. Upon arriving there, Sgt. Gibbs identified himself to the landlady, who showed him officer James' card and stated that she had been expecting him. She then unlocked the door to the house and admitted the sergeant. The inside of the house was very dark, the overhead light contained "three small bulbs of the Christmas tree variety, red, blue and green, that shed no light at all." The sergeant turned on the kitchen light and observed a cigarette butt, (People's exhibit 4) lying on a shelf above a built-in desk. The cigarette contained a greenish material that appeared to be marijuana. The sergeant then went to the cupboard, obtained a light bulb and at that time "observed an eyedropper with a needle attached setting needle-downward in a 'gill' or whiskey shot glass." The sergeant then returned to the living room and placed a light bulb in a reading lamp. He obtained the clothing which he came for and then conducted a further search of the premises. He found a number of brown paper rolled "sticks" and two sandwich bags of vegetable matter. (People's exhibits 2, 3 and 5). It was stipulated at the trial that exhibits 2, 3, 4 and 5, contained marijuana. Wayne A. Burgess, an expert chemist, testified that the eyedropper, needle and spoon (People's exhibit

1) all contained heroin. As Sgt. Gibbs was preparing to leave the premises, the defendant, Nancy Cook and Chris McCracken entered and the sergeant "bid them welcome and asked Stewart if he minded if we looked around and he said 'No, go ahead.'" The defendant and the two girls were taken to the city jail and later that evening the sergeant and two other police officers returned to the defendant's home and were again admitted by the landlady. They retrieved the eyedropper, needle and spoon from a table in the living room where Sgt. Gibbs had left them when he took the defendant and the girls to jail.

At the city jail police officer Wilson of the narcotic detail examined Nancy Cook's arms. He observed three needle puncture marks in the elbow fold of her left arm and two in the elbow fold of her right arm. He testified that in his opinion the eyedropper, needle and spoon was "a complete outfit that regular hyps would use and all that is on them it appears to have been used. However, in some instances cotton is usually in the spoon."

Dr. Harry Depew was qualified as an expert physician and testified that if a person received an injection under the circumstances testified to by Nancy Cook and exhibited the symptoms related by her, it would be his opinion that such a person had received an injection of a narcotic.

Defendant contends that exhibits 1, 2, 3 and 5 were obtained by unreasonable and unlawful search and seizure. However, he concedes that the police officers acted lawfully up to and including the time when they found People's exhibit 4, the "roach" or marijuana cigarette butt. He further concedes that after finding the "roach", the officers had probable cause to arrest Stewart and further concedes that the officers had consent to enter the premises for a limited purpose of obtaining Boggs' clothing. He argues that these facts could not justify the two searches thereafter made and that the admission into evidence of fruits of these searches and seizures was improper under the law enunciated in People v. Cahan, 44 Cal.2d 434, 282 P.2d 905, and subsequent cases. We are not in accord with this argument.

[1, 2] Officer Gibbs entered the premises at 2887 Boston Avenue with the consent and at the request of Loel E. Boggs, who resided with the defendant. The officer turned on the lights and first observed the marijuana cigarette butt and immediately thereafter observed the eyedropper, needle and spoon, all of which contained heroin. The defendant then entered and told the officer to "go ahead and look around." The evidence shows that the search was made with the defendant's consent and therefore was not unreasonable. People v. Michael, 45 Cal.2d 751, 753, 290 P.2d 852. The officer had reasonable cause to make the arrest. People v. Brite, 9 Cal.2d 666, 687, 72 P.2d 122. Furthermore, it is conceded by appellant that the arrest was lawful. It is immaterial that the seizure of the paraphernalia used in the commission of the crime may have preceded rather than followed the arrest. People v. Martin, 45 Cal.2d 755, 762, 290 P.2d 855. As is said in People v. Winston, 46 Cal.2d 151, 293 P.2d 40, 46:

"It is well settled that a search without a warrant is valid where it is incident to a lawful arrest, if it is reasonable and made in good faith; and that a seizure, during such a search, of evidence related to the crime is permissible. * * *" (Citations.)

[3] The eyedropper, needle and spoon containing heroin were related to the crime charged. Sgt. Gibbs could have lawfully taken these articles with him when he took the defendant to the city jail and the fact that he went back to the defendant's residence, where he was again admitted by the landlady, and retrieved them did not in our opinion constitute an unreasonable and unlawful search and seizure.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 2, California.

Sept. 20, 1956.

Prosecution for robbery. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, LeRoy Dawson, J., entered judgment and defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Fox, J., held that the evidence was sufficient to sustain conviction.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Criminal Law §1159(2)

Before conviction can be reversed on ground of the insufficiency of evidence, it must be made clearly to appear that upon no hypothesis whatever is there sufficient substantial evidence to support conclusion reached in court below.

2. Criminal Law §260(11)

Reviewing court must assume in support of judgment, the existence of every fact which trial court could have reasonably deduced from the evidence, and then determine whether the facts justify the inference of guilt.

3. Criminal Law §1159(6)

If the circumstances reasonably justify the determination of trier of facts, the opinion of reviewing court that those circumstances might also reasonably be reconciled with innocence of defendant will not warrant a reversal.

4. Criminal Law §59(5)

One who aids and abets another in the commission of a crime, though not present, is a principal in any crime so committed and shall be punished as such. West's Ann.Pen.Code, §§ 31, 971.

5. Robbery \Rightarrow 15

A person who stays in an automobile and enables those who are robbing to make a successful getaway, aids and abets the commission of the crime and is as much a principal as if he were present and assisted in the actual taking of the property. West's Ann.Pen.Code, §§ 31, 971.

6. Robbery \Rightarrow 24(1)

Evidence justified inference that defendant aided and abetted others in commission of robbery by assisting them in making a "getaway" and was sufficient to support conviction of robbery. West's Ann.Pen.Code, §§ 31, 211, 971.

FOX, Justice.

Defendants Giroux, Beaulieu¹ and Fritz were charged with the crime of robbery, Pen.Code, § 211, in that on October 23, 1955, they took certain money by force and fear from Fumio Nakaya. The court found Giroux guilty, denied probation and sentenced him to the state prison. He appeals from the judgment and sentence.

Fritz and Beaulieu went into a liquor store at 3124 East Fourth Street, Los Angeles, where Fumio Nakaya worked, between 12:30 and 1:00 o'clock in the morning of October 23, 1955. When Nakaya first noticed these men they were standing in the center of the store with drawn .45 automatics. Beaulieu demanded the money. Nakaya, being in fear, gave him $73 from the cash register. Beaulieu took the money and went out quickly. Fritz remained briefly inside the door, keeping watch, and then he, too, left. Nakaya went outside and saw a Pontiac automobile pulling away.

Felix G. Mena, who was across the street from the liquor store, observed a car with a sun visor move up to the store from the corner where it had been parked, a distance of 300 feet. Mena was not able to identify the driver beyond the fact that it was a man. When the car pulled up a man came out of the store and entered it. Then the horn sounded and another man left the store and entered the car. The three men in the car were last seen going east on Fourth Street.

Officer Vera and his partner Shelly responded to the police broadcast of the burglary. At the liquor store they received a description of the car. At approximately 1:15 a. m. they arrested the defendants in the 5000 block on East Third Street. Beaulieu was driving. All three were in the front seat. Just before the police stopped the car, Fritz was observed to bend forward in his seat. Upon searching the car three .45 automatics (all cocked) were found under the front seat where Fritz had been sitting. They were the same type of weapon the robbers used. One of these guns had a clip with eight rounds of ammunition in it. Five rounds of .45 caliber ammunition were found in appellant's right front pocket. Fritz had seven rounds in his pocket. Fritz had $21 on his person; the other two had $20 each. Two handkerchiefs were found in the glove compartment of the car; and a pair of brown gloves on the front seat.

At the police station, approximately a half hour after the arrest, appellant stated: "We were just riding around and haven't done anything. That's all you are going to get out of me."

At the trial appellant testified he had not at any time driven the car used in the robbery. He told of going to Long Beach with Fritz, and that they met Beaulieu in a bar; that he left the bar at 11:00 p. m. and went to sleep in the back seat of Beaulieu's car; that he did not wake up until around 12:30 to 1:00 a. m.; that they stopped at a bar and about 15 minutes after he had awakened the police arrested them. His explanation of the cartridges being in his pocket was that he felt some hard objects that bothered him in the back seat of the car when he was trying to go to sleep; that he saw what they were and put them in his pocket so he "could sleep more comfortably."

1. Beaulieu and Fritz are not involved in this appeal.

Appellant contends that the evidence is insufficient to sustain the conviction. Specifically, he argues that the People failed to prove (1) that he was not asleep, and (2) that he knew of the unlawful purpose of Beaulieu and Fritz or that he knowingly assisted them in accomplishing their purpose, or in escaping detection. His argument is lacking in merit.

[1-3] Before a conviction can be reversed on the ground of the insufficiency of the evidence "it must be made clearly to appear that upon no hypothesis whatever is there sufficient substantial evidence to support the conclusion reached in the court below." People v. Newland, 15 Cal.2d 678, 681, 104 P.2d 778, 780. We must assume in support of the judgment the existence of every fact which the trial court could have reasonably deduced from the evidence, and then determine whether the facts "justify the inference of guilt." People v. Deysher, 2 Cal.2d 141, 149, 40 P.2d 259, 263. If the circumstances reasonably justify the determination of the trier of fact, the opinion of the reviewing court that those circumstances might also reasonably be reconciled with the innocence of the defendant will not warrant a reversal. People v. Newland, supra; People v. Frankfort, 114 Cal.App.2d 680, 689, 251 P.2d 401.

[4] One who aids and abets another in the commission of a crime, though not present, is a principal in any crime so committed and shall be punished as such. Pen. Code, §§ 31 and 971; People v. Hopkins, 101 Cal.App.2d 704, 707, 226 P.2d 74.

[5] A person who stays in an automobile and enables those who are robbing to make a successful "getaway" aids and abets the commission of the crime and is as much a principal as if he were present and assisted in the actual taking of the property. People v. Benton, 32 Cal.App.2d 407, 409-410, 89 P.2d 1089; People v. Soffer, 34 Cal.App.2d 301, 304, 93 P.2d 183.

Someone drove the car from the corner, a distance of approximately 300 feet, to the liquor store where Beaulieu entered the car. "Shortly thereafter," according to witness Mena, "the horn blew" and then Fritz came out and entered the front seat of the car from the passenger side. The car was stopped by the police about half an hour later and appellant was in the front seat with them. The car was identified by Nakaya as the Pontiac that he saw leaving the curb following the robbery. Although Mena was not able to identify the operator of the car, it is a reasonable inference that appellant was the male driver Mena saw in the car when it pulled up in front of the liquor store, for admittedly he was in Beaulieu's car. The trial judge, of course, was not required to accept as true appellant's testimony that he was asleep because of his obvious self-interest. His statement that "We were just riding around" belies his story that he was asleep.

When appellant was searched upon his arrest he had .45 caliber cartridges in his right front pocket. The shells were the same caliber as those used in the weapons found under the front seat of the car and these guns were identified as the same type as those used in the holdup. Fritz was seen to lean forward in his seat before the car was stopped and the guns were found under his seat. From these circumstances it is reasonable to infer that appellant knew of the unlawful activities of his companions. Appellant's explanation of the presence of the .45 caliber cartridges in his pocket challenges the credulity of any reasonable person.

[6] Without discussing the evidence further, it is apparent that it adequately justifies the inference that appellant aided and abetted Beaulieu and Fritz in the commission of the robbery by assisting them in making a "getaway." See People v. O'Keefe, 138 Cal.App.2d 329, 291 P.2d 982.

[7] Since no appeal lies from a sentence, the purported appeal therefrom is dismissed. People v. Douglas, 141 Cal.App.2d 33, 296 P.2d 1.

Civ. 21491.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 1, California.
Sept. 18, 1956.

Action against plaintiff's sister and against plaintiff's former guardian and another for recovery of property allegedly belonging to plaintiff and never accounted for in a guardianship. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, J. Howard Ziemann, J., sustained defendants' objection to introduction of any evidence, entered judgment for defendants and plaintiff appealed. The District Court of Appeal, White, P. J., held that where any of the frauds alleged in plaintiff's complaint could have been relieved by the court when plaintiff objected to the final account filed upon termination of her guardianship, and in fact were submitted to the court in such proceedings and decided adversely to plaintiff after presentation by her of all of her case, she could not relitigate the claimed frauds upon which she unsuccessfully relied in the guardianship proceedings, notwithstanding fact that two of the defendants in the action were not parties to the guardianship proceeding.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Judgment ⇐540

In determining the validity of a plea of res judicata three questions are pertinent, namely, was the issue decided in the prior adjudication identical with the one presented in the action in question, was there a final judgment on the merits, and was the party against whom the plea is asserted a party or in privity with a party to the prior adjudication.

2. Appeal and Error ⇐714(2)

The District Court of Appeal is authorized to refer to the record of the case in a former appeal before it in determining a subsequent appeal involving the same plaintiff and same issues as the prior appeal.

3. Guardian and Ward ⇐163

Where plaintiff was a party to previous litigation as to the settlement of her guardianship account, and was bound by the decision therein, defendants in a subsequent action involving alleged fraud in such guardianship were not precluded by lack of privity or mutuality of estoppel from invoking the plea of res judicata against plaintiff even though they were not parties to the prior litigation.

4. Judgment ⇐441

Intrinsic fraud will not suffice to justify equitable intervention for relief from a judgment; instead, there must be a showing of extrinsic fraud.

5. Guardian and Ward ⇐163

Where any of the frauds alleged in plaintiff's complaint for recovery of property allegedly never accounted for in her guardianship could have been relieved by the court when plaintiff objected to the final account filed upon termination of her guardianship, and in fact were submitted to the court in such proceedings and decided adversely to plaintiff after presentation by her of all of her case, she could not relitigate the claimed frauds upon which she unsuccessfully relied in the guardianship proceedings, notwithstanding fact that two of the defendants in the action were not parties to the guardianship proceeding.

Clara Myrtle D. Barker, in pro. per.

Louis Ballenger, Donovan Ballenger, Glendale, for respondent, Jewel Giroux.

John Ruskin Lane, Pasadena, Elber H. Tilson, Los Angeles, for respondent, Ilo Margaret Parr.

WHITE, Presiding Justice.

Plaintiff appeals from an adverse judgment in an action instituted by her against Mary Carver, plaintiff's former guardian, Raymond E. Parr, attorney for said guardian, and Jewel Giroux, sister of plaintiff, to "recover property belonging to appellant (plaintiff herein) that they have never accounted for to appellant (plaintiff) or to the court in the guardianship matter". Subsequent to the death of defendant Parr on November 29, 1954, Ilo Mohr Parr, as Executrix of his estate, was substituted as a party defendant.

The factual background surrounding this litigation may be thus epitomized: On July 24, 1944, plaintiff was committed to the General Hospital of Los Angeles County, and shortly thereafter was committed to the State Hospital at Camarillo, California. On July 14, 1944, defendant Mary Carver, a niece of plaintiff, filed a petition for appointment of herself as guardian of plaintiff Clara Myrtle D. Barker, and was thereafter regularly appointed and qualified as such guardian. The estate of said plaintiff was handled by said guardian and through regular procedure was eventually administered, and the accounts of said guardian were settled, attorney's fees allowed, and the proceedings finally terminated in the court below. An appeal was taken by plaintiff herein "from the judgment on Final Account" and from the order "denying motion for a new trial". This court affirmed the judgment, In re Guardianship of Barker, 100 Cal.App.2d 69, 223 P.2d 64. Petition for hearing was denied by the Supreme Court on December 18, 1950.

The action involved in this appeal was filed on November 21, 1949, while the matter of guardianship of Barker just referred to was on appeal. Thereafter, an amended complaint was filed and eventually a supplemental complaint wherein the Estate of Parr was substituted for Raymond E. Parr, deceased. Raymond E. Parr during his lifetime, appeared as attorney for the guardian, Mary Carver, in the guardianship proceedings. In the present case a motion to dismiss for lack of prosecution was filed for the defendant Jewell Giroux and later a similar motion was filed on behalf of defendant Ilo Mohr Parr, Executrix of the estate of defendant Raymond E. Parr, deceased. Both motions were denied.

This cause was finally called for trial on June 24, 1955. Defendant and former guardian Mary Carver was never legally served with process and made no appearance. Plaintiff appeared in pro. per. and defendant Jewel Giroux and defendant Ilo Mohr Parr appeared with their attorneys. The record reflects that the following proceedings were thereupon had: "J. R. Arnold is sworn on behalf of the plaintiff and states his name. The defendants object to the introduction of any evidence on the ground that the supplemental complaint does not state a cause of action, that there has been no prosecution within five years, that the matter before the court is res adjudicata, and that the aduction of evidence would be violative of the 'Dead Mans Statute [Code Civ.Proc. § 1880]' as to the defendant Ilo Margaret Parr, Executrix". The cause was thereupon continued to June 27, 1955, at which time the court announced its decision as follows: "The Defendants' objection to the introduction of any evidence is sustained. All other defendants' motions are granted". Judgment was entered accordingly and plaintiff prosecutes this appeal therefrom.

[1] Since we are satisfied that the court was correct in sustaining the plea of res adjudicata we shall first give consideration to that issue. "In determining the validity of a plea of res judicata three questions are pertinent: Was the issue decided in the prior adjudication identical with the one presented in the action in question? Was there a final judgment on the merits? Was the party against whom the plea is asserted a party or in privity with a party to the prior adjudication?" (Citing cases.) Bernhard v. Bank of America, 19 Cal.2d 807, 813, 122 P.2d 892, 895.

The gist of appellant's complaint and amended supplemental complaint, is as stated therein, "that by virtue of the said appointment of the said defendant, Mary Carver, as Guardian, there came into the possession of defendants all of the assets, including equipment, supplies and good will, of the beauty parlor business owned by plaintiff at the time of the appointment as Guardian of said Mary Carver, and all of the personal effects, monies and properties belonging to plaintiff. * * *". (Emphasis added.) Then follows a list of the properties in question. The allegation is that all of the property and assets were delivered to the defendants in the instant action without any further specification, and of course one of the defendants was the guardian. The guardian was therefore responsible for the property constituting the estate and any adjudication as to her accounting was binding on appellant. There is no allegation in the pleadings involved herein, of extrinsic fraud. There is no new matter contained in the complaint or amended and supplemental complaint filed herein which could not have been adjudicated in the guardianship proceedings.

That the issues tendered on this appeal were decided adversely to appellant is evidenced by the language of this court in the former appeal, In re Guardianship of Barker, supra, wherein it is stated that such appeal arose, "'* * * out of the appointment of a non-resident niece of appellant as her guardian, culminating in an arbitrary approval of her accounts, *notwithstanding the failure to account for various properties * * * and the manner in which she acted in respect to the properties * * ' The appeal is, in effect, a general and specific attack upon all steps taken in the guardianship proceedings from the original appointment to and including the settlement of the guardian's final account. * * *" (Emphasis added.)

[2] Referring to the record before this court on the former appeal as we are authorized to do, In re Estate of Bruce, 27 Cal.App.2d 44, 51, 80 P.2d 82; Gackstetter v. Market St. Railway Co., 10 Cal.App. 2d 713, 716, 52 P.2d 998; Hammell v. Britton, 19 Cal.2d 72, 75, 119 P.2d 333; Pailhe v. Pailhe, 113 Cal.App.2d 53, 66, 247 P.2d 838, we find one of the objections urged therein was that, "Certain items of property were received by the guardian but were neither shown upon the inventory nor accounted for nor returned to the ward. These items include: (a) One trunk and its contents, now in the possession of Jewel Giroux." In the former proceeding appellant herein specifically litigated the questions of properties not mentioned or appraised by asserting that there was property in the possession of the guardian at the time of appointment, which should have been but was not inventoried or appraised.

[3] Appellant insists that respondents Parr and Giroux in the instant proceeding not having been parties, or in privity with a party, in the earlier litigation cannot now assert the plea of res adjudicata against her. This contention cannot be sustained. As was said by our Supreme Court in Bernhard v. Bank of America, supra, 19 Cal.2d at page 812, 122 P.2d at page 894: "There is no compelling reason, however, for requiring that the party asserting the plea of res judicata must have been a party, or in privity with a party, to the earlier litigation." Appellant having been a party to the previous litigation and bound by the decision therein, respondents in the present case are not precluded by lack of privity or of mutuality of estoppel from invoking the plea of res adjudicata against her. It would be unjust to permit one who has had his day in court to reopen identical issues by merely switching adversaries. The cases of In re Estate of Smead, 219 Cal. 572, 28 P.2d 348; Silva v. Hawkins, 152 Cal. 138, 92 P. 72; and People ex rel. Drew v. Rodgers, 118 Cal. 393, 46 P. 740, 50 P. 668, relied upon by appellant were overruled in the case of Bernhard v. Bank of America, supra, 19 Cal.2d at page 813, 122 P.2d 892, to the extent that they are inconsistent with the views expressed therein.

[4, 5] Appellant attempts to invoke the principle of equitable relief enunciated in Caldwell v. Taylor, 218 Cal. 471, 23 P.2d 758, 88 A.L.R. 1194. But this case does not aid appellant. It is authority for the intervention of equity only when there is alleged and proven that by some fraud practiced directly upon the party seeking relief against a judgment or decree that party has been prevented from presenting all of his case to the court. In other words, there must be a showing of extrinsic fraud. Intrinsic fraud will not suffice to justify equitable intervention. In United States v. Throckmorton, 98 U.S. 61, 65, 25 L.Ed. 93, the court stated that the cases where the equitable relief sought by appellant herein would be granted are those in which "by reason of something done by the successful party to a suit, there was in fact no adversary trial or decision of the issue in the case. Where the unsuccessful party has been prevented from exhibiting fully his case, by fraud and deception practiced on him by his opponent, as by keeping him away from court, a false promise of compromise; or where the defendant never had knowledge of the suit, being kept in ignorance by the acts of the plaintiff, or where an attorney fraudulently or without authority assumes to represent a party and connives at his defeat, or where the attorney regularly employed corruptly sells out his client's interest to the other side—these, and similar cases which show that there has never been a real contest in the trial or hearing of the case, are reasons for which a new suit may be sustained to set aside and annul the former judgment or decree, and open the case for a new and fair hearing. . (Citing authorities.)" In the case now engaging our attention there is no allegation in the pleadings, of extrinsic fraud. Nothing is complained of that could not have been adjudicated in the guardianship proceedings. Since any of the frauds alleged in the case at bar could have been relieved by the court in the guardianship proceedings, and in fact were submitted to the court in such proceedings and decided adversely to appellant after presentation by her of all of her case, she cannot now relitigate the claimed frauds upon which she unsuccessfully relied in the guardianship proceedings. It follows from what we have said that the lower court was not in error when it sustained respondents' plea of res adjudicata.

The foregoing conclusion at which we have arrived, renders it unnecessary to discuss or decide the other issues presented on this appeal.

The judgment is affirmed.

v.

Ingall W. BULL, Jr., Defendant and

Cr. A. 3495.

Appellate Department, Superior Court,
 Los Angeles County, California.
 Sept. 12, 1956.

Prosecution on charge of failing to yield right of way upon making a left turn at an intersection. The Municipal Court, Los Angeles Judicial District, V. P. Lucas, J., entered judgment of conviction and defendant appealed. The Superior Court, Appellate Department, Bishop, P. J., held that complaint failed to state a public offense and that evidence failed to show defendant was guilty of any offense.

Reversed with directions.

1. Automobiles ⇨335

Under statute providing that driver of vehicle within intersection intending to turn to left shall yield right of way to any vehicle approaching from opposite direction which is within intersection or so close thereto as to constitute an immediate hazard, the words "approaching from opposite direction" apply not only to vehicle which is within intersection but also to automobile which is so close as to constitute an immediate hazard. West's Ann.Vehicle Code, § 551.

2. Automobiles ⇨335

Statute regulating left turn at intersection deals with vehicles approaching from opposite direction and so supplements statute which treats of vehicles entering from different highways and statute which regulates automobiles entering intersection from a through highway. West's Ann. Vehicle Code, §§ 550, 551 and subd. (a), 552.

3. Automobiles ⇨351

Complaint charging that driver of vehicle within intersection intending to turn to the left wilfully and unlawfully failed, refused and neglected to yield right of way to vehicle approaching from opposite direction which was within intersection and to vehicle which was so close as to constitute an immediate hazard failed to state offense of failing to yield right of way upon making left turn at intersection. West's Ann.Vehicle Code, § 551.

4. Automobiles ⇨335

Where southbound driver turned left in intersection while all other automobiles involved were headed north and were standing opposite driver and back of crosswalk, driver did not violate statute providing that driver of vehicle within intersection intending to turn left shall yield right of way to any vehicle "approaching" from opposite direction which is within intersection or so close thereto as to constitute an immediate hazard. BISHOP, Presiding Judge.

The defendant was convicted on a charge of failing to yield the right of way upon making a left turn at an intersection. The complaint failed to state a public offense and the evidence did not show that a public offense had been committed. The consequence, of course, is a reversal of the judgment against the defendant.

The facts are not in dispute. The defendant, southbound in the most easterly of the three southbound lanes on Fairfax Avenue (Los Angeles City) was halted by a red traffic light while "straddling the cross walk" on the north side of the intersection of Fairfax with Beverly Boulevard. During the period that the red light controlled the traffic, three cars, headed north, filled the three lanes on the side of Beverly, opposite the defendant and back of the cross-walk. When the red light changed to green the defendant put his car in motion and was in the intersection before any of the cars opposite him began to move. Indeed, it was not made to appear that any of them moved before the defendant had completed his turn and was on his way out of the intersection.

[1,2] The statutory law upon which the prosecution depends is subsection (a) of section 551, Vehicle Code, providing: "The driver of a vehicle within an intersection intending to turn to the left shall yield the right of way to any vehicle approaching from the opposite direction which is within the intersection or so close thereto as to constitute an immediate hazard." [The emphasis is ours.] It may be argued that the words "approaching from the opposite direction" should be understood as applying only to a car "which is within the intersection", so that the correlation of ideas is: "any vehicle [1] approaching from the opposite direction which is within the intersection or [2] so close thereto as to constitute an immediate hazard." Were this an acceptable interpretation we would affirm the judgment, for we entertain no doubt that the trial court would have been warranted in concluding that the three cars awaiting the "go" signal constituted an immediate hazard. The more natural and the correct reading of the provision, we submit, is this: "any vehicle approaching from the opposite direction which [1] is within the intersection or [2] so close thereto as to constitute an immediate hazard." Thus read, section 551 deals with vehicles approaching from the opposite direction, and so supplements section 550, which treats of vehicles entering from different highways and section 552, concerned with cars entering an intersection from a through highway.

[3] We conclude, therefore, that the complaint fails to state a public offense, applicable to the situation of interest to us, when it charged that the defendant "was the driver of a vehicle within an intersection of highways intending to turn to the left, who wilfully and unlawfully failed, refused, and neglected to yield the right of way to a vehicle approaching from the opposite direction which was within the intersection and to a vehicle which was so close thereto as to constitute an immediate hazard." Whoever drafted the complaint departed from the language of the statute and by inserting "and to a vehicle" but omitting "approaching from the opposite direction" charged that which was not made an offense by section 551 (or any other statute).

[4] It must be concluded, further, that the evidence failed to show that the defendant was guilty of any offense. There was, of course, no car other than the defendant's within the intersection and none that might be said to be approaching, as the defendant made his left turn. This is so, because all others, involved, were stationary and so not approaching. It would be a contradiction in terms to say that a standing car was approaching. But the word is used in the statute, and may not be discarded. " * * * it is presumed that every word, phrase and provision employed in a statute was intended to have some meaning and to perform some useful office, [authorities cited]. And any construction should be avoided which implies that the legislature was ignorant of the meaning of the language so employed, or that it used words in vain * * *." Prager v. Isreal, 1940, 15 Cal.2d 89, 93, 98 P.2d 729, 731.

The judgment is reversed with directions to dismiss the complaint, for the purpose of filing an amended complaint if the People are so advised.

C. A. 3480, 3481.

Appellate Department, Superior Court,
Los Angeles County, California.

Sept. 4, 1956.

Defendants were convicted upon charges of violation of statute proscribing the unlawful use or addiction to the unlawful use of narcotics. The Municipal Court of the Los Angeles Judicial District, Byron J. Walters, J., imposed sentence on each defendant, and defendants appealed. The Appellate Department of the Superior Court, Bishop, P. J., held that where jurors were instructed that they could find defendants guilty, even though defendants were not in fact addicted to unlawful use of narcotics, if defendants had used narcotics, and that no proof of place of use was needed if defendants had been picked up by police in city, instruction was erroneous on matter of proof of venue.

Judgments and orders denying motions for new trial reversed.

Appeals from non-appealable orders dismissed.

Motion for reporter's transcript, and other matters, denied.

1. Poisons ⚡4

Under statute providing that no person shall unlawfully use or be addicted to the unlawful use of narcotics, and that any person convicted of violating statute is guilty of misdemeanor, and in view of statutory definition of "addict", as person who unlawfully uses, or is addicted to the unlawful use of, narcotics, legislature has effectively made it a misdemeanor for a person either to make unlawful use of narcotics, or to be addicted to the unlawful use; one is an act, the other is a condition or status; they are not identical. See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Addict".

2. Poisons ⚡4

Statute defining "addict", as person who unlawfully uses, or is addicted to the unlawful use of, narcotics, has given artificial meaning to "addict", for it has put that label not alone on one who is addicted, but also on one who is an unlawful user, even though he has not become addicted, that is to say, even though, in fact, he is not an addict. BISHOP, Presiding Judge.

We find ourselves compelled to reverse the judgments because of an erroneous instruction, twice given, concerning the proof of venue. As will appear, the error was not technical, but adversely affected a proper defense.

The identical charges in these cases were based upon these provisions of section 11721 of the Health and Safety Code: "No person shall unlawfully use or be addicted to the unlawful use of narcotics. * * * Any person convicted of violating any provision of this section is guilty of a misdemeanor * * *." We should also have before us this irrelevant definition from section 11009 of the same code: "Addict," as used in this division, [sections 11000-11797] means a person who unlawfully uses, or is addicted to the unlawful use of, narcotics." Making a mixed use of these two code sections the complaint, in each of the cases under review, charged that the defendant, "on or about

November 15," "at and in Los Angeles City," "was then and there a person who did wilfully and unlawfully use and be addicted to the unlawful use of narcotics."

[1] Certain conclusions appear to us to be inescapable. The legislature has effectively made it a misdemeanor for a person either (a) to make unlawful use of narcotics or (b) to be addicted to the unlawful use. One is an act, the other is a condition or status. They are not identical. It is as though a statute made it a public offense either to take a drink or be drunk in a public place. A person may make unlawful use of narcotics (for a short time) without becoming or being addicted to the use. He may, while addicted to the use, be in a city where he cannot obtain any narcotic and so does not make use of it there. As stated in Palmer v. Spaulding, 1949, 299 N.Y. 368, 370, 87 N.E.2d 301, 302: "'Addicted' is not a word of art. It is not a technical word at all. According to the lexicographers, it means strongly disposed to some taste or practice or habituated, especially to drugs. But resort to dictionaries in situations like that now before us has for some reason been judicially deprecated at times and so we go on to the case law where occasions for defining the word 'addicted' have often occurred in the course of controversies respecting applications for insurance. Thus in Aetna Life Ins. Co. v. Davey, 123 U.S. 739, 742, 8 S.Ct. 331, 332, 31 L.Ed. 315, the court said: 'The inquiry as to whether the insured had ever been addicted to the excessive or intemperate use of alcoholic stimulants, and, whether, at the time of the application, he used alcoholic stimulants "often or daily," was, in effect, an inquiry as to his habit in that regard; not whether he used such stimulants or opium at all, but whether he used any of them habitually. If he was addicted to the excessive use of them, he was habitually intemperate; and to use them often or daily is, according to the ordinary acceptance of those words, to use them habitually.' Law writers ascribe to 'addicted' the same significance. Mr. Appleman says: 'After all, a man is either temperate or intemperate, and in common parlance, a man is not intemperate unless he frequently drinks to excess. Even more elastic is the word "addicted." This, also in layman's language, means a slave to'".

[2] We think that it is clear that the legislature has given an artificial meaning to "addict", for it has put that label not alone on one who is addicted, but also on one who is an unlawful user even though he has not become addicted, that is to say, even though, in fact, he is not an addict. We do not question the right of the legislature to make use of the word in this partially artificial way, but we wish to emphasize that nowhere is it declared that it is a misdemeanor to be an addict, nor was that term used in either complaint to charge a public offense against the defendants. Significantly, this was not always so. A reading of the sections that touch our problem, sections 11009, 11720 and 11721, from the Statutes of 1939, p. 755 et seq., through Stats.1941, p. 17 et seq. and Stats.1945, p. 1839 et seq., reveals that at first punishment was prescribed for "narcotic addicts," who, by definition, were addicts in fact. Some purpose must have been in the minds of the legislators to have substituted the present provisions for those originally adopted. As already noted, the present statute makes it a misdemeanor either to unlawfully use or to be addicted to the unlawful use, and that they fell in both classes, was the charge made against the defendants.

The trial court overlooked the facts we have just stated when it undertook to instruct the jury about the meaning of "addict", a word with which they were not concerned. This statement of the trial court was correct enough, as applied to sections 11000-11797 of the Health and Safety Code: "Now, an addict means a person who unlawfully uses or is addicted to the unlawful use of narcotics. Now, the use of these words by the Legislature, defining the narcotic addict, in so far as it applies to this case means as follows: An addict is one who unlawfully uses narcotics whether or not he is an addict, in fact."

It may be, that had the instructions gone no further, no prejudicial error would be presented, but they did not stop here. A bit later the jurors were advised: "Now, there has been a theory of the defendant throughout this trial concerning what the defendants term 'venue.' It is obvious from the definition of the term 'addict,' as I have just given it to you, that if you find the defendants, or either of them, as you consider each case separately, were apprehended in the City of Los Angeles and that if you further find that any such defendant unlawfully used narcotics, then you are advised that the proper venue has been established in his case." Some time later, after the jury had begun its deliberations, it interrupted them to seek the trial court's further instruction. The foreman spoke: "The jury would like clarification of your instructions on venue. In other words, is it necessary that the act of taking narcotics be proved to have occurred in the County of Los Angeles?" To which the trial court replied: "Under the former instructions of the Court, if you find that the defendants, or either of them, were addicts within the meaning of the instructions of the Court and the interpretations placed upon this status by the Court, the answer is no."

[3] Plainly, the jurors were advised by the instructions given them, that they could find the defendants guilty even if they were not, in fact, addicted to the unlawful use of narcotics, provided they had used them, and that no proof of the place of use was needed if—as was the undoubted fact—they had been picked up by the police in Los Angeles City. But the last part of this advice was bad law. The decision of the San Diego Appellate Department, in People v. Garcia, 1953, 122 Cal.App.2d Supp. 962, 266 P.2d 233, that a judgment, following a conviction on a charge of unlawfully using narcotics, had to be reversed because the place of use was not established by a preponderance of the evidence, is fully supported by the cases cited in the opinion.

The evidence was such that the jury might very well have concluded that neither defendant was, at any time involved in this case, in fact addicted to the use of narcotics, but that the case turned on that part of the charge that they had unlawfully used it. Their inquiry of the court concerning venue is consistent, to say the least, with this theory. A "not guilty" verdict because the only use shown by a preponderance of the evidence was outside of Los Angeles, was made impossible by the trial court's combined instructions on the meaning of "addict" and the effect of the arrest within the boundaries of the city.

[4] Two other errors were committed and should be avoided on a new trial. Where, as in this case, the proof of either of two facts constitutes the offense charged, the jury should be instructed that all twelve must agree that one fact or the other is established; it will not do for part of them to agree on the existence of one fact, the rest of them concluding that the other fact alone was established. People v. Scofield, 1928, 203 Cal. 703, 710, 265 P. 914; People

v. McMillan, 1941, 45 Cal.App.2d Supp. 821, 830, 114 P.2d 440, 445; People v. Dutra, 1946, 75 Cal.App.2d 311, 321-322, 171 P.2d 41, 47.

[5, 6] If, as appears likely, the question shall again be presented whether or not the arresting officers had reasonable cause to make the arrest, its determination should be made by the trial court and not left in whole or part to the jury. People v. Gorg, 1955, 45 Cal.2d 776, 780-781, 291 P.2d 469, 471-472. The testimony of the officer that an informant told him that the defendants were narcotic users, although properly received on the issue of the legality of the arrest, should not have been allowed to reach the ears of the jurors.

[7, 8] In each case the judgments and the order denying the defendant's motion for a new trial are reversed; the appeals from the non-appealable orders denying the motion in arrest of judgment and re bail are dismissed; the motion of the defendant for a reporter's transcript, and other matters, is denied.

Division 2, California.

Sept. 20, 1956.

Hearing Denied Oct. 17, 1956.

Habeas corpus proceeding for enforcement of claimed rights. The District Court of Appeal, Draper, J. pro tem., held that where points raised by petition had been determined adversely to petitioner in other proceedings or were wholly without merit, writ would be denied but that prisoner was entitled to order restoring civil rights to extent of permitting him to engage counsel for defense of civil action.

Order to show cause discharged and petition denied in all respects save to restore civil rights to limited extent of permitting prisoner to engage counsel for defense of civil action.

1. Convicts ☞6

One imprisoned is still liable to be sued, and this liability necessarily carries with it the right to defend, but the prisoner is not entitled to be personally present at any part of the proceedings. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 2600.

2. Convicts ☞6

Prisoner in state prison was entitled to restoration of civil rights to extent of permitting him to engage counsel for defense of pending civil action. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 2600.

3. Habeas Corpus ☞25(1)

DRAPER, Justice pro tem.

Petitioner is an inmate of San Quentin Prison. By this writ of habeas corpus he seeks enforcement of a number of claimed rights. Petitioner alleges that he has been named as defendant in a civil action brought in Los Angeles County, that he applied to the Adult Authority for restoration of his civil rights to the extent of permitting him to engage named counsel for defense of that action, and that such application was denied. None of these allegations is controverted.

"A sentence of imprisonment in a State prison for any term less than life suspends all the civil rights of the person so sentenced * * *. But the [Adult Authority] may restore to said person during his imprisonment such civil rights as the board may deem proper," with exceptions not material here. Pen.Code, § 2600.

[1] One imprisoned is still liable to be sued, and "this liability necessarily carries with it the right to defend." People v. Lawrence, 140 Cal.App.2d 133, 295 P.2d 4, 6. This right is qualified by the rule that the prisoner is not entitled to be personally present at any part of the proceedings. People v. Lawrence, supra; In re Bagwell, 26 Cal.App.2d 418, 420, 79 P.2d 395.

[2, 3] It follows clearly that the prisoner is entitled to representation by counsel in such a civil proceeding. Certainly his right to defend would be wholly illusory if, lacking the right to be present in person, he could also be denied the right to employ counsel. Thus the application for limited restoration of rights should have been granted.

"The writ of habeas corpus has been allowed to one lawfully in custody as a means of enforcing rights to which, in his confinement, he is entitled." In re Chessman, 44 Cal.2d 1, 9, 279 P.2d 24, 29 and cases cited.

It is therefore ordered that the civil rights of petitioner be and he deemed restored to the limited extent of permitting him to employ counsel to present his defense in the civil action described in his petition.

The other points raised by the petition have been determined adversely to petitioner in other proceedings. People v. McNally, 134 Cal.App.2d 410, 285 P.2d 716; In re McNally, 46 Cal.2d 307, 293 P.2d 777, or are wholly without merit. In all respects save that outlined above, the order to show cause is discharged and the petition denied.

v.

John GODWIN, Defendant and Appellant.
Civ. 5189.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District,
California.

Sept. 24, 1956.

Action against a general contractor for construction of certain school buildings to recover amount stipulated in subcontract for plaintiff's completion of roofing work on buildings. Defendant filed a counterclaim for damages because of a fire, not covered by defendant's insurance policies, during construction work. From a judgment of the Superior Court of San Diego County, Joe L. Shell, J., denying recovery on the counterclaim, defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Burch, J. pro tem., held that demands in counterclaim, based on plaintiff's employees' negligence in causing fire, were not available to defendant after his assignment to his insurer of all his claims for such damages by subrogation receipt for sum paid him by insurer and were abated by insurer's federal court actions against subcontractor on assigned claims and judgments on jury's verdicts for insurer therein.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Contracts ⇨316(1)

A roofing subcontractor's willingness to forego collection of debt due him under subcontract until later date, as accommodation to general contractor for construction of school buildings, pursuant to understanding that general contractor would not pay subcontractor until termination of federal court actions by general contractor's insurer, as such contractor's assignee and subrogee, against subcontractor for damages by fire, caused by subcontractor's employees' negligence, during construction work, did not constitute waiver of general contractor's obligation to subcontractor.

2. Release ⇨35

Neither insured nor insurer may split cause of action for damage to insured's property and bring action therefor against tort-feasor after his release on payment of damages recovered in previous action against him by insured, and insurer failing to protect its right of subrogation cannot be heard to complain.

3. Insurance ⇨606(1)

Release ⇨4

An insurer, by subrogation, acquires all of insured's rights of action against third-party tort-feasor, and release obtained by him with knowledge of such subrogation rights will not avail him.

4. Abatement and Revival ⇨8(1)

Action ⇨53(1)

A party may not split up a single cause of action and make it basis of separate suits, but if he does, first action may be pleaded in abatement of subsequent suit on same claim, as defendant should be protected against vexatious litigation and it is against public policy to permit litigants to consume court's time by relitigating matters already judicially determined or asserting claims which properly should have been settled in prior action.

5. Insurance ⇨606(1)

Under rule against splitting cause of action, a general contractor for construction of school buildings cannot recover from roofing subcontractor damages caused by fire during construction work under counterclaim in subcontractor's action against general contractor on subcontract after general contractor's assignment to his insurer of all his rights against subcontractor by subrogation receipt, even if it conveyed only rights covered by insurance; general contractor, as insured, and his assignee as subrogated insurer, being "privies" and same parties under statute. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc., § 1910.

6. Abatement and Revival ⇨12

Insurance ⇨606(1)

In sub-contractor's action against general contractor for construction of school buildings to recover amount stipulated in sub-contract for completion of roofing work, demands in defendant's counterclaim for damages by fire, caused by negligence of plaintiff's employees during construction work, were not available to defendant after his assignment of all his claims for such damages to his insurer by subrogation receipt in consideration of insurer's payment of insured's claims under policy, and were abated by insurer's prior federal court actions against subcontractor on assigned claims; such actions being for same negligence and damages as counterclaim.

7. Contracts ⇨355

In roofing subcontractor's action against general contractor for construction of school buildings, where Superior Court found that plaintiff fully performed subcontract, and defendant's counterclaim for damages by fire caused by plaintiff's employees during construction work failed of proof because of attempt to split single cause of action for violation of a right which was litigated and fully settled and compromised in federal court action against subcontractor by general contractor's insurer as his assignee and subrogee, plaintiff was entitled to judgment for stipulated price of work performed by him.

Oakes & Horton, San Diego, for appellant.

Edwin C. Jeffries and Luce, Forward, Kunzel & Scripps, San Diego, for respondent.

BURCH, Justice pro tem.

Plaintiff sues on a written contract to recover $5,243, the amount stipulated in the contract for the completion of the roofing work in new construction on school buildings in Lakeside, California. The defendant is the general contractor on said construction. Defendant's answer admits the obligation on the contract and sets up a counterclaim for items of damage in the total sum of $1,671.59, which items were incurred in demolition work and otherwise following a destructive fire during the course of the construction work and were not covered by defendant's insurance policies.

Defendant appeals from a judgment in favor of plaintiff which denied recovery on the counterclaim. The court found that evidence produced at the trial proved the fire resulted from the negligence of plaintiff's employees but that the issue had been adjudicated in favor of plaintiff in certain actions brought in the United States District Court of Southern California, Southern Division, by defendant's insurers as assignees of defendant and subrogated to defendant's rights by reason of the payment of defendant's claims against plaintiff for negligently causing the fire. It was found by the court that the fire occurred on July 1, 1952, in the course of plaintiff's work and that defendant was damaged in the amounts claimed. It was also found that plaintiff completed his roofing subcontract and rendered to defendant his bill for performance on January 26, 1953. The court further found that the fire resulted from the negligence of plaintiff's employees but that plaintiff's negligence had been litigated previously and was res judicata. Finding V reads:

"The Court further finds that any and all claims of defendant arising out of said fire and damage were, prior to the commencement of this action, assigned to General Accident Fire and Life Assurance Corporation, Ltd., on its behalf and on behalf of the other fire insurance companies which had insurance on the said building construction project and that prior hereto all said claims were settled and compromised by the said insurance companies."

It was also found that the insurance companies brought actions on the assigned claims against plaintiff in the Federal Court for the Southern District of California, Southern Division.

Defendant does not dispute the findings stated, except as hereafter noted, nor other findings that the jury rendered a verdict for plaintiff in the federal court action on the assigned claims and that a judgment was entered thereon. He does contest further findings of the trial court that the judgment was res judicata in the present action on the issue of negligence and that the plaintiffs there are in privity with the defendant here, and a further finding of the trial court that an account stated was proved for $5,243.

In the actions by the insurance companies against plaintiff for the fire losses, judgment went for plaintiff following a verdict in his favor. A motion for a new trial was noticed but before a hearing was had, the judge indicated to counsel his intention to grant the motion. At this point, the parties to those actions compromised and settled their claims. Thereupon counsel for the insurance companies agreed that the actions be dismissed and furnished releases to opposing counsel therefor. Defendant, on being informed of this action, made known his refusal to release the plaintiff because of the matters now in suit.

As a result of this refusal, the dismissals were not filed and the record in the federal court showed at the time of trial that the motion for a new trial was denied and that the judgment for plaintiff was duly entered. Mr. Godwin, defendant here, was not a party named but actively participated in the cases in federal court. Counsel for plaintiff here also represented him in the insurers' actions. He testified that he conferred with counsel for the companies, who also represents the defendant in the present action; that because of Mr. Godwin's asserted claim and refusal to release, he proposed to take full advantage of the verdict and judgment should future litigation arise because of defendant's claim.

Counsel for defendant testified that so far as he recalled, he first learned of defendant's claim against plaintiff at the time the insurance cases were settled.

The issues litigated in the federal court, it was evidenced, include the essential issue of negligence to support the counterclaim.

The propriety of the trial court's conclusion that the maintenance of the insurance cases in the federal court on claims assigned by defendant, together with the compromise and settlement of those claims, was ground for abatement of this action, governs the disposition of this appeal.

The fire occurred on July 1, 1952. Plaintiff finished his roofing job and rendered the defendant his statement for $5,243 on January 26, 1953. The assignment by way of receipt on subrogation was dated August 8, 1952. As far as material, it provides as follows:

"Subrogation Receipt

"Received of the General Accident Fire & Life Ins. Co. Company the sum of Four thousand, seven hundred eighty-seven and 88/100 Dollars ($4,787.88) in full satisfaction of all claims and demands of the undersigned against the said company under its policy No. 562254 arising from or connected with any loss or damage by reason of Hot tar bucket accidentally spilled and communicated to Building which loss or damage occurred on or about the 1st day of July, 1952.

"In consideration of and to the extent of said payment, the undersigned hereby subrogates, assigns and transfers to the said company all the rights, claims, demands and interest which the undersigned has or may have against any parties for said loss or damage, and said company is hereby authorized and empowered to sue, compromise or settle same in the name of the undersigned or otherwise, but for the sole use of said company and at its own cost. * * * and said company is hereby constituted the attorney-in-fact for the undersigned for said purposes and to sign releases * * * that may be necessary in the prosecution, litigation or settlement of said claims * * * The undersigned has not released and will not release any portion of said claims. * * *

This document is signed by defendant and the Lakeside Union School District.

[1] Defendant alleged as affirmative matter in his answer that the parties had "an understanding" that defendant would not pay plaintiff his bill until the federal court litigation, begun June 11, 1953, was terminated. This litigation terminated in February, 1955, which is also the time in which the plaintiff's present action was filed.

We do not think that plaintiff's willingness to forego the collection of the debt due him until the later date, as an accommodation to defendant, constituted a waiver of defendant's obligation to him. That evidence might bear upon the finding of an account stated but it does not effect the questions of abatement by the assignments, splitting the cause of action, and the compromise and settlement of the claims.

[2, 3] As to these questions, a situation somewhat similar occurred in Kidd v. Hillman, 14 Cal.App.2d 507, 58 P.2d 662.

The defendant was charged with negligence in causing an automobile collision and was sued therefor by the victim. Damages were recovered and the defendant given a release. The victim was insured and the insurance company instituted a further action in the name of the victim after judgment in the prior action. Two grounds of decision are pertinent here, 14 Cal.App.2d at page 510, 58 P.2d at page 663:

"* * * an insured may not split his cause of action, and the insurer is in no better position than the insured. * * * She cannot now pursue appellant [after releasing the tortfeasor] in another action for damage to her property arising out of the same accident. * * *

"Appellant has been subjected to two actions. He should not be harassed by a third. It was the duty of the insurer to protect its right of subrogation, assuming it had such right. Not having done so, it cannot now be heard to complain."

The Kidd case is also authority for the proposition that by subrogation the insurer acquires all the rights of action of the insured and a release obtained with knowledge of subrogation rights would not avail the tort-feasor. Citing Bernhard v. Del-luitante, 5 Cal.App.2d 585, 43 P.2d 338.

[4] Wulfjen v. Dolton, 24 Cal.2d 891, 151 P.2d 846, was an action for damages for fraud. The court carefully defined the reasons underlying the rule against splitting a cause of action. We quote from page 894 of 24 Cal.2d, page 848 of 151 P.2d of the opinion:

"It is clearly established that a party may not split up a single cause of action and make it the basis of separate suits, and in such case the first action may be pleaded in abatement of any subsequent suit on the same claim."

The court then states the reasons for the rule 24 Cal.2d at page 895, 151 P.2d at page 848:

"(1) That the defendant should be protected against vexatious litigation; and (2) that it is against public policy to permit litigants to consume the time of the courts by relitigating matters already judicially determined, or by asserting claims which properly should have been settled in some prior action. Thus, it is said in Bingham v. Kearney, supra, 136 Cal. [175] at page 177, 68 P. [597] at page 597: 'It is not the policy of the law to allow a new and different suit between the same parties, concerning the same subject-matter, that has already been litigated. Neither will the law allow the parties to trifle with the courts by piecemeal litigation.'"

[5] The subrogation receipt by its terms conveyed away any and all rights of defendant against plaintiff. But if it were interpreted to convey only the rights covered by the insurance, defendant is met with the rule against splitting a cause of action. Defendant, as the insured, and his assignees, as subrogated insurers, are "privies" and the same parties under section 1910 of the Code of Civil Procedure. California State Auto. Ass'n v. Brunella, 14 Cal.App.2d 464, 58 P.2d 694.

[6] The counterclaim in this action is based on plaintiff's negligence in causing the fire and the damages sought to be recovered in the federal action were for the same negligence, and, moreover, the same damages. We conclude that defendant's demands in his counterclaim are no longer available to him by the assignment and they are abated by the prior actions.

[7] The setoffs alleged in the counterclaim are not proved. They fail because of an attempt to split a single cause of action for the violation of a right. This right has not only been litigated but fully settled and compromised in the federal court action. We deem it unnecessary to consider whether or not there has been an account stated. 4 Cal.Jur.2d, Appeal and Error, p. 382, sec. 531; Colorado Corp., Ltd. v. Smith, 121 Cal.App.2d 374, 377, 263 P.2d

79, 81. In the case last cited the court says: "Since these findings alone support the judgment, it is unnecessary to discuss the sufficiency of the evidence to support the remaining findings." We conclude that the judgment is supported by the findings that the plaintiff fully performed his contract and since the counterclaim fails of proof, plaintiff is entitled to judgment for the stipulated price of the work performed.

The judgment is affirmed.

The PEOPLE of the State of California,
Plaintiff and Respondent,
v.

Abel Torres GAMBOA, Billie Jean Tercero and Rudolfo Murus Casarez, Defendants, Abel Torres Gamboa, Appellant.
Cr. 5542.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 1, California.
Sept. 24, 1956.

Proceedings on a petition for writ of error coram nobis. From an order of the Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Clement D. Nye, J., denying the petition, the petitioner appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Fourn, J., held that the writ is not proper vehicle for vindicating constitutional rights and may not be used to challenge legality of evidence admitted on trial of criminal action.

Affirmed.

1. Criminal Law — 1081

Even though notice of appeal from denial of petition for writ of error coram nobis was not timely filed, reviewing court would consider matter on merits where attorney general had made no motion to dismiss appeal and it appeared (1) that defendant, who had been confined in state prison when his petition was filed, had attached thereto a notice of appeal with a request that the clerk file the same in event his petition for writ of error coram nobis was denied and (2) that such purported notice had been found premature. West's Ann.Rules on Appeal, rule 31.

2. Criminal Law §997(1)

Office of writ of error coram nobis is to bring to attention of trial court errors of fact which, without negligence on part of defendant, were not presented to court at time of trial.

3. Criminal Law §997(2, 6)

A writ of error coram nobis never issues to correct error of law or to redress an irregularity occurring at trial which could be corrected on motion for new trial or by an appeal.

4. Criminal Law §997(2)

Writ of error coram nobis cannot be used to serve purpose of appeal when that remedy was lost through failure to invoke it in time, even though such failure occurred without fault or neglect on part of one seeking remedy.

5. Criminal Law §997(5)

A writ of error coram nobis is not proper vehicle for vindicating constitutional rights.

6. Criminal Law §997(4)

Writ of error coram nobis may not be used to challenge legality of evidence admitted in trial court.

This case commenced with a filing of an information by the District Attorney of Los Angeles County charging the defendant Gamboa and two other defendants with violation of section 11500 of the Health and Safety Code and alleging that the defendants, on the 8th day of November, 1954, had in their possession a preparation of heroin. A prior felony conviction and service of a term of imprisonment therefor was alleged as to Gamboa, namely conviction of grand theft. A prior narcotic conviction was charged as to the co-defendant Casarez.

The defendants were represented by counsel and were duly arraigned and made a motion under section 995 of the Penal Code, which motion was denied as to Gamboa. A co-defendant, Tercero, entered a plea of guilty at such time. Defendants Gamboa and Casarez entered pleas of not guilty and denied the prior convictions alleged. The matter proceeded to trial, the People's case being submitted on the preliminary transcript, and the trial court adjudged each defendant guilty and found the prior convictions true.

Gamboa's application for probation was denied and he was sentenced to the state prison for the term prescribed by law. It was ordered that the sentence run concurrently with any time owing on parole. Judgment was entered March 24, 1955. No appeal was taken from the judgment.

On or about August 22, 1955, there was filed in the superior court a document entitled "Petition for writ of error coram nobis, writ of habeas corpus, recall of remittitur and for the order to show cause why the writ or writs should not be granted."

In his petition the defendant Gamboa alleged that he was illegally charged with joint possession of narcotics and that the defendant's constitutional guarantees were violated when the officer entered and searched him and co-defendants without a warrant. The petition for writ of error coram nobis was denied on August 23, 1955. A purported notice of appeal filed at the same time as the petition was found to be premature and of no force and effect. The clerk was thereupon directed to send a certified copy of the order to Gamboa at the state prison at Represa.

FOURT, Justice.

This is an appeal from an order denying defendant's petition for writ of error coram nobis.

Thereafter, on the 7th day of September, 1955, there was filed with the Clerk of the Superior Court a document entitled "Notice of Appeal". This document bore a postmark at Represa of September 1, 1955. It would appear that the defendant filed his notice of appeal from the order of denial of his petition at a time beyond the period provided in the Rules on Appeal (Rule 31, Rules on Appeal).

[1] Since appellant was confined in the state prison at Represa and since, when his petition was filed in the superior court, appellant attached thereto a notice of appeal requesting the Clerk of the Superior Court to file the same in the event his petition for writ of error coram nobis was denied and the court found said notice of appeal to be premature, we are nevertheless disposed to consider the matter on the merits. People v. Olgin, 137 Cal.App.2d 286, 290 P.2d 77; Mendez v. Superior Court, 137 Cal.App.2d 465, 466, 467, 290 P.2d 270. While it is true appellant made no showing to excuse the delayed filing, neither did the attorney general move to dismiss the appeal, contenting himself with calling the matter to our attention when he filed his brief in reply to appellant's opening brief. Had a formal motion to dismiss been made, appellant would have had an opportunity to present the reasons for the belated filing of his notice of appeal.

[2] Repeatedly it has been said that the writ of error coram nobis is a limited writ aimed at reaching errors of fact outside of the record and is available only where no other remedies exist. The office of the writ is to bring to the attention of the trial court errors of fact, which, without negligence on the part of the defendant, were not presented to the court at the time of trial. People v. Tuthill, 32 Cal.2d 819, 821, 198 P.2d 505; People v. Gennaitte, 127 Cal.App.2d 544, 548, 274 P.2d 169.

[3] A writ of error coram nobis never issues to correct an error of law or to redress an irregularity occurring at the trial which could be corrected on motion for a new trial or by an appeal. People v. Martinez, 88 Cal.App.2d 767, 771, 199 P.2d 375.

[4] It is very well settled that where the remedy of the motion for a new trial or appeal exists, the writ is not available. And the writ cannot be used to serve the purpose of an appeal when this remedy was lost through failure to invoke it in time, even though such failure occurred without fault or neglect on the part of the one seeking the remedy. People v. Mooney, 178 Cal. 525, 529, 174 P. 325; People v. Pryor, 87 Cal.App.2d 352, 353, 196 P.2d 948.

In this instance the appellant did not state a ground entitling him to the issuance of a writ of error coram nobis and therefore the appeal is without merit. If the petition be deemed a petition for habeas corpus, the appellant improperly directed the petition. He could not apply to the court below for "Recall of Remittitur".

[5] The writ of error coram nobis is not the proper vehicle for vindicating constitutional rights. People v. Adamson, 34 Cal.2d 320, 327, 210 P.2d 13.

[6] The writ of error may not be used to challenge the legality of evidence admitted in the trial court. It has been settled that a charge that evidence was illegally obtained does not support an application for writ of error coram nobis. People v. Collins, 136 Cal.App.2d 756, 757-758, 289 P.2d 302.

It is our opinion that the defendant has stated no ground entitling him to a writ of error coram nobis, and that the action of the trial court in denying the petition was proper.

The order is affirmed.

BANK OF AMERICA NATIONAL TRUST & SAVINGS ASSOCIATION, Plaintiff and Respondent,

v.

E. A. TALIAFERRO, Defendant and Appellant.
Civ. 16934.

District Court of Appeal, First District,
Division 2, California.

Sept. 24, 1956.

Action by bank, as assignee of conditional sales contract, for conversion of refrigerator by defendant. The Superior Court, County of Contra Costa, Thomas Coakley, J., entered judgment for bank and defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal held that objection that assigned conditional sales contract was inadmissible as hearsay because not executed by any of the parties to the action, was insufficient to raise question of validity of its execution, and by introduction of contract into evidence, bank made a prima facie case of its title and right to possession and cast burden on defendant to prove an interest from conditional vendee sufficient to constitute defense against claim of conversion.

Affirmed.

1. Evidence ⇨314(1), 318(1)

Written or oral utterances which are not merely statements or assertions offered as evidence of truth of what is stated, but acts in themselves constituting legal results in issue in the case, do not come under hearsay rule.

2. Evidence ⇨318(1)

Where assignee of conditional sales contract brought action for conversion of refrigerator covered by contract against person other than purchaser, conditional sales contract and the assignment on the back thereof were not subject to hearsay rule.

3. Trial ⇨149

Where party does not question the due execution or delivery of a contract, it is a waiver of such objection and an admission of genuineness, equivalent to proof thereof.

4. Appeal and Error ⇨231(7)

Objection that contract was hearsay, incompetent, irrelevant and immaterial was insufficient to reserve for purpose of appeal the ground of lack of foundation or lack of proof of due execution, notwithstanding appellant's cursory reference in stated objection to a contract purportedly signed by certain person.

5. Trial ⇨83(1)

Objection to admission of evidence must be made in a manner that clearly informs the court of point on which a ruling is desired and the proponent of the defect to be corrected.

6. Sales ⇨475

In action by assignee of conditional sales contract for conversion of property subject to such contract by one other than conditional purchaser, where evidence showed that contract was acquired by assignee by virtue of undated assignment and purchaser named therein failed to make any payment according to the contract, there was sufficient proof of assignment prior to conversion when it could be inferred from the testimony that the bank became entitled to possession of refrigerator on day after first payment was due under contract and that assignment had taken place prior to such date.

7. Landlord and Tenant ⇨161(1)

Where tenant failed to pay rent due and vacated premises, in which she left a refrigerator, landlord had a right to remove and store refrigerator.

8. Landlord and Tenant ⇨161(1)

Where landlord took possession of a refrigerator left on premises vacated by tenant who had failed to pay his rent, landlord became a bailee of the refrigerator and held under tenant as bailor.

9. Sales ⇨480(4)

In action by assignee of conditional sales contract for conversion of refrigerator removed from premises by landlord after tenant, the conditional purchaser, had vacated premises without paying rent, both assignee and landlord claimed a common source of interest, and by introduction of unperformed conditional sales contract assignee made out a prima facie case of title and right to possession and shifted burden to landlord to prove interest from another source sufficient to constitute a defense against assignee's claim of conversion.

10. Sales ◊480(4½)

In action by assignee of conditional sales contract for conversion of refrigerator covered by such contract, whether evidence proved identity of refrigerator taken by defendant and the one mentioned in the contract was a question of fact.

E. A. Taliaferro in pro. per.

H. H. Bechtel, George Chadwick, Jr.,
Oakland, for respondent.

PER CURIAM.

This is an appeal by defendant from a judgment for $200, the stipulated value of a Frigidaire refrigerator, found to have been converted by him. The action was originally brought in Justice Court as an action in claim and delivery. Counterclaims which caused it to be transferred to the Superior Court are not involved in the appeal. A motion to amend the complaint to allege conversion was there granted. The appeal is restricted to two points: (1) Insufficiency of the evidence to show that plaintiff was owner of the refrigerator and entitled to its possession; (2) Insufficiency of the evidence to show that the refrigerator allegedly taken by defendant was the one of which plaintiff claimed ownership.

Plaintiff, herein further called the Bank, based its claim on an assignment by seller of a conditional sales contract dated March 26, 1952 by which a certain Ruth Sheffield bought a specific refrigerator from said seller, Wiseman's. The contract was received in evidence, over defendant's objection, to be discussed later. The contract, made on a printed form of the Bank, provided for payment of the installments to the Bank, the first to be made on May 9, 1952 and on its reverse contained the assignment to the Bank for value received (sale) of the contract and the property therein described. Mr. Bruner, an employee of the Bank, testified without objection that said contract was acquired by the Bank, that the purchaser failed to make any payment and that on May 10, 1952, the Bank under the contract became entitled to the possession of the refrigerator.

The contract provided also that the refrigerator was accepted and would be kept by purchaser at 2607 Standard Avenue, San Pablo. The evidence showed that this property was owned by defendant and that Ruth Sheffield was the tenant of a downstairs apartment in it. She vacated the apartment in August 1952 as a result of a three days notice served on her by defendant because of a delinquency in rent. When she left she took everything she had in the apartment with her except a refrigerator. She told a neighbor, Mrs. Vanderveer, that she wasn't able to pay for it, that Wiseman's was to pick it up and that she wanted Mrs. Vanderveer to watch for it. (The testimony of Mrs. Vanderveer to this effect was admitted without objection.) Ruth Sheffield had shown her her new refrigerator in her apartment and she had seen it there also the night Ruth Sheffield moved. The next afternoon she saw it moved out of the back door of the apartment and loaded on a pick-up truck by men of whom she recognized two as named employees of defendant and the driver as a brother of defendant. She took pictures of the event which were received in evidence. A brother of defendant, Richard Taliaferro, testified that at the time Sheffield moved out they moved a refrigerator out of her apartment which looked like a new one, he thought a Frigidaire. He was then working for his brother next to the apartment house. The witness' truck was used in removing the refrigerator, driven by his brother David. Two or three months thereafter defendant said to him and David: "I got a stool pigeon working for me somewhere. Somebody told the Bank where the refrigerator is." Defendant then told his employee Brown that he wanted the refrigerator moved the next morning.

Appellant's contention that the written conditional sales contract with assignment was not a proper part of the record is without merit. Before the contract had been actually offered appellant made the following objection: "we'll make the objection that this is purportedly signed by a party by the name of Ruth Sheffield as buyer, and Wiseman's as seller, and insofar as that is concerned, that is a contract between two parties who are not in as parties to this suit, and it would be hearsay insofar as the defendant to the suit is concerned. In other words, this party was not present or participating in the transaction, and it would be hearsay, incompetent, irrelevant and immaterial." (Ruth Sheffield had originally been made a party defendant, but was dismissed as such at the trial because she could not be found.) The objection was overruled subject to motion to strike. After Mr. Bruner had testified as stated the contract was offered in evidence but only marked for identification. At the end of the trial the contract was received in evidence over defendant's renewed objection as follows: "I am going to make the same objection to the contract, that I think it's hearsay involving two parties that are not part of this matter." Said objection was then overruled. No further evidence with respect to the contract had been received except that defendant in cross-examining Mr. Bruner brought out that the witness had not seen the contract signed by Ruth Sheffield or by Florine Beardsley (who signed for Wiseman's).

[1,2] The objection that the contract with the assignment was hearsay was correctly overruled. Utterances, written or oral, which are not merely statements or assertions offered as evidence of the truth of what is stated, but acts in themselves constituting legal results in issue in the case, like in our case the conclusion of the conditional sales contract and the assignment do not come under the hearsay rule. 31 C.J.S., Evidence, §§ 260-261, pp. 1012-1014; VI Wigmore on Evidence, §§ 1766, 1768(3), 1770; Jones on Evidence, 3d Ed., § 300; Security Trust & Savings Bank v. Carrier, 107 Cal.App. 333, 336-337, 290 P. 458; Melkon v. H. B. Kirk & Co., 232 App. Div. 134, 249 N.Y.S. 229; Kansas City Southern Ry. Co. v. Keffer, 96 Okl. 63, 220 P. 361, 362; Naylor v. Washtenaw Circuit Judge, 250 Mich. 698, 231 N.W. 85, 88; Claggeet v. Chicago M. & St. P. Ry. Co., 156 Minn. 37, 193 N.W. 957; Republic Creosoting Co. v. Foulkes Contracting Co., 103 Ind.App. 457, 8 N.E.2d 416, 417.

[3-5] Appellant urges on appeal that the introduction of the contract required the laying of a proper foundation by showing of due execution and delivery. It is true that, if such objection had been made in the court below, it would have been good. Ten Winkel v. Anglo California S. Co., 11 Cal.2d 707, 720, 81 P.2d 958. However, if the opponent does not question the due execution or delivery (Genuineness) by objection, such is a waiver of the objection and an admission of genuineness, equivalent to proof thereof. The ground of the rule is that the proponent would have had opportunity to obviate the objection if it had been made at the trial. VII Wigmore, supra, 576; Burnett v. Lyford, 93 Cal. 114, 117, 28 P. 855; Shain v. Sullivan, 106 Cal. 208, 211, 39 P. 606; Burke v. Watts, 188 Cal. 118, 127, 204 P. 578; French v. Atlas Milling Co., 17 Cal. App. 226, 227-228, 119 P. 203; Tilden Lumber & Mill Co. v. Bacon Land Co., 116 Cal.App. 689, 692, 3 P.2d 350. The objection that the evidence is hearsay, incompetent, irrelevant and immaterial is insufficient to reserve for purpose of appeal the ground of lack of foundation or of lack of proof of due execution. Burke v. Watts, supra. Appellant contends that his cursory reference to a contract purportedly signed sufficiently expressed his intention to object for lack of foundation. We do not agree. An objection must be made in such a manner that it clearly informs the court of the point on which a ruling is desired and the proponent of the defect to be corrected. The defect of lack of foundation was not so pointed out. That appellant's attorney was himself not clearly aware of said objection is shown by the fact that when he restated his objection at the end of the trial, no reference whatever to lack of foundation was made, not even by implication. It must be noted that because of the ruling subject to motion to strike (which was not made) and the admission of the contract for identification only the first objection and ruling were preliminary and the last objection and ruling the decisive ones.

[6] Appellant contends that there is no evidence that the assignment had taken place prior to the time of the conversion, because the assignment is not separately dated. However, it can be inferred from the testimony of the witness Bruner, received without objection, that the contract was acquired by the Bank, that the purchaser named therein failed to make any payment and that according to the contract the Bank of America became entitled to possession of the refrigerator named on May 10, 1952, that the assignment had taken place prior to said date. (Such is in accord with the normal procedure with respect to such contracts, which are immediately assigned to the financing company; the form used shows the same intention as it provides for execution in triplicate, the original to go to the Bank, and reserves room for one date for the transaction only.)

[7-9] Appellant further contends that the contract at any rate does not prove that Wiseman's, from whom the Bank derived what title and right of possession it had, originally had title; as no other proof of the title of Wiseman's was offered, the Bank's proof of right is said to be insufficient. The contention is technical and unsound. Appellant as landlord had the right to remove and store the refrigerator left by Ruth Sheffield on the premises. 52 C.J.S., Landlord and Tenant, § 790, p. 713. By taking possession appellant became bailee of the refrigerator, holding it under Ruth Sheffield as bailor. 8 C.J.S., Bailments, § 15, pp. 249-250. As to Ruth Sheffield, who possessed the refrigerator under the written contract from Wiseman's, no proof of the title of Wiseman's was required, 31 C.J.S., Estoppel, §§ 127-128, pp. 395, 396, if the action was brought by Wiseman's and also if it was brought by the Bank, as Wiseman's was the common source of the interests of the Bank and of Ruth Sheffield. Cf. Central Nat. Bank of Oakland v. Bell, 5 Cal.2d 324, 328-329, 54 P.2d 1107. Appellant, as bailee of Ruth Sheffield, is in the same position. It makes no difference that appellant did not claim under Ruth Sheffield, but preferred not to show the weakness of his hand and to rely on denials only, as the Bank's evidence shows his dependence on the interest of Ruth Sheffield. By doing so the Bank made out a prima facie case, after which the defendant had the burden of proving an interest from another source, sufficient to constitute a defense against the Bank's claim of conversion. Cf. Blume v. MacGregor, 64 Cal.App.2d 244, 254 et seq., 148 P.2d 656; Wagner v. Blume, 71 Cal.App.2d 94, 102, 161 P.2d 1001. No proof of any kind was offered by defendant.

[10] Whether the evidence stated proved the identity of the refrigerator taken by appellant and the one mentioned in the contract is a question of weight decided by the trial court against appellant. No proof of identity of number was essential. It can certainly not be said that no inference of identity could reasonably be drawn therefrom; whether it should be drawn was then solely for the trier of facts. Blank v. Coffin, 20 Cal.2d 457, 461, 126 P.2d 868.

The sufficiency of the evidence to show acts of conversion is not attacked. The secretion of the refrigerator and the continued refusal to return it evidently suffice.

Willard F. PETERSEN et al., Plaintiffs and Respondents,

v.

R. D. LANG et al., Defendants and Appellants.

Civ. 16901.

District Court of Appeal, First District,
Division 2, California.

Sept. 17, 1956.

Rehearing Denied Oct. 17, 1956.

Action to recover for services alleged to have been performed at the request of defendants in connection with development of a supermarket. The Superior Court, Marin County, J. F. Good, J., rendered judgment for the plaintiffs and defendants appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Kaufman, J., held that where findings of trial court were based on an implied contract to pay the reasonable value of services rendered and other findings precluded such a judgment, and it was not possible to determine which findings the judgment was based on, the judgment would be reversed.

Judgment reversed.

1. Work and Labor ⇨28(2)

In action for services alleged to have been performed at the request of defendants in connection with the development of a supermarket, evidence was insufficient to support finding that defendants had verbally employed plaintiffs to prepare or assist in preparing a design for a market.

2. Work and Labor ⇨28(2)

In action for services alleged to have been performed at request of defendants in connection with the development of a supermarket, evidence was sufficient to support a finding that plaintiffs had prepared or assisted in preparing leases.

3. Work and Labor ⇨28(2)

In action for services alleged to have been performed at request of defendants in connection with the development of a supermarket, evidence was insufficient to support finding that defendants had agreed to pay plaintiffs an amount equal to reasonable value of services rendered in assisting defendants in finally executing a lease with the prospective tenants and discontinuing solicitation of other prospects.

4. Appeal and Error ⇨1071(1)

If findings on either an express contract or an implied contract are sufficient to support judgment, findings on unsupported count may be disregarded, but if findings do not have sufficient clarity so that it is possible to determine what the theory of the trial court may have been, the judgment cannot stand.

5. Work and Labor ⇨5(1)

Where no fixture salesman was given exclusive right to choose tenants for a market owner, there was no obligation on the part of the market owner either contractual or moral to compensate fixture salesmen for service which they were rendering primarily to promote contracts between themselves and the proposed tenant.

6. Contracts ⇨56

If oral contract obligated plaintiffs to assist defendants in getting certain prospective tenants for a supermarket signed to leases and to desist in soliciting others, and if defendants made contract under belief that plaintiffs' influence would be an important factor in closing the deal with the prospective tenants, there would be a sufficient consideration to support defendants' promise to pay.

7. Damages ⇨118

If there is a valid express contract, recovery must be measured by its terms.

8. Appeal and Error ⇨1071(1)

In action to recover for services alleged to have been performed at request of defendants in connection with development of a supermarket, where evidence supported finding that defendants had orally employed plaintiffs and would have supported finding of implied promise to pay reasonable value of services but did not support finding that there was an express agreement to pay reasonable value of services, uncertainties and apparent conflict in essential findings required reversal of judgment.

McFarland, Laumeister & Ferdon, San Francisco, for appellants.

Gardiner, Riede & Elliott, San Rafael, for respondents.

KAUFMAN, Justice.

Defendants appeal from a judgment rendered in favor of plaintiffs in the sum of $5,940, in an action brought to recover for services alleged to have been performed at the request of defendants and appellants in connection with the development of a supermarket in San Francisco. The action is based on counts II and IV of the first amended complaint, counts I and III having been dismissed on motion of plaintiffs.

Count II of the complaint alleged that appellants doing business as Lang Construction Company owned certain real property in San Francisco upon which there is presently constructed the "Alemany Super Market"; that appellants verbally employed respondents to prepare or assist in preparing a design for a commercial structure of the kind now existing on appellants' premises, and that they also then employed respondents to find and assist in getting tenants signed up on leases therefor. It was further alleged that respondent, Willard Petersen, was engaged in the business of selling marketing equipment to persons conducting food markets, and that in endeavoring to procure tenants for said supermarket, respondent with the knowledge and consent of appellants, R. D. Lang, Jr., and Boyd R. Lang, endeavored to procure contracts with said tenants for the fixture business; that he procured the tenants, Angelo and Vincent Nicolai, Vincent and Raymond Palmmini and Roy Beckman who were willing to lease the entire premises. Respondent was unable, however, to secure a contract for the market equipment from these prospective tenants, and it is alleged, appellants were so informed. Respondents advised appellants that they could secure other tenants with whom they could negotiate a contract for such business. It is then alleged that appellants agreed that if respondents would consummate the lease with the above named prospective tenants and refrain from soliciting others, appellants would pay respondents a commission for all of their services to be computed on the amount of profit respondent would otherwise have made if he had procured the fixture contract, and that such reasonable profit was $12,000; that respondents proceeded to consummate a lease with the aforementioned tenants, hence appellants are indebted to respondents in the sum of $12,000.

The fourth count of the amended complaint re-alleged the principal paragraphs of count II with the exception of the paragraph concerned with the special contract to refrain from soliciting other tenants and help conclude negotiations with the first five prospective tenants. It alleged that all of said services had been performed at the special instance and request of appellants, and were of the reasonable value of $12,000.

Respondent Willard Petersen had been in the business of promoting supermarkets since 1946. His usual procedure was to find a suitable location for such a market, then contact the owners of the property to find out if they would be willing to construct such market providing suitable tenants could be found. Respondent would then proceed to find such tenants, and would write fixture contracts with them. Leases would be executed between the tenants and the property owner. Respondents' compensation was always secured from profit on the fixture contracts with the tenants. Respondent Petersen, who also held a general contractor's license, would begin by drawing up floor plans for a market, showing thereon the space for each department and placement of fixtures.

The Lang brothers, appellants therein, were associated in the real estate business, and employed a salesman, Mr. Evans, who was a brother-in-law of respondent Petersen. Petersen also had office space at Lang Realty in San Francisco. He too held a real estate salesman's license under a San Anselmo broker, the other respondent herein, Columbus Pierce.

In 1951, while concerned with the promotion of the Cal Mart, another supermarket in which the Langs were interested, the matter of developing the Alemany Super Market was first discussed. Respondent saw each of the five prospective tenants who were later accepted, between ten and fifteen times, and two general meetings with the group were held at the Lang office. The group talks began with discussion of placement of fixtures, and led up to the matter of respondents' selling them. The plans which respondent prepared for the layout of fixtures was, he testified, the plan ultimately used by the tenants. Petersen was, however, unable to secure the fixture contract from these tenants on a basis that would be satisfactory to him. It was the custom of fixture men in endeavoring to promote a deal, to prepare drawings of the premises showing the layout of fixtures. Petersen himself testified that the preparation of such drawings is customary with fixture men in the promotion of markets. Lang testified that it was common practice to work with fixture men in finding out about tenants, and that he contacted several to let them know that the market was available. Respondent stated that the placement and the type of fixtures in the completed market were with minor changes the same as recommended in his design. Lang admitted that Petersen had worked with him in the design and assisted in the drawing up of sketches, but claimed that respondent has done no more than some of the other fixture men.

Appellants had owned the Alemany property for about two years prior to 1951, and were anxious to get something developed on it. Respondent Petersen began looking for tenants in the summer of 1951. Lang admitted that he expected that Petersen and other fixture men to whom he gave the plan would be out looking for prospective tenants for him. Rudy Lang was aware of respondent's negotiations with the five prospective tenants and had given his approval.

Boyd Lang testified that one meeting of the prospective tenants was held in Petersen's office in the rear of the Lang Realty Company, that on this occasion Petersen and Baher, a partner of Petersen's, were present, as well as Jerry Evans, Lang's salesman. The terms of the lease were discussed at this meeting. Such a lease was ultimately entered into by these tenants.

Petersen testified that he first put Evans in touch with these tenants. He stated that Evans was to handle the real estate end of the deal, and respondent the fixture end when negotiations were first begun concerning the Cal Mart. Evans was not very active, according to respondent, in connection with the Alemany deal. Three of the tenants of Cal Mart were also three of the five tenants who signed the lease for the Alemany market. Petersen learned in the process of fixturizing the Cal Mart that he could not get an exclusive right to fixturize a market, as the tenants would not stand for that sort of agreement.

After negotiating between this group of tenants and the appellants, respondent Petersen found that they were not going to buy their fixtures from him. He then told appellants that he could get other tenants who would buy from him, and with whom he was negotiating for leases. Appellants, however, wished to keep the first group of tenants because of their sound financial position. Rudy Lang told respondent Petersen that "rather than lose them he felt that he would rather pay us." Lang wanted respondents to continue and not interfere with present negotiations, and that if they would rather pay them the profit they would make on the fixtures rather than lose these tenants. He said he would pay them such profit if they would abstain from trying to get other tenants. One of appellants testified that this conversation did not occur but in his deposition stated that he didn't believe that there was such a conversation, but that it "could have happened." Petersen testified that he did cease other negotiations as requested which made it possible for them to consummate the lease, and that it was likely that the lease would not have been possible if respondents had not so acted, as appellants had had several possible tenants up to the point of signing who had "backed up."

Respondent Petersen testified that the minimum cost of fixturing on this market was $60,000, and that the normal profit expected by fixture men on such contracts is from 17 to 19 per cent.

The case was reopened for further testimony on the reasonable value of the services rendered, following a memorandum opinion by the trial judge indicating that a percentage of the real estate commission on such a lease would probably be a measure of reasonable value. Testimony was offered that such a commission would be in the sum of $5,940. The judgment in favor of respondents was entered for that sum.

Appellants contend that the findings of the trial court are indefinite, inconsistent, fail to disclose the basis for the decision, and are not supported by the evidence. The contention has merit and finds support in the record as hereinafter pointed out.

[1] Finding IV which finds all the allegations of paragraph XIII of the first amended complaint to be true is attacked as unsupported by the evidence. That paragraph of the complaint alleged that defendants verbally employed plaintiffs to prepare or assist in preparing a design for a market. Appellant is correct in stating that there is no evidence to support such a promise. There is evidence that respondent as well as others in this line of business were contacted to submit plans to appellants and were asked to contact prospective tenants. Respondent's own evidence, as well as that of other witnesses, is to the effect that men in the market fixture business customarily solicited prospective tenants for market owners in order to get the fixture business for themselves, and that they looked to the profit on such contracts with tenants for all of their compensation. Respondent

Petersen himself testified that appellants had given him no guarantee that he had the exclusive right to select the future tenants. There was also evidence that Mr. Evans, a brother-in-law of Petersen, was the leasing agent for appellants. There is no evidence of an employment of respondents in the preliminary stages of the market development. Respondents were assisting appellants to find tenants in order that respondents might profit by selling equipment to said tenants.

[2] Finding V finds that respondents "prepared, or assisted in preparing leases." Respondent Petersen testified that Rudy Lang wanted him to continue and not to interfere with the negotiations with the five prospective tenants, that after that conversation he sat in on the next meeting with the prospective tenants "where some of the finer points were brought out on the building and the differences, what the tenants wanted and what the Langs needed, and from that time on we did nothing, we just dropped out of the picture." Viewing this testimony most favorably to the respondents it may be said that it is subject to the interpretation that they participated in preparations concerned with the terms of the lease. It is true that Petersen testified that he did not prepare the lease that was ultimately signed on November 20, 1950, but this could mean that he did not actually assist in the mechanical work of drafting it. It appears, therefore, that there is evidentiary support for the finding.

[3] In finding VII, the trial court stated that defendants "would pay to said plaintiffs an amount equal to the reasonable value of said services." It was Petersen's testimony that appellants had promised him the profit that he would have made if he could have secured the fixture contract in return for his assistance in concluding the deal with the five tenants which appellants desired instead of the new prospects suggested by him. Petersen's co-partner, Baher, testified that Rudy Lang had pointed out the financial soundness of these tenants when Petersen had suggested the others with which he could do business. He reported that Lang said "don't lose them * * * and we will pay you the profit that you derive off of these fixtures, this fixture business." Baher also testified that Petersen had three other prospective tenants from whom he was practically certain of getting the fixture business and that the sum of $60,000 for said fixtures was agreeable to one of them.

It is apparent from the findings that the trial judge believed that a promise to pay had been made to respondents for not upsetting the final signing up of these financially desirable tenants. It is clear that he disbelieved the testimony that the profit on a fixture contract was to be the measure of the compensation. There is, of course, no direct evidence in the record as to what price was agreed upon by appellants in return for respondents' favorable attitude toward the five tenants and their discontinuance of negotiations with others. There is certainly no direct evidence that they expressly agreed that appellants would pay respondents an "amount equal to the reasonable value of said services." Having found that the profit was not agreed upon as the measure of compensation, the court then goes on to find that "it is not true that the reasonable profit plaintiffs would have made, if they had procured such contracts for said fixture business * * * was or is in the amount of $12,000, but the same was or would have been equal to or in excess of $5,940." The only testimony supporting the sum of $5,940 is that such a sum would be a real estate salesman's commission on the lease which was executed by appellants and the five tenants. This sum is in no way related by the evidence herein to the profit on a possible fixture contract.

This finding apparently attempts to find that an express contract was entered into to pay respondents' compensation for assisting appellants in finally executing a lease with the highly prized prospective tenants, and for discontinuing solicitation of other prospects. It is, however, contradictory in certain respects and in other respects, as noted above, is unsupported by the evidence if it is to be interpreted as stating that there was an express agreement that reasonable value of the services was the measure of compensation.

[4] If the findings on either the express contract or the implied contract are sufficient to support the judgment, the findings on the unsupported count may, of course, be disregarded. Baird v. Ocequeda, 8 Cal.2d 700, 67 P.2d 1055. But if the findings do not have sufficient clarity so that it is possible to determine what the theory of the trial court may have been, the judgment cannot stand. Block v. D. W. Nicholson Corp., 77 Cal.App.2d 739, 176 P.2d 739; and see, Andrews v. Cunningham, 105 Cal. App.2d 525, 233 P.2d 563.

Had the trial court found that the appellants requested respondents to assist in securing the lease with the five tenants offering to pay them, that the respondents accepted by cooperating in the securing of these tenants, and that the measure of compensation not having been agreed upon, the reasonable value thereof was impliedly promised, the finding would be supported. The sum of $5,940 could also be supported as the reasonable value, for if respondents' services in the final stages of negotiations were considered by appellants as indispensable to securing the execution of the lease, then it is not unreasonable to measure that service by the standard of a real estate commission.

Paragraph VIII of the findings states that all allegations of paragraph XVII of the complaint are true except that the reasonable value of the services is $5,940. That paragraph of the complaint alleged that the services rendered by plaintiffs "as hereinabove set forth and the aforementioned oral agreement" were of the value of $12,000.

Finding IX finds all allegations of paragraph XXI of the complaint true except that the reasonable value was $5,940. This paragraph alleged that all of the services above were performed at the special instance and request of defendants. Paragraph XVI of the second count relating to the oral agreement discussed just above, was not re-alleged in this count.

The court finally found that Petersen first contacted the tenants who were accepted, that he first developed the market plans and first brought this program to the attention of defendants, that during the development of the plans and negotiations of leases, defendants promised they would pay plaintiffs the reasonable value of all of plaintiffs' said services if leases were consummated with the present tenants of Alemany Super Market and if plaintiffs would refrain from soliciting other tenants from whom they anticipated a profit on the sale of fixtures; that as a result of such promises and discussions, leases were negotiated with the present tenants and plaintiffs complied with the requests and terms of defendants and actively assisted in procuring the present tenants; that defendants are unjustly enriched by the use of such services and equity requires that defendants pay to plaintiffs the reasonable value of such services.

[5] Appellant contends that prior to the alleged oral undertaking of defendant Rudy Lang there was no obligation either express or implied on the part of appellants. According to respondents' testimony the drafting of designs and layouts for placement of fixtures and the contacting of prospective tenants for market owners was customarily done by fixture men who looked to fixture contracts with such tenants for all of their compensation. Therefore, when as in the present case, no fixture man was given an exclusive right to choose tenants for a market owner, there was no obligation on the part of the market owner either contractual or moral, to compensate the fixture salesman for service which they were rendering primarily to promote contracts between themselves and the tenants.

Respondents maintain that the general rule that where services which are valuable are rendered by one to another and accepted, there is a presumption of an implied promise to pay the reasonable value thereof, citing Fancher v. Brunger, 94 Cal.App. 2d 727, 211 P.2d 633; Shepherd v. Perea, 98 Cal.App.2d 518, 220 P.2d 776; Lazzarevich v. Lazzarevich, 88 Cal.App.2d 708, 200 P.2d 49; Lloyd v. Kleefisch, 48 Cal. App.2d 408, 120 P.2d 97. None of the situations involved in those cases was similar to that herein, where the evidence is uncontradicted that both parties up to the point of the alleged oral agreement, assumed that any compensation for respondents' work would arise out of contracts which respondents hoped to make with a third party. The case of Geisenhoff v. Mabrey, 58 Cal.App.2d 481, 137 P.2d 36, is concerned with an implied promise to pay for promotional services, but in that case a written agreement which was unenforceable against some of defendants, showed the intention that plaintiff was to be paid for his services. The Restatement of Restitution, sec. 107, p. 450, states that "In the case of services, the inference of a promise to pay may be rebutted * * * by the fact that such services when rendered under like circumstances customarily are given without compensation." It has been said that the question which must be determined in each case is "whether it can reasonably be inferred that pecuniary compensation was in the view of the parties at the time the services were rendered". Crane v. Derrick, 157 Cal. 667, 109 P. 31, 33; and, see, Gjurich v. Fieg, 164 Cal. 429, 129 P. 464; Eklund v. Eklund, 76 Cal. App.2d 389, 173 P.2d 50.

[6] In regard to the alleged oral contract requiring respondents to assist in the final negotiations with the five tenants and desist from soliciting others, appellant argues that there was no intention that the parties enter into an express contract. The evidence discussed above discloses sufficient intention to enter into an express contract. There is testimony from which it can be inferred that appellants believed respondents' influence was an important factor in closing the deal with these tenants, and this would be sufficient consideration to support their promise to pay respondents.

[7] It is urged by appellants that if the language attributed to appellant Rudy Lang may be construed as an express undertaking, it was likewise for an express consideration binding upon respondents. That express consideration, they say, was the profit respondents would have made from a contract with the five tenants first contacted by them, and respondent Petersen testified that respondents could not make any money out of a contract with these tenants, and did not even bid on the contract. The testimony, while somewhat ambiguous, seems subject to the interpretation that appellants would pay the profit respondents would have received if they could have substituted other tenants with whom they could do business. However, the trial court's findings show that the court did not believe respondents' testimony that the payment was to be measured by profit on any contract. It is true that if there is a valid express contract, recovery must be measured by its terms. Thacker v. American Foundry, 78 Cal.App.2d 76, 177 P.2d 322. But here, although one of respondents testified that such profit was the measure of payment, the court did not believe him. The trial court evidently believed respondents' testimony that appellants expressly agreed to pay in return for the requests made of respondents. It is said in 12 Cal.Jur.2d 395 that where work is done under an express contract which does not specify the compensation to be paid, the law implies a promise to pay the reasonable value of the service. And, see, Carney v. Hayter, 62 Cal.App.2d 792, 145 P.2d 712; Elconin v. Yalen, 208 Cal. 546, 549, 282 P. 791.

[8] In finding VIII, the court found that plaintiffs' performance of services was made pursuant to the oral agreement referred to in the preceding paragraph of the findings, and that by reason of these services rendered pursuant to such agreement defendants became indebted to plaintiffs in the sum of $5,940, the reasonable value of said services. If paragraph VII of the findings could be construed to mean that the appellants promised to pay respondents for said services, and therefore the reasonable value is implied, those findings would then appear to be sufficient to support the judgment in the amount of $5,940. The subsequent findings on the common count in the fourth cause of action base this same amount on the value of services rendered by respondents in first contacting these tenants, and drawing designs, etc. with no reference to the alleged oral contract, and as noted earlier herein, all such services, apart from the contract alleged in paragraph XVI of the complaint, were rendered without expectation of compensation from appellants.

Respondents cite section 1606 of the Civil Code to the effect that "a moral obligation originating in some benefit conferred upon the promisor, or prejudice suffered by the promisee, is also a good consideration for a promise, to an extent corresponding with the extent of the obligation * * *." They point out that appellants had a moral, if not a legal, obligation to respondents for the promotion services rendered when they learned that respondents would not be compensated through securing contracts with these tenants. This moral obligation, they argue, was sufficient consideration to support the oral agreement for payment by appellants. The above section of the Civil Code has been construed in In re McConnell's Estate, 6 Cal.2d 493, 58 P.2d 639, 642, to mean that "a moral obligation is sufficient to support an express promise, where a good and valuable consideration has once existed." And, see, Foltz v. First Trust & Savings Bank, 86 Cal.App.2d 59, 194 P.2d 135. However, the express agreement alleged to have been made herein does not necessarily depend upon past services for its consideration. There is evidence that appellants placed great value on respondents future conduct in regard to the desirable tenants, and that respondents followed the course for which appellants bargained.

In view of the uncertainties and apparent conflicts in essential findings, the judgment must be reversed.

Judgment reversed.

v.

Paul L. MUTH and Genevieve S. Muth, Defendants and Respondents.

No. 16803.

District Court of Appeal, First District, Division 1, California.

Sept. 24, 1956.

Rehearing Denied Oct. 24, 1956.

Hearing Denied Nov. 21, 1956.

Action between parties to joint venture contract for feeding and marketing of beef cattle, under which parties were to share gross profits as determined by "highest cash bid obtainable" for cattle unsold on certain date. The Superior Court, County of Santa Clara, W. W. Jacka, J., entered judgment for defendants, and plaintiff appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Fred B. Wood, J., held that where party, who sought to apportion losses which had allegedly occurred under joint venture agreement, failed to prove amount of highest bid that could have been obtained if oral bids had been appropriately sought, party failed to prove whether or not there was a profit or loss on the venture, and could not recover.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Animals ⇨22

Where ranchers, as parties to joint venture contract for feeding and marketing of beef cattle, addressed separate writing to other party which provided that, with respect to paragraph of agreement providing for sharing of profits and ascertainment of amount of profits, in event of loss, ranchers agreed to pay other party 60 per cent of loss, this writing would be deemed part of contract.

2. Appeal and Error ⇨878(2)

Joint Ventures ⇨2

Where defendants did not appeal, they could not challenge finding that separate writing had been made integral part of parties' joint venture contract, and, in any event, two writings were properly read together in accord with applicable principles. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 1642.

3. Animals ⇨22

Under joint venture contract for feeding and marketing of beef cattle, by terms of which parties were to share gross profits on basis of 40 and 60 per cent, as determined in manner provided, and under provision of separate writing, which became integral part of agreement, providing that in respect to paragraph of agreement providing for sharing and ascertainment of profits, in event of loss, ranchers would pay investor 60 per cent of loss, losses, if any, would be determined and shared in same manner and proportion as would profits, except that monthly payments made by investor pursuant to another paragraph of agreement would not enter into such calculation, because such payments, under agreement, could only be recouped out of profits.

4. Animals ⇨22

Under joint venture contract for feeding and marketing of beef cattle, by terms of which parties were to share gross profits as determined by "highest cash bid obtainable" for cattle unsold on certain date, party who handled bids at auction at ranch on that date breached contract by failing to take oral bids, which was customary and effective method of ascertaining highest cash bid obtainable.

5. Animals ⇨22

Mere fact that party to joint venture contract for feeding and marketing of beef cattle had failed to get highest cash bid obtainable for cattle at auction which he controlled, as required by contract, would not defeat his right to an accounting.

6. Joint Adventures ⇨4(1)

Not every default of a joint venturer operates to divest him of his interest in the property of the venture or of his right to an accounting.

7. Joint Adventures ⇨2

The contract rules which govern in the case of an ordinary contract do not invariably apply to cases of agreement involving the joint venture relationship.

8. Joint Adventures ⇨4(1)

The rights and liabilities of joint venturers, as between themselves, are governed by the same principles which apply to a partnership.

9. Partnership ⇨84

The failure of a partner to pay his full share of the cost of acquisition or upkeep of the common property does not necessarily terminate his interest in the enterprise.

10. Joint Adventures ⇨4(1)

A joint venturer may forfeit his rights by a material breach which, committed at the very threshold of the enterprise, renders it impossible for his associates to proceed, or when he fails to furnish materials essential to the enterprise and stipulated as a condition of the creation of the enterprise, or when he defaults in a material respect and abandons the enterprise.

11. Animals ⇨22

Where joint venture contract for feeding and marketing of beef cattle had been carried out except to divide profits or apportion losses, upon determination of "highest cash bid obtainable" for cattle unsold on certain date, fact that party who conducted auction, by taking only written bids, had failed to obtain highest cash bid obtainable would not preclude judicial inquiry and determination of amount of highest bid that could have been obtained, if evidence on that subject were available. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 3353.

12. Animals ⇨22

Where party, who sought to apportion losses which had allegedly occurred under joint adventure agreement for feeding and marketing of beef cattle, failed to prove amount of highest bid that could have been obtained if oral bids had been appropriately sought, party failed to prove whether there was a profit or a loss on the venture, and could not recover.

13. Animals ⇨22

Fact that ranchers, as party to joint venture contract, for feeding and marketing of beef cattle, by terms of which parties were to share profits and apportion losses, had made their books and other records available to other party for inspection before trial of action between parties, did not disentitle other party to an accounting.

14. Animals ⇨22

Party to joint venture agreement for feeding and marketing of beef cattle, who had failed to prove overall profit or loss on venture, was not entitled to an accounting, where party's breach of contract precluded ascertainment of any offset to which other parties might have been entitled, and area of accounting had been considerably reduced by finding on other counts of complaint, and trial court had determined numbers of various classes of live stock originally purchased, and number which had died or were born during period of joint venture.

FRED B. WOOD, Justice.

The parties entered into a joint venture contract for the feeding and marketing of beef cattle covering the period of March 28, to October 31, 1952. Plaintiff furnished the money for the purchase of the cattle and certain advances to defendants for their care; defendants furnished the ranch, the feed and the care. The main issues upon this appeal pertain to the determination of the question whether this venture resulted in a profit or a loss and, in either case, how much. Three clauses of the agreement are especially significant to this inquiry.

The duration of the venture and the accounting period were fixed by subdivision (c) of paragraph 5 of the contract: "(c) On November 1, 1952, the parties hereto agree to account for all cattle and the increment thereof to each other, and to give a full account of their activities and services hereunder; that full and complete books, records and accounts shall be kept by First Party [defendants] as to all cattle received from Second Party [plaintiff] and cattle sold and on hand, including increases of cattle as of October 31, 1952."

The agreement for the sharing of profits and ascertainment of amount of profits was expressed in subdivision (d) of paragraph 5 of the contract: "(d) On November 1, 1952 the parties agree to divide all gross profits on the basis that forty per cent (40%) shall be retained by Second Party and sixty per cent (60%) shall be paid to First Party. That in ascertaining and determining the gross profits hereunder, the sale price of all cattle sold on or before November 1, 1952 shall be added to the highest cash bid obtainable¹ of all cattle unsold on November 1, 1952, from which sum shall be subtracted the cost of purchasing said cattle and delivering them to the Ranch, including purchase price, commissions, transportation, service on route, and other usual charges in acquiring and delivering cattle, and the balance remaining after said subtraction shall constitute the gross profits as hereinabove referred to. From the sixty per cent (60%) of the gross profits due First Party there shall be deducted and retained by Second Party the monthly payments actually paid by Second Party to First Party pursuant to subparagraph a. of paragraph 4 of this Agreement,² and the actual payment and retention of the sums due as herein determined shall constitute full and final payment and compensation of the share of each of the parties and shall be binding upon them and shall release each of the parties from any claim of the other."

[1,2] By a separate writing addressed to plaintiff, (a writing which by the trial court and by this court is deemed a part of the contract) it was provided that "with respect to paragraph (d) of page 5 [also paragraph 5] of said agreement, in the event of a loss, rather than a profit, we agree to pay you forthwith sixty percent (60%) of said loss."³

[3] The trial court correctly held that the losses, if any, were to be determined and shared in the same manner and proportion as would profits, if any, except that the payments made by plaintiff to defendants pursuant to paragraph 4(a) would not enter into the calculation; i. e., such payments could be recouped only out of profits.

Plaintiff handled the taking of bids at the ranch on November 1, 1952. He took written bids only. Defendants protested, claiming that oral bidding was the customary

1. Plaintiff struck out "market value" and inserted "highest bid obtainable" and the parties initialed the change before execution of the contract.

2. By paragraph 4(a) plaintiff agreed to pay defendants for care of the cattle: $5.25 per month for each cow and its calf; $5.00 per month each for other matured animals.

3. Defendants contend that this separate writing had no connection with the writing first signed; hence, was without consideration and void. Not having appealed, they are not in a position to challenge the finding. Moreover, we have examined the record and are convinced that the trial court properly read the two writings together in accord with the principles enunciated in section 1642 of the Civil Code and in Cadigan v. American Trust Co., 131 Cal.App.2d 780, 782-787, 281 P.2d 332, and the authorities therein reviewed.

and effective method of ascertaining the "highest cash bid obtainable." On this question the court found upon sufficient evidence that "the accepted practice and custom in the cattle industry to obtain the highest price for cattle is by oral bid, and that there is normally a substantial spread between opening and closing bids"; and that "plaintiff failed and refused to determine the 'highest cash bid obtainable' for the cattle described and referred to in Exhibit A on November 1, 1952; and that said failure and refusal to obtain the 'highest cash bid obtainable' on the part of plaintiff consisted as follows:

"A. Plaintiff refused to meet with defendant Paul Muth and his attorney prior to November 1, 1952 to agree to or discuss any method of obtaining the 'highest cash bid obtainable'.

"B. Plaintiff arrived at the ranch of defendant in the middle of the afternoon of November 1, 1952, passed out written forms of bid calling for lump-sum written bids on the cattle, refused to show said written bids to the defendant or disclose their content to him while the bidders were present, refused to call for oral bids, refused to permit bidders to raise one another, refused to exhibit bids obtained to defendant until late in the evening of November 1, 1952 at a time when it was impossible to see whether any bidders could be induced to raise their bids, and refused to accept the bid of defendants"; and that "the bid of defendants in the sum of $55,000.00 was the highest bid actually made but that said bid was not the 'highest cash bid obtainable' on November 1, 1952."

[4] From these findings the trial court concluded: Plaintiff was obligated to cooperate in obtaining the highest cash bid obtainable. His conduct in connection with obtaining such a bid constituted a refusal to obtain the "highest cash bid obtainable." This refusal was a breach of the contract which relieved the defendants from any obligation to perform the contract on their part. By virtue of plaintiff's said conduct and "by virtue of the failure to obtain 'the highest cash bid obtainable' for said cattle on November 1, 1952 there is no basis or method or evidence on which the court can determine the 'highest cash bid obtainable' for said cattle on November 1, 1952"; that "plaintiff has failed to prove by a preponderance of evidence that there was any loss on November 1, 1952"; and that "plaintiff is not entitled to any judgment against defendants."

[5-10] The mere fact that plaintiff failed to get the highest bid obtainable on November 1, 1952, did not of itself necessarily bar him from the right to have a determination of the amount which could have been obtained had he invited oral bids and given suitable notice. Nor would such a default upon his part necessarily defeat his right to an accounting. Not every default of a partner or of a joint venturer operates to divest him of his interest in the property of the venture or of his right to an accounting.⁴ A joint ven-

4. "When persons execute a contract which has the legal effect of constituting them partners or joint adventurers, they acquire rights and subject themselves to duties growing out of the fiduciary relationship which they thus create." Pacific Atlantic Wine, Inc. v. Duccini, 111 Cal.App.2d 957, 965, 245 P.2d 622, 627. The contract rules which govern in the case of an ordinary contract do not invariably apply to cases of agreements involving the partnership or the joint venture relationship. San Francisco Iron & Metal Co. v. American Milling etc. Co., 115 Cal.App. 238, 251, 1 P.2d 1008. The resemblance between the joint venture and a partnership is so close that "the rights and liabilities of joint adventurers, as between themselves, are governed by the same principles which apply to a partnership." Zeibak v. Nasser, 12 Cal. 2d 1, 12, 82 P.2d 375, 380. See also McSherry v. Market Corporation, 129 Cal. App. 330, 333, 18 P.2d 776.

"The fact that persons engaged in a joint venture may quarrel or be at odds over the business in which they are associated, or may even be involved in litigation with one another, does not as a matter of law relieve them of their fiduciary duties." Sime v. Malouf, 95 Cal.App.2d 82, 97, 212 P.2d 946, 955, 213 P.2d 788.

turer may of course forfeit his rights by a material breach which, committed "at the very threshold of the enterprise", renders it impossible for his associates to proceed, San Francisco Iron & Metal Co. v. American Milling etc. Co., supra, 115 Cal.App. 238, 249, 1 P.2d 1008, 1012; or when he fails to furnish materials essential to the enterprise and stipulated as a condition of the creation of the enterprise, Staples v. Leidecker, 216 Cal. 604, 606, 15 P.2d 514, or when he defaults in a material respect and abandons the enterprise. Middleton v. Newport, 6 Cal.2d 57, 56 P.2d 508; Sly v. Abbott, 89 Cal.App. 209, 264 P. 507.

[11] But ours is not that type of case. Here the enterprise had been carried out and consummated. The time to divide the profits or apportion the losses had arrived. Plaintiff, in whom the contract vested legal title to the cattle, took the lead in seeking "the highest cash bid obtainable." In that undertaking he failed to get such a bid, though he obtained written bids varying from $48,000 to $55,000. That, however, should not prevent a court of equity from undertaking to ascertain the amount of "the highest cash bid obtainable" for these cattle on November 1, 1952. Essentially the same problem is presented as that which confronts a court or jury when ascertaining the market value of real property taken in an eminent domain proceeding.⁵ It is also somewhat like the situation which obtains when the value of property is sought to be determined by use of the test furnished by section 3353 of the Civil Code.⁶ The failure of the plaintiff herein actually to get the highest cash bid obtainable should not of itself bar judicial inquiry and determination of the amount of the highest bid that could have been obtained, if evidence on that subject be available.

However, no such question was presented to the trial court. No evidence was offered tending to show the amount of the highest bid that could have been obtained if oral bids had been appropriately sought. There was evidence that oral bidding would have produced the highest bid obtainable and testimony as to the probable spread between the first and final bids if oral bids had been invited, but no evidence upon which to predicate a determination of the highest oral bid that could have been obtained. Plaintiff tried the case, it would appear, upon the theory that the highest written bid actually received ($55,000) was the highest bid obtainable, a theory which the trial court, upon sufficient evidence, found erroneous.

[12] The failure to prove the amount of the highest bid obtainable amounted to a failure to prove whether there was a profit or a loss on the venture; i.e., whether the highest bid obtainable would have been greater or less than $82,367.25, the difference between the cost of acquisition of the

The failure of a partner to pay his full share of the cost of acquisition or upkeep of the common property does not necessarily terminate his interest in the enterprise. Kimball v. Gearhart, 12 Cal. 27, 47; Bowman v. Carroll, 91 Cal.App. 56, 62, 266 P. 840. Even if a "partner or joint venturer by his wrong has caused the dissolution of the partnership or joint venture he does not forfeit all his rights, although, he may become subject to damages and loss of his share in the goodwill." Gardner v. Shreve, 89 Cal.App.2d 804, 808, 202 P.2d 322, 324. See also Martin v. Burris, 57 Cal.App. 739, 742, 208 P. 174.

5. In such a proceeding "[m]arket value is the price that would be paid by a willing purchaser from a willing seller purchasing with a full knowledge of all the uses and purposes for which the property is reasonably adapted", City of Daly City v. Smith, 110 Cal.App.2d 524, 531, 243 P.2d 46, 50, quite similar to the test or measure of value specified by the parties herein, "the highest cash bid obtainable of all cattle unsold on November 1, 1952."

6. That test or measure of value is "the price which he [the seller] could have obtained therefor in the market nearest to the place at which it should have been accepted by the buyer * * *."

For a discussion of this measure of value and its use, see Lund v. Lachman, 29 Cal.App. 31, 34-35, 154 P. 295.

cattle ($93,663.88) and the amount realized upon sales made prior to November 1, 1952 ($11,296.63).

Accordingly, the trial court correctly found and concluded that plaintiff "failed to prove * * * that there was any loss on November 1, 1952." We perceive no basis upon which a reviewing court could disturb that ruling; hence, no basis for granting plaintiff a retrial of that issue.

[13] This leaves for consideration the question of plaintiff's right to an accounting.⁷ The mere fact that plaintiff failed in the due and complete performance of some of his obligations as a joint venturer would not of itself, we have observed, disentitle him to an accounting. However, under the circumstances of this case, we see no basis for reopening it for an accounting.

The failure to prove an overall profit or loss on the venture removes a very important element, perhaps the most important element, from the scope of any accounting that yet might be had. Suppose, for example, it should develop that plaintiff is entitled to a credit in a certain amount against the defendants based upon their activities during the course of the joint venture. Defendants would be entitled to offset that against their share of the profits, if any. But the amount of their share, if any, is no longer ascertainable. This entails the loss of their potential right to an offset. That loss, under the circumstances of this case, is properly chargeable to the plaintiff. Defendant should not suffer for plaintiff's fault.

In addition, the area of accounting has been considerably reduced by the findings made by the trial court on the second, third and fourth counts of the complaint and plaintiff's waiver⁸ of his appeal in respect to those findings.

The trial court found untrue (1) the allegations of the second count that defendants violated their obligation to furnish inspection services, treatment and other care for the cattle purchased, as a result of which certain of the cattle proved defective, to the damage of plaintiff in the sum of $9,000; (2) the allegations of the third count that defendants failed in their obligation to care for and maintain the cattle, at the ranch, in a good and husband-like manner, to the damage of plaintiff in the sum of $31,000; and (3) the allegations of the fourth count that defendants obstructed and prevented the sale of the cattle at a time [prior to November 1, 1952] when a profit could have been realized thereon, to the damage of plaintiff in the sum of $31,000. The abandonment of the appeal in respect to these findings would withdraw from the scope of any accounting that might now be had, most if not all of the activities and transactions of the defendants which occurred during the period of the joint venture.

Finally, in response to the issues presented by the first count of the complaint, the trial court among other things found and determined the numbers of the various classes of livestock (cows, calves and bulls) that were originally purchased and brought to the ranch; also, the number that died and the number that were born during the period of the joint venture.

[14] Under these circumstances we perceive no basis upon which we might properly order a further accounting.

The judgment is affirmed.

PETERS, P. J., and BRAY, J., concur.

7. The trial court held that the defendants gave him an accounting prior to the filing of this action, an incorrect holding because all that they did was to make their books and other records available for plaintiff's inspection.

8. This waiver appears in plaintiff's opening brief: "While there are other causes of action in the complaint, namely, the second, third and fourth causes of action, as the evidence respecting these is in conflict it will not be necessary to burden this Court with a discussion of the record as it pertains to such causes of action."

Violet E. NESS, Plaintiff and Appellant,
v.

CITY OF SAN DIEGO, Defendant and Respondent.

Civ. 5418.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District,
California.

Sept. 26, 1956.

Action for injuries sustained by plaintiff as a result of a fall on a public sidewalk. The Superior Court, San Diego County, Arthur L. Mundo, J., granted defendant city's motion for judgment notwithstanding verdict of jury favorable to plaintiff and plaintiff appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Burch, J. pro tem., held that where the jury found on conflicting evidence that the extent of variation in the adjoining blocks of sidewalk was but seven-eighths of an inch at the time of the accident, evidence was not sufficient to justify verdict for plaintiff.

Affirmed.

1. Municipal Corporations ⇨757(1)

The statutory duty of city to repair defects in sidewalk after notice depends on the danger. West's Ann.Gov.Code, § 53051.

2. Municipal Corporations ⇨755(1)

A city is not insurer of its public ways and is not bound to keep them so as to preclude the possibility of injury or accident therefrom.

3. Evidence ⇨25(2)

It is a matter of common knowledge that it is impossible to maintain a sidewalk in a perfect condition and minor defects are bound to exist.

4. Municipal Corporations ⇨768(1), 821(6)

A city is not necessarily liable for injuries caused by minor sidewalk defects due to continued use, or action of the elements, or other cause, and what constitutes minor defect is not always a mere question of fact. West's Ann.Gov.Code, § 53051.

5. Municipal Corporations ⇨768(1)

The responsibility to determine the question of dangerous or defective conditions of public sidewalks rests with the legislative body, board, or person authorized to remedy the condition. West's Ann.Gov.Code, § 53051.

6. Evidence ⇨83(2)

Municipal Corporations ⇨762(1)

It may be assumed that official duty is regularly performed and that, having notice, the responsible official inspected sidewalk defect and exercised a judgment, but liability for injuries resulting from defect would still exist if officer exercised bad judgment in performing his imposed duty.

7. Municipal Corporations ⇨795

Where a dangerous condition of a sidewalk is involved, it is incumbent on the public authority to make inspections commensurate in scope with the nature and character of its knowledge and peril to be avoided.

8. Municipal Corporations ⇨768(3)

Where variation in adjoining blocks of sidewalk was but seven-eighths of an inch at time pedestrian fell, city had no duty to repair defect, notwithstanding city had notice of defect, and city was not liable for pedestrian's injuries. West's Ann.Gov.Code, § 53051.

9. Judgment ⇨199(3.10)

Where evidence is not sufficient to justify verdict, court correctly orders judgment notwithstanding verdict.

J. F. DuPaul, City Atty., by J. K. Stickney, Jr., and Edward Strop, Sp. Deputies, San Diego, for respondent.

BURCH, Justice pro tem.

The plaintiff sued the City of San Diego to recover damages for injuries occasioned by a fall, "when she was caused to lose her balance and fall to the sidewalk in front of the residence at 927 Beryl Street", in San Diego. The case was tried before a jury; a verdict was returned in favor of plaintiff for damages assessed in the sum of $3,258.01. Judgment was entered on the verdict. Defendant moved for a judgment notwithstanding the verdict. The court granted the motion, vacated the judgment for plaintiff, and entered judgment for defendant. Plaintiff appeals from the judgment notwithstanding the verdict.

The appeal is on a stipulated narrative statement which discloses that "at or about the place where the plaintiff fell, there was a variation of the level of two adjoining sections of sidewalk caused by the growth of tree roots, which condition had existed over a period of several years, with the result that the variation in height between the sections of block gradually increased; that the section of the sidewalk to the east of the variation in levels was higher than the section to the west of the variation; that said variation between the levels of the sections of the sidewalk was the same from the north to the south edges of the sidewalk; that testimony was presented by plaintiff and defendant as to the height of the variation between the levels of the sidewalk and that said testimony was in conflict; that the said conflict was presented to the jury in the form of a special interrogatory and that the jury found that the variation between the levels of the two sections of the sidewalk was $\frac{7}{8}$ ths of an inch at the time of the accident herein complained of; that the jury found, by special interrogatory, that the defendant, City of San Diego, had actual notice of the condition (of the sidewalk) by reason of a telephone call by an adjoining property owner at least six months prior to the plaintiff's fall: that there was no evidence of any prior falls caused by this condition in the sidewalk; * * *."

[1] In this case the City's liability depends upon whether or not the stated condition is one of such danger as to enjoin upon it the duty of repair under the Public Liability Act of 1923, Stats.1923, ch. 328, now incorporated into the Government Code. The City had notice in time to repair if it had the duty to repair, Government Code, Sec. 53051; Whiting v. City of National City, 9 Cal.2d 163, 165, 69 P.2d 990, and the duty depends on the danger.

[2-4] No hard and fast rules can be laid down, Fackrell v. City of San Diego, 26 Cal.2d 196, 206, 157 P.2d 625, 158 A.L.R. 773, and so each case must depend upon its particular facts, yet "The city is not an insurer of its public ways and is not bound to keep them so as to preclude the possibility of injury or accident therefrom." Whiting v. City of National City, supra, 9 Cal.2d at page 166, 69 P.2d at page 991. Pertinent to our question is this statement in the Whiting case, 9 Cal.2d at page 165, 69 P.2d at page 991:

"It is a matter of common knowledge that it is impossible to maintain a sidewalk in a perfect condition. Minor defects are bound to exist. A municipality cannot be expected to maintain the surface of its sidewalks free from all inequalities and from every possible obstruction to travel. Minor defects due to continued use, or action of the elements, or other cause, will not necessarily make the city liable for injuries caused thereby. What constitutes a minor defect is not always a mere question of fact. If the rule were otherwise, the city could be held liable upon a showing of a trivial defect." (Emphasis ours.)

The quoted rule narrows the question here to whether the imperfection may be denominated "dangerous or defective" under the statute which would make it a question of fact, or only a minor defect such as would avoid the statutory duty to remedy. In Barrett v. City of Claremont, 41 Cal.2d 70, 73, 256 P.2d 977, 979, it is stated:

"Growing out of the difficulty of maintaining heavily traveled surfaces in perfect condition is the practical recognition that minor defects inevitably occur, both in construction and maintenance, and that their continued existence is not unreasonable. In such case: * * * no liability may result."

There a joint of five inches was filled in with asphalt so as to form a half-inch ridge tapering to the walk on either side. A judgment for plaintiff was reversed as a matter of law.

In the case of Nicholson v. City of Los Angeles, 5 Cal.2d 361, 54 P.2d 725, 726, "One block had tilted up so that there was a difference in grade at the break of not more, and possibly less, than an inch and a half. The plaintiff approached from * * * the high side of the break * *." The trial court had found as a matter of fact that this was a dangerous condition and constituted a menace to pedestrians. The appeal resulted in a reversal on the ground of no notice or knowledge, actual or constructive, of a dangerous condition which was assumed for the purpose of deciding that there was no notice, and is only relevant here for the value in the assumption. There is no decision that the condition described was properly a factual question.

In the Whiting case, supra, the reversal was based upon the nondangerous character of the condition of the sidewalk thus described: "the sidewalk was constructed of contiguous cement squares with expansion joints between them; that the square upon which the plaintiff tripped was raised at its easterly edge above the square next adjoining it on the east; that at the highest point of such rise it was about three-quarters of an inch above the surface of the adjoining square; and that the rise extended for several feet to the north gradually lessening in height until the surface was approximately level."

[5,6] Government's responsibility to determine the question of dangerous or defective condition rests with "the legislative body, board, or person authorized to remedy the condition", Government Code, Sec. 53051. The expressed opinion of a volunteer, though it may serve as notice, is not determinative of defect. It may be assumed as a matter of official duty regularly performed, Code Civ.Proc. Sec. 1963, subd. 15, that, having notice, the responsible official inspected the situation and exercised a judgment. Liability would still exist under the act if he exercised bad judgment in performing his imposed duty.

[7] The duty of inspection is thus stated in Aguirre v. City of Los Angeles, 46 Cal.2d 841, 299 P.2d 862, 864, involving a dangerous condition of a sidewalk:

"* * * it is incumbent on it (the public authority) to make inspections commensurate in scope with the nature and character of its knowledge and the peril to be avoided".

In Fritsche v. City of Seattle, 10 Wash. 2d 357, 116 P.2d 562, 564, the Supreme Court of Washington said:

"A test which is sometimes applied to determine whether a city has performed its duty is whether a reasonably cautious man, having the duty to preserve and repair the sidewalks, would or would not consider a particular defect as one where pedestrians might be injured."

The Tennessee Supreme Court says the test is governed not by possibility of injury but probability. Forrester v. City of Nashville, 179 Tenn. 682, 169 S.W.2d 860. Under that test it was held that a water meter box imbedded in the sidewalk and projecting one inch above the pavement was not actionable. The same case approved its former holding in City of Memphis v. McCrady, 174 Tenn. 162, 124 S.W.2d 248, 249. In the McCrady case the variation of height of two adjoining blocks of a concrete sidewalk was 2½ inches. In reversing a judgment for the plaintiff the court held (quoting from the syllabus):

"* * * where defect or obstruction is such that reasonable men would not differ in their conclusion that the obstruction or defect is not dangerous to travel in ordinary mode by persons exercising due care, a verdict should be directed."

In Balkwill v. City of Stockton, 50 Cal. App.2d 661, 123 P.2d 596, 597, a question of fact was posed where for a period of years two holes were permitted to exist in the surface of a concrete sidewalk in the business portion of Stockton. "They were only a few inches apart, and were approximately four or five inches long, two inches wide and from one-half to two inches in depth." In Balmer v. City of Beverly Hills, 22 Cal.App.2d 529, 71 P.2d 854, the factual situation was more favorable to the plaintiff than is the case here in that one part of the cement walk was elevated one inch above an adjoining slab. In reversing a judgment for plaintiff the court said, 22 Cal.App.2d at pages 531-532, 71 P.2d at page 855:

"In the Whiting Case [supra] one portion of the sidewalk was left three-fourths of an inch above the adjoining portion. In the case now under review one portion of the sidewalk was left one inch above the adjoining portion. The difference of one-fourth of an inch is not sufficient to take the present case outside the ruling in the Whiting Case, and on the authority of that case the judgment must be reversed."

In Hook v. City of Sacramento, 118 Cal. App. 547, 5 P.2d 643, the evidence of the nature of the defects in the sidewalk, which were numerous at the place of the fall, was in conflict, and thus a factual question was presented.

[8] On the authority of the Whiting and Balmer cases we hold that an even break between two adjoining slabs of a concrete walk of $\frac{7}{8}$ ths of an inch elevation along the expansion joint is but a trivial defect and without danger to pedestrians walking thereabouts with due care.

The general verdict for plaintiff must fall because of the special finding of the jury that the extent of variation in the adjoining blocks was but seven-eighths of an inch. Lowen v. Finnilla, 15 Cal.2d 502, 504, 102 P.2d 520.

[9] The conclusion is inescapable that the evidence cannot, as a matter of law, be held sufficient to justify a verdict for plaintiff. It therefore follows that the court correctly ordered a judgment notwithstanding the verdict, Girvetz v. Boys' Market, Inc., 91 Cal.App.2d 827, 206 P.2d 6.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California.

Sept. 26, 1956.

Patient brought action against chiropractor for alleged malpractice. The Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Samuel R. Blake, J., entered an order granting motion of plaintiff for new trial, after verdict for chiropractor, and the chiropractor appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Ashburn, J., held that evidence was sufficient to support a verdict for patient and hence to afford a basis for granting new trial.

Order affirmed.

1. New Trial Ⓒ13

On consideration of motion for new trial, trial court must make an independent appraisal of the evidence, including all presumptions and reasonable inferences, and must judicially determine whether judgment effects a miscarriage of justice.

2. New Trial ⚖️71

In considering motion for new trial, trial court is not bound by a conflict in the evidence, but may be governed by any substantial proof that would reasonably warrant a judgment for the moving party, even though such evidence consists of nothing more than inferences from established facts.

3. Appeal and Error ⚖️1015(1)

On appeal from order granting a new trial, the order will not be reversed unless the reviewing court concludes that, as a matter of law, there is no substantial evidence to support a contrary judgment.

4. Appeal and Error ⚖️867(2)

Function of reviewing court on appeal from order granting plaintiff a new trial begins and ends with a determination of whether the evidence, viewed most favorably to plaintiff, affords sound basis for a verdict in the plaintiff's favor, and reviewing court does not review the weight of the evidence or the propriety of permissible inferences.

5. Appeal and Error ⚖️1015(1)

If cumulative effect of proof, direct or indirect, contradicted or uncontradicted, whether produced by one side or the other, is legally sufficient to sustain a finding for plaintiff, order granting plaintiff a new trial must be sustained on appeal.

6. New Trial ⚖️69

On motion by plaintiff for new trial, trial court was authorized to accept part and reject part of plaintiff's testimony.

7. New Trial ⚖️70

In malpractice action by patient against chiropractor, evidence was sufficient to support a verdict for patient and hence afforded a proper basis for the granting of a new trial to the patient after verdict for chiropractor.

more than inferences from established facts. On appeal from the order it will not be reversed unless the reviewing court concludes that as a matter of law there is no substantial evidence to support a contrary judgment. Edler v. Sepulveda Park Apts., 141 Cal.App.2d 675, 297 P.2d 508; In re Estate of Green, 25 Cal.2d 535, 542, 154 P.2d 692; Hames v. Rust, 14 Cal.2d 119, 124, 92 P.2d 1010; Ballard v. Pacific Greyhound Lines, 28 Cal.2d 357, 358, 359, 170 P.2d 465.

The principal factual issue at the trial was whether defendant had injected into plaintiff's ischemic (blood starved) right foot a quantity of ozone, and secondly whether that precipitated gangrene which ultimately caused amputation of the leg.

[4, 5] Appellant's counsel argue that the evidence was legally insufficient to support a verdict for plaintiff because her testimony was inherently improbable. To reach that conclusion it is necessary, however, to show "either a physical impossibility that they [the witness' statements] are true, or their falsity must be apparent without resorting to inferences or deductions." People v. Huston, 21 Cal.2d 690, 693, 134 P.2d 758, 759. Appellant's arguments, though somewhat persuasive, consist at best of a review of the inferences and deductions which counsel claim should be drawn from the evidence. Hence they cannot prevail. The evidence, viewed most favorably to plaintiff, affords sound basis for a verdict in her favor. The function of the appellate court begins and ends with a determination of whether that is the case; we do not review the weight of the evidence or the propriety of permissible inferences; if the cumulative effect of the proof, direct or indirect, contradicted or uncontradicted, whether produced by the one side or the other, is legally sufficient to sustain a finding for plaintiff, the order must be sustained. Edler v. Sepulveda Park Apts., supra, 141 Cal.App.2d 675, 297 P.2d 508; Primm v. Primm, 46 Cal.2d 690, 299 P.2d 231. The statement which follows is constructed on the basis of accepting the evidence most favorable to plaintiff.

For more than a year prior to September 13, 1953, plaintiff, then aged 55, suffered from a symptom pattern known as the Leriche Syndrome. This consisted of increasing amounts of pain in the lower back and through the hips which would come on after walking about a half block; after a short rest walking could be resumed and the pain would recur; her feet were unusually cold at night, requiring use of hot pads. There is only one condition that can cause that, namely, occlusion of the arterial circulation to the part where the muscle pain occurs; the pain is caused by lack of blood supply to the muscles. This evidence immediately takes the court into the field where expert testimony is essential and controlling. Moore v. Belt, 34 Cal.2d 525, 529-530, 212 P.2d 509. In the light of subsequent events the medical experts agreed that plaintiff had a partial occlusion in the saddle of the aorta, which impaired the blood supply to both lower extremities rendering them susceptible to spontaneous necrosis or gangrene; also to a precipitation of that condition by trauma or infection.

On said September 13, plaintiff was seized with nausea and vomiting followed shortly by severe pain, chills and numbness in the right leg, mostly in the foot; there was tingling in the toes and the pain extended from foot to upper thigh; the foot felt like a block of wood. This acute episode pointed to a severe blockage of the right iliac artery and a less severe one in the left iliac. (The aorta bifurcates into the two iliac arteries which supply the blood to the respective limbs.) Being in much pain and unable to diagnose her own trouble, plaintiff invoked the aid of several doctors, chiropractic and osteopathic, who failed to diagnose her trouble and did little for her.

On November 3, 1953, being in great and constant pain, she went to see defendant, Dr. Guy, whom she had known for some years. She told him she had a steady and severe pain in her right leg and thought it was sciatica. He said she told him it was arthritis. He took no further history, made only a casual examination of the foot and leg, which then appeared to be normal, and made no diagnosis whatever. Dr. Guy told plaintiff he would give her a shot of "polyzone," "a liquid oxygen." He had a polyzone machine present; it passes oxygen (O-2) over an electrical field and converts it into ozone (O-3), which is a gaseous oxidizing agent; when applied to tissues of a human body it has a burning effect. Ozone has been rejected by the medical profession and other scientists as a therapeutic agency because it is an irritant which causes injury to the tissues when used in concentrations sufficient to be effective; an injection of same would cause injury similar to a chemical burn; the gas would not be absorbed.

[6] Defendant held plaintiff's foot with his left hand and with the right injected 28cc of ozone into the arch, or immediately beside it. He denies this, but plaintiff testified that he did so. Another witness, Mildred Bredesen, was present. She was then acting as practical nurse for plaintiff. Initially she gave plaintiff's attorneys a statement saying that defendant had made the injection in question. Later, after talking to him, she changed her story and testified, as defendant did, that he made no injection and merely sprayed the ozone on plaintiff's foot,—a procedure which defendant and all other witnesses agreed would do no good whatever. The trial judge, in performing his duty of independently weighing the evidence, People v. Robarge, 41 Cal.2d 628, 633, 262 P.2d 14, concluded "that the implied finding of the jury that the defendant Ralph I. Guy did not administer injection by hypodermic needle into the tissues of the plaintiff's foot a substance called ozone is not supported by the evidence, and that the credible evidence is insufficient to support such a finding * * * that the witness Mildred Bredesen was thoroughly impeached." It is true, as argued by appellant's counsel, that there are phases of plaintiff's testimony upon this issue which cast doubt upon its verity, but the trial judge was authorized to accept part and reject part of the witness' version, Murphy v. Ablow, 123 Cal.App.2d 853, 858, 268 P.2d 80, and the record is in such shape that we are bound on this appeal to accept the trial judge's finding. We therefore proceed upon the assumption that the injection was given as testified by plaintiff.

When that occurred she screamed with pain, and following the incident suffered severely and continuously. When she reached home the foot was swelling, the point of insertion of the needle was described by her as a hole with dark red around it and further surrounded by a blue-gray puffing. The next morning the skin was wrinkled and mottled and the pain was "terrible."

On the 5th of November a friend brought Dr. Porter to see her and he gave an injection of novocain in that same area to relieve the pain. Soon after that, Dr. Shropshire, an osteopathic physician, was employed. He took a history which included injection of "polyzone" followed by an abscess, and he sent her to the Glendale Community Hospital. The abscess was incised and the underlying tissues were found to be "quite necrotic." Apparently there was no infection at that time, for a laboratory examination of tissue revealed it to be a "sterile abscess." It was Dr. Shropshire's opinion that the condition he found was the result of the injection of "polyzone" into the tissues. Plaintiff was in the hospital from November 16 to November 25, and then went home. She was still having pain in the right foot and leg and the foot continued to get worse. Plaintiff employed Dr. Craven in January, 1954, then Dr. Talmadge and finally, in February, sought the help of Dr. Lawrence W. Smith, an M.D. specializing in surgery and peripheral vascular diseases, a well-qualified expert.

He first saw plaintiff at St. Vincent's Hospital on February 19, 1954, took a history and made an examination which disclosed a large area of gangrene on the medial aspect of the right foot, at the site of defendant's injection. He was of the opinion that the basic existing condition was one of occlusion of the arteries to the extremities, and that the block was above the groin. His diagnosis was gangrene of the foot and "beginning possible gangrene in the right upper thigh" due to severe occlusion of the lower aorta. The sole basis for any gangrene is lack of blood supply to the affected area. It is an invariable rule that leg gangrene, when starting spontaneously, appears first in the toes. Dr. Smith found none there. That meant that the precipitating cause of its starting above the toes was due to a local injury or infection. There being no history of an original infection in that area and a positive showing of injury, he concluded that the latter was the precipitating cause. The blood-starved condition of the foot had been such that a slight trauma would easily set up a gangrene and the penetration of a hypodermic needle would be sufficient trauma to do so. An injection of 28cc of ozone would irritate or burn the starved tissues, distend them, cut off the circulation and cause death of the tissues and skin. Plaintiff at the time of Dr. Smith's first examination had a gangrenous ulcer at the site of defendant's injection. Although Dr. Smith endeavored to do so, it was impossible to save the leg.

On March 30, 1954, a sudden change for the worse occurred and the upper thigh began to show a breakdown of tissues, a local gangrene which later proved to be the dry type. About the same time, a fresh thrombus completely blocked the popliteal artery (back of the knee). Dr. Smith called Dr. Atlas, another specialist, into consultation and an immediate amputation was deemed necessary. This was performed on April 2nd, but there was so much infection and blood starvation that the stump would not heal and a second operation was necessary and was done on May 21, 1954.

precipitated by the injection given by defendant; that the popliteal blockage was caused by inflammation and infection spreading from the foot gangrene; also that the gangrene in the thigh was incipient when he first saw the patient but before the second operation was becoming more extensive and the tissues around it inflamed, thus requiring an operation above that area. He also said that the gangrene did not come down from the thigh to the foot and that the thigh condition alone would not have made an amputation inevitable. Dr. Atlas concurred in most of these conclusions. He said the injection was responsible for the primary necrosis in the foot; that infection was bound to occur sooner or later; that it had progressed to the groin before the operation; concerning the thigh he said he was unable to explain that area of gangrene but that it alone would not have required an amputation at the time of the operation; on the other hand the foot condition with its spreading infection had already doomed the leg. Clearly the evidence is sufficient to support a verdict for plaintiff and hence afford a proper basis for the granting of a new trial.

This conclusion does not reflect any weighing of opposing evidence. For instance, Dr. Elmquist, a well-qualified expert called by defendant, testified on the basis of hypothetical questions that the gangrene of the thigh would have caused the amputation of the leg regardless of the foot condition, but that he could not express an opinion as to the proximate cause of the gangrene in the foot. It is not our function to determine which expert expressed a sound opinion. We merely find that there is substantial evidence to sustain a verdict in favor of plaintiff had one been rendered.

[8] A chiropractor cannot lawfully pierce the skin of a patient for treatment purposes, People v. Mangiagli, 97 Cal.App. 2d Supp. 935, 940, 218 P.2d 1025, and under some authorities is held liable for any injuries caused thereby regardless of negligence in fact, Whipple v. Grandchamp, 261 Mass. 40, 158 N.E. 270; Annotation, in 57 A.L.R. 974. Other cases apply to a chiropractor, or other practitioner who goes beyond the bounds of his license in treating a patient, the same standard of care which is required of practitioners, such as medical doctors, who are authorized to employ the particular method—the absence of a license so to do being deemed not of the essence of a cause of action. See Kelley v. Carroll, 36 Wash.2d 482, 219 P.2d 79, Annotation in 19 A.L.R.2d 1188, 1204. The latter seems to be the majority rule. But, after it is found that defendant pierced the skin of plaintiff with an injection used for treatment purposes, it is immaterial which of the above standards is applied to him. The evidence supports the conclusion that a chiropractor who injects ozone into the tissues (1) exceeds the privileges of his license and hence fails to conform to the chiropractic standard of knowledge and care, and (2) fails to conform to accepted standards of medical doctors who have rejected such method of treatment as positively harmful to the patient.

Appellant argues that there were causes other than the Guy injection which equally well could have precipitated the necrosis in the foot. Counsel cite the injection of novocain by Dr. Porter the day after the Guy injection, and the later lancing of the abscess in the Glendale hospital. The experts conceded that these traumas could have been precipitating causes. Therefore, argues appellant, plaintiff failed to carry her burden of proof that defendant's delict was the proximate cause of her gangrene.

[9] It is the law of this state that each of several joint tort feors or independent wrongdoers who inflict simultaneous, or practically simultaneous, injuries upon a plaintiff must carry the burden of establishing that his own wrong did not contribute to the damages, or the extent to which it did so. See Copley v. Putter, 93 Cal.App.2d 453, 457, 207 P.2d 876; Cummings v. Kendall, 41 Cal.App.2d 549, 558, 107 P.2d 282; Finnegan v. Royal Real- ty Co., 35 Cal.2d 409, 433, 218 P.2d 17; Prosser on Torts, 2nd Ed., § 45, p. 226. The Finnegan case says, 35 Cal.2d at page 433, 218 P.2d at page 32: "Where several persons act in concert and damages result from their joint tort, each person is held for the entire damages unless segregation as to causation can be established. Even though persons are not acting in concert, if the result produced by their acts are indivisible, each person is held liable for the whole. Death, burning of a building or the sinking of a boat are such indivisible results. The reason for imposing liability on each for the entire consequence is that there exists no basis for dividing damages and the law is loath to permit an innocent plaintiff to suffer as against a wrongdoing defendant. This liability is imposed where each cause is sufficient in itself as well as where each cause is required to produce the result. 15 So. Cal. L. Rev. 439." Copley v. Putter, supra, 93 Cal.App.2d at page 457, 207 P.2d at page 878: "If one of the wrongdoers could escape on the plea that his negligence was independent of that of the other tort-feasor, both might leave the victim of their carelessness without a remedy. It would be a frustration of justice for the wronged person to be permitted to show his injury and the simultaneous negligence of the two tort-feasors and be required to demonstrate which of the two had caused the damage." Cummings v. Kendall, supra, speaking of an indivisible injury, 41 Cal.App.2d at page 558, 107 P.2d at page 287, says: "'On the other hand, since it is impossible to prove what share the act of either of the tortfeasors contributed, or whether it contributed any at all, if this prevailed, each would escape—an absurd result. To overcome this difficulty, the law imposes upon each tort-feasor the impossible burden of proof, contenting itself with limiting the injured person's total recovery to one indemnity. The situation is the same when one of the two contributing factors is not the result of actionable fault; again, the single tort-feasor cannot be allowed to escape through the meshes of a logical net. He is a wrongdoer; let him unravel the casuistries resulting from his wrong.'"

[10] Appellant did not undertake to carry this burden. He will have an opportunity to do so at a new trial. Of course it is true, as argued by respondent, that it is not necessary for her to establish that defendant's tort was the proximate cause of the loss of the leg. She has proved a cause of action when she shows that defendant in treating her departed from accepted standards and that that caused her increased and prolonged pain. Whether it was the proximate cause of the gangrene, and if so was the cause of the amputation of the leg or the cause of the second operation, goes to the question of damages. But those inquiries if answered favorably to defendant's contentions would not deprive plaintiff of a right to a new trial upon the lesser aspect of the case,—a malpractice resulting in pain and suffering.

There was no abuse of discretion in granting a new trial herein.

In the ESTATE of Fred E.
HOOPER, alias, Deceased.

No. 16926.

District Court of Appeal, First District,
Division 2, California.

Sept. 20, 1956.

Proceeding for final accounting and distribution of estate, wherein United States filed claim for delinquent income taxes of decedent. The Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco, T. I. Fitzpatrick, J., disallowed claim and United States appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Kaufman, J., held that where total assets of estate remaining after deduction of expenses of administration were less than income tax claim of United States, such tax claim had priority over other claims against estate, notwithstanding that claim was not filed within six-month period following publication of notice to creditors as required by state law.

Order reversed with directions.

No appearance for respondent.

KAUFMAN, Justice.

This is an appeal by the United States of America from a decree of final distribution and settling the first, final and supplemental account of administrator. This decree disallowed the claim of the Internal Revenue Service of the United States Government on the ground that it was not filed within the time provided by law for presentation of claims.

Decedent died in San Francisco on November 22, 1945, leaving as heirs at law a son, Fred A. Hooper, who was appointed administrator of the estate of decedent, and a daughter, Vera Epting. Notice to creditors was published on December 12, 1945.

On November 15, 1949, the estate was appraised at $11,502.90, consisting of $1,502.90 cash and a liquor and tavern business worth $10,000. On December 14, 1949, the administrator's first accounting showed cash on hand in the sum of $7,364.94.

On December 28, 1949, Vera Epting filed objections to the first account. On January 26, 1950, the Collector of Internal Revenue filed a verified creditor's claim setting forth decedent's liability for delinquent income taxes for 1943, 1944 and 1945, plus interest thereon, in the total sum of $5,376.66. An affidavit of the Collector attached to this claim stated that no payments had been made on said claim and that there were no offsets which would reduce the balance.

On August 12, 1952, the administrator's supplemental report was filed. A referee was appointed by the court on December 12, 1952. The referee found that the administrator had carried on the tavern business until March, 1949, when it was sold for $9,000. He also found that objections to the administrator's salary claim for conducting this business were well taken and on April 23, 1953, the court confirmed the referee's findings and adopted his recommendations.

On November 19, 1953, the administrator filed a petition for settlement of first account and supplemental and final account and for distribution, again seeking an award for salary, and objecting to the Internal Revenue's tax claim on the ground that it was an arbitrary assessment not supported by competent evidence.

On February 26, 1954, the United States filed objections to the administrator's petition and also petitioned for an order requiring the administrator to account or be held personally liable. The petition asserted that the estate was insolvent, that the claim of the United States was duly assessed against the estate and was entitled to priority. The United States also objected to the withdrawal of a sum of $2,145.26 by the administrator, and to said administrator's failure to account for other sums of $1,081.51 and $1,502.90.

At the hearings on the above objections, the assessment list of January 23, 1950, showing the assessment of the taxes claimed to be due and owing, and a certificate of assessments and payments for the claim dated December 11, 1953 were introduced in evidence. The administrator then contended that the tax claim should be disallowed because not filed in time.

On April 12, 1955, the decree of final distribution and settling the first final and supplemental account of administrator was filed. It disallowed the claim of the United States on the ground that it was filed too late; allowed the administrator $10,000 for extraordinary services rendered to the estate, which was to be deducted from the sum of $13,915.26, the salary which he had paid himself out of said estate and which the court disallowed. He was ordered to account to the estate for the balance, $3,915.26. The court then distributed the residue of the estate in the hands of the administrator as follows: to Vera Epting, $3,959; to Fred A. Hooper, $43.74.

It is immediately apparent that the total assets of the estate remaining after deduction of expenses of administration was less than the tax claim of the United States. Appellant contends that in this situation it is well settled that the tax claim of the United States has a priority that cannot be superseded or impaired by state law.

It is provided in section 191 of Title 31 United States Code, 31 U.S.C.A. § 191, Revised Statutes, § 3466, that "whenever the estate of any deceased debtor, in the hands of the executors or administrators, is insufficient to pay all debts due from the deceased, the debts due to the United States shall be first satisfied * * *." Section 700 of the Probate Code of California requires all persons having claims against decendent to file them in the office of the clerk of court or present them to the executor or administrator within six months after the first publication of notice. It is conceded that the claim of the United States was filed after the six months period following publication of notice to creditors had expired.

A tax claim of the United States, such as that herein, has been held to be included in the term "debt" as used in section 3466, supra. Price v. United States, 269 U.S. 492, 46 S.Ct. 180, 70 L.Ed. 373. Even unassessed taxes have been included within the definition of debts. Leggett v. Southeastern Peoples College, 234 N.C. 595, 68 S.E.2d 263.

[1] In view of numerous decisions of the United States Supreme Court, it must now be considered well established that any filing or priority provisions of state law which conflict with the terms or spirit of federal statutes must yield to the latter. United States v. Oklahoma, 261 U.S. 253, 43 S.Ct. 295, 67 L.Ed. 638.

In the case of United States v. Summerlin, 310 U.S. 414, 60 S.Ct. 1019, 1021, 84 L.Ed. 1283, a decision of the Supreme Court of Florida was reversed which had held void a claim of the United States filed after the eight month period provided for under that state's probate claim statute, had expired. The United States Supreme Court there stated that if the state statute undertook to invalidate a claim of the United States so that it could not be enforced at all if not filed within eight months, that "the statute in that sense transgressed the limits of state power." See, United States v. Embrey, 145 Fla. 277, 199 So. 41; Taylor v. United States, 324 Mass. 639, 88 N.E. 2d 121.

It was held in United States v. Division of Labor Law Enforcement, 9 Cir., 201 F. 2d 857, 36 A.L.R.2d 1197, that the priority granted by section 3466, supra, prevailed over the priority granted to wage claimants in cases concerned with assignments for benefits of creditors by section 1204 of the California Code of Civil Procedure.

And, see, Barnett v. American Surety Co. of New York, 10 Cir., 77 F.2d 225.

[2] In view of the foregoing it is clear that the lower court erred in disallowing the claim of the United States of America and in failing to accord it priority.

Order reversed with directions to the lower court to allow said claim and accord it priority as provided for by law.

v.

Hugh C. WOOD and Lorraine E. M. Wood, John Rossl, Patrick J. Kirrane and Mary E. Kirrane, John Doe, Mary Roe, and White Company, a Corporation, Defendants and Appellants.

Civ. 16742.

District Court of Appeal, First District,
Division 1, California.

Sept. 25, 1956.

Action by a city to condemn part of defendants' lands and certain water rights for erection and maintenance of a drainage pumping plant. From so much of a judgment of the Superior Court, Marin County, Jordan L. Martinelli, J., as denied interest on amount of severance damages awarded defendants, they appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Peters, P. J., held that trial court's finding, conclusion of law and judgment fixed total severance damages on date of judgment at specified sum as compensation for future damages caused by severance and interference with defendants' use of lands not taken from date on which city took possession of condemned lands.

so that defendants were not entitled to interest on such sum.

Portion of judgment appealed from affirmed.

1. Eminent Domain ⇨124

Where city's condemnation action, through no fault of defendants, was not tried until three years and four months after commencement thereof, damages for taking of part of defendants' lands and resulting injuries to remainder thereof were computable under statute as of date of trial, though city took possession of condemned lands before trial. West's Ann.Code Civ. Proc., § 1249.

2. Eminent Domain ⇨124

Where condemner of land secures order for immediate possession thereof, condemnnee is entitled to compensation for loss of use of property from date on which condemner takes possession thereof to date of trial, though value of property is fixed, under statute, at time of trial. West's Ann. Code Civ.Proc., § 1249; West's Ann.Const. art. 1, § 14.

3. Eminent Domain ⇨148

Where value of condemnnee's use of condemned property is not included in condemnation judgment, condemnnee is entitled to interest on amount of compensation awarded from date of condemner's taking of property in lieu of such value. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc., § 1249; West's Ann. Const. art. 1, § 14.

4. Eminent Domain ⇨148

Just compensation, required by Constitution, for taking of private property for public use, includes not only actual cash value or market value of property, but actual cash value of use thereof from date of condemner's taking of possession to date of judgment in condemnation action, if condemner takes possession before judgment. West's Ann.Const. art. 1, § 14.

5. Eminent Domain ⇨148

In action to condemn portion of defendants' lands, trial court must ascertain actual loss caused defendants by their loss of use of retained portions of lands because of injuries thereto as result of taking and include sum so ascertained in severance damages. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc., § 1249.

6. Eminent Domain ⇨148

Interest may be used as measure of actual loss caused landowners by their loss of use of portions of lands injured as result of taking of other portions thereof, but is awarded only when actual loss has not been fixed. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc., § 1249.

7. Eminent Domain ⇨262(1)

In interpreting trial court's findings, conclusions and judgment in condemnation action, statute requiring court to assess compensation and damages as of date of trial must be considered. West's Ann.Code Civ. Proc., § 1249.

8. Eminent Domain ⇨247(1)

In city's action to condemn portions of defendants' lands, Superior Court's finding, conclusion of law and judgment, fixing and awarding defendants total severance damages in specified sum as compensation not only for future damages caused by severance of lands taken, but for interference with defendants' use of portions not taken by city's use of portions taken from date on which city took possession thereof before trial, so that defendants were not entitled to interest on such sum. Julius H. Selinger, San Rafael, for appellants.

Harold Jos. Haley, City Atty., City of San Rafael, Harold F. Wolters, San Rafael, John D. Rogers, San Francisco, for respondent.

PETERS, Presiding Justice.

The City of San Rafael condemned a portion of certain properties owned by defendants. The taking of the property resulted in injury to the properties retained by defendants. The trial court awarded defendants $1,280 for the property taken, plus interest, and $16,000 severance damages, without interest. Defendants appeal, on the clerk's transcript, from that portion of the judgment that failed to award interest on the severance damages.

On July 2, 1951, the City of San Rafael brought an action to condemn certain real property and certain water rights connected therewith belonging to defendants. The purpose of the condemnation was to erect and maintain a drainage pumping plant. The parcel of land condemned was a part of a larger parcel occupied and used by defendants for the purpose of operating a yacht harbor and a yacht sales business.

On July 5, 1951, the City secured an order for immediate possession of the property and actually went into possession under this order on November 5, 1951. On this date the City began construction on the condemned parcel of a concrete sump on which was constructed electric automatic pumps as part of a large pumping plant. By reason of the construction of the pumping plant a large quantity of silt was deposited in the yacht harbor which materially and adversely interfered with the use by defendants of their remaining properties.

The condemnation proceeding, through no fault of the defendants, did not come to trial until November 9, 1954. The trial resulted in a determination that $1,280 was the fair market value of the condemned parcels, and that the severance damages, together with the uses to which the condemned parcel has been and shall be put, amounted to $16,000.

On February 17, 1955, judgment was entered condemning the property and awarding to defendants, $1,280 as and for the reasonable value of the property condemned, with interest at seven per cent from November 5, 1951, the date of the taking, and awarding to defendants, as severance damages, and because of the uses to which the property has been and shall be put, and for interference with defendants' use of the larger parcel since November 5, 1951, the sum of $16,000, without interest. The City has deposited in court the amount called for by this judgment. Defendants have appealed from that portion of the judgment failing to award interest from November 5, 1951, on the $16,000 severance award.

[1] The legal principles applicable to the problems involved on this appeal are well settled. Code of Civil Procedure, section 1249, fixes the time at which the value of condemned property and the damages flowing from such taking are to be fixed. So far as pertinent here, that section provides: "For the purpose of assessing compensation and damages the right thereof shall be deemed to have accrued at the date of the issuance of summons and its actual value at that date shall be the measure of compensation for all property to be actually taken, and the basis of damages to property not actually taken but injuriously affected * * * provided, that in any case in which the issue is not tried within one year after the date of the commencement of the action, unless the delay is caused by the defendant, the compensation and damages shall be deemed to have accrued at the date of the trial * * *."

In the instant case, through no fault of the defendants, the trial was not had until three years and four months after the commencement of the action. As a result, the damages, under the quoted section, are computable as of "the date of the trial." This is true even though the condemner, as in the instant case, took possession of the condemned property prior to trial. City of Los Angeles v. Tower, 90 Cal.App.2d 869, 204 P.2d 395.

[2-4] Under the Constitution of this state, Article 1, section 14, private property cannot "be taken or damaged for public use without just compensation having first been made to, or paid into court for, the owner."

Where, as in the instant case, the condemner secures an order for immediate possession, the condemnee is entitled to compensation for the loss of use of the property from the date of possession to the date of trial, even though the value of the property, under section 1249, is fixed at the time of trial. Where the value of such use is not included in the judgment, the condemnee is entitled to interest from the date of taking in lieu of the value of such use. The leading case on this subject is Metropolitan Water Dist. of Southern California v. Adams, 16 Cal.2d 676, at page 680, 107 P.2d 618, at page 620, where the court concluded: "There can be no question, we think, that just compensation for the taking of respondents' property includes not only the actual cash value, or market value of said property, but also the actual cash value of the use of said property from the date of the taking possession thereof up to the date of judgment, if possession is taken by the condemner prior to judgment * * *."

"There should be some means or method of procedure, if we are to comply with the constitutional requirement that just compensation be paid to the owner for the taking of his property, whereby compensation for its use prior to the judgment is paid to him * * *."

"* * * Legal interest is frequently accepted as the basis for fixing the measure of damages * * *."

"* * * The value of respondents' property at the date of trial, whether less or more, was the measure of respondents' damage for the taking of their property, but it did not cover respondents' damage for being deprived of the use of said property prior to judgment. In our view of the merits of this appeal, we are of the opinion that interest was properly allowed under the facts of this case." See also Los Angeles Co. Flood Control Dist. v. Hansen, 48 Cal.App. 2d 314, 119 P.2d 734; Heimann v. City of Los Angeles, 30 Cal.2d 746, 185 P.2d 597; Sacramento & San Joaquin Drainage Dist. v. Truslow, 125 Cal.App.2d 478, 270 P.2d 928, 271 P.2d 930.

It should be noted that section 1249 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides, in part, for interest from the date of the order letting the condemner into possession. That portion of the section is here inapplicable because it relates only to possession taken under section 1254 of the Code of Civil Procedure, that is, possession taken after judgment. Metropolitan Water Dist. of Southern California v. Adams, 16 Cal.2d 676, 678, 107 P.2d 618; City of Los Angeles v. Tower, 90 Cal.App.2d 869, 872, 204 P.2d 395.

[5,6] Appellants argue that the damage to their retained properties by the deposit of silt and the turbulence of the waters caused by the construction of the pumping plant commenced on November 5, 1951, when respondent took possession of the condemned property. Therefore, so it is argued, they are entitled to interest from that date as compensation for the "use" of the property involved in the severance damages. Respondent concedes, and it is clearly the law, that appellants are entitled to compensation for the loss of the "use" of the property involved in the severance damages, and that compensation for such loss of use must be computed starting November 5, 1951. But respondent contends that such compensation for such loss of use is not necessarily interest. The proper rule is that the trial court must ascertain the actual loss caused by such loss of use from the date of possession to the date of judgment, and then such sum should be included in the severance damages. Interest may be used as a measure of such loss, but it is only awarded when the actual loss has not been fixed. Metropolitan Water Dist. of Southern California v. Adams, 16 Cal.2d 676, 107 P.2d 618, and Los Angeles County Flood Control Dist. v. Hansen, 48 Cal.App.2d 314, 119 P.2d 734.

[7] Respondent next argues that the findings, conclusions, and judgment in the instant case demonstrate to a certainty that included in the award of $16,000 severance damages was an award for loss of the "use" of the property involved from the date of possession to the date of judgment, as well as an award for future damages after judgment.

Thus, the real question involved is not a dispute over the law, but the proper interpretation of the findings, conclusions, and judgment. In interpreting these declarations of the trial court the provisions of section 1249 of the Code of Civil Procedure, above quoted, must be kept in mind. Under that section, in the instant case, the trial court had to assess compensation and damages as of the date of trial.

[8] Finding XII reads as follows: "That by reason of the severance of said Parcel One [the condemned parcel] from said larger parcel of land, together with the use and uses which have been and shall be made by plaintiff of the said Parcel One, the remainder of said property of the defendants has suffered a diminution of value in the sum of Sixteen Thousand ($16,000.00) Dollars." (Italics added.)

The pertinent conclusion of law is: "That the defendants * * * are entitled to judgment against the plaintiff for damages in the sum of Sixteen Thousand ($16,000.00) Dollars, which sum represents the diminution in value of the entire parcel of defendants' land after the taking and condemning of the said Parcel One hereinafter described, plus interest on the foregoing sum of One Thousand Two Hundred Eighty ($1,280.00) Dollars from and after November 5, 1951, at the rate of 7% per annum, the same being the date of taking, and which sums represent the total damage suffered by defendants by reason of the condemnation and the severance of said Parcel One, the uses to which said Parcel One has been and shall be put, the use of said Parcel One by condemnor since November 5, 1951, and the interference with defendants' use of said remaining property from and after November 5, 1951." (Italics added.)

The pertinent provisions of the judgment are: "2. That defendants are entitled to interest on the foregoing sum of Twelve Hundred Eighty and 00/100 ($1,280.00) Dollars, from and after November 5, 1951, the same being the date of taking, until final judgment herein, at the rate of seven (7%) per cent per annum, as and for damages for the deprivation by plaintiff of defendants' use of said parcel taken for said period;

"3. That the said parcel taken is a part of a larger parcel of land owned by defendants and that by reason of the severance of said parcel taken from said larger parcel, and the uses to which said parcel taken have been and shall be put, and the interference with defendants use of said larger parcel from and after November 5, 1951, defendants are hereby awarded damages in the sum of Sixteen Thousand and 00/100 ($16,000.00) Dollars." (Italics added.)

It is too clear to require further comment that by these declarations the trial court fixed, as of the date of judgment, the total severance damages suffered by appellants and awarded for all such damages the total sum of $16,000. This was compensation not only for future damages caused by the severance, but for interference with their use of the property from the date possession was taken. The trial court could hardly have used clearer language to express this intent.

One of appellants' contentions seems to be that their damages accrued on the date possession was taken, and that the trial court fixed the damages at that date. If this were so, they probably would be entitled to interest on the $16,000 from the date of possession. But this is not what is required by section 1249 of the Code of Civil Procedure, is not in accordance with the law as set forth in City of Los Angeles v. Tower, 90 Cal.App.2d 869, 204 P.2d 395, and is not what the trial court did. The trial court first determined, in accordance with the law, that at the time of judgment the value of the property taken was $1,280, and allowed interest from the date of possession for the loss of the use of such property, and then determined, in one sum, the loss of the "use" or damage caused by interference with the use of the retained property from the date of possession and future damages. This is in precise accord with the law as set forth in the code and in the cases.

Appellants also seem to argue that, admitting that the damages included an award for interference with their use of the retained properties from the date of possession, they are nevertheless also entitled to interest because from the date of possession to the date of judgment they did not have the full use of their property, nor of the money awarded to them. But, as already pointed out, the $16,000 award purported to include damages, fixed as of the time of judgment, for the full loss of use from the date of possession, as well as damages for all future losses.

The portion of the judgment appealed from is affirmed.

Emma YARBROUGH, Plaintiff and Appellant,

v.

Robert YARBROUGH, Defendant and
Respondent.
Civ. 16835.

District Court of Appeal, First District,
Division 1, California.

Sept. 25, 1956.

Action for separate maintenance. After a default judgment was entered for wife, husband moved to set aside his default. The Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco, William T. Sweigert, J., granted the motion and wife appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Peters, P. J., held that where only facts alleged by husband in his affidavit in support of motion to set aside his default were that he mislaid the summons and complaint served upon him and did not find them until after his default had been taken, and husband did not aver any facts as to why or how he mislaid the papers, where he mislaid them, what attempts he made to find them, and why he did not find them sooner, first court, under such circumstances, abused its discretion in setting aside his default.

Order reversed.

1. Appeal and Error ⇨770(1)

Where respondent failed to file a brief in support of an order in his favor, an inference arose that respondent conceded that appellant's appeal was meritorious.

2. Appeal and Error ⇨82(3)

An unconditional order setting aside a default judgment under statute providing for relief from judgments taken through mistake or excusable neglect is a special order after judgment and appealable. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc., § 473.

3. Appeal and Error ⇨82(3)

Where an order setting aside a default judgment is conditional, it is nevertheless appealable if self-executing, but where such conditional order is not self-executing and contemplates or requires a second order setting aside the judgment, it is interlocutory and not appealable. West's Ann.Code Civ. Proc., § 473.

4. Appeal and Error ⇨82(3)

Where an order provided for setting aside a default judgment on the grounds of excusable neglect, in ten days upon compliance with specified conditions, and did not contemplate or require the making of a second order, such order was self-executing and therefore was appealable. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc., § 473.

5. Appeal and Error ⇨957(1) Judgment ⇨139

A motion to vacate a default judgment rests in the sound discretion of the trial court, and its order on such a motion will not be disturbed unless an abuse of discretion clearly appears. West's Ann.Code Civ. Proc., § 473.

6. Appeal and Error ⇨957(1)

Appellate courts, generally, are more inclined toward upholding orders vacating defaults than affirming denials of such motions, in order to dispose of cases, where possible, upon their merits, and this rule applies with particular force to divorce actions.

7. Judgment ⇨139

The discretion conferred upon a trial court to set aside default judgments is not a capricious or arbitrary discretion, but one that is guided and controlled by fixed legal principles. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc., § 473.

8. Judgment ⇨162(2)

The burden of showing that a default judgment was entered through mistake, inadvertence, surprise or excusable neglect is on the party moving to set aside the default, and in the absence of such a showing, the default may not be set aside. West's Ann. Code Civ.Proc., § 473.

9. Judgment ⇨159

Where only facts alleged by husband in his affidavit in support of his motion to set aside his default in an action by his wife for separate maintenance were that he mislaid the summons and complaint served upon him, and did not find them until after his default had been taken, and husband did not aver any facts as to why or how he mislaid the papers, where he mislaid them, what attempts he made to find them, and why he did not find them sooner, trial court, under such circumstances, abused its discretion in setting aside his default. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc., § 473.

10. Judgment ⇨139

Where a defendant, with full knowledge of the proceedings, and without being misled by the opposing party or counsel, fails to take action to protect his interests until after a default judgment is entered against him; it is an abuse of discretion for a trial court to set the default aside. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc., § 473.

11. Judgment ⇨143(16)

A trial court does not have legal power to set aside a default judgment simply because the defendant did not realize the legal effect of failing to file an answer. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc., § 473.

12. Judgment ⇨143(3)

While under some circumstances a trial court may find excusable neglect necessary to set aside a default judgment where an employee or associate, or attorney of a defendant erroneously files a summons and complaint served upon defendant so that defendant's attention is not called to them, the inadvertence of defendant's officers must rest not on mere forgetfulness but on a misunderstanding in the execution of properly given instructions, or on a mistake which might be easily made without any culpable carelessness on the part of the parties concerned. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc., § 473.

13. Judgment ⇨159

Where secretary of husband's attorney in an action by wife for separate maintenance in an affidavit in support of husband's motion to set aside his default stated that after husband was already in default she telephoned to the office of wife's lawyer to ascertain if wife's lawyer would allow the husband to file a pleading and was notified by the secretary in wife's lawyer's office that the lawyer was in court and would be informed of the call when he returned, and the same thing happened on four succeeding days, such a showing was not sufficient to warrant setting aside husband's default. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc., § 473.

14. Judgment ⇨143(17)

The trial court may find excusable neglect or surprise necessary to set aside a default judgment where settlement negotiations are being had between counsel and where there is an oral or implied understanding that no default will be taken without notice, and counsel takes the default judgment without notice. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc., § 473.

Phil F. Garvey, San Francisco, for appellant.

Joseph E. Isaacs, San Francisco, for respondent.

PETERS, Presiding Justice.

In this action for separate maintenance the default of the defendant was duly taken, and a default judgment and decree entered. Thereafter, defendant moved to set aside his default. The motion was granted. The wife appeals.

[1] The appeal is presented on appellant's brief alone, respondent having failed to file a brief in support of the order. This failure imposes an unnecessary burden on this court, and at least raises the inference that respondent concedes that the appeal is meritorious. Bendlage v. Kohl-saat, 54 Cal.App.2d 136, 128 P.2d 691; Postin v. Griggs, 66 Cal.App.2d 147, 151 P.2d 887; see discussion, 4 Cal.Jur.2d p. 334, sec. 496.

On December 6, 1954, the wife, appellant herein, in San Francisco, brought an action against her husband, respondent, a San Francisco resident, for separate maintenance, on the grounds of cruelty and wilful neglect, praying for $150 per month for support, plus certain other sums for hospital and medical care. Summons and complaint were served on respondent on December 30, 1954, in San Francisco. The summons bore on its face the standard provision that if served within San Francisco "You are hereby directed to appear and answer the complaint * * * within ten days after the service on you of this summons * * *

"* * * that unless you appear * * the said Plaintiff will * * * apply to the Court for any other relief demanded in the complaint."

On January 11, 1955, the respondent having failed to appear, appellant secured the entry of respondent's default. On January 18, 1955, respondent moved to set the default aside, the supporting affidavit merely averring in general terms that the default "was taken against defendant by reason of his surprise, inadvertence and excusable neglect" without alleging any supporting facts. An affidavit of merits and a verified answer denying the major allegations of the complaint were also filed, as was also a cross-complaint for a divorce. On January 28, 1955, this motion to set aside the default was denied, without prejudice.

On February 1, 1955, a default decree of separate maintenance was entered, ordering respondent to pay appellant $130 per month, to pay community debts up to $590, and to pay appellant's attorney's fees of $200 and $25 in court costs. On this same day respondent again filed a notice of motion for an order to set aside the default. Respondent's supporting affidavit avers that the "default therein was taken against defendant by reason of his surprise, inadvertence and excusable neglect in that when affiant was served with a copy of the summons and complaint on or about December 30, 1954, he mislaid the same and did not find them again until he was in default, at which time affiant immediately took the said copy of complaint and summons to Joseph E. Isaacs, Esq., his attorney, who advised affiant of his said default and further advised affiant he would try and negotiate with the attorney for the plaintiff to give affiant the opportunity to file his answer and cross-complaint."

There was also filed an affidavit of the secretary of respondent's attorney to the effect that she tried to get in touch with appellant's attorney by telephone on several occasions commencing on January 10, 1955 (when respondent was already in default), to ascertain if appellant would permit respondent to file a pleading, but was unable to reach appellant's attorney who was in court when the telephone calls were made.

On March 1, 1955, the trial court ordered "the motion to set aside default and decree granted after 10 days of this order providing defendant has paid $130.00 temporary alimony and $200 attorneys fees, otherwise motion denied." On March 10, 1955, the wife appealed from the order.

[2,3] The first question presented is whether the order involved is an appealable order. Of course, an unconditional order under section 473 of the Code of Civil Procedure setting aside a default judgment is a special order after judgment and therefore appealable. Colby v. Pierce, 15 Cal. App.2d 723, 59 P.2d 1046; Casner v. Superior Court, 23 Cal.App.2d 730, 74 P.2d 298; Harth v. Ten Eyck, 12 Cal.2d 709, 87 P.2d 693. Where, as in the instant case, the order is conditional, if the order is self-executing, it is still appealable. Paul v. Walburn, 135 Cal.App. 364, 26 P.2d 1002. It is only where the conditional order is not self-executing, that is, it contemplates or requires a second order setting aside the judgment, that the first order is interlocutory, and not appealable. Hayes v. Pierce, 18 Cal.App.2d 531, 64 P.2d 728; AAIwyn's Law Inst. v. City & County of San Francisco, 39 Cal.App. 365, 178 P. 966.

[4] In the instant case, it is quite clear that the order sets aside the judgment in 10 days upon compliance with the conditions, and that such order did not contemplate or require the making of a second order. The order, in other words, is self-executing, and therefore appealable.

The second and basic question presented is whether the trial court abused its discretion in setting aside the default judgment on the basis of the affidavits on file. We think such abuse of discretion here appears as a matter of law.

[5-8] We are well aware of the rule that the granting or denying a motion to vacate a default rests in the sound discretion of the trial court, and that the order will not be disturbed unless an abuse of discretion clearly appears. See for good statements of the rule Baratti v. Baratti, 109 Cal.App.2d 917, 242 P.2d 22; Berry v. Berry, 140 Cal.App.2d 50, 294 P.2d 757; Wilterdink v. Wilterdink, 81 Cal.App. 2d 526, 184 P.2d 527; Shearman v. Jorgensen, 106 Cal. 483, 39 P. 863. We are also aware of the rule that appellate courts, generally, are more inclined toward upholding orders vacating defaults than affirming denials of such motions, in order to dispose of cases, where possible, upon their merits. Stub v. Harrison, 35 Cal.App. 2d 685, 96 P.2d 979; Montijo v. Robert Sherer & Co., 5 Cal.App. 736, 91 P. 261; Osborn v. Osborn, 131 Cal.App.2d 191, 280 P.2d 60; Bodin v. Webb, 17 Cal.App.2d 422, 62 P.2d 155. We are also aware that this rule applies with particular force to divorce actions. Garcia v. Garcia, 105 Cal. App.2d 289, 233 P.2d 23; Mulkey v. Mulkey, 100 Cal. 91, 34 P. 621; Reh fuss v. Reh fuss, 169 Cal. 86, 145 P. 1020; Landon v. Landon, 74 Cal.App.2d 954, 169 P.2d 980; Hambrick v. Hambrick, 77 Cal.App. 2d 372, 175 P.2d 269; Gregory v. Gregory, 92 Cal.App.2d 343, 206 P.2d 1122. But the discretion conferred is not a capricious or arbitrary one, but a discretion that is guided and controlled by fixed legal principles. Waite v. Southern Pacific Co., 192 Cal. 467, 221 P. 204; Gilio v. Campbell, 114 Cal.App.2d Supp. 853, 250 P.2d 373; Brill v. Fox, 211 Cal. 739, 297 P. 25; Essig v. Seaman, 89 Cal.App. 295, 264 P. 552. The burden of showing that the default was entered through mistake, inadvertence, surprise or excusable neglect is on the moving party, and in the absence of such a showing the default may not be set aside. Elms v. Elms, 72 Cal.App.2d 508, 164 P.2d 936; Bailey v. Taaffe, 29 Cal. 422.

[9-11] Tested by the standards set forth in the cases we do not think that respondent's affidavit discloses a sufficient excusable inadvertence or neglect to permit the trial court to set aside the default. On December 30, 1954, respondent was served with a summons and complaint which told him that he must appear and answer within 10 days. He did not even consult an attorney for 11 days. His only excuse is that he "mis-laid" the documents "and did not find them again until he was in default." No facts are averred as to why or how he mis-laid the papers, where he mis-laid them, what attempts he made to find them, and why he did not find them sooner. All we have is that the respondent, in full possession of his faculties, mis-laid the papers and did not find them until after his default had been taken. The cases are clear to the effect that where the defendant, with full knowledge of the proceedings, and without being misled by the opposing party or counsel, fails to take action to protect his interests until after the default, it is an abuse of discretion to set the default aside. Elms v. Elms, 72 Cal.App.2d 508, 164 P.2d 936; Essig v. Seaman, 89 Cal.App. 295, 264 P. 552; Bailey v. Taaffe, 29 Cal. 422; Fink & Schindler Co. v. Savros, 72 Cal.App. 688, 237 P. 1083; Weinberger v. Manning, 50 Cal.App. 2d 494, 123 P.2d 531; Dunn v. Standard Acc. Ins. Co., 114 Cal.App. 208, 299 P. 575. Nor does the trial court have the legal power to set aside the default simply because the defendant did not realize the legal effect of failing to file an answer. Gilio v. Campbell, 114 Cal.App.2d Supp. 853, 250 P.2d 373.

[12] While, under some circumstances, the courts have held that the trial court may find "excusable neglect" where an employee or associate, or attorney of the defendant erroneously files the papers so that defendant's attention is not called to them, Benjamin v. Dalmo Mfg. Co., 31 Cal. 2d 523, 190 P.2d 593; Gorman v. California Transit Co., 199 Cal. 246, 248 P. 923; Downing v. Klondike Min. & Mill. Co., 165 Cal. 786, 134 P. 970, the courts have been careful to point out that in such cases "The inadvertence of defendant's officers rested not on mere forgetfulness [citation] but on a misunderstanding in the execution of properly given instructions, a mistake which "might be easily made * * * without any culpable carelessness" on the part of the parties concerned." Bernards v. Grey, 97 Cal.App.2d 679, 685, 218 P.2d 597, 601; see also Slater v. Selover, 25 Cal.App. 525, 144 P. 298.

port of respondent's case. It is to the effect that on January 10, 1955, after respondent was already in default she telephoned to the office of appellant's lawyer "to ascertain if [appellant's lawyer] would allow the said defendant to file a pleading." The affiant was notified by the secretary in the lawyer's office that appellant's counsel was in court, and would be informed of the call when he returned. The same thing happened on the four succeeding days. This is not a sufficient showing that would warrant setting aside a default.

[14] There can be no doubt that a trial court may find excusable neglect or surprise where settlement negotiations are being had between counsel, and where there is an oral or implied understanding that no default will be taken without notice, and counsel takes such a default without notice. Waybright v. Anderson, 200 Cal. 374, 253 P. 148; Greenamyer v. Board of Lugo E. S. Dist., 116 Cal.App. 319, 2 P.2d 848; Beard v. Beard, 16 Cal.2d 645, 107 P.2d 385; Bonfilio v. Ganger, 60 Cal. App.2d 405, 140 P.2d 861; Greenwell v. Caro, 114 Cal.App.2d 35, 249 P.2d 573. But those cases are predicated upon the fact that opposing counsel acted so as to deceive or mislead the defaulting counsel. In the instant case no negotiations for settlement were taking place. There was no conduct or act on the part of appellant's counsel which deceived or misled the respondent or his counsel. When the secretary of appellant's counsel was first approached by respondent's counsel, the time to plead had already expired. Respondent was already in default.

The order appealed from is reversed.

Hearing Denied Nov. 21, 1956.

Action was brought for specific performance and to quiet title. The Superior Court of San Diego County, Arthur L. Mundo, J., entered judgment in favor of the plaintiffs, and the defendants appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Mussell, J., held that where written contract for the purchase of ranch of 930 acres for $65,000 provided that it was understood that thirty acres, starting about 400 feet west of cattle guard on south side of county road on east grade of certain mountain, were to be deeded back to vendors by purchasers, and vendors gave purchasers a deed to entire ranch and vendors constructed a house and made improvements of about $25,000 on the 30 acres, the contract provided a means by which the description of the 30 acres could be applied to the earth's surface, and a metes and bounds description of the 30 acres could be prepared, and that therefore contract was enforceable by vendors by specific performance with respect to the 30 acres.

Judgment affirmed.

MUSSELL, Justice.

This is an appeal by the defendants in an action for specific performance and to quiet title. On May 20, 1946, plaintiffs were the owners of a 930 acre ranch of mountain property in the vicinity of Palomar Mountain in San Diego county. They had acquired this property in 1905 or 1906 and had lived on it continuously from 1907 or 1908 and used it for farming and cattle raising. On May 20, 1946, plaintiffs were visited by the defendants, Dr. Jameson and his wife, and Dr. Jameson's brother, Joseph. The Jamesons were interested in buying the ranch. Salmons said that it was for sale at the total price of $65,000. A memorandum of agreement was then signed by Dr. Jameson and Louis Salmons purporting to be an option to purchase 900 acres at a total purchase price of $65,000 and it was agreed that an escrow should be opened. Salmons testified that he told Jameson he wished to retain 30 acres of the ranch and build a house on it; that he "showed them" the 30 acres. On June 30, 1946, the parties entered into a written contract whereby defendants agreed to purchase the ranch, containing 930 acres, for the sum of $65,000. This agreement further provided as follows: "It is further understood that 30 acres are to be deeded back to Louis S. Salmons and Hodg-ie B. Salmons starting approximately 400' west of the cattle guard on south side of county road on east grade of Palomar Mt." Louis Salmons testified that when Mrs. Jameson was writing this agreement "We told her to hold the 30 acres there and we would build our house there"; that "I showed Mr. Jameson right where the 30 acres lay and explained everything to him before the contract was drawn up"; that "We stood and pointed a hundred feet across the road. I said, 'Now there is the 30 acres in there. I am going to build on that point'" and "I showed him where the spring was"; that he had an understanding with Dr. Jameson that the 30 acres was to start at a point approximately 400 feet west of the cattle guard on the south side of the county road and run west.

The parties went into escrow at the Security Trust and Savings Bank of San Diego and escrow instructions were signed on July 10, 1946. These instructions contained, among other things, the following provision: "The purchaser herein is to deed to sellers 30 acres of the property involved in this escrow after close of escrow. Description of said 30 acres to be agreed upon by both parties. It is understood by both buyer and seller that your bank assumes no responsibility or liability as to the description of the said 30 acres or to the delivery of the deed conveying said 30 acres."

On July 16, 1946, Salmons and his wife executed and delivered to the escrow holder a grant deed to the entire ranch, including the 30 acres here in question. Defendants executed and delivered a note and trust deed to the escrow holder as security for the unpaid balance of the purchase price. Both the deed and the trust deed were recorded in 1946 and defendants paid the entire balance by 1954. In the spring of 1947 plaintiffs began the construction of their house and the making of improvements on the 30 acre tract referred to in the agreement of June 30, 1946, and expended approximately $25,000 thereon. The house was adobe, with a tile roof. A mixed black top road leading from the county road to the house was laid and a water system was installed from the spring on the property. Dr. Jameson knew in the early part of 1947 that Salmons had built his house on the 30 acres involved and made no objection, stating that the reason he did not object was that he understood that the property would come back to them when the Salmons died and that the general area surrounding the house was all right with him.

On numerous occasions after the sale had been completed, Salmons asked Dr. Jameson for a deed to the 30 acres. Dr. Jameson "stalled it off" but never said until 1954 that he was not willing to deed back the 30 acres. In the latter part of 1954 Salmons went to Dr. Jameson's office in Fallbrook and demanded a deed. The doctor then for the first time claimed that the Salmons had only a "life lease" and he refused to give Salmons a deed to the 30 acres. It is undisputed that defendants paid the taxes on the entire 930 acres, including the house built by plaintiffs and that the property taxes on the said 30 acres and improvements between 1946 and 1955 amounted to $1,434.86.

Garth Batt, a title engineer, employed at the Security Title Company as a title engineer, prepared from the agreement of June 30, 1946, a map of the 30 acres involved. He used a point 400 feet west of the cattle guard referred to in said agreement as a starting point on the south side of the county road. A fence ran north and south from this point and he established the east boundary as parallel to this fence. He used the United States Geological Survey of the area made in 1950 to indicate the location of the Salmons house and to place it on the map which he prepared (plaintiffs' exhibit 7). He extended the east boundary south parallel to the fence to a section line; thence west approximately 1,200 feet; thence north to the county road; thence generally southeasterly along said road to the point of beginning. The trial court accepted the description prepared by Batt as describing the 30 acres involved and found that the defendants now hold legal title to the said 30 acres so described as trustees for plaintiffs. Judgment was entered decreeing, inter alia, that the defendants execute and deliver to plaintiffs a grant deed conveying to them all of the 30 acres described in the decree, free and clear of all encumbrances, and decreed that defendants are disbarred, restrained and enjoined from asserting any right, title or interest therein, and further that plaintiffs pay defendants the sum of $1,434.86 taxes theretofore paid by defendants.

Defendants appeal from the judgment and set forth numerous grounds, principally based upon the argument that the evidence is insufficient to support the findings. The first argument presented is that "The trial court erred in holding that a written contract to deed back 30 acres of land after close of escrow—description of said 30 acres to be agreed upon by both parties, where no agreement was reached, was specifically enforceable in equity."

[1] As was said in Beverage v. Canton Placer Mining Co., 43 Cal.2d 769, 774, 775, 776, 278 P.2d 694, 698:

"To satisfy the statute of frauds, the memorandum affecting the sale of real property must so describe the land that it can be identified with reasonable certainty. * * * This is one of the most essential parts of such an agreement."

It was further held:

"Preferably, the writing should disclose a description which is itself definite and certain. Alternatively, however, a description fulfills the test of reasonable certainty if it furnishes the 'means or key' by which the description may be made certain and identified with its location on the ground. * * * The applicable principle is that that is certain which can be made certain * * and parol evidence in proof thereof, admitted not for the purpose of furnishing or supplying a description * * but for the purpose of applying the given description to the earth's surface, thereby identifying the property. * *

Courts have been most liberal in construing executory contracts for the sale of real estate and have sought, as far as is consistent with the above established rules, to give effect to the intention of the parties in applying descriptions to property. * * * A description or designation in itself of meagre and doubtful character may be deemed sufficient on its being made to appear by proper allegation and proof that at the place indicated the vendor owned premises answering to its terms and owned at that place no other such property."

In the instant case the evidence shows that plaintiffs have fully performed their part of the agreement, have been let into possession of the 30 acre tract and have made substantial improvements thereon with the knowledge and consent of the defendants.

In Pomeroy, Specific Performance of Contracts, (3rd Ed.), Sec. 145, p. 378, the author states:

"In order that any agreement, whether covered by the statute or not, whether written or verbal, may be specifically enforced, it must be complete in all its parts; that is, all the terms which the parties have adopted, as portions of their contract, must be finally and definitely settled, and none must be left to be determined by future negotiation; and this is true without any regard to the comparative importance or unimportance of these several terms. * * It should also be remarked that, when a contract has been partly performed by the Plaintiff, and the Defendant has received and enjoys the benefits thereof, and the Plaintiff would be virtually remediless unless the contract were enforced, the Court, from the plainest considerations of equity and common justice, does not regard with favor any objections raised by the Defendant merely on the ground of the incompleteness or uncertainty of the agreement. Even if the agreement be incomplete, the Court will then, in furtherance of justice and to prevent a most inequitable result, decree a performance of its terms as far as possible * * * In fact, one ground of the equitable jurisdiction to decree specific performance is the incompleteness of the contract which would prevent an action at law, but which exists to such a limited extent and under such circumstances that a refusal to grant any relief would be plainly inequitable."

In Kelley v. Russell, 50 Cal.App.2d 520, 529, 123 P.2d 606, 611, the court said:

"Appellant's next point is that these option contracts cannot be specifically enforced because they were uncertain and lacked mutuality. This is based on one of the findings of the court to the effect that there is no ten-acre parcel containing a water well, spring or other water supply which is defined or can be identified by the terms of the leases, and that the appellant has failed and refused to properly designate or specify any such ten-acre parcel which he claims the right to except from the conveyance. From this it is argued that the option provisions are so uncertain that they cannot be specifically enforced. Any uncertainty which exists arises neither from the terms of the options nor from the court's finding but from the refusal of the appellant to designate any such parcels upon which a water supply existed without including land upon which the oil wells were located. The mere fact that the appellant had the right under the options to claim and exclude from the forty-acre tracts, which the respondents were obliged to offer to purchase, any ten-acre parcels upon which a water supply had existed at the time in question, does not make these option contracts so uncertain as to be unenforceable. Lange v. Waters, 156 Cal. 142, 103 P. 889, 19 Ann.Cas. 1207; Stamm v. Colvin, 94 Cal.App. 180, 270 P. 744; Janssen v. Davis, 219 Cal. 783, 29 P.2d 196. If the appellant desired to exercise the right given him to exclude any ten-acre tracts from the conveyances he was required to make, this exclusion depended upon facts which were readily determinable and the entire matter was one which was well within the powers of a court of equity. Relovich v. Stuart, 211 Cal. 422, 295 P. 819; Fleishman v. Woods, 135 Cal. 256, 67 P. 276."

[2] Under the rules announced in the foregoing authorities, we are in accord with the trial court's finding that the agreement of June 30, 1946, provided a means or key by which the description of the 30 acres contained therein could be applied to the earth's surface and the metes and bounds description of said 30 acres prepared, and further that the contract was enforceable by specific performance under the circumstances shown.

It was conceded at the trial by counsel for the defendants that the Salmons "had a perfect right to live the rest of their days on this property and to build their home there." Dr. Jameson had no objection to the particular location of the 30 acre tract described, stating that this was because it was coming back to the ranch when the Salmons died. In this connection, the doctor testified that at the time of the execution of the contract of June 30, 1946, Salmons said that "* * * (h)e and Mrs. Salmons had lived all their life on Palomar Mountain, or approximately 50 years, and they wished to remain, that is, live the rest of their lives on the mountains, and would it be all right with us if they lived on the ranch, and we said certainly. So Louie and Mrs. Salmons asked if we would deed them 30 acres, and we said yes, and I asked Louie what would become of the 30 acres when he and Mrs. Salmons died, and he said it would return to the ranch because they never wished to see the ranch broken up." However, Salmons testified that some time in 1954 he was informed for the first time by Dr. Jameson that he, Salmons, had only a life lease on the property; that there were several discussions about the 30 acres and

Dr. Jameson never mentioned a life lease until he, Salmons, demanded a deed. The escrow officer testified that none of the parties mentioned anything about a life estate to him. No mention is made of such an estate in the contract of June 30, 1946. The foregoing testimony merely created a conflict for the determination of the trial court and its implied finding that no life estate was agreed upon is supported by the record.

[3-7] Defendants argue that the court erred in finding that the statute of limitations did not bar plaintiffs' cause of action and cite sections 335 and 337, subdivision 1, of the Code of Civil Procedure (four year limitation). However, in Adams v. California Mut. B. & L. Ass'n, 18 Cal.2d 487, 488, 489, 116 P.2d 75, it is held that it is well settled that a person by his conduct may be estopped to rely upon these defenses (of laches or the statute of limitations) and that where the delay in commencing action is induced by the conduct of the defendant it cannot be availed of by him as a defense. In the instant case the evidence shows that Salmons repeatedly asked for a deed to the property and that Dr. Jameson "stalled it off" and that his refusal to execute a deed was not made until 1954. Mere lapse of time does not constitute laches unless accompanied by circumstances showing prejudice to the opposing party. Beverage v. Canton Placer Mining Co., supra, 43 Cal.2d 769, 777, 778, 278 P.2d 694. In the instant case no prejudice was shown. Moreover, Salmons and his wife took possession of said property and made valuable improvements thereon on the faith of the agreement. This was enough to take the case out of the statute of frauds. Magee v. Magee, 174 Cal. 276, 280, 162 P. 1023.

[8-10] The findings on the material issues here involved are supported by substantial evidence and cannot be here disturbed. The weight and sufficiency of the evidence, the construction to be placed upon it and the inferences to be drawn therefrom were matters for the trier of the facts. Likewise, questions as to the credibility of a witness and the determination of conflicts and inconsistencies in his testimony were for the trial judge. Dillard v. McKnight, 34 Cal.2d 209, 223, 209 P.2d 387, 11 A.L.R.2d 835.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 2, California.

Sept. 25, 1956.

Automobile accident case. The Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Robert H. Scott, J., entered judgment in favor of defendant and plaintiffs appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Fox, J., held that refusal of plaintiffs' request to have Vehicle Code sections governing conduct of motorists entering intersections of boulevards and arterial highways not controlled by mechanical or electrical stop and go signals read to jury and for instruction that inexcusable or unreasonable conduct in violation of such sections of Vehicle Code would constitute negligence per se, was not error where accident involved occurred at intersection where mechanical or electrical stop and go traffic signals were so twisted as not to be visible to defendant, who was controlled by them.

Judgment affirmed.

Trial ⇨241

Refusal of plaintiffs' request in automobile accident case to have Vehicle Code sections governing conduct of motorists entering intersections of boulevards and arterial highways not controlled by mechanical or electrical stop and go traffic signals read to jury and also for instruction that inexcusable or unreasonable conduct in violation of such sections constituted negligence per se, was not error, where accident involved occurred at intersection controlled by stop and go signals which were twisted so as not to be visible to defendant motorist who was controlled by such signals. *West's Ann. 2. Automobiles ⇨171(5)

Where intersection of a boulevard or arterial highway with another roadway is controlled by traffic signal light, direction of light controls the right of way.

3. Automobiles ⇨245(14)

In action arising out of collision at T intersection between westbound motorist and southbound motorist, who was controlled by stop sign and traffic signals, which were twisted so as not to be visible to southbound motorist at time of collision, question as to reasonableness of southbound motorist's conduct in driving into such signal controlled intersection without stopping, if he did so, was question of fact for jury.

4. Trial ⇨253(8)

Refusal of trial court to give plaintiff westbound motorists' requested instruction in automobile accident case to effect that if defendant southbound motorist approached an intersection wherein traffic signal was defective and inoperative with notice of defective condition of signal the southbound motorist had duty to stop before entering intersection if there was a stop sign present was not error, as such requested instruction was incomplete, inaccurate and misleading in that it failed to take cognizance of fact that east-west traffic at such intersection was being controlled by traffic lights, and ignored directional signals of those lights and state of traffic responding to those lights.

FOX, Justice.

This is an appeal from a judgment in favor of defendant after a jury verdict in a personal injury action arising from an intersection collision. The appeal is based on the ground that it was prejudicial error to refuse to give certain instructions charging defendant with the duty of stopping before entering the intersection.

The accident occurred around noon on March 1, 1954, at the intersection of Firestone Boulevard and Holmes Avenue. The day was clear and dry. Firestone Boulevard is a six-lane thoroughfare running in an east-west direction. It is approximately 70 feet wide in the area here involved, and carries three lanes of traffic on each side of a double centerline. Holmes Avenue is a two-lane highway laid out in a north-south direction, and is 28 feet wide. Holmes Avenue, at the place of the accident, does not completely cross Firestone Boulevard but flows into it from the north only. The prolongation of Holmes Avenue is located some 100 feet to the west. The picture, therefore, presented at the place of the collision is that of Holmes Avenue joining Firestone Boulevard to form a "T" intersection, the upper horizontal bar of which is Firestone Boulevard.

This intersection was controlled by traffic lights which flashed red, green and amber signals. Three such signal lights were located at the intersection, two of which controlled east-west traffic on Firestone Boulevard. The third traffic light was placed at the south curb of Firestone to face north towards Holmes Avenue, its function being to regulate traffic proceeding south on Holmes in the approach to Firestone. There was, in addition, a boulevard stop sign installed on the west side of Holmes Avenue, approximately 12 to 15 feet north of Firestone Boulevard. It was visible to southbound traffic on Holmes Avenue. At the time of the accident all of these traffic lights were in operation. However, through some unexplained mischance, the signal normally governing traffic southbound on Holmes was so twisted from its normal position that the color of its light was not visible to a motorist approaching the intersection.

Plaintiffs Damiani are husband and wife and just prior to the accident they were traveling west on Firestone in an automobile driven by Mr. Damiani. They approached the intersection from the lane of traffic closest to the center line at a speed of 20-25 miles per hour. When he was approximately 200 feet from the intersection, Mr. Damiani observed that the traffic signal on Firestone was red for westbound traffic. Three or four cars in the lanes to his right had already been stopped by that light, but there were no vehicles ahead of him in his lane. When he was about 50 feet from the intersection, the light changed to green for westbound traffic. Upon the signal's changing to green, Mr. Damiani observed one or two of the stationary cars in the lanes to his right start to move forward and then suddenly stop. His car was three or four car-lengths from the intersection when he first observed the cars start up and about two car-lengths therefrom when he saw them stop. Mr. Damiani continued forward at the same speed into the intersection and collided with defendant's car, which was in the process of making a left turn. The point of impact was approximately nine feet west of the east curb of Holmes Avenue and 37 feet south of the north curb of Firestone Boulevard.

Defendant testified that he lived south of Firestone Boulevard and that his wife worked north of the boulevard near Holmes Avenue. It was his custom to drive her home from her place of employment. Prior to the accident, he had driven north on Holmes Avenue to meet his wife and then started south on that avenue. He approached the intersection at a speed of 15 to 20 miles an hour. He testified that he observed that the traffic light facing north up Holmes Avenue was not working.¹ Two westbound cars on Firestone were approaching the intersection as he neared it. Defendant could not see the state of the traffic signals for east-west bound traffic. He testified that he stopped his car for 30 or 40 seconds near the boulevard stop sign, and while he waited the westbound cars on Firestone came to a halt at the intersection. He thereupon drove slowly into the intersection, and was going about 5 miles an hour when the accident occurred.

A different version of defendant's conduct was given by one William Wickenberg, who testified that he observed defendant's car approach the intersection at a speed of 30 to 35 miles an hour just as the signals for east and west traffic on Firestone were changing to green. He testified that defendant's car seemed to increase its speed as it entered the intersection after the green signal was in effect for traffic on Firestone Boulevard. He testified defendant made no stop at the corner of Firestone and Holmes.

Plaintiffs do not challenge the sufficiency of the evidence to support the judgment. They assert, however, that the court committed prejudicial error in failing to give certain instructions requested by them relating to defendant's duty to halt at an intersection marked with a boulevard stop sign. They complain primarily that the court failed to give the following instructions:

1. In their briefs, appellants state that when defendant first crossed Firestone Boulevard from the south en route to his wife's place of employment, he at that time noticed "that the signals for north and southbound traffic on Holmes were not working." This is not borne out by

1. Veh.Code, sec. 577. "The driver of any vehicle upon approaching any entrance of a highway or intersection, or railroad grade crossing, signposted with a stop sign as provided in this code, except as otherwise permitted or directed in this code, shall stop: (a) Before entering the crosswalk on the near side of the intersection or, if none, then at a limit line when marked, otherwise before entering such highway or intersection."

2. Veh.Code, sec. 552. "The driver of any vehicle shall stop as required by Section 577 of this code at the entrance to a through highway and shall yield the right of way to other vehicles which have entered the intersection from the through highway or which are approaching so closely on the through highway as to constitute an immediate hazard."

3. An instruction that inexcusable or unreasonable conduct in violation of appropriate sections of the Vehicle Code constitutes negligence per se.

[1,2] It is at once manifest that the trial court correctly refused to read to the jury the aforementioned provisions of the Vehicle Code or to instruct the jury that a violation thereof without excuse would charge defendant with negligence per se. By their plain terms, these sections state the rule enacted specifically for the purpose of governing the conduct of motorists entering intersections of boulevards and arterial highways not controlled by mechanical or electrical "Stop" and "Go" traffic signals. They were not formulated to impose a statutory criterion of conduct for motorists proceeding into an intersection at a time when electrical stop-and-go signals are in operation as the traffic control device. "Where the intersection of a boulevard or arterial highway with another the record so far as the traffic signal here involved is concerned. The record shows defendant was referring solely to the traffic signal controlling northbound traffic, obviously on the section of Holmes Avenue south of Firestone.

roadway is controlled by a traffic signal light, the direction of the light controls the right of way, and not the usual rule at stop and arterial highways." 7 Cal.Jur.2d, sec. 242, p. 54; Carlin v. Prichett, 81 Cal. App.2d 688, 694, 184 P.2d 945.

[3] It is not the law that because the traffic light controlling Holmes Avenue traffic was askew and not visible to defendant, he was under a duty enjoined by statute to come to a complete stop before entering Firestone Boulevard regardless of the directional signals of the lights then controlling east-west traffic thereon. No provision of the Vehicle Code demands this. The reasonableness of defendant's conduct, under the particular circumstances then confronting him, in driving into a signal-controlled intersection without stopping, if he did so, was a question of fact for the jury to determine without reference to statutory rules that have been prescribed for an entirely different type of intersection. Granted that to enter an intersection controlled by electric traffic lights without knowing definitely the color of the light may be incompatible with the ordinary care required of a reasonably prudent man, that result does not flow from any violation of sections 577 or 552, which do not purport to cover the situation here presented. Plaintiffs themselves concede, in their brief, that "the situation here involved is not specifically provided for in the Vehicle Code." It would be egregiously improper to instruct that defendant was guilty of negligence per se if by his conduct he has contravened statutes not designed to encompass within their purview the conduct in question. The mischief of instructing that defendant's failure to stop as provided by sections 577 and 552 constituted negligence per se is graphically illustrated by postulating the situation wherein defendant motorist entered the intersection in question without stopping though the signal was in fact green in his favor and red for east-west traffic. Under the inexorable logic of plaintiff's theory, defendant must be charged with negligence per se though east-west traffic was in fact halted by virtue of the red light and the right of way was his to claim. It would be unfortunate if such an inequitable result were to be countenanced by resort to a Procrustean manipulation of inapplicable statutes. The law sets no such statutory trap for the unwary. See Carlin v. Prichett, supra; 7 Cal.Jur.2d, sec. 242, p. 54.

[4] Equally without merit is the claim that the court's refusal to give the following instructions was erroneous: "If you find that a party to this action was approaching an intersection wherein the traffic signal controlling his avenue of traffic was defective and inoperative and if you further find that such party had notice of the defective and inoperative condition of the signal, and if you further find that there was a boulevard stop sign present at the intersection in question, you are instructed that it was the duty of such motorist before entering the intersection to make a complete stop at the boulevard stop sign before entering the intersection." This is patently an incomplete, inaccurate and misleading statement. There existed no such requirement of an absolute and unqualified duty to stop on the part of defendant, as set out in the instruction, at the type of intersection here involved. The instruction fails entirely to take cognizance of the fact that east-west traffic at this intersection was being controlled by traffic signals and ignores the directional signal of those lights and the state of the traffic responding to those lights. It was for the jury to decide under the evidence and the instructions given (none of which are challenged) whether the exercise of ordinary care required a "complete stop at the boulevard stop sign" in the light of the prevailing conditions. Since plaintiffs' instruction purported to lay down a categorical rule nowhere to be found in the Vehicle Code that would have usurped the jury's function as trier of the facts, it was properly refused.

The judgment is affirmed.

Action by guardian ad litem on behalf of minor for injuries received by minor when she was struck by a rock hurled by defendant minor. Injured minor's father sought recovery of expenses incurred. Joined as defendants were the parents of defendant minor. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Caryl M. Sheldon, J., entered nonsuit as to both plaintiffs and all causes of action and they appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Ashburn, J., held that it could not be said as a matter of law that nine year old defendant minor was not liable for battery or not guilty of negligence, and evidence of his mother's knowledge of prior habit of rock throwing was sufficient to present a jury issue as to her negligence, but evidence was insufficient to make a prima facie case as to negligence of father who apparently had no personal knowledge of prior rock throwing.

Reversed in part and affirmed in part.

1. Appeal and Error ⇨927(3)

On appeal from order granting nonsuit as to plaintiffs, District Court of Appeal assumed as established all evidence and inferences favorable to the plaintiffs' causes of action.

2. Infants ⇨59

An infant is liable for his torts. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 41.

3. Infants ⇨60

An infant who forcibly invades the person of another is liable for a battery regardless of an intent to inflict injury; the only intent which is necessary is that of doing the particular act in question.

4. Infants ⇨102

In action for battery of eight year old girl who was struck by rock thrown by nine year old boy, whether boy had sufficient mental capacity to intend the harmful striking of another was a question of fact.

5. Assault and Battery ⇨2

If nine year old boy indicates to two eight year old girls that he is throwing a rock at one girl and then aims at the other girl, whom he hits, the boy is liable to the other girl for a battery.

6. Assault and Battery ⇨3

If a nine year old boy throws a rock at an eight year old girl and inadvertently strikes another eight year old girl, he is liable under doctrine of transferred intent for the battery on the second girl.

7. Assault and Battery ⇨3

The doctrine of "transferred intent", under which a defendant unlawfully aiming at one person and hitting another is guilty of assault and battery on the party he hit, is not confined to criminal cases.

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Transferred Intent".

8. Infants ⇨61, 102

The negligence of a minor is to be determined on basis of whether he used that degree of care ordinarily exercised by children of like age, mental capacity and experience, and such question is usually one of fact for the jury.

9. Infants ⇨102

In action for injuries to eight year old girl who was struck by a rock hurled by nine year old boy, whether boy was negligent and whether he used the care required of a boy his age were questions for jury.

10. Trial ⇨142

11. Evidence ⇨587

* Plaintiff relying on circumstantial evidence does not have to exclude possibility of every other reasonable inference possibly derivable from the facts proved.

12. Parent and Child ⇨13(2)

In action against parents of nine year old boy who threw rock which struck eight year old girl, evidence relating to parents' notice of boy's dangerous proclivities and to the discipline administered was sufficient to raise question for jury as to whether mother was negligent but was insufficient to raise question for jury as to whether father was negligent.

13. Evidence ⇨67(1)

Traits of character and habits of conduct are in their nature continuous and hence within statutory presumption that a thing once proved to exist continues as long as is usual with things of that nature. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc., § 1963, subd. 32.

14. Evidence ⇨67(1)

Where boy began throwing rocks at people in the spring of 1952 and the throwing continued unabated as long as September, 1952, the presumption was that the proclivity for throwing rocks continued until September, 1953, when the boy was nine years old and the rock throwing occurred again. Betts, Ely & Loomis, Los Angeles, for respondent Tim Marx.

ASHBURN, Justice.

Plaintiff Denise Singer, a minor, sues Tim Marx, another minor, for personal injury alleged to have been inflicted upon her (1) through his negligence, and (2) through a battery of her person. She seeks recovery from Tim's parents, Zeppo Marx and Marion Marx, on the theory of their negligent failure to control Tim's known penchant for throwing rocks at other people. Denise's father also sues the parents of Tim for recovery of expenses incurred by him as a result of his child's injury, the charge being negligence upon the part of the parents. The trial judge granted a nonsuit as to both plaintiffs and all causes of action. Plaintiffs appeal.

[1] "Under well-established rules we must, in considering whether the judgment of nonsuit was proper, resolve every conflict in their testimonies in favor of plaintiff, consider every inference which can reasonably be drawn and every presumption which can fairly be deemed to arise in support of plaintiff, and accept as true all evidence adduced direct and indirect which tends to sustain plaintiff's case." Lashley v. Koerber, 26 Cal.2d 83, 84, 156 P.2d 441, 442. To same effect see Raber v. Tumin, 36 Cal.2d 654, 656, 226 P.2d 574; Blumberg v. M. & T. Inc., 34 Cal.2d 226, 229, 209 P.2d 1. In the following discussion the court assumes as established all evidence and all inferences favorable to plaintiffs' causes of action.

On September 13, 1953, Tim Marx was nine years of age. Plaintiff Denise was eight and Barbara Corcoran was also eight. They are the only eyewitnesses to the episode under examination. Tim and Denise were on the front lawn of the Singer residence, which was located on the north side of the street fronting south. Barbara was riding a bicycle back and forth on the pavement. At the time the injury was inflicted upon her Denise was some six, eight or ten feet north of the sidewalk and Tim was to her left and rear about four feet away. The children were not playing any game. Tim had been throwing rocks into or across the street and talking about how far he could throw. Neither girl threw any rocks or clods. Immediately preceding Tim's striking Denise in the eye with a rock, which he admitted, Barbara was riding easterly on the sidewalk and entering upon the Singer property at the west side, about 30 feet from Denise. Tim, who was looking at plaintiff, said to her, "watch Barbie." He had not previously thrown at her or Barbara. Denise looked toward Barbara and then back at Tim and at the same moment was struck in the eye by the rock, which was a flat, rough one about the size of a small hen's egg. Barbara saw him throw at an angle toward her; saw him let go of the rock but did not see it strike plaintiff. Denise heard him say "watch Barbie" and saw him raise his arm in the throw but did not see the rock leave his hand. She was struck immediately in the left eye. The line of throw toward Barbara would pass several feet in front of Denise. For the rock to strike her, one of two things would have to occur, either (1) Tim changed the direction of throw without any warning, or (2) he held the rock too loosely, or let go of it too soon to control its flight, and inadvertently hit Denise. The evidence is susceptible of either of these inferences.

[2] The general proposition that an infant is liable for his torts is established in this state by statute. Civil Code, § 41, says: "A minor * * * is civilly liable for a wrong done by him, but is not liable in exemplary damages unless at the time of the act he was capable of knowing that it was wrongful." That statute, it will be noted, does not imply as an element of liability for compensatory damages the existence of capacity to appreciate the wrongful character of the act. But the cases have engrafted upon it certain reasonable qualifications about to be discussed.

[3] An infant who forcibly invades the person of another is liable for a battery regardless of an intent to inflict injury; the only intent which is necessary is that of doing the particular act in question—in this case throwing a rock at somebody. This matter is discussed in Ellis v. D'Angelo, 116 Cal.App.2d 310, at page 316, 253 P.2d 675, at page 678, in which it was held that, although a four-year-old child is, as a matter of law, incapable of negligence, the complaint nevertheless stated a cause of action for battery against the same child. At page 315 of 116 Cal.App.2d, at page 677 of 253 P.2d it is said: "From these authorities and the cases which they cite it may be concluded generally that an infant is liable for his torts even though he lacks the mental development and capacity to recognize the wrongfulness of his conduct so long as he has the mental capacity to have the state of mind necessary to the commission of the particular tort with which he is charged. Thus as between a battery and negligent injury an infant may have the capacity to intend the violent contact which is essential to the commission of battery when the same infant would be incapable of realizing that his heedless conduct might foreseeably lead to injury to another which is the essential capacity of mind to create liability for negligence." At page 317 of 116 Cal.App.2d, at page 678 of 253 P.2d: "When it comes to the count charging battery a very different question is presented. We certainly cannot say that a 4-year-old child is incapable of intending the violent or the harmful striking of another. Whether a 4-year-old child had such intent presents a fact question; and in view of section 41 of the Civil Code which makes the recognition of the wrongful character of the tort immaterial so far as the liability for compensatory damages is concerned, we must hold that the count charging battery states a cause of action."

[4, 5] Certainly it cannot be said as a matter of law that Tim did not have sufficient mental capacity to intend the harmful striking of another. If he indicated to both girls that he was throwing at Barbara and then aimed at Denise, whom he hit, he was plainly liable to her for a battery.

This matter of intent in a battery case is also discussed in Lopez v. Surchia, 112 Cal.App.2d 314, 246 P.2d 111, which involved an adult defendant who had shot plaintiff and claimed self-defense. At page 318 of 112 Cal.App.2d, at page 113 of 246 P.2d: "The true rule is that intent is the gist of the action only where the battery was committed in the performance of an act not otherwise unlawful * * *. If the cause of action is an alleged battery committed in the performance of an unlawful or wrongful act, the intent of the wrongdoer to injure is immaterial. In other words, if the defendant did an illegal act which was likely to prove injurious to another, he is answerable for the consequence which directly and naturally resulted from the conduct, even though he did not intend to do the particular injury which followed. 6 C.J.S., Assault and Battery, § 10."

[6,7] While throwing rocks at trees or into the street ordinarily is an innocent and lawful pastime, that same act when directed at another person is wrongful. The evidence at bar (combining that of Barbara with portions of Tim's own testimony) warrants an inference that Tim threw at Barbara and inadvertently struck Denise. In such circumstances the doctrine of "transferred intent" renders him liable to Denise. On this subject the Lopez case, supra, says at page 318 of 112 Cal.App.2d, at page 113 of 246 P.2d: "If defendant unlawfully aims at one person and hits another he is guilty of assault and battery on the party he hit, the injury being the direct, natural and probable consequence of the wrongful act. (6 C.J.S., Assault and Battery, § 10, subd. 2.)" See also, Prosser on Torts, 2nd Ed., p. 33. The rule is not confined to criminal cases, as argued by respondents.

[8] The negligence of a minor is to be determined upon the basis of whether he used that degree of care ordinarily exercised by children of like age, mental capacity and experience; and that question is usually one of fact for the jury. 19 Cal. Jur. § 41, p. 605. In Smith v. Harger, 84 Cal.App.2d 361, 369-370, 191 P.2d 25, the question was held to be one of fact in the case of a five-year-old boy.

[9] Tim was nine years old and there is nothing in the record to warrant a holding as matter of law that he could not be guilty of negligence. That was for the jury to decide. And the question whether he did use the care required of a boy of nine was also one of fact. If, as he testified, the rock slipped out of his hand prematurely, that presents a question of what care was required of a nine-year-old rock thrower who was throwing in the presence of other children and recognized at the time that that is a dangerous practice and so testified.

Incidents occurring in the playing of organized games do not present controlling analogies. These children were not playing a game; the girls were not throwing rocks; Tim alone was performing and he was not under the pressure of a contest. Therefore, cases such as Hoyt v. Rosenberg, 80 Cal.App.2d 500, 182 P.2d 234, 173 A.L.R. 883, are inapplicable. Nor do we have upon this appeal any question of assumption of risk, as was the case in Quinn v. Recreation Park Ass'n, 3 Cal.2d 725, 46 P.2d 144.

[10,11] We hold that the evidence at bar would sustain an inference that Tim (1) deliberately threw the rock at plaintiff, or (2) threw the rock at Barbara and accidentally struck plaintiff, or (3) negligently held and threw the rock in such manner as to cause the throw to miscarry and thus strike plaintiff. Pursuing this line of thought counsel for respondent Tim argue that: "When one equally reasonable inference supports a plaintiff's prima facie case against an equally reasonable inference supporting the defendant, the plaintiff has not sustained his burden of proof." In support thereof these cases are cited: In re Estate of Moore, 65 Cal.App. 29, at page 33, 223 P. 73; Sheldon v. James, 175 Cal. 474, 166 P. 8, 2 A.L.R. 1493; Chapman v. Title Insurance & Trust Co., 68 Cal.App.2d 745, 158 P.2d 42; Hopkins v. Heller, 59 Cal.App. 447, at page 454, 210 P. 975. While they do hold that evidence which is equally susceptible of opposing inferences, one favorable and one unfavorable to the plaintiff, constitutes no proof at all, we are cognizant of no authority to the effect that that is true of evidence susceptible of several inferences all of which point in the same direction, liability of defendant. On principle it seems that whenever the evidence affords room for several inferences favorable to the plaintiff the jury should determine the one to draw, and the plaintiff does not have to elect or to establish one inescapable inference. Sanders v. MacFarlane's Candies, 119 Cal.App.2d 497, 500, 259 P.2d 1010, 1012, is apposite. It holds that an inference "must be based on probabilities," "that in civil cases the rule of decision is a rule of probability only"; and further says: "It is not necessary, in order to establish a theory by circumstantial evidence, that the facts be such and so related to each other that such theory is the only conclusion that can fairly or reasonably be drawn therefrom * * *." (Katenkamp v. Union Realty Co., 36 Cal. App.2d 602, 617 [98 P.2d 239].) The plaintiff relying on circumstantial evidence does not have to exclude the possibility of every other reasonable inference possibly derivable from the facts proved. Vaccarezza v. Sanguinetti, 71 Cal.App.2d 687, 692 [163 P.2d 470]; Spolter v. Four-Wheel Brake Serv. Co., supra, 99 Cal.App.2d [690], at page 694, 222 P.2d 307.)" See also, Juchert v. California Water Service Co., 16 Cal.2d 500, 506-508, 106 P.2d 886; 18 Cal.Jur.2d § 64, p. 487.

The granting of a nonsuit in favor of Tim was erroneous.

[12] The propriety of the like ruling in favor of the parents turns upon whether there was substantial proof of negligence on their part in failing to perform the duty of exercising reasonable control over a child known to possess and exercise dangerous proclivities toward other people. Prosser on Torts, 2nd Ed., page 681, states the matter thus: "But beyond this, the parent has a special power of control over the conduct of the child, which he is under a duty to exercise reasonably for the protection of others. He may thus be liable for a failure to take the gun away from the child when he finds him with it, or to make reasonable efforts to restrain and correct him when he manifests a tendency to beat other children with a stick, or to shoot at horses in the street. Probably, however, the effect of the decided cases is that there is no liability upon the parent unless he has had an opportunity to correct a specific propensity on the part of the child, and that it is too much to hold the parent responsible for general incorrigibility and a bad disposition. He may, however, be under a duty to warn others who may suffer from such characteristics." Martin v. Barrett, 120 Cal.App.2d 625, 628, 261 P.2d 551, 552, considering the sufficiency of a complaint, says: "The gravamen of the complaint in cases upholding liability is the knowledge of the boy's previous conduct, disposition to do the act charged, and the failure of the parents to warn the plaintiff of this propensity. (See cases collected in Ellis v. D'Angelo, supra, 116 Cal.App.2d at page 317, 253 P.2d at page 679.)" Ellis v. D'Angelo, supra, 116 Cal.App.2d 310, at page 317, 253 P.2d 675, at page 679: "While it is the rule in California, as it is generally at the common law, that there is no vicarious liability on a parent for the torts of a child there is another rule of the law relating to the torts of minors which is somewhat in the nature of an exception, and that is that a parent may become liable for an injury caused by the child, where the parent's negligence made it possible for the child to cause the injury complained of, and probable that it would do so."

The evidence at bar shows that Tim began throwing rocks at people in the spring of 1952; the injury to Denise occurred on September 13, 1953. Mrs. James, a neighbor, testified that she could almost say that she never saw Tim or his younger brother when they were not throwing rocks; that when she reprimanded Tim on one occasion for doing so and turned her back to go into the house he gave her "a couple of hits on the back"; that the Marx boys threw rocks at her mother-in-law every time they came around, and "[f]inally, when we did order them off the property every time they would go by on a bicycle or something they had something to throw at the house. They ruined my front door throwing darts." Mrs. James informed the mother of Tim's throwing rocks and told her "[t]hat I couldn't tolerate the children throwing rocks and clods at me, at my house, and darts also, and which my mother-in-law, in fact, I couldn't stand them throwing anything." But the rock throwing continued. Mrs. Marx, examined under § 2055, Code of Civil Procedure, denied knowing Mrs. James or receiving any such notice from her. Hence there is no evidence of what efforts, if any, the parents then made to control Tim's future conduct. It is inferable, however, that any corrective measures which might have been taken were ineffective because the course of conduct continued.

Mrs. Marx did admit that Mrs. Pogson, Tim's school principal, had told her that Tim threw clods at her car and, anent the subject of punishment, said: "I always used to talk it over with Mr. Marx"; "He was either, as I repeat, he was either made to write that 'I will not throw pebbles' or 'I won't do this' or 'I will stand in line in school as my teacher wants me to,' 'I will try to do better arithmetic'"; "I do believe I remember, I remember, I think, both those punishments absolutely, sitting in his room, being punished sitting in a chair, and also writing, your Honor, writing words."

[13, 14] Mrs. James apparently moved from the neighborhood in September, 1952, and counsel for respondent parents argue that her testimony was necessarily limited to a period which ended a year before the injury to Denise; that that is too remote to have evidential value upon Tim's habits and propensities on September 13, 1953. With or without punishment Tim's throwing had continued unabated as long as September, 1952, and the presumption is that these proclivities continued until September, 1953, when rock throwing is known to have occurred again. The presumption of continuity flows from § 1963, subdivision 32, Code of Civil Procedure. Traits of character and habits of conduct are in their nature continuous and hence within the presumption. 31 C.J.S., Evidence, § 124, p. 739; Pacific Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Meade, 281 Ky. 36, 134 S.W.2d 960, 964; Kennison v. Chokie, 55 Wyo. 421, 100 P.2d 97, 98; Grikietis v. Grikietis, 319 Ill.App. 216, 48 N.E.2d 775, 776; McGraw v. McGraw, 171 Mass. 146, 50 N.E. 526. The punishment imposed in the case of the Pogson incident appears to have been ineffective. The record does not show just when that occurred, except that it preceded the Denise incident.

It is fairly inferable that Mrs. Marx had notice of Tim's dangerous proclivities and did not administer effective discipline. It was for the jury to say whether that was negligence on her part. To draw an inference they would have to find only a probability as its basis, and it cannot be said that in law there was no such probability of failure of Mrs. Marx to exercise reasonable care in the control of her child's dangerous propensities.

So far as the father, Zeppo Marx, is concerned, it does not appear that he had any personal knowledge of the rock throwing. The only evidence as to him is that he was consulted when punishment for any dereliction was due. That is not enough to make a prima facie case against him. See Martin v. Barrett, supra, 120 Cal.App.2d 625, at page 628, 261 P.2d 551.

The judgment of nonsuit is reversed as to defendants Tim Marx and Marion Marx, and affirmed as to defendant Zeppo Marx.

Max P. SCHIFF, etc., et al., Plaintiffs, Respondents, and Appellants,
v.

C. D. PRUITT, Defendant and Respondent,
City Homes, Inc., a California corporation,
Defendant and Appellant.

Civ. 21530.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 1, California.

Sept. 18, 1956.

Action by partners against corporation and president of corporation to recover upon a promissory note and to recover upon a common count for money had and received. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Arthur Crum, J., entered judgment denying recovery upon note and granting partners judgment for money had and received. The corporation appealed and partners filed a cross-appeal. The District Court of Appeal, Nourse, J. pro tem., held that where partnership contracted to loan $20,000 to corporation for construction of houses and contracted for right to purchase and retain contracts of sale or purchase money deeds of trust upon first 30 houses erected at price based on actual cost of tracts with houses, even if contract did provide for profit to partnership in consideration of loan, the contract did not constitute a contract for payment of interest in excess of that permitted by usury law.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Usury ☞41

Where partnership contracted to loan $20,000 to corporation for construction of houses and contracted for right to purchase and retain contracts of sale or purchase money deeds of trust upon first 30 houses erected at price based on actual cost of tracts with houses, even if contract did provide for profit to partnership in consideration of loan, such contract did not constitute a contract for payment of usurious interest.

2. Usury ☞113

Where partnership contracted to loan $20,000 to corporation for construction of houses and contracted for right to purchase and retain contracts of sale or purchase money deeds of trust upon first 30 houses erected at price based on actual cost of tracts with houses, even if right to purchase contracts of sale or purchase money deeds were given in payment of interest on loan, in absence of evidence of value of such right at time contract was entered into, it could not be held that giving of such right constituted payment of interest in excess of lawful rate.

3. Corporations ☞456

Where corporation employed agent to procure financing for corporation and agent solicited persons who formed limited partnership and contracted to furnish such financing, commission paid to agent did not constitute return to partnership of portion of money advanced by partnership and such commission was money had and received by corporation and could be recovered from corporation.

NOURSE, Justice pro tem.

By their amended and supplemental complaint in this action, respondents sought, through their first cause of action, to recover upon a promissory note in the sum of $20,000 executed by the defendant, and by a second cause of action to recover that amount upon a common count for money had and received.

The judgment of the lower court, from which defendant appeals, denied respondents recovery upon the promissory note sued upon in the first cause of action but granted respondents a judgment for the principal sum of $2,166.82 with interest thereon at the rate of 7 per cent per annum from May 11, 1955, together with interest at the rate of 7 per cent per annum on $20,000 from January 19, 1953, to May 11, 1955. It further allowed plaintiffs their costs. The judgment for costs was by way of amendment to the original judgment, and appellant has appealed separately from that judgment but in its brief has abandoned that appeal.

The respondents have filed a cross-appeal from that portion of the judgment which denied them a recovery upon the promissory note, but have advised this court in their briefs that if the judgment as rendered is affirmed, then they desire to abandon their cross-appeal.

But two points are made by appellant. The first is that the judgment is erroneous insofar as it awards plaintiffs interest, because, so they contend, the basic agreement under which the moneys were advanced by respondents to appellant was usurious. The second assignment of error is that a commission paid to the respondent Kosslyn should have been credited upon the judgment of $2,166.82 because it constituted a payment of usury.

The relevant facts are:

The plaintiffs and respondents are the general and limited partners in a limited partnership, known as the Duke Investment Company. The defendant C. D. Pruitt is the president and sole stockholder of appellant City Homes, Inc. On July 19, 1952, appellant entered into an agreement with one Philip B. Woodward and his wife, Elizabeth Woodward, to purchase from them certain real property in the city of Whittier at and for the price of $47,625, and at the same time entered into an agreement with one T. Earle Woodward and his wife to purchase a contiguous parcel of property for the price of $15,875. Of the purchase price of the first parcel, $13,000 was to be paid in cash at the time of the consummation of the sale, the balance to be evidenced by a promissory note secured by a first deed of trust. As to the second parcel, $4,500 was to be paid in cash, the balance to be evidenced by a promissory note secured by a first deed of trust.¹ Separate escrows were on July 29, 1952, simultaneously opened with the same escrow company, and appellant at that time paid into escrow $1,000, which was eventually credited one-half to each escrow. Appellant did not have the funds to pay into the escrow the balance of the down payments or its share of the costs of the escrow, and in early December, 1952, contacted Kosslyn and informed him of its desire to obtain money to complete the purchases, agreeing to pay him a commission if he could raise the money necessary so to do. It estimated the amount necessary at $25,000.

On December 22 the Woodwardes gave notice in writing that unless the required amounts were deposited in escrow before the 31st of that month they would cancel the escrows. The escrow holder then notified appellant of the Woodwardes' demands and that the further sum of $16,086.80 was necessary in order that appellant might fulfill its obligations under the escrow instructions. At that time Kosslyn had not completed the organization of the limited partnership, but was able to obtain from the prospective limited partners the sum of $5,000, and appellant or Pruitt raised the sum of $11,586.80, and these two sums were deposited in the escrows. Together with the $1,000 originally deposited they met the demands of the escrow holder.

On the 19th of January, 1953, the formation of the limited partnership having been completed, that entity and appellant entered into an agreement in writing whereby the partnership agreed to loan to appellant the sum of $20,000 and appellant agreed to deliver to the partnership its promissory note in the sum of $20,000 payable on or

1. These deeds of trust were to be subordinated to deeds of trust securing construction loans in sums not to exceed before December 15, 1953, with interest of $5. It was further agreed that that note was to be secured by a third deed of trust upon the real property which appellant was purchasing from the Woodwards, that deed of trust to be subordinate to a first deed of trust securing notes in an amount not to exceed $5,500 for each lot in the tract (the construction loan), and a purchase money second deed of trust securing notes not to exceed in the aggregate a sum equal to $500 for each lot in the tract. It further provided that the third deed of trust should contain a provision for the partial reconveyance of the lots in said tract upon the payment of $225 in cash for each lot reconveyed until such time as the entire principal of the note had been paid. The contract then sets forth an agreement which, though the language thereof is extremely ambiguous, we interpret as providing as follows: That in further consideration of the loan of $20,000 from the partnership to appellant, appellant would erect thirty houses on lots in the subdivision which it was contemplated would be created by appellant from the real property upon its acquisition from the Woodwards, and would transfer to the partnership the contracts of sale or purchase money deeds of trust received from the purchasers upon the partnership's assuming the indebtedness secured by the first deeds of trust (the construction loans), and paying in cash to appellant the difference between the amount of the indebtedness assumed and the actual cost of each parcel of property sold. That cost was defined as the aggregate of the purchase price of the real property, the cost of the development of the subdivision, title and legal fees, the finance charges upon the construction loan, and the actual direct costs of labor and materials used in the construction of the houses. It was further agreed that if the total face value of the contracts or deeds of trust received by respondent partnership exceeded $20,000, then respondent partnership should transfer to appellant sufficient thereof to reduce the face value of the contracts or deeds of trust held by said respondent to the sum of $20,000. The contract ends up with the statement that it is the purpose and intent of the contract that "at the conclusion of all transactions between the parties" the partnership would be repaid the sum of $20,000 in cash and be the owner of contracts of sale or second deeds of trust with a face value of $20,000 in excess of the note or notes secured by the first deeds of trust² (the construction loans).

$6,500 as to each lot in the proposed subdivision.

After this contract was executed, appellant executed a note in favor of respondent partnership in the sum of $20,000, this note being dated the 19th day of January, 1953, and payable on the 19th of December, 1953. It provided for interest of $5 for the first ten months and 11 days, and interest at 5 per cent per annum after that time, or a total interest for the full 11 months of $57.06, or approximately 0.31 per cent per annum. It further executed a deed of trust securing said promissory note which purported to convey to the trustee as security for said note ninety lots in the proposed subdivision. Immediately after the execution of the agreement between appellant and respondent partnership, the note and deed of trust were deposited with the same escrow holder with which the appellant's escrow with the Woodwards had been opened, and the respondent partnership deposited with that escrow holder the further sum of $15,000.

At this time appellant and respondents agreed that respondents might withdraw from the escrow, and they did withdraw from the escrow, the sum of $14,700.³

2. By agreement between Kosslyn and the limited partners, he had no interest in the indebtedness from appellant or in the contracts of sale or purchase money deeds of trust which were to be delivered to the partnership under the contract between the parties here adverted to.

3. Appellant was thus able to withdraw all money which it had deposited in the escrow, plus $2,113.20 of the moneys deposited by respondent partnership.

From this money they paid to Kosslyn the sum of $1,000 as his commission for obtaining the loan of $20,000.

Thereafter the Woodwards gave notice of cancellation of the escrow, and suits were commenced by appellant against them. They did not make respondents parties to these suits. These suits were settled by compromise between appellant and the Woodwards, with the result that the escrow for the purchase of the property by appellant from the Woodwards was in effect cancelled.

Kosslyn, acting as trustee for the limited partnership, demanded of the escrow holder possession of appellant's note and the deed of trust deposited with the escrow holder, but appellant refused its consent to the delivery of these instruments and they were retained by the escrow holder, and this action was commenced. At the trial of the action the note sued upon and the deed of trust were received in evidence and delivered into the custody of the court. After the close of the trial but before the court had rendered its decision, the escrow holder, on May 11, 1955, pursuant to the stipulation of the parties, paid to the partnership respondent the sum of $17,833.18, this being the unexpended balance of the $20,000 deposited by respondent partnership with the escrow holder.

While no express finding was made as to delivery of appellant's note to the respondents, a finding that it was not delivered is implicit in the findings that were made; and appellant makes no point here of the fact, as found by the court, that the $20,000 was held in the escrow for the use and benefit of appellant.

[1] Appellant's contention that the provisions of the contract which gave respondent partnership the right to purchase and retain contracts of purchase or deeds of trust having a face value of $20,000 over and above the amount of the construction loan constituted a contract for the payment of interest in excess of that permitted by the usury law, not only cannot be sustained but is wholly lacking in merit.

The contract contains no promise on the part of appellant to pay anything as interest for the use of the $20,000 loaned it other than the sum of $5. The contract only gives respondent partnership a right to purchase, at a price calculated by a formula set forth therein, the contracts of sale or purchase money deeds of trust received by appellant upon the sale of the first thirty houses erected in the tract. It does not guarantee the respondent partnership one cent of additional profit or interest, for there is no provision therein that the contracts of sale or purchase money deeds of trust received from the respective purchasers of the houses and lots would exceed the amount of the first deeds of trust by an amount equal to or in excess of the amount paid in cash by respondents therefor. Unless the face value of these contracts of sale or purchase money deeds of trust did equal the cash payment made by respondent partnership therefor, it would have a loss rather than a profit; and in any event its profit could only be an amount equal to the difference between the cash outlay made by it and the sum of $20,000. Whether there would be a loss or a profit or, if a profit, what its amount would be, were all matters of speculation and could afford no possible basis for a finding of usury.

It is further self-evident that plaintiffs' right to any possible profit arose not solely out of the agreement to loan $20,000, but out of their agreement to assume appellant's liability upon the construction loans and to pay in cash such further amounts as would make appellant whole insofar as the lots covered by the contract or trust deeds assigned to the partnership were concerned.

Assuming that the contract did provide for a profit to respondent partnership in consideration of the loan of the $20,000, it is clear that the right to that profit was contingent and one wholly at hazard, for the entire risk of the venture, insofar as the thirty houses were concerned, by the terms of the contract became respondents'.⁴

"It is also a general principle that when payment of full legal interest is subject to a contingency so that the lender's profit is wholly or partially put in hazard, the interest so contingently payable need not be limited to the legal rate, providing the parties are contracting in good faith and without the intent to avoid the statute against usury.'" Miley Petroleum Corp., Ltd., v. Amerada P. Corp., 18 Cal.App.2d 183, 189, 63 P.2d 1210, 1214; Lamb v. Herndon, 97 Cal.App. 193, 201, 275 P. 503; Jameson v. Warren, 91 Cal.App. 590, 595, 267 P. 372; 11 Cal.Jur. 10-yr. Supp. [1950 Rev.] p. 171. We need not further apply this principle here, as its application is clear.

[2] If we should assume, as appellant has, that the right to purchase the contracts of sale or purchase money deeds of trust which was granted respondent partnership by the contract was given in the payment of interest for the use of the $20,000, still there was no evidence whatsoever what the value of this right was at the time the contract was entered into, and without some evidence as to that value it could not be held that the giving of it constituted a payment of interest in excess of the lawful rate. Martyn v. Leslie, 137 Cal. App.2d 41, 55, 290 P.2d 58.

[3] Appellant's contention that the commission of $1,000 paid to Kosslyn was exacted from appellant by respondent partnership has no foundation in the evidence, and is devoid of merit. At the time appellant employed Kosslyn to procure financing for it, the respondent partnership was not even in existence. Kosslyn acted not as the agent of the respondent partnership but solely as the agent of appellant and, so acting, solicited the respondents who became limited partners to advance the moneys which were eventually loaned by the partnership to appellant. Appellant, in its brief, has made no reference to any evidence which would support its contention.

It is further appellant's contention that the payment of $1,000 to Kosslyn constituted a return to respondent partnership of a portion of the moneys advanced by it, and that therefore the court erred in holding that that amount was money had and received by appellant. There is no basis for this contention. The thousand dollars was paid by appellant to Kosslyn in discharge of appellant's obligation to Kosslyn. This payment was retained by Kosslyn, and there is not an iota of evidence that the respondent partnership received any part of it.

The judgment is affirmed.

Civ. 16960.

District Court of Appeal, First District,
Division 1, California.

Sept. 27, 1956.

Proceeding on divorced wife's motion for issuance of execution more than five years after entry of judgment for child support. The Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco, Theresa Meikle, J., granted the motion and husband appealed. William T. Sweigert, J., entered an order directing husband to pay attorney fees and costs incurred by wife in defended by the court even though the contract was abandoned and its performance prevented by appellant.

ing the appeal and the husband appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Peters, P. J., held, inter alia, that under the circumstances the wife was entitled as of right to execution to enforce payments which were past due for five years prior to amended support order and that wife was not entitled to execution to enforce payments past due more than five years prior to amended order because of her insufficient reasons for her failure to proceed with execution.

Order as to execution reversed with instructions, and order as to attorney fees and costs affirmed.

1. Divorce ☞311

Where amendment to prior child support order increased payments and provided that divorced wife would not seek recourse against husband so long as he complied with order, wife did not waive past due payments under prior order but merely relinquished right to enforce such payments so long as husband paid increased payments, and hence wife, on termination of increased payments, was entitled as of right to execution to enforce payments which were past due for five years prior to amended order. West's Ann.Code Civ. Proc., § 681.

2. Divorce ☞311

Statement by divorced wife in her affidavit in support of her motion for execution on judgment for child support more than five years after its entry that the reason for her failure to seek execution within five years was that she lived 500 miles from former husband and was without funds to pay for an investigation of his assets did not constitute sufficient reason for failure to proceed with execution within five years from date of judgment, and therefore trial court abused its discretion in ordering execution to issue. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc., § 685.

3. Divorce ☞312.4

Superior Court had legal power to grant divorced wife her attorney's fees and costs for the defense of husband's appeal from an order granting her motion for execution after five years on a judgment for child support even though court previously had entered an order terminating husband's liability for support of the children. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 137.3.

Cameron & Foushee, San Diego, Philip J. Doyle, Stark & Champlin, Oakland, for appellant.

PETERS, Presiding Justice.

Appeal numbered 1 Civ. 16,960 is from an order of Judge Meikle of the Superior Court granting respondent's motion for issuance of execution after five years on a judgment for child support. Appeal numbered 1 Civ. 16,522 is from an order of Judge Sweigert directing appellant to pay respondent's attorney fees and costs incurred by her in defending the appeal.

Appellant and respondent were formerly husband and wife. They were divorced in 1936. In the interlocutory, dated May 4, 1936, the appellant was ordered to pay $30 a month for the support of the two minor children of the parties. The final, granted May 14, 1937, contained a similar provision. No payments of any kind were made pursuant to these orders until November of 1943. In October of 1943 respondent sought the help of the District Attorney of San Mateo County and as a result of his efforts appellant made the payments for November and December, 1943, and for January, 1944. In December of 1943, respondent, by letter, requested appellant to increase the payments, but received no reply from appellant.

In April of 1944 respondent had appellant cited for contempt, and moved to modify the final decree by increasing the child support allowance. On May 31, 1944, the prior support order was amended by stipulation by increasing the $30 payment to $60. This order contained the following provision:

"It is further ordered, adjudged and decreed that so long as defendant complies with the order herein made for the support of said children, no recourse shall be had against said defendant on account of the arrears of maintenance and support."

Appellant failed to make the required payments for November and December, 1944, and January of 1945, but, after the issuance of an order to show cause, he made the payments in February of 1945 and the contempt proceeding was abandoned. Apparently, appellant thereafter, and until November of 1950, made the payments called for by the May, 1944, order. On November 22, 1950, appellant secured an order terminating his obligation to pay support for the children on the showing that one, Beverly, was 18 and married, and the other, Helen, was self-supporting. This termination order contained the following provision:

"It is further ordered, adjudged and decreed that this order does not absolve the defendant from any arrears for alimony, support and maintenance which may have accrued to the date hereof, and that this order is without prejudice to the right of the plaintiff at any future time to apply for support and maintenance of Helen Thomasina Ford, minor child of the parties hereto."

It should be mentioned that in October, 1950, just before the request for the termination order was filed, appellant offered respondent $200 in complete settlement of all his obligations to her for child support. This offer was rejected.

In May of 1953 respondent filed a motion under section 685 of the Code of Civil Procedure for an order directing issuance of execution more than five years after entry of judgment, thus attempting to collect arrearages between 1936 and 1944, and supported her motion by the required affidavit. Appellant filed no counter-affidavit. Respondent's affidavit sets forth several excuses for her failure to execute on the judgment prior to 1943:

1. Execution would have been futile because appellant could not have made the payments. In support of this allegation respondent refers to an averment to that effect in an affidavit of appellant filed in the May, 1944, proceeding, and contends that she had no information contrary to this averment;

2. That the equities favor respondent because appellant has twice remarried since his divorce, respondent was forced to use the contempt process in 1943, and in the same year unsuccessfully sought to get appellant to pay something on arrears, respondent secured the increased allowance in May, 1944, and instituted contempt proceedings early in 1945 to compel compliance, appellant recognized the indebtedness for past support in October of 1950 by offering respondent $200 in settlement of the past due arrearages, and in 1950 the termination order by stipulation contained the provision quoted, supra, in reference to arrearages;

3. That since 1936 appellant has resided in San Diego, more than 500 miles from respondent's abode, and respondent was financially unable to investigate appellant.

On February 15, 1954, the trial court granted the motion for the issuance of an execution after more than five years from the entry of judgment in the amount of $2,730 principal, and $2,696.41 interest. The first appeal is from this order.

After appellant filed his appeal, respondent sought an order to compel appellant to pay her attorney's fees and costs incurred in opposing the appeal. The trial court ordered appellant to pay $250 as attorney's fees and $150 as costs. The second appeal is from this order.

[1] On the first appeal, there are several questions presented. The first is whether or not the stipulated judgment of May, 1944, resulted in permanently extinguishing respondent's right for arrearages under the 1936-1937 orders. The trial court has found that the parties did not stipulate that the obligation to pay arrearages was to be absolved, that the judgment of May, 1944, did not so order, and that the November, 1950, order so interpreted the May, 1944, order. We are of the opinion that this is a reasonable and proper interpretation.

Appellant argues that the May, 1944, judgment, properly interpreted, amounted to a promise that on condition appellant complied with the order, respondent would not seek recourse against appellant for the arrearages, and that this included a promise not to seek execution; that when he fully performed, the liability for arrearages was erased. This is a strained unnatural construction of the 1944 order. The more reasonable construction of the provision that respondent would not seek recourse against appellant for so long as he complied with the order is that respondent promised not to seek to enforce her rights for past due support payments during the period appellant was making the increased payments, but that she did not waive her rights to these past due payments. This is the interpretation the trial court has placed on the order and we think that interpretation is the proper one.

[2] The second point involved on the first appeal is more difficult. It is whether the trial court properly ordered execution to issue after five years upon the showing made by respondent. The power of the court to order execution more than five years after the entry of judgment is to be found in section 685 of the Code of Civil Procedure. That section provides: "In all cases the judgment may be enforced or carried into execution after the lapse of five years from the date of its entry, by leave of the court, upon motion, and after due notice to the judgment debtor accompanied by an affidavit or affidavits setting forth the reasons for failure to proceed in compliance with the provisions of section 681 of this code. The failure to set forth such reasons as shall, in the discretion of the court, be sufficient, shall be ground for the denial of the motion."

This section has been a fruitful source of litigation. In December of 1942 the Supreme Court decided three cases trying to reconcile some of the then conflicting decisions interpreting the section, and to clarify its meaning. The first of these opinions is Butcher v. Brouwer, 21 Cal.2d 354, 132 P.2d 205. In that case the trial court granted the request for an execution more than five years after entry of the judgment. The Supreme Court affirmed. In discussing the history and development of section 685 the Court stated, 21 Cal.2d at page 357, 132 P.2d at page 206: "Section 685 of the Code of Civil Procedure, before it was last amended, provided in part as follows: 'In all cases the judgment may be enforced or carried into execution after the lapse of five years from the date of its entry, by leave of court, upon motion * * *.' As so worded, it has many times been construed by the appellate courts which held that although the enforcement of a dormant judgment by execution issued in response to the creditor's motion was a matter within the sound discretion of the trial court [citation], mere lapse of time was not in itself a sufficient ground for the denial of the motion. [Citations.] Nor did the failure of the judgment creditor to make any effort to enforce his judgment within five years after its entry, or at a later time, afford a ground for the denial of the motion. [Citations.] And the motion was properly granted, although, during the five years following the judgment, the judgment debtor possessed property which could have been discovered and subjected to the judgment. [Citations.] As a practical matter, therefore, by this construction of the statute a creditor, almost as a matter of right, might obtain an execution many years after the five-year period fixed by section 681."

The court then quoted the 1933 amendment to the section. This amendment added the requirement of notice to the judgment debtor, required the motion to be accompanied with an affidavit showing the reasons for failure to comply with section 681 of the Code of Civil Procedure, and concluded with the language: "The failure to set forth such reasons as shall, in the discretion of the court, be sufficient, shall be ground for the denial of the motion." The Supreme Court was of the opinion that these amendments had materially changed the meaning of the section. At page 358 of 21 Cal.2d, at page 206 of 132 P.2d, the Court stated: "Considering the strict construction against the debtor which the appellate courts had placed upon section 685 before the change and the requirements added at that time, it is clear that the principal object of the new enactment was to place upon a creditor seeking to enforce a judgment more than five years after its entry, the burden of showing why he was not able to satisfy his claim within the statutory period during which he is entitled to an execution as a matter of right. * * * in view of the legislative and judicial history of section 685, its present provisions should be construed as authorizing the court to give a creditor an execution only if, during the five years following entry of judgment, he exercised due diligence in locating and levying upon property owned by the debtor, or in following available information to the point where a reasonable person would conclude that there was no property subject to levy within that time. And even though the creditor may have satisfied the court that he has proceeded with due diligence to enforce his judgment under section 681, the court may still deny him its process if the debtor shows circumstances occurring subsequent to the five-year period upon which, in the exercise of a sound discretion, it should conclude that he is not now entitled to collect his judgment."

In the second of the three cases—Beccuti v. Colombo Baking Co., 21 Cal.2d 360, 132 P.2d 207—the Supreme Court, after restating many of the rules stated in the Butcher case, and in reversing an order granting the execution, stated, 21 Cal.2d at page 363, 132 P.2d at page 209: "But if the facts show of a certainty that, had the judgment creditor exercised even slight diligence in making inquiry concerning the circumstances of the judgment debtor, he would have discovered property subject to execution, the exercise of sound discretion requires the court to deny the motion."

The Court then refers to certain facts relevant to this issue, and then continues, 21 Cal.2d at page 363, 132 P.2d at page 209: "Under these circumstances it is apparent that a resort to any of the customary sources of credit information would have disclosed property of the judgment debtor, and if the slightest effort had been made by the creditor within five years after the rendition of the judgment to locate property belonging to Lercari, much more in value than the amount necessary to satisfy it would have been discovered. Accordingly, the trial court abused its discretion in making the order appealed from."

In the third case—Hatch v. Calkins, 21 Cal.2d 364, 132 P.2d 210—the Supreme Court also reversed an order granting the execution, even though the evidence showed the debtor attempted to conceal some of his assets from his creditors. In the course of its opinion the court stated, 21 Cal.2d at page 371, 132 P.2d at page 214: "This evidence clearly shows that the creditor did not exercise even slight diligence in endeavoring to collect his judgment. But was he excused from making an investigation when there was town gossip in the community where the debtor resided that he had no assets? In other words, does the amendment to section 685 contemplate that a judgment creditor may rely upon the hearsay statements of the debtor's fellow townsmen rather than make any independent search for property of the debtor? To recognize the proposed exception would be to abolish the rule."

The holdings in these three cases are reasonably clear. None of them involved a continuing or accruing type of judgment, such as a judgment for support. In 1946 the Supreme Court was presented with such a judgment in the case of Lohman v. Lohman, 29 Cal.2d 144, 173 P.2d 657. The justices split 3-2-2 in their conclusions.

In the Lohman case an ex-wife attempted to file a claim against the estate of her ex-husband, deceased, for alimony and support. The interlocutory was entered in 1925, and the husband died in 1944. The husband had made a few payments during his lifetime. The wife had granted him numerous indulgences and he had assured her that she would get her money. The trial court denied the issuance of the execution.

Three justices—Edmonds, Gibson and Traynor—held that under section 681 of the Code of Civil Procedure the wife was entitled to an execution as a matter of right as to those payments accruing within five years of the filing of the wife's claim, but that as to those payments accruing between the date of the entry of judgment and up to five years from the date of her claim, she had not exercised the due diligence required by law, and that as to these payments she was barred. Two justices—Carter and Shenk—agreed that the wife was entitled to execution for the payments accruing during the five-year-period immediately preceding the filing of the claim, but also were of the opinion that the facts alleged showed due diligence on her part, and that she was entitled to an execution for the entire period. The other two justices—Schauer and Spence—were of the opinion that the wife had not exercised due diligence in the five-year-period immediately subsequent to judgment, and that such lack of diligence barred her from an execution for the entire period.

This same view was expressed by these two justices in dissents in Di Corpo v. Di Corpo, 33 Cal.2d 195, 200 P.2d 529. In the majority opinion in that case, which was also a support case, the other five justices affirmed an order of the trial court denying execution for the period prior to five years from the motion of the wife on the ground that she had failed to show due diligence, but reversed the trial court as to the five years immediately preceding the motion (the trial court had recalled an execution for this period), holding that, as a matter of right, she was entitled to execution for this five-year-period.

If the rule adopted by a majority of the Supreme Court justices in the above cases be applied to the instant case, it is quite clear that in May, 1944, when the order modifying the support order was entered, the respondent, as a matter of right, was entitled to execution for those payments which had accrued within five years of the time of her motion. This right she agreed to immediately forego, respondent agreeing not to enforce this right as long as appellant continued to pay the increased payments. But, as already pointed out, payment of the increased payments did not wipe out the right to execution to enforce payments of arrearages accrued prior to the date of the order, but simply relieved appellant of the obligation to pay the increased support and past due arrearages at the same time. This being so, the necessary legal effect of the 1944 decree was to preserve respondent's rights in connection with the arrearages as they existed at that time. Thus, it follows, that respondent was entitled, as of right, to execution to enforce payment of arrearages accrued between May, 1944, and five years prior thereto.

But the trial court ordered execution issued for the entire period, May, 1936, to May, 1944. For the period prior to May, 1939, the propriety of this order depends upon whether respondent made a showing of due diligence for the period prior to 1939. We do not think that respondent made any such showing.

In the instant case, prior to issuing the order for execution for the entire period, the trial judge prepared and filed a memorandum opinion. In the course of reviewing the facts the judge stated in that opinion: "It does not appear that plaintiff took any steps to enforce collection under the terms of the decree until 1943." Later in the opinion it is stated: "The record does not show that the plaintiff took any steps toward the enforcement for the first seven years following the entry of judgment."

But, in spite of this, the trial judge was of the opinion that due diligence during this period was exercised because of the distance appellant was living from respondent, respondent's financial inability to investigate assets, and because appellant in his affidavit in the 1944 proceeding averred that between 1936 and 1942 he was unable to make the payments.

Thus, it clearly appears that between 1936 and 1943—a period of seven years—the respondent did nothing at all to enforce her judgment. The reasons given by her—she lived 500 miles from appellant; she was without funds to pay for an investigation of his assets—are not sufficient to show diligence. It is not averred that she did not know where appellant resided, or that, during such period she even wrote him requesting payment. No attempt to secrete himself was made by appellant. During this period no attempt to institute contempt proceedings was made. The averment in appellant's affidavit in the 1944 proceeding indicating that any prior attempt to collect would have been futile cannot serve to revive a judgment already barred. The inexcusable inactivity took place between 1936 and 1943. Respondent did not know until 1944 that any prior effort to collect would probably have been unsuccessful.

Although the trial court undoubtedly has a wide discretion in such cases, since the 1933 amendment to section 685 of the Code of Civil Procedure it is our opinion that it was an abuse of discretion to order issuance of the writ of execution for the period from May, 1936, to May, 1939. Thus, the order involved on appeal No. 1 Civ. 16,960 was erroneous, and must be reversed.

[3] In appeal numbered 1 Civ. 16,522 the question presented is whether the trial court had the legal power to grant to respondent her attorney's fees and costs for the defense of the appeal from the order granting execution. We think that the trial court possessed this power, and that the order was proper.

Appellant contends that because his liability for support of the children had been terminated on November 22, 1950, the divorce and support action were not thereafter pending, and that, as a result, the court's power to grant fees and costs had terminated. The argument is without merit. Section 137.3 of the Civil Code, added in 1951 and as amended in 1953, provides, in part: "In respect to services rendered after the entry of judgment, upon application by an order to show cause or motion, the court may award such costs and attorney's fees as may be reasonably necessary to maintain or defend any subsequent proceeding therein, and may thereafter upon application as aforesaid augment or modify any award so made." In Dexter v. Dexter, 42 Cal.2d 36, 265 P.2d 873, the Supreme Court was called upon to determine the nature of certain payments provided for in an agreement between the parties which had been incorporated in a divorce decree. The Supreme Court concluded that the payments were an integral part of the property division between the parties and so were not subject to modification, and also allowed the wife costs and attorney's fees on appeal. The husband contended that since the payments were not subject to modification, the court had no power to order costs and attorney's fees—a contention similar to the one advanced by appellant in the instant case. The court disposed of the contention as follows, 42 Cal.2d at page 44, 265 P.2d at page 878: "Defendant contends that if the payments are not subject to modification, the court had no power to order him to pay plaintiff's costs and attorney fees on appeal. The trial court had jurisdiction, however, to determine in this proceeding the character of the payments involved, and accordingly, the divorce action is still pending within the meaning of section 137.3 of the Civil Code. [Citing 2 cases.] Since plaintiff did not waive any right she might have to attorney fees and costs in her agreement and no abuse of discretion has been shown, the order awarding costs and attorney fees on appeal must be affirmed."

On similar reasoning, in the instant case, in spite of the termination order, the trial court still had jurisdiction to enforce its order for the support of the children. This being so, under section 137.3 it had power to award the wife costs and attorney's fees.

For the foregoing reasons, in appeal 1 Civ. 16,960, the order appealed from is reversed, with instructions to the trial court to order execution to issue under section 681 of the Code of Civil Procedure for the five-year-period prior to May, 1944; on appeal numbered 1 Civ. 16,522 the order appealed from is affirmed.

The Superior Court, San Diego County, Dean Sherry, J., entered a decree construing the will and providing for final distribution, and an appeal was taken. The District Court of Appeal, Mussell, J., held that where will provided that half of net income of trust should be distributed to intended wife of testator for or during her lifetime, or for so long as she remained a widow, and that one half of net income should be distributed to brothers of testator or the survivor of them, and that on death of brothers one half of net income received by them should be paid to sisters of testator in equal shares, or the survivor of them, and that at death of survivor, income should be paid to intended wife of testator during her life, and that on death or remarriage of intended wife, trustees should distribute income to the brothers or the sisters, if the brothers were not living, intended wife, though she remarried after death of testator, was entitled to the income received by testator's brothers, after the death of the brothers and the sisters.

Decree modified and, as modified, affirmed.

1. Wills ⇐440

2. Wills ⇐440

MUSSELL, Justice.

Charles F. Herreshoff died testate in San Diego county on January 31, 1954. His will provided for the distribution of income and principal of his trust estate in the following language:

"Fourth: After the payment of all debts, expenses of administration, commissions, attorneys' fees, court costs and taxes, including State, County, Inheritance, Succession and Federal Estate, if any, I direct that my entire estate be distributed and I hereby give, devise and bequeath my said estate, real and personal, wheresoever situated, including all failed and lapsed gifts, hereinafter termed 'the trust Estate' to San Diego Trust & Savings Bank of San Diego, California, a California Banking Corporation, Virginia T. Herreshoff, and James Brown Herreshoff and Lillian Stuart Herreshoff or the survivor or survivors of them, In Trust Nevertheless, to hold, manage and distribute as follows:

"A. Distribution of Income and Principal.

"(1) One-half of the net income shall be distributed in monthly or other convenient installments, to or for the benefit of my intended wife, Virginia T. Herreshoff, for and during her lifetime, or for so long as she remains my widow.

"(2) One-half of the net income shall be distributed in monthly or other convenient installments in equal shares to my brothers, James Brown Herreshoff and William Stuart Herreshoff, or to the survivor of them, for and during the lifetime of each of my said brothers.

"(3) Upon the death of the last survivor of my said brothers, I direct that the one-half of the net income received by them during their lifetime shall thereafter be paid to my sisters, Jeannette Brown and Anna Francis, in equal shares, should they be then living, or to the survivor of them, and if neither of my said sisters be then living, that said income be thereafter paid to my said intended wife, Virginia T. Herreshoff, for and during her life..

"(4) Upon the death or remarriage of my intended wife, Virginia T. Herreshoff, the Trustees shall distribute the income from the trust estate to which she was theretofore entitled, to my brothers herein named, in equal shares, if they be then living, or to the survivor of them if one only be living. And in the event that at the time of the death or remarriage of my said intended wife, Virginia T. Herreshoff, neither of my brothers be then living, and my sisters Jeanette Brown and Anna Francis, or either of them be then living, I then direct said Trustees to distribute the income to be distributed to my intended wife, Virginia T. Herreshoff until her death or remarriage, to my said two sisters share and share alike or to the survivor of them."

The trial judge in his decree construing the will and of final distribution, in effect, added the words "provided she does not remarry" to paragraph A(3) above quoted. The language used by the court appears on page four of the decree, page 14 of the clerk's transcript, where the court, in providing for the distribution of the one-half of the net income as provided in the fourth provision of the will A(2), provides as follows:

"During the continuance of the trust the trustees or trustee shall distribute the other one-half of the net income of the trust in monthly or other convenient installments to William Stuart Herreshoff, brother of the decedent, for and during his lifetime; upon the death of the said William Stuart Herreshoff, the trustees or trustee shall distribute said one-half of the net income of the trust in monthly or other convenient installments to Jeanette Brown Herreshoff, and Anna Francis Herreshoff, sisters of the said Charles F. Herreshoff, in equal shares, if they be then living, or to the survivor of them should either have died, and if neither of said sisters be then living, then the trustees, or trustee shall distribute said one-half of the net income of the trust in monthly or other convenient installments to Virginia T. Herreshoff so long as she lives, provided however she shall not receive any of such income in the event she shall have remarried, and distribution of income to her shall cease and terminate forthwith in the event she shall remarry after she has received any such one-half of such income. (Italics ours.)

Virginia T. Herreshoff appeals from the above italicized portion of the decree. No brief is filed on behalf of the respondent. Appellant contends that she has the right to receive one-half of the income from the trust estate after the death of the testator's brothers and sisters, even though she may have remarried by that time. We are in accord with this contention. The testator, in providing for the one-half of the income to be paid to appellant under paragraph Fourth A(1) of the will, provided for the payment of the said one-half of the income to appellant as long as she remained a widow and in the event of her death or remarriage, the income would be distributed to his two sisters (paragraph A(4)). However, in providing for the payment of the other one-half of the income to his brothers, he provides in paragraph A(3) that upon the death of the last survivor of them the income would be distributed to the sisters, if living, and if not, to Virginia T. Herreshoff for and during her life. The language used is clear and unambiguous.

[1-3] The objective in the interpretation of a will is to ascertain the intention of the testator as disclosed by the language he has used in his will. In re Estate of Brunet, 34 Cal.2d 105, 107, 207 P.2d 567, 11 A.L.R.2d 1382. It is well settled that it is not what a testator wanted to do but what he actually did, as expressed in the words used, which governs in the absence of other evidence with respect to his intention. Gardner v. Snow, 119 Cal.App.2d 546, 549, 259 P.2d 95. A court may not, under the guise of construction, make a will for a testator to take the place of the one made by him if its intent is plain. In re Estate of Beldon, 11 Cal.2d 108, 112, 77 P.2d 1052; In re Estate of Soulie, 72 Cal.App.2d 332, 335, 164 P.2d 565.

[4] The testator herein clearly provided in said paragraph A(3) for the payment of income to his brothers during their lifetime and thereafter to his sisters, if living. If not, said income was to be paid to his intended wife, the appellant herein, for and during her life. By adding the italicized provisions to this paragraph providing that appellant should not receive this income in the event that she should have remarried, the court added a condition not stated in the will and contrary to the plain intent of the testator. The decree is therefore modified by deleting therefrom the following language, appearing on page 14 of the clerk's transcript, lines 29 to 32: "provided, however, she shall not receive any of such income in the event she shall have remarried, and distribution of income to her shall cease and terminate forthwith in the event she shall remarry after she has received any such one-half of such income." As so modified, the decree is affirmed. Appellant to recover costs.

Helen GEORGINSON, as Executrix of the Estate of George C. Georgison, also known

Wellington, also known as C. Wellington, Deceased, Defendant and Respondent.

Civ. 16889.

District Court of Appeal, First District,
Division 2, California.

Sept. 24, 1956.

Rehearing Denied Oct. 24, 1956.

Hearing Denied Nov. 21, 1956.

Claimant's action against estate for allegedly unpaid alimony and support money. The Superior Court, County of Santa Clara, W. W. Jacka, J., entered judgment declaring that action was barred by three month statute of limitations and claimant appealed. The District Court of Appeal held that where executrix' attorney wrote letter to claimant's attorney stating that claim had been rejected but suggested settlement negotiations in order to save money for estate, and there was no rejection of claim filed with clerk as required by statute, receipt of letter was sufficient to start three month statute of limitations running.

Affirmed.

1. Executors and Administrators ⚖437(7)

So long as rejection of claim has been given in writing, failure to file notice with clerk as provided by statute, will not prevent running of three month statute of limitations respecting institution of actions on claims. West's Ann.Prob.Code, §§ 711, 714.

2. Executors and Administrators ⚖437(7)

Where executrix' attorney wrote letter to claimant's attorney stating that claim had been rejected but suggested settlement negotiations to prevent litigation expense for estate, and no notice of rejection of claim was filed with clerk as required by statute, receipt of letter by claimant's attorney was sufficient to start three month statute of limitations running. West's Ann.Prob.Code, §§ 711, 714.

3. Executors and Administrators ⚖437(7)

Statute requiring that notice of rejection of claim be served and filed with clerk of court, does not require any formal notice of rejection but merely that notice be in writing. West's Ann.Prob.Code, § 711.

4. Contracts ⚖150

When a document is reasonably susceptible of one meaning only, that meaning is binding, and individual misinterpretation is no excuse.

5. Executors and Administrators ⚖221(3)

In claimant's action against estate to recover accrued alimony and support money, involving issue as to whether action was barred because instituted more than three months after receipt by claimant's attorney of letter stating that claim had been rejected and suggesting settlement negotiations, since letter was clear and unambiguous, trial court properly excluded claimant's attorney's testimony that upon reading letter he deemed it to be a letter inviting settlement negotiations. West's Ann.Prob.Code, §§ 711, 714.

6. Executors and Administrators ⚖437(5)

Where executrix' attorney wrote a letter to claimant's attorney rejecting claim but suggested possibility of settlement and pointing out the difficulty of reaching one, such invitation to settlement negotiations was insufficient basis for claiming estoppel against executrix to plead three month statute of limitations. West's Ann.Prob.Code, §§ 711, 714.

7. Limitation of Actions ⚖13

Where there was still ample time to institute an action within the statutory period after circumstances inducing delay had ceased to operate, plaintiff who failed to do so, cannot claim an estoppel.

8. Executors and Administrators ⚖256(1)

Where claimant desired to press claim against estate for unpaid alimony and support money and order by another court granted leave to file a creditor's claim in estate and there was an appeal from such order, appeal did not stay effectiveness of order which was self-executing.

9. Process ☞

"Process" is a means whereby a court compels a compliance with its demands.

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Process".

10. Executors and Administrators ☞437(3)

Where claimant's action against estate for unpaid alimony and support money was barred because of institution of same more than three months after notice of rejection of claim, fact that delay had not prejudiced the executrix was irrelevant. West's Ann. Prob.Code, § 714.

11. Limitation of Actions ☞166

The statute of limitations is a positive rule of law and the courts must, when it is pleaded, be governed by it where it applies independent of the existence or nonexistence of prejudice to the defendant.

PER CURIAM.

Minnie C. Lobrovich, formerly Minnie Georgison, appeals from a judgment holding that her action against the executrix of the estate of her deceased first husband George C. Georgison to establish her claim in said estate was barred by the provision of section 714 of the Probate Code, which requires such suit to be brought within three months after the date of written notice of the rejection of the claim. The facts are undisputed.

The claim was for allegedly unpaid alimony accrued before plaintiff's remarriage in February 1925, and child support accrued before her son reached his majority in March 1944, both under an interlocutory decree of divorce obtained by plaintiff in Alameda Superior Court in 1924, and the final decree obtained in 1925.

The claim was filed with the County Clerk of Santa Clara County, where the will of the deceased was in probate, on December 14, 1952, and a copy was mailed to the attorneys of the executrix, the second wife of deceased. The executrix on December 15th instructed her attorneys to "deny" said claim. On December 17th the Alameda Superior Court on plaintiff's motion ordered that execution issue on the divorce judgment and leave was granted to file creditor's claim in the estate of George C. Georgison. On December 19, 1952, the attorneys for the executrix mailed a letter to the attorneys of plaintiff, which letter the court below considered a notice of rejection of claim and which will be stated hereafter in detail. Enclosed was a copy of the order of December 17th and copy of a notice of appeal therefrom. This letter was received by plaintiff's attorney on December 22nd. On this same date the appeal from the order of December 17th was filed. On December 23rd a more detailed order to the same effect as the order of December 17th was filed in the Alameda Superior Court. On February 6, 1953 a supplement to plaintiff's claim reciting the order granting leave was filed with the Santa Clara County Clerk. After the letter of December 19th, there were settling negotiations between the attorneys of the parties which ceased after letters exchanged on February 12 and 13, 1953. The present action was filed April 6, 1953, more than three months after receipt of the letter of December 19, 1952. Trial in said action was continued until after the appeal of the order granting leave had been decided in favor of plaintiff-petitioner, Georgison v. Georgison, 43 Cal.2d 550, 275 P.2d 3, and the remittitur had come down on November 26, 1954.

Appellant contends that the three month period of Probate Code Section 714 did not begin to run because her claim had not been rejected in the manner provided for by Probate Code Section 710, and because the letter of December 19, 1952 was not a notice of rejection as contemplated by Section 714; that the running of the statute was tolled pending the appeal from the order of the Alameda Superior Court; that respondent executrix was estopped from relying on the statute because of continuing settlement negotiations and that it was error to strike testimony of plaintiff's attorney that he attached no significance to the letter of December 19th as a notice of rejection and deemed it solely a letter inviting negotiations. We have concluded that none of these contentions can be sustained.

[1] It is conceded that the executrix did not file with the clerk her rejection in writing as provided for in section 710. However, section 714 does not contain a term of three months from the date of the filing of such rejection in writing but from the date of written notice to the claimant for which section 714 itself provides. The effect of failure to file a rejection in writing with the Clerk in accordance with section 710 is not contained in the probate code or decided in any case known to us. With respect to section 711, which regulates the alternative statutory method, the presentation of the claim to the representative himself, and which provides for indorsement of the rejection with the date thereof on such presented claim, it has been said that such indorsement of rejection is not essential and that any act in writing indicating an intention to reject would have the same effect. See Faias v. Superior Court, 133 Cal.App. 525, 528, 24 P.2d 567. Accordingly, it was held in In re Estate of Wood, 117 Cal.App.2d 132, 254 P.2d 940, that a motion of executors to strike a creditor's claim was a rejection of said claim to be followed by a suit under section 714, and in San Francisco Bank v. St. Clair, 47 Cal.App.2d 194, 117 P.2d 703, 704, that a statement that a contingent liability claimed "is now eliminated and is null and void" contained in the first and final account and petition for distribution of the executrix, which statement did not escape the notice of the creditor, was a notice in writing of rejection which started the running of the three months statute of section 714, although otherwise the executrix had taken no action on the claim. We hold that the same principle must be applied to the filing with the Clerk of a rejection in writing under section 710. This form of rejection has no greater intrinsic importance than the indorsement of the rejection on a claim presented to the representative. The claim with rejection need not even be presented by the clerk to the judge in contradistinction to a claim allowed by the representative, § 710, supra.

The material text of the letter of December 19, 1952, the sufficiency of which as a notice of rejection is in dispute, reads as follows:

"Re: Georgison v. Georgison No. 74985

"Gentlemen:

"Enclosed is the order and the appeal therefrom in the above entitled matter. Also, I am in a position now to apprise you of what is really at stake in this controversy. As you will be notified, if you have not already received copy, the inventory in this estate totals $6,525.00. There is also a claim in this estate of $50,000.00 arising out an automobile accident in which the deceased husband was involved prior to his death. There is some insurance on this matter and it may be that the estate will not be diminished by that claim. However, that remains to be seen.

"As your claim has been rejected, no doubt you are planning suit against the estate and since the defenses are so strong and the feeling equally strong, I can honestly predict that if we do not prevail in successfully resisting your suit, an appeal from it will be inevitable. With an estate this size, obviously it is a losing proposition for Mrs. Lobrovich.

"I have in mind a realistic approach to this thing and I think you will agree the sensible thing to do is to get Mrs. Lobrovich to prune her demand down to something that makes sense for this widow, and I will get out the arithmetic and show her how she would save money by settling. However, you know I'm not going to get anywhere if her demand is substantial enough to give it to Lobrovich rather than lose it in fees and costs in resisting Mrs. Lobrovich. In either event, the result would be the same to Mrs. Georginson and with her present feeling, I know she would prefer it not going to Mrs. Lobrovich.

"I suggest you get in touch with your client and let me know your intentions because it seems a little ridiculous with an estate of this size to exhaust it with attorney's fees."

[2, 3] This letter does not only expressly state that the claim has been rejected but moreover the necessity of suit, the availability of strong defenses against such suit, the intention to carry on the defense to appeal, and the taking of appeal from the order granting permission to file the claim. It cannot leave the slightest doubt as to the intent of the executrix to oppose (reject) the claim presented. The statements as to the condition of the estate and the desirability of a settlement cannot have the effect of hiding said rejection because they are made in direct relation to it. The invitation of a settlement offer for a substantially lower amount than the one claimed cannot cause any doubt as to the definitive character of the rejection of the claim as presented. "The code does not provide that any formal notice of rejection be served, but merely requires that the notice be in writing." San Francisco Bank v. St. Clair, supra, 47 Cal.App.2d at page 201, 117 P.2d at page 706. The letter is a notice of rejection in writing and an unambiguous one.

[4, 5] Appellant's contention that it was error to strike the testimony of her attorney, that he read the letter, that at the time he attached no significance to it as a notice of rejection and deemed it solely a letter inviting settlement negotiations, is based on the following language in the San Francisco Bank case, supra, 47 Cal. App.2d at page 201, 117 P.2d at page 706: "There was nothing in the caption or title of the papers served by the executrix to indicate that a rejection of the claim was contained therein, and if the rejection had escaped the notice of respondent, it might then be heard to say that it had not received such 'notice in writing' as the statute contemplates." The language has no application to our case. In the San Francisco Bank case the rejection was hidden in a document intended for another purpose and for all persons interested in the estate, so that it could without fault of the claimant escape his notice if his attention was not expressly called to it. Here the letter is addressed to the attorneys of claimant only and is concerned with nothing but respondent's opposition to the claim and the consequences of the rejection. The testimony stricken does not say that the rejection escaped the attorney's attention, but gives the attorney's individual understanding of the letter, which he read, an understanding contrary to what we have found to be its unambiguous meaning. When a document is reasonably susceptible of one meaning only, that meaning is binding and an individual misinterpretation is no excuse. Cf. Restatement, Contracts, § 501, comment (b) "If the misunderstanding is due to the fault of one party and the other party understands the transaction according to the natural meaning of the words or other acts, both parties are bound by that meaning." The misinterpretation is then irrelevant and evidence as to it should be excluded.

[6, 7] With respect to an estoppel to rely on the statute because of settlement negotiations as here opened by the letter of December 19, 1952, it is said in 34 Am. Jur. 330: "Clearly, an estoppel to plead the statute does not arise in every case in which there are negotiations for a settlement of the controversy." In this case the delay in commencing action was not induced by any representation of defendant that an amicable settlement would be reached. There was no more than an advice to explore the possibility of a settlement pointing out the difficulty of reaching one. Such is an insufficient basis for estoppel to plead the statute. Cf. Lo Bue v. Porrazzo, 48 Cal.App.2d 82, 86, 119 P.2d 346. Moreover the negotiations ended with a letter of the attorneys of executrix of February 12, 1953, stating that any settlement above $2,000 was out of the question and a letter of the attorneys of plaintiff of February 13, rejecting that offer and stating that they would have to proceed if no counter-offer close to $5,000 was made. At that time there were still more than five weeks available until the end of the period of limitation. No counter-offer was made but nevertheless plaintiff failed timely to bring action. If there is still ample time to institute the action within the statutory period after the circumstances inducing delay have ceased to operate, the plaintiff who failed to do so cannot claim an estoppel. Annotations, 130 A.L.R. 8, 19; 24 A.L.R.2d 1413, 1423, and cases there digested.

[8,9] Appellant's contention that the statute was tolled during the pendency of the appeal of the order granting leave to file the claim is based on the well recognized rule "that the running of the statute of limitations is suspended during any period in which the plaintiff is legally prevented from taking action to protect his rights." County of Santa Clara v. Hayes Co., 43 Cal.2d 615, 618, 275 P.2d 456, 458. However, plaintiff was not legally prevented from bringing action to establish her claim in the estate pending such appeal. The order granting leave to file the claim was self-executing because it requires no process of the court to carry it into effect. The appeal does not stay the effectiveness of such an order. Cf. Caminetti v. Guarantee Union Life Ins. Co., 22 Cal.2d 759, 763, 141 P.2d 423. Process is a means whereby a court compels a compliance with its demands. See definition of process "in practice" in Black's Law Dictionary. No means of compelling compliance derived from the Alameda Superior Court or its officers except the order itself was required to enable appellant to bring her action in the Santa Clara Superior Court. We see in this respect no distinction from the facts in the Caminetti case, supra, in which it was held that an order approving a rehabilitation agreement under the Insurance Code was self-executing and that the power of the Insurance Commissioner to perform the terms of the agreement was not stayed by an appeal from said order and could not be stayed by a writ of supersedeas. It was there pointed out that the Commissioner was not an officer of the Court. No more is in this case appellant in bringing her action, or the Santa Clara Superior Court in considering it, acting as an officer of the Alameda Superior Court, which granted the permission.

[10,11] Neither was appellant practically prevented from bringing the action pending the appeal by unsurmountable factual difficulties like those present in Christin v. Superior Court, 9 Cal.2d 526, 71 P.2d 205, 112 A.L.R. 1153, on which case she relies. Although there would be some risk in bringing action before the permission was final, such risk is not greater than is normally borne by a litigant who brings action relying on the undecided merits of his cause. To restrict the risk the proceedings in the Santa Clara action could, after their timely commencement, be continued until after the final decision of the appeal. Actually, appellant followed exactly this procedure, commencement of the action pending the appeal and continuation of the trial until after its final decision, but she started said procedure some two weeks too late. The fact that this delay did not prejudice respondent is irrelevant. "The statute of limitations is a positive rule of law, and the courts must, when it is pleaded, be governed by it where it applies * * *." Adams v. Hopkins, 144 Cal. 19, 28, 77 P.

712, 715. As a statute of repose it prevents the bringing of action after the period provided for, independent of the existence of prejudice to the defendant.

Civ. 5414.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District,
California.

Sept. 24, 1956.

Rehearing Denied Oct. 23, 1956.

Hearing Granted Nov. 21, 1956.

Action brought by tort judgment creditors of insured for declaration of legal rights and duties of insurer under liability policy and for judgment requiring insurer to pay judgment against the insolvent insured. The Superior Court, San Diego County, Charles C. Haines, J., rendered judgment adverse to plaintiffs and entered an order denying their motion for new trial, and they appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Mussell, J., held that Vehicle Code section requiring liability policy to insure person named therein and any other person using or responsible for use of vehicle with permission of insured did not prohibit endorsement defining "insured" to include named insured and members of his immediate family using automobile or legally responsible for use thereof but making insurance inapplicable in event of use by any person not within such definition.

Affirmed.

301 P.2d—30

* Opinion vacated 307 P.2d 359.

1. Insurance ⇨435.8

There was no ambiguity in liability policy's restrictive endorsement which define "insured" as including the named insured and any member of his immediate family using automobile or legally responsible for use thereof, but making insurance inapplicable in event of "use" by any person not within such definition; and driver of vehicle at time of accident was user of the same.

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Use".

2. Insurance ⇨435.8

Vehicle Code section, requiring liability policy to insure person named therein and any other person using or responsible for use of vehicle with permission of insured, did not prohibit endorsement defining "insured" to include named insured and members of his immediate family using automobile or legally responsible for use thereof but making insurance inapplicable in event of use by any person not within such definition. MUSSELL, Justice.

This is an action for declaratory relief and upon a judgment against an insolvent insured. On February 3, 1955, Eusebio Bonifacio and Cecilia Bonifacio were the owners of a 1953 Cadillac coupe automobile, which, while being negligently driven by one Victoria Villanueva, caused personal injuries and property damages to plaintiffs herein. Prior to said date, the Government Employees Insurance Company, a corporation, defendant herein, issued to Eusebio Bonifacio its policy of automobile insurance, No. 4495658. In this policy the said insurance company agreed to indemnify the Bonifacios against any liability not exceeding the sum of $10,000, together with taxed court costs with interest, which should arise against Eusebio Bonifacio and Cecilia Bonifacio in favor of any person or persons who should sustain any damages to their property and also in favor of any person or persons who should sustain any bodily injury by reason of an accident incurred while the said Eusebio Bonifacio and Cecilia Bonifacio were using said automobile or legally responsible for the use thereof, provided said use was with the consent and permission of said Eusebio Bonifacio or Cecilia Bonifacio. An endorsement to said policy, dated December 3, 1954, provides as follows:

"1. The first sentence of Insuring Agreement III, Definition of Insured, is eliminated and is hereby replaced by the following:

"With respect to the insurance for Bodily Injury Liability and Property Damage Liability the unqualified word 'insured' includes the named insured, the individual named below, and any member of the insured's immediate family.

"No Exceptions

"while using the automobile or legally responsible for the use thereof, provided the actual use of the automobile is with the permission of the named insured.

"2. Such insurance as is afforded by this policy does not apply while any person not an insured as defined in Paragraph 1 above is using the automobile, except that such insurance as is afforded for Medical Payments applies with respect to bodily injury to or sickness, disease or death of the named insured, the individual named below, and any member of the insured's immediate family.

"3. As evidenced by the signature below of the named insured, the named insured acknowledges and agrees that this endorsement forms a part of the above captioned policy issued by the Government Employees Insurance Company and is effective as of 12:01 A. M. Standard Time on the effective date of the endorsement."

On February 3, 1955, while this policy was in effect, and while the Cadillac automobile was being operated and driven by Victoria Villanueva, with the permission and consent of Cecilia Bonifacio and while Cecilia Bonifacio was seated beside Victoria Villanueva in said automobile, said Victoria Villanueva negligently operated said automobile, and as a proximate result, the property of Marian Wildman and Elvaree H. Wildman, plaintiffs herein, was damaged and personal injuries were sustained by Elvaree H. Wildman, which said damages were caused by said accident. Thereafter Marian Wildman and Elvaree H. Wildman obtained a judgment in the Superior Court in San Diego county against Victoria Villanueva and Cecilia Bonifacio in the sum of $5,000, and costs, for the property damage and personal injuries so sustained. This judgment has become final and is wholly unsatisfied and unpaid.

The instant action was brought by Marian Wildman and his wife for the declaration of the legal rights and duties of the defendant Government Employees Insurance Company under said policy and for a judgment requiring it to pay the said judgment obtained by Wildman and his wife. The trial court found, inter alia, that in the policy of insurance the defendant agreed to indemnify the Bonifacios against liability which should arise against them in favor of any person or persons who should sustain damage to their property and also in favor of any persons who should sustain any bodily injury by reason of an accident incurred while the Bonifacios were using said automobile or legally responsible for the use thereof, provided such use was with the permission and consent of the said Eusebio P. Bonifacio or Cecilia Bonifacio, and provided further that said automobile was not being used at said time by any person other than the said Eusebio P. Bonifacio or Cecilia Bonifacio or members of their immediate family; that said insurance was in effect on February 3, 1955, subject to the limitations and exclusions referred to herein. The court concluded that the plaintiffs should take nothing by their complaint and entered judgment decreeing that the insurance afforded by said policy did not apply at the time of the accident on February 3, 1955.

[1] Plaintiffs have appealed from the judgment and first contend that the restrictive endorsement on the policy is ambiguous. We do not agree with this contention. In the first paragraph of this endorsement it is stated that the "insured" includes the named insured and any member of the insured's immediate family, with no exceptions, while using the automobile or legally responsible for the use thereof, provided the actual use of the automobile is with the permission of the named insured. This language is clear and unambiguous as to the persons insured. Paragraph two of the endorsement clearly states that such insurance as is afforded by this policy does not apply while any person not an insured as defined in paragraph one is using the automobile. It is conceded that Victoria Villanueva was driving the automobile and that she was not a member of the Bonifacio family. She was using the automobile as she was driving it at the time of the accident and the term "use" includes the person who had the actual, though not physical, control of the car, and who was constituted by the owner its master ad hoc. Souza v. Corti, 22 Cal.2d 454, 457, 139 P.2d 645, 147 A.L.R. 861. We find no ambiguity in the wording of paragraph two of the endorsement.

In Boole v. Union Marine Ins. Co., Ltd., 52 Cal.App. 207, 209, 198 P. 416, 417, it is held:

"Contracts of insurance are not different from other contracts. In the absence of statutory provisions to the contrary, insurance companies have the same right as an individual to limit their liability, and to impose whatever conditions they please upon their obligations, not inconsistent with public policy."

Exclusionary clauses have been held to be binding even when the insured automobile was being operated by one who was an insured under the terms of the policy. Sears v. Illinois Indemnity Co., 121 Cal. App. 211, 9 P.2d 245 is such a case. In it the policy in question, by exclusion, specified that the insurance did not apply while the vehicle was being operated by one under the age of 16 years. The automobile was owned by one Gilbert Angrimson, and his son, an insured, was in the vehicle at the time of the accident. The actual driver of the car was Wilson Parker, who was under the age of 16 years. The trial court found that while Parker was driving the car, the owner's son was controlling, managing and operating the vehicle and it was held on appeal that the terms of the exclusion were applicable and that there was no coverage at the time of the accident.

In State Farm Mut. Automobile Ins. Co. v. Coughran, 303 U.S. 485, 58 S.Ct. 670, 671, 82 L.Ed. 970, the policy in question provided:

"(1) Risks Not Assumed by This Company. The Company shall not be liable and no liability or obligation of any kind shall attach to the Company for loss or damage; * * * (A) * * * (D) Unless the said automobile is being operated by the Assured, his paid driver, members of his immediate family, or persons acting under the direction of the Assured; (E) Caused while the said automobile is being driven or operated by any person whatsoever either under the influence of liquor or drugs or violating any law or ordinance as to age or driving license; (F) * * * *"

The trial court therein found that at the time of the accident in question the insured automobile was being operated by Helen Anthony, the assured's wife, and was at the time being jointly operated by one Nancy Leidendeker, an unlicensed minor. It appears from the findings that Nancy was actually in the driver's seat. The United States Supreme Court held that: "If, as found, the automobile was being jointly operated by the wife and the girl, the risk was not within the policy."

In the instant case the defendant insurance company limited its liability by excluding coverage when the automobile was being used by someone other than an insured, as defined in the policy, and such a limitation cannot be disregarded. As is said in Continental Cas. Co. v. Phoenix Const. Co., 46 Cal.2d 432, 296 P.2d 801, 806:

"An insurance company has the right to limit the coverage of a policy issued by it and when it has done so, the plain language of the limitation must be respected." (Citing many cases.)

[2] Appellant argues that the interpretation of the policy given by the trial court is contrary to section 415 of the Vehicle Code of the State of California. This section provides, in part, as follows:

"Requisites of Motor Vehicle Liability Policy. (a) * * * A 'motor vehicle liability policy,' as used in this code means a policy of liability insurance issued by an insurance carrier authorized to transact such business in this State to or for the benefit of the person named therein as assured, which policy shall meet the following requirements: * * *

"(2) Such policy shall insure the person named therein and any other person using or responsible for the use of said motor vehicle or motor vehicles with the express or implied permission of said assured. * * *

The endorsement involved herein, in paragraph one, complies with the quoted code provision and did furnish coverage in cases where the automobile was being used by one who was not named as an insured. Since the defendant insurance company had the right to limit the coverage of the policy under the rules stated in Continental Cas. Co. v. Phoenix Const. Co., supra, 46 Cal.2d 423, 296 P.2d 801 we cannot here hold that the limitation imposed by paragraph two of the endorsement in question was prohibited by the provisions of section 415 of the Vehicle Code.

[3] The attempted appeal from the order denying motion for a new trial herein is dismissed. In re Estate of Dopkins, 34 Cal.2d 568, 569, 212 P.2d 886. The judgment is affirmed.

The PEOPLE of the State of California,
Plaintiff and Respondent,

v.

E. L. HENDERSON, Defendant and Appellant.
Cr. 1084.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District,
California.

Sept. 27, 1956.

Prosecution for conspiracy to commit theft. The Superior Court, San Diego County, Joe L. Shell, J., entered judgment of conviction and order denying motion for new trial, and defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Griffin, Acting P. J., held that where questions on defendant's cross-examination and statements of prosecutor on final argument all implied that prosecutor had personal knowledge of defendant's commission of similar crimes elsewhere and of defense witness' perjury, defendant did not have a fair trial.

Reversed and new trial ordered.

1. Conspiracy Ⓒ48

In prosecution for conspiracy to commit theft involving alleged scheme whereby defendant with advance knowledge of winning numbers on punch boards would play such boards after they had been left at business establishments by an unknown co-conspirator, evidence presented jury questions as to whether theft was committed, whether a conspiracy did exist and whether defendant was connected with the crime. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 182, subd. 1.

2. Witnesses Ⓒ330(1)

Where defendant is charged with a conspiracy which prosecutor believes was practiced over many states, some greater degree of latitude is allowed in cross-examination of defendant, particularly when it relates to the defendant's memory as to his whereabouts on a particular occasion or as to the intent and pattern, or general plan involved in the claimed conspiracy, or for possible grounds of impeachment. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 182, subd. 1.

3. Criminal Law Ⓒ726, 730(16)

A defendant is not in a position to complain of prejudicial error in remarks by prosecutor, where remarks in question are elicited by challenge of defendant's counsel and where trial court has ordered jury to disregard such remarks.

4. Criminal Law Ⓒ719(1)

It is misconduct for prosecutor to state or infer the existence of facts concerning which no evidence has been introduced.

5. Criminal Law Ⓒ706, 719(3)

In prosecution for conspiracy to commit theft, where effect of prosecutor's cross-examination of defendant and statements made to jury was to imply that prosecutor had personal knowledge of defendant's commission of similar crimes elsewhere and of perjury by defense witness, defendant did not have a fair trial. West's Ann.Pen.

Code, §§ 182, subd. 1, 1323; West's Ann. Const. art. 6, § 4½.

3. Criminal Law Ⓒ798½

In prosecution for conspiracy to commit theft, instruction to effect that if jury believed defendant guilty of any of the three kinds of theft mentioned in Penal code, it would not be necessary to state, in the verdict, which of the three forms of theft was committed, provided that it also found beyond a reasonable doubt, that defendant was guilty of conspiracy to commit crime of theft, was proper. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 182, subd. 1.

GRIFFIN, Acting Presiding Justice.

Defendant was charged with the crime of conspiracy to commit theft, Pen.Code Sec. 182, subd. 1, claiming that on January 11, 1954, he voluntarily agreed with a person referred to as John Doe to commit said act. Four separate overt acts are charged claiming that in furtherance thereof (1) John Doe sold Glen Fronabarger a punch board; (2) defendant entered a service station; (3) John Doe sold one Lester Root a punch board; and (4) defendant wrote a letter to a certain bank in San Diego. A verdict of guilty was found by the jury and a motion for new trial was denied. Defendant was sentenced to State's prison. On appeal he contends: (1) that the evidence is insufficient to support the judgment; (2) that the prosecuting attorney engaged in prejudicial misconduct; and (3) that the court gave an erroneous instruction.

On January 11 or 12, 1954, an unidentified person (hereinafter referred to as John Doe) appeared at three service stations in San Diego County, to sell certain items, including punch boards, and was seen driving a certain described light-colored Mercury car. Despite the station operators' unwillingness to accept the punch boards, John Doe left a base-ball punch board at each of these stations upon a consignment basis. This game consisted of a board indicating baseball teams and bets were made by the customer that if a named team was uncovered by the draw, the Phillies would pay nothing and so graduated up to 20 for 1 on New York. The board had painted on it "Play Ball—Pick your favorite team"; "State Approved", with a gold seal; "Tax paid at rate prescribed by law"; "play 10¢ up". Within two or three hours thereafter, on the same day, defendant appeared at each of these service stations and won money from each of the service station operators, all under similar circumstances, namely, that defendant would start out losing, would continue playing, and finally select a 20 to 1 winner, whereupon he would stop playing the punch board, collect the money and leave. John Doe never returned to any of these stations to collect the price of the boards. In each instance he had spoken about selling vending machines when he approached these three service station operators but finally ended the transaction by leaving the punch boards and agreeing to return and collect from the operators $4.50 for each of them, and allow them to keep the remaining profits which he assured them would return a profit and they could keep it. Altogether, Mr. Root, an oil station operator, lost about $110 to defendant, and Mr. Fronabarger $130, $70 of this amount being represented by a check drawn on the Bank of America, Logan Heights Branch, on which the maker stopped payment. Mr. Siekmann lost $140. The check was made payable to E. L. Henderson, and was endorsed and forwarded to the bank with a letter of instruction dated January 11, 1956, to send a cashier's check to him at General Delivery, Phoenix, Arizona. The police in Phoenix were alerted to watch the Post Office there but E. L. Henderson did not appear. Considerable publicity was given in the papers of the affair.

It appears that immediately after these transactions the defendant left town and was apprehended in Oklahoma. Before the time set for his extradition hearing, and while out on bail, defendant departed to Mississippi and his attorney, who was on defendant's bond, returned defendant to Oklahoma. The police officer who returned defendant to California, testified that while en route defendant voluntarily stated (retracting a previous statement of denial) that he was the man who punched the punch boards in the service stations; that when he asked him why he visited all of the service stations in one short period of time, defendant declined to answer; that when he asked defendant if he went to the General Delivery window at the Post Office in Phoenix, Arizona, to pick up the check defendant said "No"; that when he remarked to defendant that payment had been stopped on the check defendant said "Someone is liable to get in trouble over that * * * possibly someone at the bank". Defendant was identified by the three service station operators as the one who took the money.

It is the people's claim that the evidence sufficiently shows a conspiracy or agreement between John Doe and defendant by showing a definite pattern of operation by them; that John Doe assured the station operators there was a profit to be made from the boards and they could not lose when in fact both defendant and John Doe knew that within a short period of time defendant would appear, play the game, and, as a "come-along" would lose until the proper time, when a larger wager would be placed and he would win on a 20 to one tab; that in fact he knew the key location of the several tabs all the time by prearrangement with his accomplice; that the accomplice assured the service station owners they could not lose on the boards but would make a profit; that John Doe represented he would return in a short time after he left the boards; that they would show a profit; and that he would then be reimbursed in the sum of $4.50 each for the cost of the boards.

Defendant relied on an alibi, claiming that at the time of the events in San Diego he was at Hot Springs, Arkansas. He denied playing the punch boards here in question or making the admissions to the officer, and produced a witness who testified that defendant stayed with him during that period at a hotel in that place while defendant was taking a course of baths. On cross-examination the witness acknowledged that defendant was not registered at the hotel.

[1] Defendant's son testified that he drove defendant to Hot Springs around January 1, 1954, and returned for him after January 15th. There is evidence that at about this time and prior thereto defendant owned a light-colored Mercury car. The evidence is sufficient to support the finding of the jury that a theft was committed and that a conspiracy did exist between defendant and John Doe to commit the crime in violation of section 182, subdivision 1 of the Penal Code. People v. Sica, 112 Cal.App.2d 574, 581, 247 P.2d 72; People v. Adams, 137 Cal.App.2d 660, 669, 290 P.2d 944; People v. Henry, 86 Cal.App.2d 785, 195 P.2d 478; People v. Edwards, 72 Cal.App. 102, 113, 236 P. 944; People v. Daener, 96 Cal.App.2d 827, 216 P.2d 511. Contrary to defendant's claim, the evidence is sufficient to connect the defendant with the commission of the crime. People v. Porter, 105 Cal.App.2d 324, 329, 233 P.2d 102; People v. Daener, supra.

[2] A more serious question arises as to the claim of prejudicial misconduct on the part of the prosecuting attorney. It principally involves testimony illicitly from defendant by way of cross-examination and in the prosecutor's argument to the jury. As part of the cross-examination defendant admitted he did not register at Hot Springs, Arkansas, but stated he just moved in with a Mr. Sells; that prior thereto he had had Oklahoma, Idaho and Nevada license plates on his Mercury car due to his traveling in the different states in his line of business. He was then asked if he had not played these or similar punch boards before and he said that he had. Apparently, while the prosecutor was examining some document before him, defendant was then asked if he had not won $140 from a certain man in Arizona. Defendant answered "No". He was then asked if he did not win $160 from a certain named person at a gas station in Mahoning, Pennsylvania, and he answered "No" but did say he was in that city with one H. W. Duke, and did win a television set on a punch board owned by the Chief of Police. He was then asked about other cities and places and counsel for defendant objected to this line of questioning. The objection was overruled and the prosecutor continued to ask about other places and about defendant being lucky at punch boards in these several places. Defendant admitted being at some of them at certain times but denied any punch board activities. As to one place he volunteered the information that he was arrested there, but stated it did not involve a punch board; that in these places where punch boards were all about town he played them but lost more money than he won. Defendant's counsel claims that this extended cross-examination as to whether defendant had been lucky on punch boards in the several states was outside the scope of the direct examination, and that cross-examination is permitted only upon matters about which he was examined in chief, citing section 1323 Penal Code, and such authorities as People v. Zerillo, 36 Cal.2d 222, 223 P.2d 223; and People v. Arrighini, 122 Cal. 121, 126, 54 P. 591. No evidence was presented by the prosecutor to disprove defendant's statements in reference to his whereabouts on these particular occasions or that he was engaged in any wrongful acts pertaining to punch boards. Defendant was charged with a conspiracy which the prosecutor believed was being practiced over many states, and he was endeavoring to show this by the cross-examination of the defendant. It is the rule that under such a charge some greater degree of latitude is allowed in cross-examination of the defendant, particularly when it relates to defendant's memory as to his whereabouts on a particular occasion or as to the intent and pattern or general plan involved in the claimed conspiracy, or for possible grounds of impeachment. People v. Theodore, 121 Cal.App.2d 17, 24, 262 P.2d 630; People v. Henry, 86 Cal.App.2d 785, 786, 195 P.2d 478; People v. Tarantino, 45 Cal.2d 590, 599, 290 P.2d 505; People v. Kerns, 134 Cal.App.2d 110, 285 P.2d 81; People v. Hoyt, 20 Cal.2d 306, 318, 125 P.2d 29.

The vice of the prosecutor's conduct was the use of the testimony adduced on this cross-examination by inferring to the jury in his argument, in effect, that he had not been able to prove other similar offenses, but was personally assuring the jury that the defendant was guilty of such other offenses. He said:

"Counsel (for defendant) says, 'Well, there is a little something in here about a punch board winning back in, I believe it is, Mahoning City' * * * He says 'You could have stopped in one of the gas stations and won.'" (Continuing, by the prosecutor): "If you stopped into the gas station and won would I know about it? Would it be a matter of record some place, if it was a legitimate, above-the-board deal, if it was all legal okay, why would I know about it?"

Serious objection was made to the statement but overruled. The prosecutor then proceeded:

"You (the jurors) answer that question for yourselves. If you have won, and I imagine during the course of your life maybe you picked up something, maybe on a punch board, maybe some other way, but would I know about it if it was open and above board?"

This was in reply to the argument of counsel for defendant who said there was nothing wrong about defendant being in these particular towns when he was engaged in the carnival business; that defendant frankly admitted he had been in various states, had been arrested in one place mentioned, and it was easy for the prosecutor to stand up there with a sheaf of papers and ask him if he wasn't in a certain town at a certain time when there was nothing illegal about it.

[3, 4] While it is a general rule, as held in People v. Perkin, 87 Cal.App.2d 365, 368, 197 P.2d 39, and People v. Smith, 100 Cal.App. 344, 349, 279 P. 1022, that a defendant is not in a position to complain of prejudicial error where the remarks in question are elicited by the challenge of defendant's counsel, and where the trial court ordered the jury to disregard the remarks. In the instant case the court did not so admonish the jury and there was no request to do so, but objection was made to that line of argument. It is misconduct for a prosecutor to state or infer the existence of facts concerning which no evidence has been introduced. People v. Kirkes, 39 Cal.2d 719, 249 P.2d 1; People v. Pantages, 212 Cal. 237, 297 P. 890; People v. Devine, 95 Cal. 227, 30 P. 378.

We are again confronted with a similar example of misconduct on the part of the prosecutor in reference to the testimony of the defendant's witness Sells, who testified that defendant was at the hotel with him on the dates indicated. On cross-examination by the prosecutor the witness was asked if it was not true that the only Henderson registered at the Hot Springs Hotel between January 1 and January 21, 1954, was W. D. Henderson from January 4th to January 8th. The witness answered that he did not know W. D. Henderson. Then he was asked: "Now, if a police officer just called Hot Springs, Arkansas, and got that information—". The court properly ordered the question and inference that might be drawn from it stricken. It would be difficult to erase the inference from the minds of the jurors, especially in view of the showing by an uncontradicted affidavit of defendant on a motion for new trial that during the argument of defendant's counsel a police sergeant who had been seated by the prosecutor went to the telephone located at the clerk's desk in the courtroom and carried on a conversation with someone; that the jurors were watching him; that thereafter he returned to the prosecutor's table and whispered in the prosecutor's ear; that they then turned and nodded in the direction of the witness Sells; that the officer then left the courtroom and returned with a yellow sheet of paper and handed it to the prosecutor and they both looked over toward Sells; that later Sells got up and walked out of the courtroom and both the officer and bailiff followed him; that the bailiff later returned and the other officer and Sells never returned to the courtroom before the case was submitted to the jury.

Previously, in the argument of counsel for the defendant to the jury he remarked about the credibility of Sells' testimony and said: "* * * if that were not the truth, you can bet your bottom dollar that Mr. O'Laughlin would have been on the phone and if he had determined that were not the truth he would have asked for a continuance to get a witness out here to discredit Mr. Sells."

In the final argument of the prosecutor he said: "Don't let perjured testimony walk this man out * * * maybe because of the time element I couldn't prove perjury in this case, but don't let that scare you, I am not going to prove it in another case. That man perjured himself and I am prepared to prove it at a later date, but because of the time element and the fact that I couldn't get subpoenas and get people back here I can't disprove that, but make no mistake about it, it is going to be proved later on in front of another jury. That is perjury and don't let perjury defeat criminal justice."

Then follows a closing statement by the prosecution:

"What good does it do for the police officers, * * * to spend their time and effort in ridding this county of these rascals and its rats if they come in here and a jury, because of the unreal dream of an innocent man * * you rid this county of this rascal and his rackets." On a motion to correct the transcript, upon a conflicting showing, the word "rats" was changed to "rackets".

There were several other acts of claimed misconduct set forth in the brief such as permitting defendant to be cross-examined on the contents of a postal card purportedly sent out by defendant's counsel to Oklahoma, offering a reward for the apprehension of defendant because of forfeiture of the bail bond on which the attorney was a bondsman. The court rejected the offer of the card in evidence but its contents were otherwise fairly well disclosed by the cross-examination.

[5] Assuming the truth of the affidavit, it is quite apparent that the main argument might well have led the jurors to believe that the prosecutor had just obtained information from the police department in Arkansas pertaining to the incredibility of Sells' testimony and was accordingly going to prosecute him for perjury before another jury. Although the commission of the offense and the evidence of defendant's presence at the scene of the crime was otherwise sufficiently established, we are convinced that defendant did not have a fair trial as is contemplated by law, and the savings clause of Section 4½ of Article VI of the Constitution is not applicable. Some of the instances, standing alone, probably would not be sufficient to justify interfering with the verdict. However, we believe, as to several of the incidents, such is not the case. The cumulative effect of these errors requires a reversal of the judgment. People v. Kirkes, 39 Cal.2d 719, 726, 249 P.2d 1. Counsel have no right to avail themselves of the opportunity of addressing themselves to the jury to make assertions upon their own knowledge which, if admissible at all, could be so only under the sanction of a witness' oath. That solemn statements of fact, not by way of argument and deduction from the evidence, but as of counsel's own knowledge, are likely to have weight with juries, cannot be doubted. The respectability and standing of counsel only serve to enhance the peril. People v. Pantages, 212 Cal. 237, 247, 297 P. 890.

[6] The giving of a modified instruction to the effect that if the jury believed defendant guilty of the commission of any of three kinds of theft mentioned in the Penal Code, it would not be necessary to state, in the verdict, which of the three forms of theft was committed, provided " * * * it also finds, beyond a reasonable doubt, that defendant was guilty of conspiracy to commit the crime of theft", was proper.

Judgment and order denying a new trial reversed and a new trial ordered.

Petitioners and Appellants,
v.

DEPARTMENT OF ALCOHOLIC BEVERAGE CONTROL and Russell S. Munro, Respondents.
No. 16986.

District Court of Appeal, First District,
Division 1, California.
Sept. 25, 1956.

Rehearing Denied Oct. 25, 1956.
Hearing Denied Nov. 21, 1956.

Proceeding upon review of decision of State Department of Alcoholic Beverage Control, finding on-sale liquor licensees guilty of violating rule prohibiting licensee from permitting waitresses to accept alcoholic drinks purchased for them by customers. The Superior Court, County of Contra Costa, Homer W. Patterson, J., sustained decision and denied writ of mandate for which petition had been made. Petitioners appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Bray, J., held, in part, that under rule which prohibits on-sale liquor licensee from permitting waitress to accept alcoholic drinks purchased for her by customer, and statute which makes violating by licensee or permitting violation of any rule of board adopted pursuant to law, grounds for suspension or revocation of license, violation need not have been "knowingly" permitted and use of word "knowingly" in accusation of violation would be immaterial, and finding that licensee had simply permitted violation would be sufficient.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Intoxicating Liquors ⇨108(5)

In proceeding upon review of decision of State Department of Alcoholic Beverage Control, finding on-sale liquor licensees guilty of violating rule prohibiting licensee from permitting waitress to accept alcoholic drink purchased by customer, evidence sustained finding of board that licensees had permitted waitresses to accept drinks from customers. West's Ann.Bus. & Prof.Code, § 24200(a, b); West's Ann.Const. art. 20, § 22.

2. Trial ⇨397(5)

Findings upon immaterial issues are not required.

3. Licenses ⇨38

Fact that rules and laws providing for violations for which disciplinary action may be taken, in some cases declare that violations must be "knowingly" done, and in other cases omit word "knowingly", indicates that in latter cases there is no requirement that the violations be knowing ones. West's Ann.Bus. & Prof.Code, §§ 24200, 25750; West's Ann.Const. art. 20, § 22.

4. Intoxicating Liquors ⇨106(2), 108(4, 9)

Under rule prohibiting on-sale liquor licensee from permitting waitress to accept alcoholic drinks purchased for her by customer, and statute which makes violating by licensee or permitting violation of any rule of board adopted pursuant to law, grounds for suspension or revocation of license, violation need not have been "knowingly" permitted, and use of word "knowingly", in accusation of violation would be immaterial, and finding that licensee had simply permitted violation would be sufficient. West's Ann.Bus. & Prof.Code, §§ 24200, 25750; West's Ann.Const. art. 20, § 22.

5. Intoxicating Liquors ⇨108(9)

Where Department of Alcoholic Beverage Control expressly found that on-sale liquor licensees had violated rule, prohibiting licensee from permitting waitresses to accept drinks purchased by customers, issued in pursuance of section 22 of article 20 of State Constitution, and of Alcoholic Beverage Control Act, finding was tantamount to finding that conduct of licensees was contrary to public welfare and morals, within that provision of constitution which declares that department has power to deny or revoke license if it determines for good cause that granting or continuance of license would be contrary to public welfare or morals. West's Ann.Bus. & Prof.Code, §§ 24200, 25750; West's Ann.Const. art. 20, § 22.

6. Intoxicating Liquors ⇨116

Fact that rule of Department of Alcoholic Beverage Control prohibiting on-sale liquor licensee from permitting waitresses to accept drinks purchased for them by customers, might be unreasonable as applied to some hypothetical situation, would not be ground for attack upon its constitutionality; licensee would be limited in his attack to application of rule to factual situation before court. West's Ann.Bus. & Prof.Code, §§ 24200, 25750; West's Ann.Const. art. 20, § 22.

7. Intoxicating Liquors ⇨116

Statutes relating to prohibition upon employment of persons to solicit drinks, and providing for revocation of liquor license of licensee who employs any one to solicit or encourage another to buy drinks, do not pre-empt such subject matter nor preclude Department of Alcoholic Beverage Control from adopting, under its broad constitutional and statutory authority, rule prohibiting liquor licensee from permitting waitress to accept drinks purchased by customers.

West's Ann.Bus. & Prof.Code, §§ 24200, 24200.5(b), 25657, 25750; West's Ann.Const. art. 20, § 22.

8. Intoxicating Liquors ⇨116

Under constitutional and statutory authority, State Department of Alcoholic Beverage Control has broad power to determine what shall be contrary to public welfare or morals and to prohibit liquor licensee from doing or permitting on his premises any such acts. West's Ann.Bus. & Prof.Code, §§ 24200, 24200.5(b), 25657, 25750; West's Ann.Const. art. 20, § 22.

9. Intoxicating Liquors ⇨116

Rule of Department of Alcoholic Beverage Control prohibiting on-sale liquor licensee from permitting waitresses to accept alcoholic drinks purchased for them by customers, has reasonable relation to legitimate ends for which department was created, is in harmony with purposes of Alcoholic Beverage Control Act, and is neither arbitrary nor unreasonable in discriminating against female employees, in view of harm that could result from prohibited acts. West's Ann.Bus. & Prof.Code, §§ 23001, 24200, 25655-25657; West's Ann.Const. art. 20, § 22.

10. Intoxicating Liquors ⇨106(2)

Constitutional amendment, which added to existing provision authorizing state liquor board to revoke liquor license if it determines for good cause that granting or continuance of license would be contrary to public welfare or morals, provision "or that a person holding license has violated any law prohibiting conduct involving moral turpitude", does not restrict violation for which license can be revoked, to violation of law, rather than of board rule. West's Ann. Bus. & Prof.Code, § 24200; Const. art. 20, § 22.

11. Intoxicating Liquors ⇨116

Rule of Department of Alcoholic Beverage Control, prohibiting on-sale liquor licensee from permitting waitress to accept alcoholic drinks purchased for her by customer, is constitutional and valid. West's Ann.Bus. & Prof.Code, §§ 23001, 24200, 25655-25657; West's Ann.Const. art. 20, § 22.

12. Intoxicating Liquors ⇨108(5)

Where, in proceeding before State Department of Alcoholic Beverage Control upon accusation that liquor licensee had violated rule by permitting waitresses to accept alcoholic drinks purchased for them by customers, in all instances in which department officers had allegedly purchased drinks for girls, drinks were poured from either whisky or vodka bottles, it would be presumed that bottles contained what they purported to contain, in view of presumption that licensee had obeyed law and had not refilled bottles with different liquor or sold other than drink ordered. West's Ann.Bus. & Prof.Code, §§ 24200, 25176, 25177; West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc., § 1963, subds. 1, 33.

13. Intoxicating Liquors ⇨108(10)

All legitimate and reasonable inferences must be indulged in support of State Liquor Department's findings, in liquor license revocation proceedings. West's Ann.Bus. & Prof.Code, § 24200.

14. Intoxicating Liquors ⇨108(5)

In view of fact that if bartender were to serve soft drinks when alcoholic beverages were ordered, licensee would have violated penal code provision which prohibits sale of article of drink different from one ordered, without informing purchaser of difference, there would be disputable presumption that drinks served were what were ordered, in liquor license revocation proceedings involving violation of rule prohibiting liquor licensee from permitting waitresses to accept alcoholic drinks purchased for them by customers. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 382; West's Ann.Bus. & Prof.Code, §§ 24200, 25176, 25177; West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc., § 1963, subds. 1, 33.

15. Intoxicating Liquors ⇨108(5)

In proceeding before State Department of Alcoholic Beverage Control upon accusation that liquor licensee had violated rule by permitting waitresses to accept alcoholic drinks purchased for them by customers, in view of fact that in all instances in which department officers had purchased drinks for girls, drinks had been poured from either whisky or vodka bottles evidence sustained finding that drinks purchased by state officers for waitresses were alcoholic. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 382; West's Ann.Bus. & Prof.Code, §§ 24200, 25176, 25177; West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc., § 1963, subds. 1, 33.

16. Intoxicating Liquors ⇨108(5)

Where officer of State Department of Alcoholic Beverage Control testified to seizing drinks, pouring them into bottles, sealing bottles and pasting identifying slips on them, and that he then placed them in storage in Sacramento and later delivered them to State Department of Public Health at Berkeley for analysis, sufficient foundation was laid for introduction of bottles into evidence in proceedings before state department upon accusation that liquor licensee had violated rule by permitting waitresses to accept alcoholic drinks purchased for them by customers. West's Ann.Bus. & Prof.Code, § 24200.

17. Intoxicating Liquors ⇨108(5)

Letter, signed by an assistant Public Health Chemist of the Department of Public Health's Food and Drug Laboratory, giving analysis of alcoholic content of contents of bottles, though hearsay, would be admissible in evidence, to supplement other evidence, in proceedings before State Department of Alcoholic Beverage Control upon accusation that liquor licensee had violated rule by permitting waitresses to accept alcoholic drinks purchased for them by customers. West's Ann.Bus. & Prof.Code, § 24200; West's Ann.Gov.Code, § 11513(c).

18. Trial ⇨395(6)

Method of making findings, whereby court referred to every paragraph of petition for writ of mandate and answer thereto, and found that each paragraph was either true or untrue in its allegations, was not improper.

19. Trial ☞392(1)

Failure of court to find specifically on each item of evidence of case, in nature of review of decision of State Department of Alcoholic Beverage Control in liquor license revocation proceedings, was not error in absence of request for such specific findings, where issue was whether evidence supported findings, to effect that licensees had permitted their waitresses to accept drinks purchased by customers, and court additionally found that findings were not only supported by substantial evidence but by weight of evidence and that evidence constituted good cause for revocation of license. West's Ann.Bus. & Prof.Code, § 24200.

20. Trial ☞397(2)

Where, though findings contained the insufficient catch-all finding to effect that all allegations of answer to petition were true except as far as same were inconsistent with findings, other findings were sufficient to support judgment, error was not material.

George C. Carmody, Pittsburg, for appellants.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., Charles A. Barrett, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondents.

BRAY, Justice.

Appellants, owners of an on-sale liquor license at "Murphy's Club," Pittsburg, were accused and found guilty by the State Board of Equalization of violating subdivisions (a) and (b) of section 24200, Business and Professions Code, rule 143 of the board, and article XX, section 22, Constitution, in that they permitted female employees to accept alcoholic beverages purchased on the premises.¹

On a review by the superior court of the proceedings before the board the court found that the decision of the Department of Alcoholic Beverage Control² was supported by the weight of the evidence and denied the writ of mandate petitioned for. The petitioners appeal.

Questions Presented.

1. Do the board findings support the decision? (a) Must a proprietor knowingly permit violations? (b) Did the board find that appellants' actions were contrary to public welfare and morals?

2. Is rule 143 unconstitutional?

3. Was there proof that the drinks were alcoholic?

4. Was the analysis of the contents of certain drinks admissible?

5. Are the trial court's findings sufficient?

Facts.

[1] Four board officers testified that each on two separate occasions respectively purchased drinks at appellants' premises for one or more cocktail waitresses admittedly employed there. There were three separate dates involved, and on two of them appellant Joseph Mercurio was on the premises. If the drinks were alcoholic there is ample evidence in spite of Mercurio's testimony that he had instructed the waitresses not to drink while working and had never seen them doing so, to justify the finding that appellants permitted the waitresses to accept alcoholic beverages from the customers.

1. Board Findings. (a) Knowledge.

[2] The accusation charged appellants with knowingly permitting the waitresses to accept alcoholic beverages. The findings merely found that appellants permitted such to be done, omitting the word "knowingly." Appellants contend that this omission is fatal and that a liquor license may not be revoked unless the owner knowingly permitted the violation charged. As findings upon immaterial issues are not required,

1. They were also charged with the operation of a stud poker game but the hearing officer found in their favor on this charge and it was dismissed.

2. The Board of Equalization after its decision was succeeded by the Department of Alcoholic Beverage Control. For convenience we will refer to the "board's" action.

Renfer v. Skaggs, 96 Cal.App.2d 380, 383, 215 P.2d 487, it becomes necessary to determine whether "knowingly" is a necessary element of "permitting" in this case.

Section 25750, Business and Professions Code, authorized the board to "make and prescribe such reasonable rules as may be necessary or proper to carry out the purposes and intent of Section 22 of Article XX of the Constitution * * *." Pursuant to that authority the board adopted rule 143.³ Section 24200, Business and Professions Code, makes violating by a licensee or permitting the violation of any rule of the board adopted pursuant to section 25750 and other provisions of law, grounds for suspension or revocation of a license.

In neither rule 143 nor section 24200 is there any requirement that the "permitting" be "knowingly" done. In Swegle v. State Board of Equalization, 125 Cal.App.2d 432, 270 P.2d 518, in upholding the revocation of a liquor license on a charge that the owner permitted the premises to be used as a disorderly house, the court held that the permission did not have to be a "knowing" one. The case dealt with section 58 of the then Alcoholic Beverage Control Act, and the court stated that the word "permits" therein included "an unknowing consent" and that a licensee can be held to have permitted acts constituting a violation by a showing that the acts themselves took place. In our case, one of the licensees was present when most of the acts took place. The language of the Swegle case is particularly appropriate here, 125 Cal.App.2d at page 438, 270 P.2d at page 522: "Appellant's agents were always present in the bar. It was said in Mantzoros v. State Board of Equalization, 87 Cal.App.2d 140, 144, 196 P.2d 657, 660, that 'The licensee, if he elects to operate his business through employees must be responsible to the licensing authority for their conduct in the exercise of his license, else we would have the absurd result that liquor could be sold by employees at forbidden hours in licensed premises and the licensees would be immune to disciplinary action by the board. Such a result cannot have been contemplated by the Legislature. Even in the case of criminal statutes vicarious liability for the acts of employees is not unknown.' Therefore, whatever is permitted by appellant's agents must be attributed to her."

[3, 4] Keane v. Reilly, 130 Cal.App.2d 407, 279 P.2d 152, cited by appellants, is not opposed to this rule. There this court held that the alleged violation by the bartender had not been proved. The question of knowledge by the licensee was not involved. Nor is Tatsuko Okuda Endo v. State Board of Equalization, 143 Cal.App.2d 395, 300 P.2d 366, in point. There the court was dealing with section 24200.5 (a), Business and Professions Code, which expressly requires that the licensees "permitting" the illegal sale of narcotics must be "knowingly" done. The very fact that rules and laws providing for violations for which disciplinary action may be taken, provide that some violations must be "knowingly" done and as to others the word "knowingly" is omitted, indicates that in the latter cases there is no requirement that the violations be knowing ones. "Knowingly" not being required in either Rule 143 or section 24200, the use of that word in the accusation was immaterial and is not necessary to be found. The board's finding that appellants permitted the violation was sufficient.

(b) Contrary to Public Welfare and Morals.

[5] The board made no finding in so many words that appellants' acts or the vio-

3. "No on-sale retail licensee shall permit any female employee of such licensee to solicit, in or upon the licensed premises, the purchase or sale of any alcoholic beverage, any part of which is for, or intended for, the consumption or use of such female employee, or to permit any female employee of such licensee to accept, in or upon the licensed premises, any alcoholic beverage which has been purchased or sold there, any part of which beverage is for, or intended for, the consumption or use of any female employee."

lations were contrary to public welfare and morals.⁴ The board found that appellants "violated Rule 143 issued in pursuance of Section 22 of Article XX of the Constitution of California and of the Alcoholic Beverage Control Act."⁵ This, in effect, is a finding that the acts of appellants were contrary to public welfare and morals because by specifically adopting rule 143, the board was articulating the acts specified therein as being ones which the board felt were contrary to public welfare and morals. The rule was adopted to enable the board to exercise the powers conferred upon it by the Constitution. Moreover, it requires no argument to prove that permitting women employees of an on-sale liquor premises to accept alcoholic drinks purchased by patrons is contrary to the public welfare and morals.

2. Constitutionality of Rule 143.

[6] Appellants attack its constitutionality on the ground that the rule is too broad, covering, as they claim, a situation where, the premises being closed, a waitress accepts a drink from the licensee, or the waitresses at such time buy each other drinks. They contend that in considering the reasonableness of a statute, the manner in which it might be construed is to be considered, not merely the way it is construed. (Apparently appellants are contending that if one can conjure up some hypothetical situation as to which the rule might be unreasonable, the rule must be held unconstitutional in every case of facts actually before the court. They cite no authority to this effect.) That is not the rule. As said in Max Factor & Co. v. Kunsman, 5 Cal.2d 446, 468, 55 P.2d 177, 187: "Respondent presents several hypothetical situations under which enforcement of the act would be inequitable or difficult, or, perhaps, even unconstitutional. It is elementary, of course, that a statute may be invalid as applied to one set of facts, yet valid as applied to another. Dahnke-Walker Milling Co. v. Bondurant, 257 U.S. 282, 42 S.Ct. 106, 66 L.Ed. 239. The situations conjured up by respondent are not here involved, and respondent is limited in his attack to the application of the statute to the factual situation now before the court." We fail to see, and counsel has not pointed out, any respect in which rule 143 as applied to the facts of this case is either unreasonable or arbitrary. On the contrary, on the face of it, it is a very reasonable and necessary rule if taverns and the like are to be decently conducted.

[7,8] Appellants further contend that because the Legislature enacted sections 25657 and 24200.5(b), Business and Professions Code, it covered the field and that the board, even under the powers granted by section 22 of article XX, Constitution, and by section 25750, Business and Professions Code, could not prohibit actions of the licensee not prohibited by those sections. Section 25657 prohibits the employment or paying of hostesses or entertainers to procure or encourage the purchase of alcoholic beverages on the licensed premises or to employ or permit anyone to loiter in or about the premises to beg or solicit anyone to purchase any alcoholic beverage for the solicitor. The section was probably adopted to meet the B-girl situation. Section 24200.5(b), Business and Professions Code, provides for revocation if licensee has employed anyone to solicit or encourage others to buy drinks. We find nothing in the law limiting the board's powers of termination of a license to the precise statutory grounds. It is clear from an examination of the Constitution and of section 25750 that the board has the broad power to determine what shall be "contrary to public welfare or morals" and to prohibit a licensee from doing or permitting on his premises any such acts.

4. Article XX, section 22, of the Constitution provided that the board "shall have the power * * * to deny or revoke any specific liquor license if it shall determine for good cause that the granting or continuance of such license would be contrary to public welfare or morals."

5. Appellants contend that the board actually found that they did not violate the Constitution section. However, a reading of the findings clearly shows that such finding dealt only with the charge of operating a stud poker game.

[9] The rule has a reasonable relation to the legitimate ends for which the board was created; i. e., to have "exclusive power" to deny or revoke liquor licenses. It is in harmony with the purposes of the Alcoholic Beverage Control Act as declared by Business and Professions Code section 23001, "for the protection of the safety, welfare, health, peace, and morals of the people of the State, to eliminate the evils of * * * unlawful * * * selling, and disposing of alcoholic beverages, and to promote temperance in the use and consumption of alcoholic beverages." As to the question of arbitrariness of the rule insofar as it discriminates against female employees, the following statement in People v. Jemnez, 1942, 49 Cal.App.2d Supp. 739, 743, 121 P.2d 543, 544, is persuasive: "The argument that the section forbidding women employees to mix drinks abridges the privileges and immunities of citizens and denies equal protection of the laws to those whose employment is prohibited, overlooks two fundamental propositions: (1) that the business here involved is one of privilege and not of right; and (2) that the classification of women with respect to mixing drinks is reasonable. When these two propositions are established * * * the force of the argument vanishes."

The classification in rule 143 is reasonable in view of the harms that can result from the acts prohibited therein. In California females have been discriminated against in other situations relating to liquor: Ex parte Hayes, 1893, 98 Cal. 555, 33 P. 337, 20 L.R.A. 701 prohibited sale of liquor in dance halls and theatres where women are to be present; Foster v. Board of Police Commissioners, 102 Cal. 483, 37 P. 763, prohibited saloon license if females are employed; People v. King, 115 Cal.App.2d Supp. 875, 252 P.2d 78, municipal ordinance prohibited female employee in an on-sale liquor establishment from drinking, dancing or mingling with patrons. See also Alcoholic Beverage Control Act §§ 25655, 25656, 25657.

[10] In 1954 article XX, section 22, was amended by adding to the then provision authorizing the board to revoke a license "if it shall determine for good cause that the granting or continuance of such license would be contrary to public welfare or morals," the following: "or that a person * * holding a license has violated any law prohibiting conduct involving moral turpitude." This amendment, argue appellants, indicates that the only violation for which a license could be revoked contemplated by the Constitution, is a violation of a law and not of a board rule. We fail to see the logic in this contention. It is obvious that, as amended, the Constitution provides for revocation if the continuance of the license would be contrary to public welfare or morals, which includes violations of board rules as well as laws dealing with liquor establishments, and for violations of any laws prohibiting conduct involving moral turpitude. The latter would include laws not expressly dealing with liquor establishments. That the board is not restricted as contended, see Moore v. State Board of Equalization, 76 Cal.App.2d 758, 765, 174 P.2d 323.

[11] Rule 143 is constitutional and valid.
3. Alcoholic Drinks.

Appellants contend that the evidence fails to show that the drinks consumed by the waitresses were alcoholic. While none of the officers tasted the drinks consumed by the girls, in each case an alcoholic drink (whiskey or vodka) was ordered either by the girl herself or by the officer, and a fifty cent charge was made for each drink. In some instances the girl's drink was poured out of the same bottle as the officer's drink. In other instances, the officer noted that the bottle from which the girl's drink was poured had on it a whiskey brand label, or that the drinks were poured from what appeared to be whiskey or vodka bottles. In some instances the officer testified that the girl got an alcoholic drink, for example, "She got a whiskey highball." In other instances, the testimony was that the drink was poured from a bottle having a federal strip stamp on it and appeared to be whiskey or vodka (whichever was ordered). In one instance the officer checked all the bottles "in the well" from one of which the girl's drink was poured and found that they all contained alcohol.

[12-15] Of course, in the instances where the officer's and the girl's drinks were poured out of the same bottle, and the officer testified that the liquor was whiskey, no question could possibly arise that a finding that the girl's drink was whiskey is not supported. In all instances the drinks were poured from either whiskey or vodka bottles. This raises a presumption that the bottles contained what they purported to contain. Sections 25176 and 25177, Business and Professions Code, prohibit refilling a distilled spirits bottle or selling such spirits from a refilled bottle. There is a presumption that the law has been obeyed, Code Civ.Proc. § 1963, subd. 33, and that the person is innocent of crime or wrong. Code Civ.Proc. § 1963, subd. 1. "In a liquor case, the presumption that liquor is served when requested is not overcome by the presumption of innocence." Griswold v. Department of Alcoholic Beverage Control, 141 Cal.App.2d 807, 297 P.2d 762, 764.⁶ If the bartender were to serve soft drinks when alcoholic beverages were called for, then there would be a violation of section 382, Penal Code, which prohibits the sale of any article of drink, different from the one called for, without informing the purchaser of the difference. Thus, there is a disputable presumption that the drinks served were what were ordered. See Griswold v. Department of Alcoholic Beverage Control, supra, 141 Cal.App.2d 807, 297 P.2d 762. It is interesting to note that there is no denial in the evidence that the drinks served the girls were alcoholic. Moreover,

6. All legitimate and reasonable inferences must be indulged in support of the board's findings. Marcucci v. Board of Equaliza- appellant Joseph Mercurio testified that when he found out through this accusation that these girls had been drinking on the job, he fired them. He apparently fired the bartender for the same reason. The evidence amply supports the finding on this subject.

4. Analysis of Drinks.

[16] Bottles containing three of the drinks sold waitresses were admitted in evidence over appellants' objections that the foundation was not laid. Officer Cowan testified to seizing the drinks, pouring them into bottles, sealing the bottles and pasting identifying slips on them. He then placed them in storage in Sacramento and later delivered them to the State Department of Public Health at Berkeley for analysis. The foundation was sufficiently laid.

[17] Among the exhibits is the board's exhibit 4, which is a letter signed by an assistant Public Health Chemist of the Department of Public Health's Food and Drug Laboratory, and giving the analysis as to alcoholic content of the contents of the bottles above mentioned. We fail to find in the reporter's transcript any reference to this letter being offered or received in evidence. Apparently it was considered by the hearing officer, as it bears an exhibit number. Although hearsay it could have been admitted in evidence under the rule set forth in Government Code section 11513(c): "Hearsay evidence may be used for the purpose of supplementing or explaining any direct evidence but shall not be sufficient in itself to support a finding unless it would be admissible over objection in civil actions." The letter could have been used to supplement the other evidence in the case. Disregarding it entirely, there is still ample evidence to support the board's findings.

5. Trial Court's Findings.

[18] The court referred to every paragraph of the petition for writ of mandate tion, 138 Cal.App.2d 605, 608, 292 P.2d 264.

and the answer thereto, and found that each paragraph was either true or untrue in its allegations. Appellants challenge this method. They cite, however, no authority holding that this method is improper. "Usually the court adopted separate findings with respect to designated paragraphs of each particular count of the amended complaint declaring that all of the allegations therein contained 'are true'. In a similar manner the court also referred to designated paragraphs of the answer, finding that the statements therein contained which are in conflict with the allegations of the complaint 'are untrue'. This form of adopting general findings has been held to be sufficient. [Citations.]" Vaughan v. Roberts, 45 Cal. App.2d 246, 258, 113 P.2d 884, 892; see also Kennedy & Shaw Lumber Co. v. S. S. Const. Co., 123 Cal. 584, 56 P. 457, and Biurun v. Elizalde, 75 Cal.App. 44, 55, 242 P. 109.

[19, 20] They further contend that the court should have found specifically on each item of evidence in the case. For example, was the drink bought for girl "A" by officer "B" on July 22nd alcoholic? No request for such detailed findings was made. The pleadings did not raise an issue as to each of the eight instances in which an officer testified that he purchased a waitress a drink. The issue was as to whether the evidence supported the findings to the effect that appellants permitted their waitresses to accept alcoholic beverages purchased on the premises. The court in addition to finding that each allegation of the petition and the answer thereto was either true or untrue, specifically found that the findings of the board were not only supported by substantial evidence but by the weight of the evidence, and that the evidence constituted good cause for revocation of the license.⁷ We know of no requirement that in the absence of a request for a finding on a specific bit of evidence, the court is required to make any further findings than those made here.

The judgment is affirmed.

CONTRACTORS SAFETY ASSOCIATION, a California corporation, Plaintiff and Appellant,

v.

CALIFORNIA COMPENSATION INSURANCE COMPANY, a corporation, Defendant and Respondent.*

Civ. 21487.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 3, California.

Sept. 20, 1956.

Hearing Granted Nov. 14, 1956.

Association of insureds brought action against insurer to recover dividends under policies of workmen's compensation, on ground that insurer had agreed to payment of dividends from surplus premiums. The Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Arthur Crum, J., entered judgment adverse to the association, and the association appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Shinn, P. J., held that first cause of action of complaint alleging that insurer offered in its advertising and literature to pay dividends to insureds according to certain schedule calculated on ratio of losses to premiums, and that such offer was accepted by the insureds, not only in writing, but by insuring with insurer in reliance on such offer, and that before insurer was held in Krug v. F. A. Lux Brewing Co., 129 Cal. 322, 61 P. 1125, to be insufficient. Eliminating it entirely, the other findings are sufficient to support the judgment.

* Opinion vacated 307 P.2d 626.

7. Additionally, the findings contain a catch-all to the effect that all the allegations of the answer to the petition are true except as far as the same are inconsistent with the findings. This type of finding ance was taken out insurer informed association by letter that insurer's board of directors had authorized an increase of five percent of schedule dividends, alleged a cause of action.

Judgment reversed.

1. Pleading ⇨428(4)

An oral motion to exclude evidence is tantamount to a general demurrer.

2. Appeal and Error ⇨863

Where defendant interposed an oral motion to exclude evidence, which was tantamount to a general demurrer, and the motion was sustained by the superior court, the review by the District Court of Appeal on appeal by plaintiff was limited to sole question whether, under facts pleaded, the complaint stated the substance of a cause of action on any theory.

3. Pleading ⇨34(1)

A complaint should be given a liberal construction. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc., § 452.

4. Workmen's Compensation ⇨1063

In action against insurer by association of insureds to recover dividends under policies of workmen's compensation insurance, first cause of action of complaint alleging that insurer offered in its advertising and literature to pay dividends to insureds according to certain schedule calculated on ratio of losses to premiums, and that such offer was accepted by the insureds, not only in writing, but by insuring with insurer in reliance on such offer, and that before insurance was taken out insurer informed association by letter that insurer's board of directors had authorized an increase of five per cent of scheduled dividends, alleged a cause of action. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc., § 452; West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 1649; West's Ann.Insurance Code, §§ 751, 11738.

5. Insurance ⇨59

If interpretation by association of insureds of advertising and literature of insurer as agreeing to pay dividends to insureds was a reasonable interpretation, it should prevail over an intention on part of insurer, not expressed in the writings, that insurer might or might not pay dividends in accordance with schedule.

6. Contracts ⇨155

If there is uncertainty in the language of a contract, it should be interpreted most strongly against one who caused uncertainty to exist. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 1653.

7. Workmen's Compensation ⇨1063

Alleged contract by insurer to pay dividends to insureds securing workmen's compensation insurance from insurer was not invalid, since the law permits refunds to holders of workmen's compensation policies in the nature of dividends. West's Ann. Insurance Code, § 11738.

8. Evidence ⇨441(1)

General rule that all negotiations, by way of proposals and arrangements made or entered into in contemplation of a written agreement relating to the subject of the negotiations, are deemed to be merged in the agreement, may be applicable to contracts of insurance, but it has no application to engagements entered into with respect to a subject matter which is not expected to be and is not within scope of written agreement subsequently executed.

9. Evidence ⇨442(1)

Rule that when parties have not incorporated into an instrument all of the terms of their contracts, evidence is admissible to prove the existence of a separate oral agreement as to any matter on which the document is silent, and which is not inconsistent with its terms, is applicable to insurance policies.

10. Evidence ⇨442(1)

Where insurer by advertising and literature allegedly represented to prospective insureds that insurer would pay dividends on workmen's compensation insurance, but no such agreement was incorporated in policies of workmen's compensation thereafter issued, rule that when parties have not incorporated into an instrument all of the terms of their contract, evidence is admissible to prove existence of a separate oral agreement as to any matter on which the document is silent, and which is not inconsistent with its terms, was applicable.

11. Pleading ⚡246(2)

In action by association of insureds against insurer to recover dividends under workmen's compensation policies, wherein insurer objected that it did not appear that association had capacity to sue on behalf of the insureds, association should have been permitted to amend complaint to allege that policies of insureds were to be combined for purposes of dividend computation, and that it was agreed that any dividend should be paid by insurer in one check issued to the association.

12. Dismissal and Nonsuit ⚡56

The proper procedure where all necessary parties have not been joined is to bring in all necessary parties and not to dismiss the action because they are not present. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc., § 389.

13. Parties ⚡80(1), 84(1)

Mere uncertainty whether new parties should be brought in did not warrant a summary disposition of the cause without trial on the merits. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc., § 389.

14. Fraud ⚡42

In action by association of insureds against insurer to recover punitive damages because of alleged fraud on part of insurer in failing to pay dividends under policies of workmen's compensation insurance as allegedly promised, complaint, which did not allege that promise was made by insurer without intention to perform it, failed to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action for fraud.

15. Workmen's Compensation ⚡1063

In action by association of insureds against insurer to recover dividends under policies of workmen's compensation, on ground that insurer agreed to pay dividends out of surplus accumulated from premiums on policies of workmen's compensation, complaint alleging that insurer was engaged in business of issuing contracts of workmen's compensation and employer's liability insurance and that insurer had an earned surplus in excess of $850,000, out of which dividends due insureds could lawfully be paid, was not insufficient on ground that complaint did not allege that surplus of $850,000 came from premiums on workmen's compensation policy. West's Ann.Insurance Code, § 11738.

[1,2] The present action came on for trial on plaintiff's complaint, copiously amended, to be referred to as the complaint. Defendant interposed an oral "demurrer to the introduction of any evidence," which was sustained by the court. Leave to amend further was denied, and plaintiff appeals from the ensuing judgment. Inasmuch as an oral motion to exclude evidence is tantamount to a general demurrer, our review of the judgment is limited to the sole question whether, under the facts pleaded, the complaint states the substance of a cause of action on any theory. Bice v. Stevens, 136 Cal.App.2d 368, 289 P.2d 95; Miller v. McLaglen, 82 Cal.App.2d 219, 186 P.2d 48 and cases therein collected.

The complaint is in three counts, and in view of the rather evasive manner of pleading adopted by plaintiff, it will be necessary to set forth the allegations at some length.

Count I is as follows: Defendant is engaged in the business of issuing contracts of workmen's compensation and employer's liability insurance. Plaintiff is a non-profit corporation and (we infer) an association of employers. During 1950, defendant "offered to the public generally by means of form letters and other written advertising material, that any group insureds securing their workmen's compensation insurance through defendant would receive dividends in the event that the combined loss experience under all policies issued to members of any group for the insured period should be less than 65% of the total premiums paid by the group as a whole for that period, provided that defendant had an earned surplus sufficient to pay such dividends." (A schedule of dividends showing the percentage of paid premiums refundable as dividends for groups of insureds whose total combined premiums were in excess of $25,000 per year is next pleaded in full.) It is alleged that defendant "offered and advertised" dividends as stated in the schedule. Plaintiff received defendant's "form letters and advertising material" and relied thereon in its subsequent dealings with defendant. On August 25, 1950, defendant wrote plaintiff to the effect that defendant's board of directors had authorized an increase of 5 per cent in its schedule of dividends payable to any groups of workmen's compensation insureds whose percentage loss ratio for the insured period was under 50%. As "the group of insureds constituting the plaintiff association" had been insured for workmen's compensation by defendant since October 1, 1948, defendant knew that its letter of August 25, 1950 would be interpreted by plaintiff as an offer to provide such insurance with dividend benefits of 5% in addition to those listed in the above-mentioned schedule, and the letter was so interpreted by plaintiff.

During late August 1950, "plaintiff, both orally and in writing, informed defendant that plaintiff accepted defendant's offer to insure plaintiff against workmen's compensation liability on the terms stated above; * * * on or about October 11, 1950, defendant issued its standard workmen's compensation and employer's liability policy of insurance to plaintiff covering the period of October 1, 1950 to October 1, 1951, and issued individual policies to the members of plaintiff association indicating by endorsement on each of said policies that they were issued as a part of a group plan of insurance." The premium paid to defendant "by the insureds" for the year beginning October 1, 1950 totaled $387,003. Between October 1, 1950 and about August 1, 1952, when plaintiff's dividend was computed, the actual losses paid by defendant on account of workmen's compensation insurance "for plaintiff's members" for the year beginning October 1, 1950 came to about $75,000. Prior to the computation of plaintiff's dividend, defendant established a reserve of about $111,000 to provide for unsettled claims with respect to workmen's compensation insurance for the year beginning October 1, 1950. According to the above-mentioned schedule of dividends, the amount of paid premiums which should have been refunded to plaintiff was $77,400, or 20% of such premiums. Defendant arbitrarily and without plaintiff's consent reduced its dividend to one-fourth of the scheduled rate, and tendered plaintiff three checks totaling $13,959, in full settlement of dividend rights for the year beginning October 1, 1950. The parties later agreed that plaintiff might cash those checks without prejudice to plaintiff's claim for additional dividends for the year in question. There follows an allegation that at all times from October 1, 1950 to date, defendant had an earned surplus of over $850,000 from which dividends due plaintiff could lawfully be paid.

Count II is a common count for money had and received, alleging that within two years last past defendant became indebted to plaintiff in the amount of $77,400, of which only $13,959 had been paid, leaving a balance due of $63,441.

Count III repeats the allegations contained in Count I. It alleges that defendant made oral and written representations to plaintiff prior to October 1, 1950, to the effect that defendant would pay dividends to plaintiff according to the above-mentioned schedule and that defendant's board of directors had authorized the 5 per cent increase in its dividend schedule. There follow allegations that those representations were made to plaintiff with the intention that plaintiff rely on them and be induced thereby to take out workmen's compensation insurance with defendant, that plaintiff believed the representations to be true, relied on them and was, in fact, induced thereby to accept defendant's offer to insure plaintiff. Plaintiff also alleges that before defendant's representations were made to plaintiff, defendant's board of directors adopted a resolution providing that no dividend under participating workmen's compensation insurance policies (such as plaintiff's policy) would be due, owing or payable unless and until the board of directors specifically authorized the payment of dividends on policies issued in a particular month of a particular year. This resolution was allegedly adopted in order to give defendant technical grounds on which to justify "arbitrary and discriminatory dividend action"; plaintiff had no knowledge of it; its existence was fraudulently concealed from plaintiff because defendant knew plaintiff would not have purchased insurance from defendant had plaintiff known of the resolution. There follow allegations that because plaintiff discontinued doing business with defendant on August 1, 1951 and placed its insurance with one of defendant's competitors, defendant has used every pretext possible to deprive plaintiff of its dividend. Plaintiff also alleges intentional discrimination against it in that other employers' groups insured with defendant under the same circumstances received dividends computed on a substantially higher basis than the basis on which plaintiff's dividend was computed. Because of this allegedly malicious and oppressive conduct on the part of defendant, plaintiff seeks $50,000 punitive damages in addition to the recovery sought under Counts I and II.

[3] The complaint should be given a liberal construction. Code Civ.Proc. § 452; Speegle v. Board of Fire Underwriters, 29 Cal.2d 34, 172 P.2d 867; County of Los Angeles v. Security First Nat. Bank, 84 Cal. App.2d 575, 191 P.2d 78; Ryan v. Jacques, 103 Cal. 280, 37 P. 186; Hunter v. Freeman, 105 Cal.App.2d 129, 133, 233 P.2d 65.

[4] Although the complaint leaves much to be desired as a clear and concise statement of the facts constituting the cause of action and is subject to criticism for uncertainty, we are of the opinion that the first cause of action is sufficient, as against defendant's motion.

It appears from the cases, and, we believe, is commonly known, that it is the practice of insurance companies to issue literature and other advertising, stating the returns and advantages a policyholder may expect to receive. When stated as estimates they presumably are based on past experience, which, indeed, is the foundation upon which the business of insurance is built. The general rule with respect to such representations and statements made by an insurer in the solicitation of business is stated in 44 C.J.S., Insurance, § 299a, p. 1202, as follows: "Representations made in a prospectus, circular, or other papers issued by insurer or its agent are generally construed not to be a part of the contract evidenced by a policy, especially where the prospectus or paper, containing the representations is not referred to, or attached to, the policy, or where, although attached, there is no reference in either the policy or the paper to the other * * *." See also 29 Am.Jur. 195; 13 Appleton on Insurance Law and Practice 281-6, § 7534; Blos v. Bankers Life Co., 133 Cal.App.2d 147, 283 P.2d 744; Toth v. Metropolitan Life Ins. Co., 123 Cal.App. 185, 188, 11 P.2d 94; American Can Co. v. Agricultural Ins. Co., 12 Cal.App. 133, 135, 106 P. 720; Herman v. Mutual Life Ins. Co. of New York, 3 Cir., 108 F.2d 678, 127 A.L.R. 1458.

The rule has been applied in many cases. See 29 Am.Jur. 195; 44 C.J.S., Insurance, § 299, p. 1202; Maddox v. Mutual Life Ins. Co., 193 Ky. 38, 234 S.W. 949, 22 A.L.R. 1284; 127 A.L.R. 1464. The question has arisen frequently because the prospective investor must depend upon statements of the company for information concerning the cost of insurance and the returns to be expected, whether they be of sums fixed and certain, or only additional benefits which, although they may be received by the policyholder, the company does not undertake to pay as a part of the insurance contract or by separate agreement. The question whether a statement of the company amounts to an offer susceptible of acceptance or a mere prediction or estimate can be answered only from the facts of the individual case. A typical case is Blos v. Bankers Life Co., supra, 133 Cal.App.2d 147, 283 P.2d 744, 745, which is relied upon by defendant. Blos, one of a group of insureds, was relying upon a bulletin of defendant with respect to the conditions or time when a policy would become effective, which stated "This bulletin is merely a description of benefits provided and is not a contract." Blos contended that he became insured when, according to the bulletin, the policy became effective. The policy fixed a later date and this was held to be controlling, although it excluded Blos from coverage. Defendant may upon a trial develop facts similar to those in Blos' case but they are not to be found in the allegations of the complaint.

Neither party pleaded the terms of the policy. So far as the pleadings disclose, defendant's obligations under its policy were only those which pertained to liability under workmen's compensation laws. It therefore does not appear from the pleadings that the policy purported to state defendant's obligation with respect to dividends, although as we shall presently point out, the company recognized that there was some obligation to pay them. The action purports to be upon a collateral agreement entered into by defendant and plaintiff, as agent for its members. Defendant's offer to pay dividends is alleged to have been an inducement to plaintiff to take out insurance with defendant and it is alleged that plaintiff acted in reliance upon that offer. It is not alleged that the offer was conditional, except that the dividends were to be paid out of surplus and it was sufficiently alleged that a surplus existed which was applicable to the payment of the dividends that might become due. It is not alleged that the offer of defendant was couched in terms which reserved to defendant the discretion to pay or withhold payment of dividends, nor that it was a mere representation or prediction that dividends might be paid. The offer as alleged in the complaint was to pay dividends according to a certain schedule calculated upon the ratio of losses to premiums and the allegation of the complaint is that it was accepted unconditionally, not only in writing but by insuring with defendant in reliance upon the offer. Moreover, it was alleged that before the insurance was taken out defendant informed plaintiff by letter that defendant's board of directors had authorized an increase of 5 per cent of the scheduled dividends and "that defendant knew * * * that said letter of August 25, 1950, would be interpreted by plaintiff as an offer by defendant to provide workmen's compensation insurance with dividend benefits of 5% in addition to the percentages listed in the schedule set forth in paragraph III herein, provided that plaintiff's percentage loss ratio would be under 60%; that said letter was so interpreted by plaintiff."

It is sufficiently alleged that plaintiff understood that defendant's "form letters and other written advertising material" and its letter last referred to constituted an offer to pay dividends according to the schedule and that defendant had knowledge of plaintiff's understanding and reliance thereon. Findings to this effect would have been within the scope of the complaint.

Defendant merely asserts that it issued only "advertising letters and circulars," which, it says, "cannot be the basis of a claim against an insurance company." Since the letters and circulars were not copied and the complaint pleaded only their legal effect, there is nothing in the record to support this argument. Even if it be assumed that defendant intended its representations to be understood as holding out only a hope of dividends, that intention would not be controlling if plaintiff reasonably interpreted them as a promise. It will be for the trial court to determine whether plaintiff reasonably gave them that interpretation and whether defendant believed they would be so interpreted. The allegations of the complaint bring into play the rule of section 1649 Civil Code: "If the terms of a promise are in any respect ambiguous or uncertain, it must be interpreted in the sense in which the promisor believed, at the time of making it, that the promisee understood it." See Granger v. New Jersey Ins. Co., 108 Cal.App. 290, 291 P. 698.

[5] If plaintiff's interpretation was a reasonable one, it should prevail over an intention on the part of defendant, not expressed in the writings, that it might or might not pay dividends in accordance with the schedule. The Restatement, Contracts, Section 71, Comment (a), states the rule as follows: "If the manifestations of intention of either party are uncertain or ambiguous, and he has no reason to know that they may bear a different meaning to the other party from that which he himself attaches to them, his manifestations are operative in the formation of a contract only in the event that the other party attaches to them the same meaning."

[6] Another rule is that if there is uncertainty in the language of a contract it should be interpreted most strongly against the party who caused the uncertainty to exist. Civ. Code, § 1653.

These canons of interpretation aid in construing the allegations of the complaint. They will also assist the trial court in determining from the evidence whether defendant's advertising and other efforts to sell its policies would reasonably appear to its prospects as a promise of tangible benefits or only as a mirage.

[7] We know of no reason why a contract, such as the one alleged, if valid, may not be enforced. The contract as alleged is not invalid. The law permits refunds to holders of workmen's compensation policies in the nature of dividends. Ins.Code § 11738;¹ State Compensation Ins. Fund v. Industrial Acc. Comm., 56 Cal.App.2d 443, 132 P.2d 890. If there was any ground of illegality not appearing on the face of the complaint it was a matter of defense. Defendant does not question the validity of promises to pay dividends under participating policies but contends that under section 751² of the Insurance Code such promises are unlawful and void unless provided for in the policy. But section 11738 of the Insurance Code governs with respect to participating workmen's compensation policies and it contains no such provision. And defendant did pay dividends.

[8-10] The general rule that all negotiations by way of proposals and arrangements made or entered into in contemplation of a written agreement relating to the subject of the negotiations are deemed to be merged in the agreement is frequently applied to contracts of insurance (see cases cited above), but it has no application to engagements entered into with respect to subject matter which is not expected to be and is not within the scope of the written agreement that is subsequently executed. "It has long been the rule that when the parties have not incorporated into an instrument all of the terms of their contract, evidence is admissible to prove the existence of a separate oral agreement as to any matter on which the document is silent and which is not inconsistent with its terms. [Citing cases.]” American Ind. Sales Corp. v. Airscope, Inc., 44 Cal.2d 393, 397, 282 P.2d 504, 507. The rule is applicable to insurance policies as well as to other contracts unless such collateral contracts of insurance are prohibited by statute. We are of the opinion that the contract pleaded falls within the rule respecting separate, independent agreements.

1. "Participating policies: Right of insurer to issue: Refunds to be made from surplus. Nothing in this article shall affect the right of any insurer to issue compensation participating policies. A refund by reason of a participating provision in a compensation policy shall not be made to policyholders by any insurer except from surplus accumulated from premiums on workmen's compensation policies issued pursuant to laws of this State governing workmen's compensation insurance."

2. "Consideration not specified in policy or application. An insurer, or an insurance agent, broker, or solicitor, personally or otherwise, shall not offer or pay, directly or indirectly, as an inducement to enter into an insurance contract, any valuable consideration which is not clearly specified, promised or provided for in the policy, or application for the insurance, and any such consideration not appearing in the policy is an unlawful rebate."

It is unfortunate that the trial court did not have before it the written contract of the parties. It may be that one of the grounds for the court’s ruling was the supposition that the policy had to contain the entire agreement of the parties with respect to the payment of dividends and that it was not alleged that it contained any promise to pay them. This is one of the arguments of defendant on the appeal. It is an untenable argument. The complaint was silent as to the terms of the policy, but if it was deemed uncertain in this respect it could have been amended by incorporating the policy. There was no demurrer to the complaint and if it is uncertain because of the omission to plead the policy defendant cannot justify the judgment upon that ground. Uncertainty would not be a good reason for excluding evidence, nor would any defect be a sufficient reason unless it clearly appeared that the complaint could not be amended to cure the defect. We must look to the substance of the cause of action attempted to be stated. We are of the opinion that if plaintiff should succeed in proving the allegations of its complaint it would have established a valid agreement for the payment of dividends in excess of those already paid.

[11-13] Defendant argues that it does not appear that plaintiff has capacity to sue on behalf of its several members who were insured, although they would be the ones entitled to the dividends. The complaint was subject to this objection, but plaintiff sought leave to amend by alleging that defendant executed a rider which was attached to plaintiff’s policy and which read as follows: “It is understood and agreed that the earned premium and loss experience policy [sic] to which this endorsement is attached shall be combined for the purposes of dividend computation with all policies bearing this endorsement issued to members of the Contractors Safety Association, Inc.; it is further understood and agreed that any dividend occurring [sic] under the policy is to be paid by the California Compensation Insurance Company in one check issued to the Contractors Safety Association, Inc., and the endorsement of the Contractors Safety Association, Inc. upon such check shall be as to each member insured a full and complete relief [sic] of the company’s obligation to such insured for the insured’s share of the dividend.” Defendant objected to the amendment upon the ground that plaintiff had not pleaded the entire policy and should not be allowed to plead only a part of it. The objection was sustained. It was not a good objection. Plaintiff was suing on defendant’s alleged special contract to pay dividends. The proposed writing related only to that agreement and since the writing purported to make plaintiff payee of the dividends it was, so far as alleged in the complaint, collateral to the insurance obligations, whether it was attached to or separate from the policy. The amendment should have been allowed and we must give effect to it as if it had been allowed. It would have obviated the objection of defendant that plaintiff had no authority to sue for the dividends since it would have established a right in plaintiff to collect and receive as the agent of its members, any and all sums that might become payable to them as dividends. As between plaintiff and defendant, plaintiff was a trustee for its members to whom the dividends might become due and as such it would have the right to enforce payment by suit. Moreover the complaint alleged and the answer admitted that defendant did pay to plaintiff, as dividends, the sum of $13,939.31.—If, notwithstanding its agreement to pay the dividends to plaintiff, defendant was in doubt as to plaintiff’s authority to represent its members in the matter and whether a judgment would be binding upon them, the point could have been raised on demurrer, or the court could have ordered that they be brought in as parties to the action. Code Civ.Proc. § 389. The proper procedure is to bring in all necessary parties, not to dismiss the action because they are not present. Toomey v. Toomey, 13 Cal.2d 317, 89 P.2d 634; De Olazabal v. Mix, 24 Cal. App.2d 258, 74 P.2d 787. Moreover, mere uncertainty whether new parties should be brought in, which is the present case, did not warrant a summary disposition of the cause without a trial on the merits. It was error to sustain defendant's motion as to the first cause of action.

We are of the opinion that the second cause of action stated sufficient facts inasmuch as the allegation of the receipt of money by defendant for plaintiff's use and benefit is predicated upon the facts alleged in the first cause of action.

[14] The third cause of action may be disposed of summarily. It does not state sufficient facts to constitute a cause of action for fraud. It alleges the promise to pay dividends but does not allege that the promise was made without intention to perform it. It alleges that defendant's directors adopted a resolution that dividends would only be paid as ordered by the board but it does not allege that in adopting the resolution, or otherwise, defendant had an intention not to pay the dividends that might be earned. Since defendant did pay dividends in a lesser sum than was claimed by plaintiff, the facts alleged do not show deceit or the making of false promises but merely a disagreement as to the amount of dividends that were due.

[15] Defendant argues further that dividends are payable only out of "surplus accumulated from premiums on workmen's compensation policies issued pursuant to laws of this State governing workmen's compensation insurance", section 11738, Insurance Code, and that the complaint did not allege that the alleged surplus of $850,000 came from that source. It is alleged that defendant is engaged "in the business of issuing contracts of workmen's compensation and employer's liability insurance, etc." and that defendant had "an earned surplus" in excess of $850,000 out of which the dividends due plaintiff could lawfully be paid. This was sufficient as against defendant's motion.

The judgment is reversed.

Civ. 21615.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 2, California.

Sept. 25, 1956.

Suit for declaratory and injunctive relief by serviceman against county and county tax collector under Soldiers' and Sailors' Civil Relief Act of 1940. The Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Arnold Praeger, J., granted temporary injunction and defendants appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Ashburn, J., held that in view of provision of federal statute that any part of period of military service which occurs after October 6, 1942, shall not be included in computing period of redemption of realty sold or forfeited to enforce any obligation, tax, or assessment, under California statutes affording indefinite right to redeem after deed to state and prior to disposal of property by state, county tax collector could not order sale of property, right of redemption to which was held by serviceman who had acquired such right prior to entry into service in 1942.

Order affirmed.

1. Taxation ⇨615

Matter of resale by state of land deeded to state for nonpayment of taxes is governed by the statute in effect at that time. West's Ann.Rev. & Tax.Code, § 3707.

2. Armed Services ⇨34.11(2)

Effect of provision of Soldiers' and Sailors' Civil Relief Act of 1940 that any part of period of military service, which occurs after October 6, 1942, shall not be included in computing period of redemption of realty sold or forfeited to enforce any obligation, tax, or assessment, is to preclude termination of an existing right of redemption so long as holder is in armed service, and to modify that portion of California statute which provides that sale from state may be made at any time after deed to state, and that such sale, whenever made, effects termination of right of redemption. Soldiers' and Sailors' Civil Relief Act of 1940, § 205 as amended 50 U.S.C.A.Appendix, § 525; West's Ann.Rev. & Tax.Code, §§ 3691, 3694, 3696, 3697, 3707, 3712.

3. Armed Services ⇨34.10

Provision of Soldiers' and Sailors' Civil Relief Act precluding termination of right of redemption when property owner is in armed service also prohibits sale by state of property deeded to state for nonpayment of taxes, where state's sale is specifically designated as event whereby such right is terminated, notwithstanding contention that sale might proceed but that it would not actually terminate redemption period. Soldiers' and Sailors' Civil Relief Act of 1940, § 205 as amended 50 U.S.C.A.Appendix, § 525; West's Ann.Rev. & Tax.Code, §§ 3707, 3710, 3711.

4. Armed Services ⇨34.10

Provision of Soldiers' and Sailors' Civil Relief Act of 1940 protecting servicemen from sale for nonpayment of taxes on premises occupied for dwelling, professional, business or agricultural purposes, does not apply to serviceman who had acquired right of redemption to realty prior to entry into service in 1942, where he had never occupied land for any such purpose. Soldiers' and Sailors' Civil Relief Act of 1940, § 500 as amended 50 U.S.C.A.Appendix, § 560.

5. Armed Services ⇨34.10

In view of provision of Soldiers' and Sailors' Civil Relief Act that any part of period of military service, which occurs after October 6, 1942, shall not be included in computing period of redemption of realty sold or forfeited to enforce any obligation, tax, or assessment, under California statute affording indefinite right to redeem after deed to state and prior to disposal of property by state, county tax collector could not order sale of property, right of redemption to which was held by serviceman who acquired such right prior to entry into service in 1942. ASHBURN, Justice.

Appeal from order granting temporary injunction against tax sale. The central question is the effect of § 205 of the Soldiers' and Sailors' Civil Relief Act of 1940 upon the period of redemption following a sale to the state for nonpayment of local taxes.

Said § 205, as amended in 1942, 50 U.S.C.A.Appendix, § 525, provides: "The period of military service shall not be included in computing any period now or hereafter to be limited by any law, regulation, or order for the bringing of any action or proceeding in any court * * * whether such cause of action or the right or privilege to institute such action or proceeding shall have accrued prior to or during the period of such service, nor shall any part of such period which occurs after the date of enactment of the Soldiers' and Sailors' Civil Relief Act Amendments of 1942 (Oct. 6, 1942) be included in computing any period now or hereafter provided by any law for the redemption of real property sold or forfeited to enforce any obligation, tax, or assessment."

Plaintiff acquired on August 17, 1940, the right of redemption of one Ellen B. Crowder who was owner of the subject property at the time of sale of same to the state in 1933 for non-payment of local taxes for the year 1926-1927. Pol.Code, § 3771. Plaintiff also acquired title, or apparent title, through foreclosure of a street bond, the commissioner's deed being dated September 26, 1939. He entered the military service in 1942 and has remained in the army ever since that time with the exception of a period extending from May 25, 1946 to July 10, 1947. Plaintiff partially redeemed the property under the five year plan, §§ 4216-4226, Rev. & Tax. Code Ann., paying $2,330.70 on March 16, 1946 and $2,471.54 on August 10, 1948, but has been unable to completely redeem. Although he furnished to the County Tax Collector an affidavit showing his inability to pay the balance due because of his current military service that officer gave notice of sale and threatened and intended to sell the said property at public auction on March 28, 1955. His hand was stayed by this suit for declaratory relief and injunction and by the ensuing temporary injunction now under review.

At the time of the sale to the state in 1933 § 3771a, Political Code, provided for sale by the state, and § 3780 said: "A redemption of the property sold may be made by the owner, or any party in interest, within five years from the date of the sale to the state, or at any time prior to the entry or sale of said land by the state, in the manner provided by section three thousand eight hundred and seventeen." Its successor is § 3707, Revenue and Taxation Code: "If not previously terminated, on completion of any sale under this chapter the right of redemption is terminated."

[1, 2] Both sides agree that the state statutes afford "an indefinite right to redeem after deed to the State and prior to disposal of the property by the State"; also that the paramount authority of the Federal enactment gives it the effect of an amendment to the local statute. Appellant says: "While the California state statutes provide that the right of termination [redemption] is terminated by sale by the state, such statutes are superseded by conflicting federal statutes. The whole statutory scheme is to be interpreted as if the federal laws were added to the state laws by amendment." The Florida Supreme Court, in Burke v. O'Brien, 47 So.2d 777, 778, said: "As regards the property rights of those persons within the protection of this statute, the state law must yield to the Federal and we should construe the two together just as much so as though the Federal statute were an amendment to the state law."¹ Accord: Peace v. Bullock, 252 Ala. 155, 40 So.2d 82, 83. We consider this to be the correct view. The effect of it is, first, to preclude a termination of an existing right of redemption so long as the holder thereof is in the armed service, and, second, to modify that portion of the local statute which provides that a sale from the state may be made at any time after deed to the state, Pol.Code, § 3817; Rev. & Tax. Code Ann. §§ 3691, 3694, 3696, 3697,² and that such sale, whenever made, effects termination of the right of redemption, Rev. & Tax. Code Ann. § 3707. The deed from the state "conveys title to the purchaser free of all encumbrances of any kind existing before the sale" except certain specified ones, § 3712, which are not pertinent here.

[3] Appellants contend that the sale may proceed but that it does not actually terminate the redemption period. We cannot adopt that view. It is wholly inconsistent to say that the right of redemption cannot be terminated when the property owner is in the armed service but that a sale, which is specifically designated as the event whereby same is terminated, may be held at any time. There is no statutory provision for a redemption after sale by the state. As a practical matter such a holding as that invoked by appellant would present numerous problems in effectuating a redemption after returning from the service, problems as to amount to be paid, rate of interest, etc. Moreover it would be calculated to mislead any purchaser at the collector's sale for the deed recites (per § 3710, Rev. & Tax. Code Ann.): "That the real property was duly sold and conveyed to the State for nonpayment of taxes which had been legally levied and were a lien on the property; * * *. That the property is therefore conveyed to the purchaser according to law." Section 3711: "Except as against actual fraud, the deed duly acknowledged or proved is conclusive evidence of the regularity of all proceedings from the assessment of the assessor to the execution of the deed, both inclusive." Such a sale and deed would inevitably precipitate future litigation. If appellants' view be adopted, a prospective purchaser cannot know, unless he makes a previous investigation of the status of all potential redemptioners, whether he will get the kind of title which the state's deed professes to convey. If the statute be construed to permit a sale but to defer the termination of the right of redemption indefinitely in the case of an active military redemptioner, the purchaser would be fortunate to obtain a title insurance policy or to otherwise clear his title without the necessity of a quiet title action.

The cited case of Day v. Jones, 112 Utah 286, 187 P.2d 181, is not opposed to the foregoing views. Under the Utah statute the resale by the county is not the event which terminates the redemption period; it expires automatically before the resale can be had. Moreover, the court affirmed the judgment in favor of plaintiff, the service man, because the sale to defendant had been made before the redemption period, as extended by the Civil Relief Act, had terminated.

Both sides rely upon Le Maistre v. Leffers, 333 U.S. 1, 68 S.Ct. 371, 92 L.Ed. 429. Its holding is with respondent although some of its language is a bit obscure. It arose under the Florida statute which provided for public sale of tax delinquent land and issuance of a tax certificate to the purchaser (not the state); at any time after two years from the date of the certificate the holder had the right to apply for a tax deed, whereupon another public sale was had and tax deed issued. The owner had a right to redeem at any time after issuance of the certificate and before the tax deed had been issued. Pursuant to this statute a certificate was issued on August 5, 1940, after sale of Le Maistre's land. He entered the navy on August 18, 1942, and there remained until December 18, 1945, when he was discharged. The amendment to § 205 of the Federal Act (which covers the matter of enlarged redemption period) was made on October 6, 1942. Tax deed to petitioner's land issued on March 1, 1943 and suit to set aside the deed was filed by him on March 25, 1946. Under state law his right of redemption extended from August 5, 1940 (date of certificate) to March 1, 1943 (date of tax deed). The court held that petitioner Le Maistre became an immediate beneficiary of the federal statute when it became effective on October 6, 1942. Then it said, 333 U.S. on page 3, 68 S.Ct. on page 372: "That means that the running of the time granted him under Florida law to redeem was tolled as long as he was in the military service. Since he would have had from October 6, 1942, to March 1, 1943, to redeem, the effect of the Act was to give him the same length of time after his discharge for that purpose. His present action being timely, there is thus no barrier to his recovery so far as the Act is concerned." The first sentence is clear and it squares with the statute; it recognizes a tolling, or addition to the redemption period, equal to the lapse of time between October 6, 1942 (effective date of statute) and December 18, 1945 (discharge from service). The second sentence of the quotation seems to limit the additional period to one equalling the elapsed time from October 6, 1942 to March 1, 1943 (date of the tax deed). This is difficult to understand, but, as the court found petitioner's action to be timely on that basis, it appears not to be of controlling significance. The state court, 159 Fla. 122, 31 So.2d 155, had dismissed Le Maistre's suit to set aside the tax deed and the Supreme Court of the United States reversed that ruling. That can spell only one thing, a void deed. It does not imply, as appellant's counsel contends, a recognition of a right to hold the second sale or to make the tax deed. The holding in the case requires an affirmance of the order involved in this appeal.

3. § 560. "(1) The provisions of this section shall apply when any taxes or assessments, whether general or special (other than taxes on income), whether falling due prior to or during the period of military service, in respect of personal property, money, or credits, or real property owned and occupied for dwelling, professional, business, or agricultural purposes by a person in military service or his dependents at the commencement of his period of military service and still so occupied by his dependents or employees are not paid.

"(2) No sale of such property shall be made to enforce the collection of such tax or assessment, or any proceeding or action for such purpose commenced, except upon leave of court granted upon application made therefor by the collector of taxes or other officer whose duty it is to enforce the collection of taxes or assessments. The court thereupon, unless in its opinion the ability of the person in military service to pay such taxes or assessments is not materially affected by reason of such service, may stay such proceedings or such sale, as provided in this

[4] Arguments based upon § 500 of the Act, 50 U.S.C.A. Appendix, § 560,³ require but brief mention, for they are definitely covered by the Le Maistre case. Plaintiff at bar never occupied the land in question "for dwelling, professional, business, or agricultural purposes". The Le Maistre opinion says, 333 U.S. at page 5, 68 S.Ct. at page 373: "The two sections—205 and 500—supplement each other. Section 500, applicable to restricted types of real property, gives greater protection than § 205. It restrains the sale for taxes or assessments of specified types of real property except upon leave of court and prescribes for them a specified time within which the right to redeem may be exercised if the property is sold. Section 205 extends in terms to all land and only tolls the time for redemption for the period of military service. The other construction attributes to Congress a purpose to protect only certain classes of real property owned by those in the armed services. We cannot do that without drastically contracting the language of § 205 and closing our eyes to its beneficent purpose. But as we indicated on another occasion, the Act must Act [sections 501-540 and 560-590 of this Appendix], for a period extending not more than six months after the termination of the period of military service of such person.

"(3) When by law such property may be sold or forfeited to enforce the collection of such tax or assessment, such person in military service shall have the right to redeem or commence an action to redeem such property, at any time not later than six months after the termination of such service, but in no case later than six months after the date when this Act [said sections] ceases to be in force; but this shall not be taken to shorten any period, now or hereafter provided by the laws of any State or Territory for such redemption.

"(4) Whenever any tax or assessment shall not be paid when due, such tax or assessment due and unpaid shall bear interest until paid at the rate of 6 per centum per annum, and no other penalty or interest shall be incurred by reason of such nonpayment. Any lien for such unpaid taxes or assessment shall also include such interest thereon."

The AMERICAN DISTILLING COMPANY, a corporation, Plaintiff and Respondent,

v.

STATE BOARD OF EQUALIZATION,
Defendant and Appellant.

Civ. 16845.

District Court of Appeal, First District,
Division 2, California.
Sept. 17, 1956.

Action by distilling company for declaratory judgment on question of whether beverages manufactured from imported alcohol which was received in state in a condition unfit for human consumption, were distilled spirits originally distilled in state within meaning of Alcoholic Beverage Control Act authorizing sale of such distilled spirits to licensed dealers in state. The Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco, Milton D. Sapiro, J., entered judgment in favor of distilling company declaring that such beverages distilled by company in state could be sold in the state and the Board of Equalization appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Kaufman, J., held that in view of fact the imported alcohol at time it was received in state was not a distilled spirit within meaning of Alcoholic Beverage Control Act and the original distillation of the beverages manufactured from the alcohol occurred in the state, beverages involved could be sold in the state to licensed dealers, but that judgment of trial court would be modified to authorize sale of such beverages "manufactured" in the state rather than "distilled" in the state.

Judgment as modified affirmed.

1. Intoxicating Liquors ⇨111

Under Alcoholic Beverage Control Act, a "rectifier" is one who processes distilled spirits which are already in existence and a "manufacturer" is one who produces such spirits. West's Ann.Bus. & Prof.Code, §§ 23015, 23016.

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Manufacturer" and "Rectifier".

2. Intoxicating Liquors ⇨111

Under Alcoholic Beverage Control Act, a "distilled spirit" must be a beverage having its origin in fermented agricultural products, but it does not necessarily become a beverage in the initial distillation of the agricultural products. West's Ann.Bus. & Prof.Code, § 23000 et seq.

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Distilled Spirits".

3. Intoxicating Liquors ⇨124

Where distillery company manufactured beverages from imported alcohol which was received in the state by the company in a condition unfit for human consumption, such beverages were distilled spirits originally "manufactured" in state and consequently could be sold by company to licensed dealers in state as provided by statute authorizing such sale of beverages originally distilled in state. West's Ann. Bus. & Prof.Code, §§ 23005, 23363.

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Manufactured".

4. Intoxicating Liquors ⇨111

The economic welfare meant in Alcoholic Beverage Control Act section stating that purpose of the Act is to promote temperance in use and consumption of alcoholic beverages and involves in the highest degree the economic, social, and moral well-being and safety of the state and all of its people, is that welfare which will be achieved by strict regulation and curtailment of use of liquor and the economic benefits resulting to the people from the promotion of temperance, rather than those resulting from the promotion of the liquor industry. West's Ann.Bus. & Prof.Code, §§ 23000 et seq., 23001.

5. Declaratory Judgment ⇨346

In action for declaratory judgment on question of whether beverages manufactured from impure imported alcohol were distilled spirits originally distilled in state within meaning of Alcoholic Beverage Control Act section authorizing sale of such spirits to licensed dealers in state, evidence was insufficient to show that plaintiff's whiskey produced from a mixture of such alcohol and other whiskey, which might not have been distilled in the state, would be distilled spirits originally distilled in the state within meaning of the Act. West's Ann.Bus. & Prof.Code, §§ 23000 et seq., 23363.

6. Intoxicating Liquors ⇨124

Under Alcoholic Beverage Control Act section providing that any licensed manufacturer of distilled spirits originally distilled in state may sell them to any dealer licensed to sell distilled spirits, whiskey to which imported alcohol is added in production of another whiskey must be whiskey produced in the state. West's Ann.Bus. & Prof.Code, §§ 23005, 23363.

7. Intoxicating Liquors ⇨15

Alcoholic Beverage Control Act section providing that any licensed manufacturer of distilled spirits originally distilled in state may sell them to any person holding license authorizing sale of distilled spirits, is not unconstitutional in that it favors a home production of distilled spirits over a foreign production in view of fact complete authority over such matters is granted to states by Twenty-first Amendment to United States Constitution. U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 21; West's Ann.Bus. & Prof.Code, § 23363.

8. Constitutional Law ⇨43(2)

Where distilling company relied on Alcoholic Beverage Control Act section authorizing sale by manufacturer of distilled spirits originally distilled in state to dealers licensed to sell such spirits, for its asserted privilege to sell directly to retailers, such company could not at same time attack constitutionality of the section. West's Ann.Bus. & Prof.Code, § 23363.

9. Intoxicating Liquors ⇨124

Where Alcoholic Beverage Control Act section defined "distilled spirits" as a beverage obtained by distillation of fermented agricultural products, and there was nothing in the context of section of the Act providing that any manufacturer of distilled spirits originally distilled in the state can sell such spirits to licensed dealers requiring statutory definition to be disregarded and broader meaning of the term "distilled spirits" employed, statutory definition would control in the section authorizing sale of distilled spirits. West's Ann.Bus. & Prof.Code, §§ 23015, 23363.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., Charles A. Barrett, Deputy Atty. Gen., for appellant.

Eisner & Titchell, Norman A. Eisner, Haskell Titchell, San Francisco, for respondent.

KAUFMAN, Justice.

The State Board of Equalization appeals from a judgment in favor of respondent American Distilling Company in a declaratory relief action concerned with the interpretation of a certain provision of the Alcoholic Beverage Control Act, Bus. & Prof. Code, § 23000 et seq.

The American Distilling Company, which holds a distilled spirits manufacturer's license issued by the State of California, operates a plant in Sausalito, in which it manufactures gin, vodka, and whiskey. In the manufacture of its products it uses neutral spirits or alcohol. A large part of the alcohol used is distilled from grain at the Sausalito plant, but in some of its products, the company uses alcohol which it imports in tank cars from Illinois. This alcohol, derived from grain, is in an impure condition when received at the distillery and is unfit for human consumption. It is then distilled at the Sausalito plant, the impurities removed and the proof reduced to make it fit for beverage purposes.

Respondent pays a federal tax on the imported alcohol after it has been distilled in the Sausalito plant and placed in a bonded warehouse. The Federal government treats this alcohol for tax purposes the same as if it had been originally produced by respondent at its Sausalito distillery.

The sole issue on this appeal is whether the beverages manufactured from the imported alcohol are distilled spirits originally distilled in this state within the meaning of section 23363, Business and Professions Code. That section reads as follows: "Distilled spirits manufacturers; sales to licensees. Any licensed manufacturer of distilled spirits originally distilled in this State may sell them to any person holding a license authorizing the sale of distilled spirits."

The trial court held that respondent had the right under the above statute to sell the alcoholic beverages manufactured from the imported alcohol to retailers. It found that the alcohol is completely redistilled by the company at its distillery in Marin County in the same manner as any other raw material, that in manufacturing some of its products, additional materials are added to the alcohol at the time of the distillation to obtain the distilled spirits

After the distillation at respondent's plant, some of this alcohol is made into vodka by putting it in a tank and treating it with carbon for a certain length of time. Gin is produced by combining the purified alcohol with botanicals and distilling the combined materials. The reprocessed alcohol is also used in the making of whiskey by adding it to whiskey distilled at the plant, forming a new product.

[1] Appellant maintains that the processing performed by respondent at its Sausalito plant is a rectification rather than a distillation. The act defines a rectifier as "every person who colors, flavors, or otherwise processes distilled spirits by distillation, blending, percolating, or other processes." Bus. & Prof.Code, § 23016. A distilled spirits manufacturer is defined as "any person who produces distilled spirits from naturally fermented materials or in any other manner." Bus. & Prof.Code, § 23015. (Emphasis ours.) A rectifier, then, is one who processes distilled spirits which are already in existence; a manufacturer is one who produces such spirits. Both use the distillation process in accomplishing their objective. If the alcohol is a distilled spirit within the meaning of the act in the condition in which it is received in the tank cars, then appellant is correct in concluding that the distillation of the alcohol is merely rectification.

The basic question is, therefore, whether under the act the distilled spirits come into existence at respondent's plant, or are already in existence when the alcohol is received there. Appellant does not contend that the alcohol is merchantable as a beverage when it arrives at the plant. The distillation at Sausalito is necessary to convert the alcohol into a liquid fit for human consumption. The alcohol is subjected to the same distilling process that other raw materials are subjected to in making liquors.

Alcoholic beverage is defined by the act as including "alcohol, spirits, liquor, wine, beer, * * * and which is fit for beverage purposes either alone or when diluted, mixed, or combined with other substances." Bus. & Prof.Code, § 23004. "Distilled spirits" are defined in the following section as "an alcoholic beverage obtained by the distillation of fermented agricultural products, and includes alcohol for beverage use, spirits of wine, whiskey, rum, brandy, and gin, including all dilutions and mixtures thereof." Bus. & Prof.Code, § 23005. (Emphasis ours.)

[2] The alcohol as received is clearly not an alcoholic beverage under section 23004, for it is not fit for drinking purposes as it is, or when diluted, mixed or combined with other substances. It has to be subjected to the distillation process before it is transformed into a consumable product. True, section 23005 states that distilled spirits is a beverage obtained by distillation of fermented agricultural products. This indicates the origin of such beverage, for section 23015 recognizes that distilled spirits may be manufactured from naturally fermented materials or in other ways. A "distilled spirit" under the act, therefore, must be a beverage having its origin in fermented agricultural products, but it does not necessarily become a beverage in the initial distillation of the agricultural products, otherwise the manufacture of such spirits "in any other manner" in section 23015 would appear to be contradictory.

[3] Since a "distilled spirit" apparently must be a beverage under the act, or a substance that can be used as such when diluted, combined or mixed with other substances, it would seem that the liquors manufactured from the impure alcohol in the respondent's distillery, are "distilled spirits" originally distilled in this state. The original distillation which creates the beverage occurs here. Appellant, arguing that this is mere rectification, sets forth the dictionary definition of distillation as "To subject to, or transform by, distillation; as to distill molasses, in making rum; to distill barley, rye, corn, etc." The distillation process is used in creating an alcoholic beverage as well as in rectifying it after it has been created. Hence, the definitions of distill and rectify are not particularly helpful here. Under the statutory definitions, respondent clearly was a manufacturer of the distilled spirits, and not a rectifier, the alcohol was transformed into a beverage at respondent's plant, and only then became "distilled spirits" under the statute.

Appellant cites United States v. Tenbroek, 2 Wheat. 248, 15 U.S. 248, 4 L.Ed.

231, wherein the distinction between distilling and rectifying was considered. Defendant was charged with distilling spirituous liquors without a license. He contended that he rectified the spirits in his distillery after they had been distilled from domestic materials, that he was but performing secondary distillations by purifying the spirits. The specific tax with which the court was there concerned was levied on stills producing spirituous liquors from domestic or foreign materials. The court stated that the distillation process consisted of a double process, the first producing low wines; the second, the distillation of spirits of first, second, third or fourth degree proof which were marketable. At this point, the court declared, the distillation process ended. Later distillations were considered part of the process of rectification. Respondent states that the above cited case found that the material processed by the defendant therein was at the time of such processing, a spirituous liquor ready for consumption. The opinion, however, only states that it was a marketable product, and it cannot be determined from this expression whether or not it was a consumable beverage without further processing; hence the case is not particularly helpful to either party herein.

Appellant argues that since one of the purposes of the Alcoholic Beverage Control Act is to promote the economic welfare of the state, the economic well-being of the people of this state would be greatly furthered if manufacturers distilled alcoholic beverages from grains produced locally. However, under appellant's interpretation of section 23363, the grain could be shipped in from other states or countries by respondent, and he would still be entitled to sell the product to retailers, for there could then be no doubt that the original distillation would take place in this state. It is, of course, true as appellant argues, that because of shipping costs, it would be more likely that local grain would be used, and that more local labor might be employed in distilling beverages from grain instead of from alcohol.

[4] Respondent takes the position that the act was designed as a regulatory measure. Section 23001, Bus. and Prof.Code, states that this division is an exercise of the police power for "the protection of the safety, welfare, health, peace, and morals of the people of the State, to eliminate the evils of unlicensed and unlawful manufacture, selling, and disposing of alcoholic beverages, and to promote temperance in the use and consumption of alcoholic beverages." That section goes on to state that the subject matter of this division "involves in the highest degree the economic, social, and moral well-being and the safety of the State and of all its people." From the word "economic" in this last sentence appellant derives the intent to encourage agriculture and labor in this state by granting a profitable privilege to manufacturers who use California raw materials in their distilleries. When read in connection with the previous sentence the economic welfare of the people seems to be that achieved by strict regulation and curtailment of the use of liquor, the economic benefits resulting to the people from the promotion of temperance, rather than those resulting from the promotion of the liquor industry. In Ainsworth v. Bryant, 34 Cal.2d 465, 470, 211 P.2d 564, 567, it is said that the Alcoholic Beverage Control Act, designed to supersede earlier statutes relating to the control of the liquor traffic, "is generally regarded as a regulatory measure". (And, see, 3 Cal.Jur.2d 65, § 7.) The act is aimed at the control of distilled spirits as they are defined in the act.

It is true, as appellant argues, that even unrefined alcohol is usually defined as a "distilled spirit". See, Commercial Solvents Corp. v. Riley, 7 Cal.2d 731, 733, 62 P.2d 588. Such definition would control in the absence of a specific definition in the act itself. In this case the act contains the definition that is to be used in the interpretation of that term. Section 23002, Bus. and Prof.Code, states that "Unless the context otherwise requires, the definitions * * * set forth in this chapter govern the construction of this division." It must be determined, then, whether there is anything in the context which requires that the statutory definition be disregarded, and the broader meaning of the term employed.

Appellant maintains that the history of the legislation supports the board's interpretation. Originally, the holder of a distilled spirits manufacturer's license was authorized to sell alcoholic beverages to a retail licensee under section 6(a) of the Alcoholic Beverage Control Act of 1935. Stats.1935, p. 1127. In 1937 the distilled spirits manufacturer's agent's license was created by adding subdivision (n) to section 6. Stats.1937, p. 2135. That license, issued to companies selling liquor in California, but operating distilleries outside the state, did not give such licensees the privilege of selling to retailers. An amendment to subdivision (a) of section 6, in 1937, restricted the privilege of a manufacturer to selling only to wholesalers, rectifiers and manufacturers, with the exception that "distilled spirits produced in this State" might be sold to retailers. (Emphasis ours.) Then in 1941, the same subdivision was amended to read "distilled spirits originally distilled in this State". Stats.1941, p. 2702. This change obviously grants the privilege of selling at retail only to those who create "distilled spirit" through a distillation process. Appellant contends that the change in phraseology from "produce" to "originally distilled" indicates an intention on the part of the Legislature to change the meaning to a more restricted interpretation. Undoubtedly this is true. Under the earlier law a liquor such as vodka, could be produced by treating imported beverage alcohol in a manner similar to that described in this record and the producer would have the privilege of selling it at retail, although no distillery was operated in this state by the producer. Whiskey could also be produced by simply mixing imported beverage alcohol with other imported distilled spirits. The intent to narrow the privilege is apparent from a comparison of the language of the amendment with that of the earlier statute. The Assembly Journal for 1941 reveals that this amendment had its origin in the Committee on Public Morals. (Assembly Journal 1941, p. 1195.)

The provisions of the act just preceding section 23363 allow the manufacturers of beer, wine and brandy, the privilege of selling their products to any person having a license authorizing the sale of such products. If a plan to promote agriculture was part of the purpose of this legislation, it would seem that it would have been made applicable to the beer manufacturers as well. Beer manufacturers, under the act, may import all their grains from neighboring states and still claim the privilege of selling to retailers.

There does appear to be an indication of a plan to prefer the local producer to the out of state producer of alcoholic beverages. This can be justified under the regulatory purpose of the act, for California can better protect the safety and health of its people in regard to such products when distilleries, breweries and wineries are subject to standards in force in this state. For such purpose, it would seem to be immaterial whether the manufacturer of distilled spirits uses as raw material, grains or crude alcohol, as long as the beverage is distilled in this state.

[5, 6] It is urged that the evidence does not support the implied finding that the blended whiskey produced from this alcohol and a mixture of other whiskey is "distilled spirits" originally distilled in this state. Appellant says that the evidence was to the effect that the whiskey with which this alcohol is mixed may or may not have been distilled at the Sausalito plant. The witness stated that the whiskey with which the alcohol is mixed does not have to be distilled at respondent's plant, that it can be, and that normally it is, as respondent uses principally all its own products. No doubt the court inferred from this evidence that respondent in the past used only locally distilled whiskey in producing the whiskey which is mixed with the distilled alcohol. Appellant contends that the judgment gives respondent blanket approval to mix this alcohol with other whiskeys regardless of their origin, and sell the mixture to retailers as distilled spirits "originally distilled in this State." The judgment decrees that "plaintiff has the right to sell distilled spirits manufactured by it at its distillery * * * from alcohol transported under federal regulations from other distilleries to the holders of retail licenses for the sale of distilled spirits." We agree with appellant's contention in this connection. The whiskey to which the alcohol is added in the production of another whiskey must be California produced whiskey, otherwise, the final product would not meet the test of section 23363.

[7, 8] There appears to be no merit in respondent's argument that the application of section 23363 as contended for by appellant, would be unconstitutional. The Legislature undoubtedly had authority to limit the privilege of selling direct to retailers in accordance with certain prescribed conditions. Tokaji v. State Board of Equalization, 20 Cal.App.2d 612, 614, 67 P.2d 1082. And a favoring of home production over foreign production would not be unconstitutional, for complete authority is granted to the states under the 21st Amendment to the United States Constitution in this area. State Board of Equalization of California v. Young's Market, 299 U.S. 59, 57 S.Ct. 77, 81 L.Ed. 38; Mahoney v. Joseph Triner Corp., 304 U.S. 401, 58 S.Ct. 952, 82 L.Ed. 1424. Furthermore, since respondent relies on section 23363 for the asserted privilege to sell directly to retailers, it cannot at the same time attack its constitutionality. County of Sacramento v. City of Sacramento, 75 Cal.App.2d 436, 447, 171 P.2d 477; Hurley v. Commission of Fisheries, 257 U.S. 223, 225, 42 S.Ct. 83, 66 L.Ed. 206; St. Louis Malleable Casting Co. v. George C. Prendergast Construction Co., 260 U.S. 469, 43 S.Ct. 178, 67 L.Ed. 351.

[9] We conclude that the definition of distilled spirits used in the statute must control. The declaratory judgment is hereby modified by substituting the words "distilled by it" for "manufactured by it" in the paragraph declaring the future rights of respondent. This modification will prevent the manufacture of liquors from beverage alcohol imported into this state which would require no distillation to convert it into "distilled spirits" under the statute.

Judgment affirmed as modified.

Fourth District, California.

Sept. 27, 1956.

Hearing Denied Nov. 21, 1956.

Proceeding in the matter of the estate of deceased testatrix. The Superior Court of San Diego County, Dean Sherry, J., entered judgment determining heirship, and son of testatrix appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Griffin, Acting P. J., held that the words "personal belongings" as used in holographic will providing that testatrix wanted her daughter to have all of her "personal belongings" and her son $1, were susceptible of the meaning that testatrix intended to leave her daughter the remainder of her entire estate and intended to disinherit her son by leaving him only $1.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Wills ⇐455

Court has duty to construe language of will so that it conforms to the testator's intention as disclosed by the will, rather than to defeat such intention by strict adherence to the technical sense of particular words.

2. Wills ⇐466

The apparent meaning of particular words, phrases, or provisions in a will must be subordinated to the testamentary scheme, plan, or dominant purpose of the testator.

3. Wills ⇐455

In the construction of wills, language used must be liberally construed with a view to carrying into effect what the will as a whole shows was the real intent of the testator.

4. Wills ⇐449

The very fact that testatrix made a will raised a presumption that she intended to dispose of all of her property. West's Ann.Prob.Code, § 102.

5. Wills ⇐448, 449

Whenever a disputed word or phrase in a will may be reasonably given either of two meanings, that meaning should be given which prevents intestacy, either entire or partial. West's Ann.Prob.Code, § 102.

6. Wills ⇐583

The words "personal belongings" as used in holographic will providing that testatrix wanted her daughter to have all of her "personal belongings" and her son $1, were susceptible of the meaning that testatrix intended to leave her daughter the remainder of her entire estate and intended to disinherit her son by leaving him only $1. West's Ann.Prob.Code, § 102.

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Personal Belongings".

7. Wills ⇐455

Fact that holographic will was drawn by testatrix, who was unlearned in the law, could be considered in interpreting the meaning of the words used.

Dorman & Dorman, San Diego, for appellant.

Charles T. Bumer, Jr., San Diego, for respondent.

GRIFFIN, Presiding Justice.

Katherine Olson died testate on December 31, 1954, leaving a holographic will which was duly admitted to probate. It reads, in its entirety, as follows:

"March 30—48

"In case of my Death a very short Memorial Service at Benbough Mortuary. Every thing strictly private no flowers notify Mr & Mrs. Gustav Keppner, 1927 Grand ave Butte Montana I want Inez my Daughter to have all My Personal belongings that is Mrs. Keppner Phil Harding my son $1 dollar—dont notify any one else my two Sisters are very old and Widows and unable to come

"Mrs. V. E. Olson

"San Ysidro Cal.

"No Hardings Please my last wish"

The testatrix was survived by six heirs, all of whom filed written statements or petitions to determine heirship, namely, Inez Keppner, daughter, Phil E. Harding, son, and four sons and daughters of Ruth Zabel, predeceased daughter of the testatrix. The claim of each of the four grandchildren is for one-fourth of one-third of the property of the decedent. The claim of Inez H. Keppner is for two-thirds of the residue of the estate after payment of the $1 legacy to Phil E. Harding. Harding claims one-third of the residue of the estate upon the theory that by the will he received only $1; that only certain articles intimately associated with the person of the testatrix were bequeathed to his sister Inez; and that since no disposition was made of the residue of the estate he is entitled to his share as an heir at law in the bulk of her estate, which is alleged in several of the claims of interest and found by the court to be her "separate property only".

No extrinsic evidence was offered or received in the interpretation of the will.

The court found generally that the testatrix meant, by using the phrase "I want Inez my daughter to have all My Personal belongings" that said will makes effective distribution of the remainder of her entire estate, and accordingly the daughter is entitled to a two-thirds interest in it after payment of the $1 bequest.

As opposed to this finding appellant cites some cases and authority to the effect that a court cannot, under the guise of construction, make a will for the testatrix in the place of the one she has made. He claims that the phrase "personal belongings" in the California cases has been given a restricted effect; that it does not apply to money, securities or real property, and must be limited to chattels susceptible of identification and manual delivery, citing such authority as In re Estate of Spreckels, 162 Cal. 559, 123 P. 371; In re Estate of Koch, 8 Cal.App. 90, 96 P. 100; In re Estate of Carr, 93 Cal.App.2d 750, 209 P.2d 956; In re Estate of Klewer, 124 Cal. App.2d 219, 268 P.2d 544, 41 A.L.R.2d 941; In re Estate of Sorensen, 46 Cal.App.2d 35, 115 P.2d 241; In re Estate of Lovejoy, 38 Cal.App.2d 69, 100 P.2d 547; and In re Estate of Carroll, 138 Cal.App.2d 363, 291 P.2d 976.

[1-3] It is a fundamental rule that it is the duty of the court to construe the language of a will so that it will conform to the testator's intention as disclosed by the will rather than to defeat such intention by strict adherence to the technical sense of particular words. In re Estate of Kising, 68 Cal.App.2d 163, 156 P.2d 57; In re Estate of Akeley, 35 Cal.2d 26, 215 P.2d 921, 17 A.L.R.2d 647. The apparent meaning of particular words, phrases or provisions must be subordinated to the testamentary scheme, plan or dominant purpose of the testator. In re Estate of Kruger, 55 Cal.App.2d 619, 131 P.2d 619; In re Estate of Wilson, 184 Cal. 63, 193 P. 581. In the construction of wills the language used must be liberally construed with a view to carrying into effect what the will as a whole shows was the real intent of the testator. In re Estate of Hoytema, 180 Cal. 430, 181 P. 645.

[4,5] It is apparent from the instrument that the words of the testatrix specifically disinherited her son, and it was her desire and intent to avoid intestacy and leave her entire estate to her daughter by the words "all my Personal Belongings". The very fact that the testatrix made a will raises a presumption that she intended to dispose of all of her property. Sec. 102, Probate Code; In re Estate of Akeley, supra; In re Estate of Olsen, 9 Cal.App.2d 374, 50 P.2d 70. Whenever a disputed word or phrase may be reasonably given either of two meanings, that meaning should be given which will prevent intestacy, either entire or partial. In re Estate of Soulie, 72 Cal.App.2d 332, 164 P.2d 565.

[6] In examining the will by its four corners and in the light of these rules, it does appear that the words "all my Personal Belongings", as used in it, were susceptible of meaning "all of my own property".

In Re Estate of Kruger, 55 Cal.App.2d 619, 624, 131 P.2d 619, 622, in discussing a will where the word "belongings" was used, the court said:

"The word 'belongings' used by the testator with reference to the bequest to his wife, is generally understood as including the property that one owns, and it is not infrequently used in that broad sense; and in the instant case we feel that the word may reasonably be used to include all of the testator's remaining property when we consider how the word 'belongings' is ordinarily understood by the lay mind."

[7] In the instant case the will was drawn by the testatrix and from its appearance she was a person unlearned in the law. This fact may be considered in interpreting the meaning of the words used. In re Estate of Soulie, 72 Cal.App.2d

332, 164 P.2d 565; In re Estate of Henderson, 161 Cal. 353, 119 P. 496. Black's Law Dictionary defines "belongings" as follows: "That which belongs to one; property; possessions;—a term properly used to express ownership". Ballantine's Law Dictionary [Supp. 1954] in discussing the word "belongings" says:

"Although the word (belongings) as used in a will, has, on occasion, been restricted to such chattels as are peculiarly attached to the person, it has more frequently been construed broadly, under the language of the particular wills involved, to include personal property of every nature and even real estate."

In Re Estate of Olsen, 9 Cal.App.2d 374, 381, 50 P.2d 70, 73, the court interpreted the phrase "all my personal property" as meaning "'all my own property'" or "'all my property which I own personally'".

In the instant case, besides giving appellant only $1 the testatrix indicates an express desire that she is only remembering her loved ones and that her son, a "Harding", should not take any other part of her property.

In Re Estate of Schuster, 137 Cal.App. 2d 125, 289 P.2d 847, it was held that although the primary meaning of the term "effects" is personal property, it is a very general term and, when used in a will, may include realty, where that appears to be the testator's intent; that whether the word "effects", as used in a will, includes realty depends on the context and the surrounding circumstances; that in the absence of controlling language in a will to the contrary, it is presumed that the testator intended to dispose of his entire property; and that if the trial court's interpretation of a will is reasonable and consistent with testatrix' intention, the reviewing court will not substitute another interpretation, even if it may seem equally tenable. In Re Estate of Carroll, 138 Cal. App.2d 363, 291 P.2d 976, it was held that a construction of a will which leaves no intestacy as to any part of the estate is preferred.

The authorities relied upon by appellant are factually distinguishable. It appears to us that the finding of the trial court is reasonable and that from the will itself the intent of the testatrix was sufficient to show that the testatrix intended to disinherit the son by leaving him only $1, and to leave the daughter the remainder of her entire estate.

Judgment affirmed.

v.

Charles TENEYCKE and Francis Teneycke,
Defendants and Respondents.

Civ. 21578, 21579.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 1, California.

Sept. 24, 1956.

Hearing Denied Nov. 21, 1956.

Two actions against plaintiff's landlords to recover damages for alleged breakings into plaintiff's leased apartment, attacks on her and attempts to rape her by one of two defendants. From judgments of the Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Leon T. David, J., on a jury's verdicts for defendants, an "order of procedure of legal process," "certain proceedings had in the Superior Court," and an order denying plaintiff's motion for new trial, she appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Fourn, J., held that contention in appellant's brief that "the trial judge on its own initiative compelling an election between the various causes of action at the close of the trial was 'an error in law occurring at the trial', for which the court could properly grant a new trial," presented nothing for review, where briefs did not point out wherein judge so ordered or ruled and record failed to show that he compelled plaintiff to elect which cause of action to proceed with.

Judgments affirmed, and appeals from orders dismissed.

1. Appeal and Error ☞758(3)

On appeals from judgments on jury's verdicts for defendants in two tort actions and orders denying plaintiff's motions for new trials, contention in appellant's brief that "the trial judge on its own initiative compelling an election between the various causes of action at the close of the trial was 'an error in law occurring at the trial' for which the court could properly grant new trial," presented nothing for review, where briefs did not point out wherein trial judge so ordered or ruled and record failed to show that he compelled plaintiff to elect which cause of action to proceed with.

2. Appeal and Error ☞758(3)

On plaintiff's appeal from judgments on jury's verdicts for defendants in two tort actions, question in appellant's brief, "Is the right to privacy entranced within the absolute right of personal security and personal liberty?" presents nothing for review, as District Court of Appeal cannot determine therefrom point appellant desires to make.

3. Appeal and Error ☞758(3)

A question in appellant's brief, "Should the trial judge give an instruction that is not justified by the evidence?" presented nothing for review, where no particular instruction was mentioned or referred to by appellant and no given instruction was improper under circumstances.

4. Appeal and Error ☞758(3)

On plaintiff's appeals from judgments on jury's verdicts for defendants in two tort actions, contention in appellant's brief that "it appears that constitutional rights have become instinct in State of California, in that it appears that we no longer have a right to a juror's verdict without coercion," presented no question for review, where all of trial court's instructions to jury were proper under circumstances and record disclosed no coercion of any juror.

5. Trial \Rightarrow 318

In jury trial, fact findings are not required.

6. Appeal and Error \Rightarrow 95, 110

Purported appeals from orders denying plaintiff's motions for new trial after judgments on jury's verdicts for defendants and from "orders of procedure of legal process" and "proceedings had in the Superior Court" were dismissed.

FOURTH, Justice.

These appeals are from the judgments on the verdicts in favor of the defendants and against the plaintiff.

Plaintiff brought two actions, the first numbered 596,228, and the second numbered 597,392. In the first case, in the third amended complaint, the plaintiff sued for general and special damages in the sum of $25,900, alleging, among other things, that the defendants were the landlords of an apartment house; that she was a tenant therein; that the defendant Charles Teneycke had broken into her apartment, attacked her and attempted to rape her, all on February 27, 1951, March 9, 1951 and March 13, 1951.

In the second case, in the second amended complaint (erroneously designated the third amended complaint) the plaintiff sued for damages, general and special, in the sum of $26,050, alleging generally the same sort of matters as are set forth in the first case, and setting forth that the various episodes complained of occurred on March 27, 1951, and March 28, 1951.

Upon the plaintiff's motion, the cases were consolidated for trial, and upon her motion this court granted leave to file combined briefs to the end that the causes could be disposed of in a single appeal.

In each of plaintiff's notices of appeal, it is set forth that she appeals from (1) "'Order of Procedure of Legal Process' rendered and entered in the above entitled court and cause"; (2) "that certain 'Judgment' herein rendered and entered in the above entitled court and cause on or about July 7th., and 8th. 1955"; (3) "that certain 'Proceedings had in the Superior Court'", and (4) "certain 'Order denying plaintiff's motion for a New Trial', made and entered in the minutes of said court, on or about August 5, 1955."

The plaintiff has submitted briefs in this matter which are extremely ambiguous and difficult to decipher or understand; they are not in conformity with the Rules on Appeal, rule 13 et seq., excepting as to the size of the paper used, and are for the most part completely lacking in sense and reason. We have, however, carefully reviewed all of the record and have seen fit to disregard the defects, and have considered the briefs as if they were properly prepared.

The facts of the cases are substantially as follows. The defendants were the operators of an apartment house at 912 South Figueroa Street in Los Angeles. The plaintiff rented a single unit apartment under a month-to-month tenancy. In about March, 1951, Charles Teneycke brought an action in the Municipal Court of Los Angeles Judicial District to have the plaintiff ejected. Judgment in that case was in favor of Charles Teneycke and against the plaintiff here. In the instant cases the appellant alleged and testified, among other things, that she was assaulted and struck by Charles Teneycke on several occasions, naming the dates, and further that she was raped by Charles Teneycke. The respondents alleged and testified in substance that there were no assaults committed by Charles Teneycke; that no blows were struck; that Charles Teneycke did not rape the plaintiff and no attempt whatsoever at rape was made.

[1] As heretofore indicated, the jury found in favor of the defendants and our review of the record in these cases convinces us that their determination was wholly proper and correct. As well as we can gather, it is appellant's first contention that, "The trial judge on its own initiative compelling an election between the various causes of action at the close of the trial was 'an error in law occurring at the trial' for which the court could properly grant a new trial".

At no place is it pointed out in the briefs wherein the judge so ordered or ruled, and our search of the record fails to show that there is anything to indicate that the judge in anywise, at any time, compelled the plaintiff to elect as to which cause she could or should proceed with. The court was extremely liberal with and helpful to the plaintiff, as most judges are with persons who are unskilled and untrained in the law, and who appear in propria persona. Our review indicates that the judge did nothing which we can criticize.

[2] Plaintiff's next contention is titled: "Is the right to privacy entranced within the absolute right of personal security and personal liberty?" This is but a typical example of the matters contained in the brief and we are unable to determine the point which appellant desires to make.

[3] Apparently, appellant's next contention is, "Should the trial judge give an instruction that is not justified by the evidence?" The answer obviously is "no"; however, no particular instruction is mentioned or referred to by appellant, and we are unable to find any instruction which was given which was improper under the circumstances.

Appellant's next contention is: "Can a judge place himself in an attitude of hostility to law or to a party?"

"The dominating factor in this present case seems to have been the trial judge, was imbued with bias and prejudice against any female who dare to bring action action against a male charged with the offence of rape."

A reading of the transcript belies the statement made by appellant.

[4] Apparently appellant's next contention is: "The judicial abuse of discretion in this instant case is one which should be considered in the light of facts and fractual matters. Manifestly, it appears that constitutional rights have become instinct in the State of California, in that it appears that we no longer have a right to a juror's verdict without coercion."

In this connection we assume that perhaps appellant refers to an instruction or instructions given by the court, and if so, we have gone over the instructions and are of the opinion that all of them were perfectly proper under the circumstances. Certain it is that the record does not disclose any coercion of any juror.

[5] Appellant further contends that no findings of fact were made. The complete answer to that is that this was a jury trial and findings were not required.

In our opinion the causes were fairly and properly tried; the jury was correctly instructed; the verdicts were amply supported by the evidence and the court rightly denied the motion for a new trial.

[6] The judgments are, and each is, affirmed. The purported appeals from the orders denying plaintiff's motion for new trial, from "orders of procedure of legal process" and "proceedings had in the Superior Court" are, and each is, dismissed.

Division 2, California.

Sept. 20, 1956.

Action against estate of decedent to recover compensation for services rendered to decedent during his lifetime. The Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco, George W. Schonfeld, J., entered judgment in favor of defendant executor, and plaintiff appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Kaufman, J., held that evidence was sufficient to show that decedent did not enter into any agreement with plaintiff to pay for services rendered, and that decedent did fulfill any and all agreements, if any, made with plaintiff.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Executors and Administrators ⇨221(5)

In action against decedent's estate to recover compensation for services rendered to decedent during his lifetime, evidence was sufficient to rebut presumption that plaintiff had rendered services to decedent in expectation of remuneration.

2. Executors and Administrators ⇨221(5)

In action against decedent's estate to recover compensation for services rendered to decedent during his lifetime, evidence was sufficient to support findings that decedent did not enter into an agreement with plaintiff to pay for services rendered, and that decedent did fulfill any and all agreements, if any, made between plaintiff and decedent.

KAUFMAN, Justice.

This is an appeal from a judgment in favor of defendant executor in a suit for monies, brought after rejection of appellant's claim filed in the estate of Joseph Harrison Thompson, deceased.

Plaintiff, a single woman, sought to recover against the estate of deceased, compensation for services rendered to him during his lifetime. The first count of the complaint alleged that decedent had become indebted to appellant in the sum of $31,200 for the reasonable and agreed value of professional services rendered as a registered and practical nurse and housekeeper. The second count alleged that on or about August 30, 1935, appellant entered into an oral agreement with decedent whereby it was agreed that appellant would render certain services in the capacities of nurse and housekeeper, and that decedent would either compensate appellant during her lifetime for such services, or if such services terminated during his lifetime, he would deduct from such compensation only the reasonable cost of claimant's board and lodging, or in the absence of such compensation, he agreed to make and keep in effect a last will and testament providing for full compensation for the services rendered by claimant. It was further alleged that the reasonable value of the services rendered less board and lodging was the sum of $31,200; that decedent did not fulfill his part of the agreement; and that if appellant had not relied upon said agreement that decedent would leave her all of his estate up to and including the reasonable value of her services, she would not have continued to perform said services.

There was testimony that appellant, a nurse, had lived at the residence of decedent, a chiropractor, since some time in 1934, and that she had rendered housekeeping services and some nursing services, during periods when decedent was in poor health. There was testimony that on a few occasions during those years he had told witnesses that he would do right by her, that she would be taken care of; that she was more than a daughter to him.

J. A. Pardini, Elda Granelli, F. Campagnoli, San Francisco, for appellant.

J. Clark Benson, Simeon E. Sheffey, San Francisco, for respondents.

On January 2, 1950, Joseph Harrison Thompson died leaving a will providing for appellant as follows:

"All legal bills shall be paid by the appointed attorney. He shall pay to Josephine Woolf a faithful and kind friend to me—the sum of Five Hundred ($500.00) dollars. She shall also be given all household belongings to dispose of as she desires. She shall continue at my apartment for one additional month, the Estate paying such rent-gas-electricity and telephone. No other allowances will be paid her because during the years of her kindness our understanding and agreement I have faithfully carried out for services she rendered me."

There was no testimony in regard to any agreement, nor was there any testimony to show that appellant had not been compensated for her services. The trial court found that it was not true that decedent had become indebted to appellant in the sum of $31,200 or any other sum within the two years last past and/or at all for the reasonable value of professional services; and that it was not true that on or about August 30, 1934, an agreement had been entered into as alleged in the complaint. It was further found that it was not true that any agreement was entered into for the payment of appellant's services and that it was not true that decedent did not fulfill any and all agreements, if any, made between him and appellant.

Appellant contends that the trial court erred in finding that appellant did not perform services for decedent under such conditions that a promise to pay must be implied. The evidence is uncontradicted that appellant and deceased lived in the same apartment for many years. Appellant was constantly his companion at social affairs and performed housekeeping duties. There was also evidence that she insisted on him regularly taking the medication prescribed for his heart condition, and that she gave him nursing care following a period of hospitalization at one time several years before his death. Deceased was in poor health for some time prior to his death. Appellant administered shots and other medication to him. According to witnesses who occasionally visited them, deceased was quite dependent on appellant during this latter period of his life, although he apparently was ambulatory to within a few days before his death.

There was testimony by one witness who owned a convalescent home that she charged $200 per month including board to patients in her home, but could not give them such service as appellant had rendered to decedent and that such services were of greater value than the price which she charged her patients.

The record herein is completely devoid of any evidence that an express contract was made between appellant and deceased. But appellant maintains that the evidence is sufficient to support a claim for the reasonable value of the services rendered. In Leoni v. Delany, 83 Cal.App.2d 303, 310, 188 P.2d 765, 769, 189 P.2d 517, it was said that "all that is needed is to establish the rendition of services and their reasonable value." In Moore v. Spremo, 72 Cal.App. 2d 324, 331, 164 P.2d 540, 545, the court declared that in proving a contract in this type of case that the intention to pay and the expectation of compensation may be inferred from conduct as well as from communications of the parties, that expectation of compensation may co-exist with motives prompted by affection or a sense of duty, and that "To warrant the finding of such contract, the elements of intention to pay on the one hand, and expectation of compensation on the other, must be found to exist" but that such elements may be inferred from the relation of the parties, the nature of the services or other circumstances.

In the cited case, decedent was a tenant at a rooming house owned by plaintiff. He had been permitted to stay on during the depression without paying his rent. He admitted to a friend that he owed plaintiff a great deal of money, but that if she did not get paid his will would take care of her. Again he admitted that when he settled with her she would be able to buy two houses similar to one owned by the witness. Decedent underwent major surgery, and for a period of four months preceding his death required constant nursing service night and day, which plaintiff rendered. It was argued that the services were rendered gratuitously by plaintiff, but the court held that the determination as to whether the services were gratuitously rendered was a factual question for the trial court which had decided the issue contrary to defendant's theory.

In the above cited case there was abundant evidence that deceased intended to pay for the food and lodging furnished to him, and from the nature of the business carried on by plaintiff, it could certainly be inferred that she expected payment. In the present case there is an admission in the pleadings that decedent furnished appellant with her room and board during all the years that she made her home with him, for her claim is for the reasonable value of her services less the cost of board and lodging in the home of decedent. In the first years of this living arrangement, there was testimony that deceased was still a practicing chiropractor, but that he owned no property, had very limited means and would have been unable to pay appellant anything. If the testimony of these witnesses is believed, then it may be said that appellant very probably entered upon this arrangement without expectation or payment other than her support. It is true that the trial court might have inferred from the conduct of the parties that there was an implied agreement to pay for services in addition to appellant's support, but the evidence certainly does not compel that inference as a matter of law.

[1] Appellant urges that where services are rendered by one person from which another receives a benefit, there is a presumption of law that the person enjoying the benefit is bound to pay what they are reasonably worth. See, Lloyd v. Kleefisch, 48 Cal.App.2d 408, 120 P.2d 97; Lundberg v. Katz, 44 Cal.App.2d 38, 111 P.2d 917; Long v. Rumsey, 12 Cal.2d 334, 84 P.2d

146; Zellner v. Wassman, 184 Cal. 80, 193 P. 84. This presumption is rebuttable, however, and we hold there was sufficient foundation in the testimony regarding the conduct of the parties herein, which would rebut the inference that appellant rendered the services in expectation of the remuneration sought in this action.

The trial court made a finding that "It is not true that the said work, labor and services rendered and performed by Plaintiff herein, after deducting therefrom the cost of food and lodging, was the sum of $40.00 per week, or any other sum, or a total of $31,200.00, or any other sum." The trial court was not bound to accept the value placed on appellant's services by the witnesses herein, but could conclude that appellant had been adequately compensated in receiving her support during all these years, or that she had rendered all services gratuitously.

[2] Two of the witnesses testified to discussions with decedent in which they urged him to do right by appellant and marry her. One of these witnesses testified that decedent had said he was going to do right by her, and the other stated that he said that appellant would be provided for. These expressions on his part of an intent to do something for appellant in the future, do not compel the inference that any agreement had been made between him and appellant. They are as subject to an inference that decedent would do something for appellant in appreciation of her gratuitous service to him. The trial court further found that "it is not true that Plaintiff and Decedent entered into any agreement for the payment of Plaintiff's services, and it is not true that Decedent did not fulfill any and all agreements, if any, made between Plaintiff and Decedent." Appellant introduced evidence of the provision made for her in decedent's will, which was quoted above. This declared that during the years of their understanding and agreement decedent had faithfully carried out his part for the services which appellant had rendered. Hence he left her only the household furnishings and $500. This evidence supports the above findings.

The trial court made no finding in regard to the statute of limitations which was pleaded by respondent and which he urges would in any event bar appellant's claim. In view of the fact that the findings above discussed are supported by the record, it is unnecessary to discuss this contention.

This was purely a factual matter for the trial court. In view of the fact that the judgment finds ample support in the record before us, the judgment must be affirmed.

Judgment affirmed.

Coffey & Velasquez, San Francisco, for appellant.

Richard P. Lyons, City Atty. of the City of South San Francisco, South San Francisco, for respondent.

PER CURIAM.

This is an appeal from a judgment ordering the abatement as a public nuisance of a building owned and operated by appellant and consisting of a group of apartments used for human habitation. It is contended that the evidence does not support the finding that said building was a public nuisance, that respondent cannot complain of defects for the correction of which a permission was denied, and that the retroactive application of requirements of a Building Code to appellant's building which predates said Code violates appellant's vested constitutional right to own property, Art. 1, § 1 of the State Constitution. We have found these contentions without merit.

The evidence shows in part that the building, known as 503 Bayshore Boulevard or Airport Boulevard in the City of South San Francisco, was a dilapidated frame construction without any concrete foundation, that the floors were rotting and sagging, that the walls were from two to three inches out of plumb and were decayed and structurally unsound, that there were large cracks and holes between the window sashes and the walls, in some places big enough to put a finger through, that there were no fire stops in the attic, that the electrical circuits were inadequate and overloaded, that the wiring entered the rooms through a hole drilled in the ceiling, without any outlet boxes, that from said wire, which was too light for its purpose, not only lights but also appliances were run, there being no floor outlets; that the building stood only thirty-one inches from an adjacent frame structure, and that all these conditions caused the building to be a very serious fire hazard for its surroundings, which hazard, according to the testimony of the witness Brauns, Assistant Fire Chief, could only be eliminated by rebuilding the building. (It may be noted in this respect that Braun testified that the decayed walls were a fire hazard, because fire would progress through them much quicker than would normally be expected.) The fire danger was moreover increased by the fact that the backyard was littered with old mattresses, cardboard boxes, old furniture and that at the side of the building was an open shed containing the same kind of refuse and also lumber. There was also evidence as to conditions detrimental to the health of the occupants and dangerous to the public health: infestation with rodents, earwigs and flies, insufficient sanitation facilities, (for the occupants of nine apartments there were only two toilets, one for the men, one for the women, accessible from the outside only, and only one shower located in the same room as the women's toilet) inadequate protection against the elements because of ill-fitting doors and windows etc. There had been repeated complaints about the building, and since 1948 repeated notices of defects had been given to defendant; nevertheless, the conditions were still as stated on the day before that of the trial, November 9, 1954, except that the rodents had left when the building became unoccupied. The above evidence was uncontradicted and it was conceded by defendant's attorney that the charges were true. There is then no doubt that the building, as a public fire and health hazard, was a public nuisance subject to abatement, irrespective of whether or not it violated any applicable Building Code or Ordinance. People v. Foerst, 10 Cal.App.2d 274, 51 P.2d 455; People v. United Capital Corp., 26 Cal.App.2d 297, 79 P.2d 186; People v. Oliver, 86 Cal.App.2d 885, 195 P.2d 926.

Considering the uncontradicted evidence of Chief Brauns that no repair but only total rebuilding could prevent the building from being a serious fire hazard to the City of South San Francisco, appellant cannot complain that abatement was ordered without giving prior opportunity to repair. There is no evidence of any effective manner of repair proposed by plaintiff. The only evidence on which appellant relies in respect to refusal of permit for repair is that about three years before the trial he came to the building department of the City of South San Francisco and inquired what could be done to fix the building. He was then told that "the building was in pretty bad condition and it would take more than fifty per cent of the actual cost of the building to bring it up to a minimum standard and he would have to tear the building down to bring it up to any standards." No plans were thereafter submitted by appellant or permits asked.

[1-3] Although evidence was received without objection as to different respects in which the building violated building legislation and ordinances, the decision that the building is a public nuisance is not based on findings that it violates any such legislation or ordinances but on the ground that the defects of the building "are dangerous to the public health and safety and are offensive to the senses and constitute an extreme fire hazard to said premises and all the surrounding property." As the undisputed fire and health hazards sufficiently justify the decision, we need not consider whether retroactive application of certain legislation or ordinances to the required changes would be legal or not—also considering the extent of said required changes—or whether the finding that the building is offensive to the senses is sufficiently supported by the evidence. When findings responsive to allegations in the pleadings and supported by the evidence fully support the judgment, it is immaterial whether other findings also are supported by the evidence. Sands v. Eagle Oil & Refining Co., 83 Cal. App.2d 312, 321, 188 P.2d 782, and cases there cited.

Civ. 5427.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District,
California.

Sept. 26, 1956.

Rehearing Denied Oct. 23, 1956.

Hearing Denied Nov. 21, 1956.

Former husband's action to quiet title to realty against former wife. The Superior Court, Imperial County, L. J. Mouser, J., entered judgment quieting title and former wife appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Burch, J. pro tem., held that where subsequent to decree of divorce that had no provision of property settlement in it, parties orally agreed on division of property including two parcels of real estate and husband fully performed his part of agreement but wife refused to execute deed of her interest in realty which was agreed to belong to the husband alone, wife could not set up bar of statute of frauds.

Affirmed.

1. Appeal and Error ☞989, 996

In reviewing evidence, appellate court must resolve all conflicts in favor of respondent and when two or more inferences can be reasonably deduced from the facts, court is without power to substitute its deductions for those of the trial court.

2. Appeal and Error ☞991

In former husband's action to quiet his title to real estate against former wife based upon fact that husband had fully executed his part of oral agreement, made with wife subsequent to divorce decree, respecting division of property, it was for trier of fact to determine whether or not a contract had been proven from the facts and circumstances in evidence including the conversations between the parties.

3. Husband and Wife ☞48(1)

Where subsequent to divorce decree containing no provision for property settlement, parties orally agreed to a division of both their separate and community properties, transfer to husband of separate property of wife was for full and fair consideration.

4. Frauds, Statute of ☞68

Where subsequent to divorce decree containing no provision of property settlement, parties orally agreed as to a division of both their separate and community properties including real estate, agreement was controlled by statute of frauds and required to be in writing. West's Ann.Civ.Code, §§ 1091, 1624, subds. 3, 4, 6.

5. Frauds, Statute of ☞139(5)

Where subsequent to divorce decree containing no provision for property settlement, parties orally agreed to a division of both their separate and community properties including real estate, and husband fully performed his part of agreement but wife refused to execute deed, wife could not set up bar of statute of frauds. West's Ann.Civ.Code, §§ 1091, 1624, subds. 3, 4, 6.

Herbert W. Simmons, Jr., Los Angeles, for appellant.

George R. Kirk, El Centro, for respondent.

BURCH, Justice pro tem.

Defendant appeals from a decree quieting title in plaintiff to certain real property in the city of El Centro, County of Imperial, State of California, described as follows:

"The South 60 feet of the West 160 feet of Lot 10, Block 6, Second Addition to the City of El Centro, excepting therefrom the South 10 feet of the West 20 feet thereof."

By a cross-complaint defendant sought a decree of partition, an accounting and for general relief.

The record indicates that the parties were married in 1924 and that a decree of divorce was granted defendant September 6, 1944, in Las Vegas, Nevada. On that date the parties owned the described property as tenants in common. The plaintiff has been in possession since the parties were divorced. At the time of the divorce there was no property settlement agreement or division of property in the decree. The parties also had owned real property in Pasadena, California, which was under contract of sale for $2,400 upon which there was an encumbrance of $660. The purchaser had paid down $500. The El Centro real property they valued at $2,300. There was a chevrolet automobile, 1940 model, valued at $800. There was household furniture valued roughly at $800.

After the divorce the parties met in Pasadena and orally agreed to divide the property as follows: To the wife the contract of sale of the Pasadena property and the furniture, the wife to have the $500 down payment on the contract of sale and the husband to pay off an existing encumbrance of $660. The husband to have the El Centro real property and the automobile. The husband fully performed his part of this agreement. The wife refused, upon request, to deed her interest in the El Centro property to plaintiff.

There is some conflict upon the question of the oral agreement dividing the property and upon the values of the several pieces of property set off to each. However the court found that the division of community and separate property in the oral agreement was fair and executed except that defendant refused to deed the legal title of the El Centro property to plaintiff. A decree was entered quieting plaintiff's title to the El Centro real estate against any and all claims of the defendant.

[1-4] The sufficiency of the evidence to support the conclusion reached by the trial court is under attack. "In reviewing the evidence * * * all conflicts must be resolved in favor of the respondent * * *. When two or more inferences can be reasonably deduced from the facts, the reviewing court is without power to substitute its deductions for those of the trial court." Crawford v. Southern Pacific Co., 3 Cal.2d 427, 429, 45 P.2d 183, 184. Under this rule it was for the trier of fact to determine whether or not a contract was proven from the facts and circumstances in evidence, "including, of course, the conversations between the parties". Treadwell v. Nickel, 194 Cal. 243, 261, 262, 228 P. 25, 33. In this case we have an executed oral agreement which transmuted the separate property of the wife to the husband upon a full and fair consideration. In Woods v. Security First National Bank, 46 Cal.2d 697, 299 P.2d 657, an antenuptial oral agreement to transmute the wife's separate property into community property became executed by the subsequent acts and conduct in confirmation of the agreement. The agreement in question there was like the agreement here controlled by the statute of frauds and was required to be in writing. Civil Code, Sec. 1624, subds. 3, 4, 6; Civil Code, Sec. 1091. As in the instant case, no transfers or instruments of conveyance were executed, but unlike the instant case, there was no delivery of possession. The court held that because the agreement was executed, the prohibitions of the above statutes did not control. "This is a clear case", says the court, "of an executed agreement which transmuted the property." 46 Cal.2d at page 701, 299 P.2d at page 659. In the Woods case, supra, it was held that the mutual consent of the spouses furnished the consideration. In the present case the marriage was terminated at the time of the agreement and admittedly, the practice of informality in property dealings between spouses is not available to plaintiff. Nevertheless, the facts and circumstances bring this case within the rule of an executed oral agreement accompanied by delivery of possession which continued uninterrupted and uncontested for a period of some nine years. The agreement was fully supported by consideration and all that remained to be done was to execute a deed to clear the record title.

The case of Husheon v. Kelley, 162 Cal. 656, at page 662, 124 P. 231, at page 234, cited by plaintiff, supports the judgment. In that case there was an oral agreement transferring real property and the court there said:

"But we think the findings, if construed, as they should be, in support of the judgment, do not set forth a case of an executory contract which has to be enforced, but rather one of an oral present transfer of a life interest, in consideration of certain promises upon the part of the grantee. * *

"Where the conveyance is oral, instead of written, the case is not different, if there has been such part performance as to take the case out of the operation of section 1971 of the Code of Civil Procedure. There can be no doubt that the taking of possession by Kelley and the performance by him and his successors of the obligations of payment and improvement of the land were sufficient to overcome the want of a written transfer. * *"

It is said in 23 Cal.Jur.2d Frauds, Statute of, p. 399, sec. 129: "An oral contract which has been fully executed is not affected by the provisions of the statute of frauds. * * * The rule applies even when full performance has been rendered by only one of the parties." See Flint v. Giguere, 50 Cal.App. 314, 320, 195 P. 85; Nicolds v. Storch, 67 Cal.App.2d 8, 17, 18, 153 P.2d 561, and cases there cited.

[5] The court found the contract on sufficient evidence and that plaintiff fully performed his obligation thereon. It would, under the facts and circumstances of the case, be inequitable to allow the defendant, fully compensated under a fair agreement, to set up the bar of the statute of frauds.

The judgment is affirmed.

Cr. 5731.

Supreme Court of California.

Sept. 28, 1956.

Original habeas corpus proceeding by prisoners convicted of murdering fellow convict and violating statute making it a crime for a person serving a life sentence to assault another with a deadly weapon. A referee was appointed to hear evidence relating to prisoners' charges. The Supreme Court, Gibson, C. J., held that findings of referee that convictions were not obtained by perjured testimony although witness later repudiated his testimony given at trial, that confessions of guilt of other prisoners were not entitled to be believed, and that no evidence was suppressed by authorities, were sustained by evidence.

Petition denied.

In habeas corpus proceeding to set aside conviction on ground that same was procured by perjured testimony, petitioners have burden of not only showing that they were convicted by perjured testimony, but also that prosecuting officials suffered testimony to be introduced knowing that it was perjured. GIBSON, Chief Justice.

In 1950, petitioners Louis F. Smith and John Allen, inmates of Folsom prison, were convicted of murdering a fellow prisoner named Borton and of violating Penal Code section 4500, which makes it a crime for a person serving a life sentence to assault another with a deadly weapon. They were sentenced to death for each offense, and the judgments of conviction and orders denying a new trial were affirmed by this court. People v. Smith, 36 Cal.2d 444, 224 P.2d 719. Petitioners seek a writ of habeas corpus on the theory that they were denied due process of law.

The petition charges that a prisoner named Biersdorff testified falsely in response to promises of release made by Warden Heinze of Folsom Prison, that he was coached in his false testimony by a deputy district attorney, that as a result of deliberate fraud, or because of the persuasive influence, amounting to duress, of these officials, Biersdorff testified falsely at the trial in identifying petitioners, and that the jury, the court and defense attorneys were thereby misled into believing that petitioners had committed the assault. The petition also alleges that, because of false information given by Biersdorff, the state officials did not make a full investigation and failed to discover the actual perpetrators of the assault, convicts Patterson and Mullen, who confessed to the crime after petitioners had been convicted.

An order to show cause was issued, and Honorable John P. McMurray, judge of the Superior Court of Inyo County, was appointed referee to hear evidence relating to petitioners' charges.¹ Hearings were held at which several witnesses, including petitioners, appeared and testified. Among the documents received in evidence were an affidavit by Biersdorff, the witness who assertedly committed perjury, and confessions by convicts Mullen and Patterson. It was stipulated that the referee might consider the transcripts and exhibits from the prior trial. On the basis of this record the referee made findings of fact to the effect that no witness who testified at the trial committed perjury, that, there being no perjury committed, no representative of the state suffered any testimony to be introduced knowing it was perjured and that no representative suppressed any evidence which would have been favorable to petitioners' defense.² Petitioners have excepted to these findings.

[1] While not binding on this court, the findings of fact made by the referee are entitled to great weight since he had an opportunity to observe the demeanor of the witnesses when they testified. In re De La Roi, 27 Cal.2d 354, 364, 164 P.2d 10; In re Mitchell, 35 Cal.2d 849, 855, 221 P.2d 689. After a review of the record, we have concluded that the referee's decision is correct and that the evidence fully supports his findings.

A recital of some of the evidence in support of the judgment of conviction will make it easier to understand the evidence before the referee and to pass upon petitioners' contentions. The only eyewitness presented by the People at the trial was Biersdorff, who testified that, on the morning of October 11, 1949, he heard someone shout, "Help, they're killing me," and, looking in a window of the prison barber-shop, he saw petitioners attacking Borton. He said that Allen hit Borton on the head several times with a hatchet, knocking him down, and that, while Allen was striking Borton with a hatchet, Smith was stabbing him with a knife. Biersdorff backed away from the window and saw petitioners leave the barbershop and go to an area at the rear of the shop where there were facilities for washing. Borton then staggered out of the building with a knife in his back.

Prison officers testified at the trial that they examined petitioners shortly after the crime and found that Smith had

1. The questions submitted to the referee were:

1. Did any witness who testified against Louis Franklin Smith and John Allen in the trial which led to their conviction on the charges for which they were sentenced to death, commit perjury under sections 118 and 125 of the Penal Code of the State of California, that is, did any such witness willfully state as true any material matter which he knew to be false, or willfully make an unqualified statement of any material matter which he did not know to be true?

2. In the event that such witness or witnesses did commit perjury, did the representatives of the State of California, the district attorney, or any of his deputies or assistants, cause or suffer such testimony to be introduced knowing that such testimony as given was perjured?

3. Did the representatives of the State of California, the district attorney, or any of his deputies or assistants, deliberately, willfully, knowingly, or at all, suppress or prevent the introduction of any evidence which, had it been given, would have been favorable to the defense of said Louis Franklin Smith and John Allen?

2. The referee made the following general findings of fact:

"(1) No witness who testified against Louis Franklin Smith and John Allen in the trial which led to their conviction on the charges for which they were sentenced to death committed perjury. * *

(2) That there being no perjury committed at the time of the trial, no representative of the State of California caused or suffered any testimony to be introduced, knowing that such testimony as given was perjured. (3) No representative of the State of California, the district attorney or any of his deputies * * suppressed or prevented the introduction of any evidence which, had it been given, would have been favorable to the defense of said Louis Franklin Smith and John Allen."

blood spots on his arm and Allen had a fresh cut on his hand. They had blood on their clothing of group A, which was Barton's blood type. A hatchet with blood on it was found in the barbershop, and a search revealed that a leg was missing from a low table in Smith's cell. A criminologist testified that in his opinion the hatchet handle was made from the missing leg, basing his conclusion on similarities between the handle and the remaining table legs as to length, paint layering and arrangement of mortices. The hatchet handle and the handle of the knife found in Barton's back were wrapped with the same kind of paper-backed Scotch masking tape and the torn ends matched, that is the outside end of the tape applied to the hatchet handle matched the inside end of the tape applied to the knife. There was also other evidence tending to connect petitioners with the crime.

Biersdorff's affidavit, which was executed after petitioners were convicted, was set forth as newly discovered evidence in connection with their motions for a new trial. He stated therein, "I want my testimony thrown out of Court. I was made a lot of promises that were never kept * * *. When Mr. McDonald³ [sic] came to the prison to question me, I was shown all of the pictures that were taken after William Barton [sic] was killed. At that time suggestions were made to me, concerning these pictures. Things that if I hadn't been shown I wouldn't of testified to in Court. * * * I did not want to testify because I told Mr. Heinze that I wasn't sure about the two men that I saw in the barber shop. He told me, 'them are the men including Fitzgerald.' Without the coaching I could not have positively identified Allen and Smith."

In our opinion in People v. Smith, 36 Cal.2d at page 449, 224 P.2d 719, we pointed out that Biersdorff did not state that on retrial he would retract any of his testimony, or that he did in fact testify falsely, or that any officer suggested to him that he tell anything about the case that was not the truth.

At the referee's hearing, Biersdorff denied the truth of the material parts of the affidavit, repeated substantially the same testimony he gave at the trial and insisted that at no place in his affidavit did he state that his testimony had been untrue. He claimed that before, during and after the trial he was subjected to threats and physical abuse by his fellow prisoners and that he made the affidavit because he was in fear of his life.

Deputy District Attorney McDonell testified that after the trial Biersdorff complained that he was being intimidated and that he, McDonell, became concerned as to whether Biersdorff had told the truth about what had occurred at the time of the killing. McDonell said that he questioned Biersdorff at length but never discovered anything which appeared "to be a lie, as far as his testimony was concerned." At McDonell's request, Dr. Toler, a psychiatrist, examined Biersdorff for about three hours and Dr. Toler concluded that the "probabilities are that he is telling the truth." Before argument on the motion for a new trial, McDonell advised the district attorney, the defense attorneys and the trial judge of his concern as to whether Biersdorff had told the truth at the trial. As a result, the district attorney interviewed Biersdorff, stating that he was going to argue the motion for a new trial, that he wanted to be sure that Biersdorff's testimony was true and that, if there was any question as to its truth, he would so inform the court. He told Biersdorff that all he wanted was the truth and that he would not prosecute him for perjury. Biersdorff replied that he had told the absolute truth at the trial.

[2,3] The apprehensions of McDonell, of course, did not establish the existence of perjury, and after a review of the record we are convinced, as was the referee, that, while Biersdorff was somewhat unstable, there was a lack of substantial, credible evidence of perjury. But even if we were to assume, as petitioners contend, that Biersdorff did testify falsely, there has been a failure to prove sufficient facts to warrant relief in a habeas corpus proceeding. Petitioners have the burden of showing, not only that they were convicted by perjured testimony, but also that the prosecuting officials suffered the testimony to be introduced knowing that it was perjured. In re Mitchell, 35 Cal.2d 849, 856, 221 P.2d 689; In re Lindley, 29 Cal.2d 709, 722, 177 P.2d 918; In re De La Roi, 28 Cal.2d 264, 269, 169 P.2d 363; In re Mooney, 10 Cal.2d 1, 15, 73 P.2d 554. Here there is a complete lack of evidence that the prosecuting officials knew that the testimony was false. Their conduct, instead of indicating collusion on their part, clearly shows that they made every effort to determine if there was perjured testimony and were unable to find any.

The statements of Mullen and Patterson, in their affidavits which were made about eleven months after the murder and more than six months after the trial, may be summarized as follows: On the morning of October 11, 1949, in response to a request by Borton, they went to the barbershop where they had an argument with Borton over $180. Borton threw a tool box at them and then pulled a hatchet from under a counter. Patterson "got the hatchet some way" and started whacking at Borton, and Mullen then stabbed Borton with a knife. In the midst of the attack, Smith and Allen entered the barbershop and got blood on their clothes while trying to separate the combatants. At no time did Smith or Allen strike a blow. After the fight, Patterson and Mullen went to the chaplain's office where they changed to clean clothes.

At the referee's hearing both Mullen and Patterson testified that their confessions were in all respects truthful, but their testimony does not warrant belief in the light of their prior statements and other evidence.

The "confessions" of Mullen and Patterson are in direct conflict with statements they made when they were questioned by prison authorities on the day of the murder. At that time they both claimed to have been about 100 feet from the barbershop talking to fellow inmates when the killing took place.

When Patterson was interviewed by an investigator for the attorney general's office some months after his confession he said the knife was about 15 inches long with a curve on the end of it "like a butter knife" and that it was made by cutting a piece of metal from the blade of a shovel. Mullen testified that the knife had a long slender curved blade which was sharpened on one side. As a matter of fact, the knife was made of metal far thicker than a shovel and it did not turn up at the end but was a straight bayonet-shaped knife. Patterson testified at the hearing that he had been told the location of the knife and had relayed this information to Mullen, who dug the knife out of the middle of the yard at Folsom. Mullen told an investigator that he had had the knife for quite a while and in his statement to the associate warden at the time he made his confession he said he did not remember how he got it, but he testified at the hearing that he received the knife from another convict when he entered the barbershop and that he had not seen it before. When confronted with the statement he had made to the investigator he said "Well I probably had the knife the night before."

There was also inconsistency with reference to the hatchet used to strike Borton. Patterson stated in his confession that he took the hatchet from Borton who got it from under a counter in the barbershop. When interviewed by an investigator Patterson stated that he had made the handle from a leg of a table in Smith's cell and that he had the hatchet with him when he went into the barbershop. Later he told the investigator that he got the hatchet after he entered the shop, and at the referee's hearing he testified that he was unable to describe the hatchet because he had only had it in his possession for a few minutes.

The statements of Patterson and Mullen in their confessions, repeated in their testimony at the hearing, that petitioners tried to break up the fight in the barbershop, are contrary to the testimony given by petitioners at the trial, not since repudiated, that they were in another part of the prison yard when the murder was committed and that they did not arrive at the scene until a crowd had gathered around Borton. If, as Mullen and Patterson testified, petitioners did not commit the crime but tried to break up the fight in the barbershop, they would have seen Mullen and Patterson committing the crime and they could and should have brought this out at their trial.

The referee was amply justified in finding that the confessions and testimony of Mullen and Patterson were not entitled to belief and that no evidence was suppressed by the authorities.

The order to show cause is discharged, and the petition is denied.

The factual background and events resulting in Dotson's conviction are set forth in the opinion of this court in People v.

Dotson, 46 Cal.2d 891, 299 P.2d 875. As to the present proceeding in prohibition it appears that on October 27, 1955, while his appeal from the judgment of conviction in the criminal case was pending in the District Court of Appeal, Dotson filed a petition for the writ of habeas corpus in the Superior Court alleging that he was in the custody of Harley O. Teets, the warden of the state prison at San Quentin, and that his restraint was unlawful for numerous reasons. The Superior Court issued an order directing the warden to appear on January 20 and show cause if any he had why the writ of habeas corpus should not issue. On January 18 the Attorney General sought a writ of prohibition in the District Court of Appeal in which the appeal was then pending, and an alternative writ was issued staying further proceedings in the habeas corpus matter. The cause was transferred to this court after that court had ordered a peremptory writ. Teets v. Superior Court, Cal.App., 295 P.2d 140.

All of the contentions urged in the habeas corpus proceeding were assigned as grounds for reversal on the appeal in the criminal case and have now been decided adversely to the appellant therein who is the petitioner in the habeas corpus proceeding. The Attorney General contends that further proceedings on the petition in the Superior Court for the writ of habeas corpus should be stayed for the reason that such a proceeding may not be employed as an alternative to the pending appeal, and that such is the purpose of that proceeding. See In re McIntruff, 37 Cal.2d 876, 880, 236 P.2d 574; In re Seeley, 29 Cal.2d 294, 296, 176 P.2d 24; In re Connor, 16 Cal.2d 701, 108 P.2d 10; France v. Superior Court, 201 Cal. 122, 131, 255 P. 815, 52 A.L.R. 869; In re Guitierrez, 1 Cal.App.2d 281, 36 P.2d 712.

[1,2] It is obvious that the question raised by the Attorney General became moot upon the determination of the appeal by this court in the criminal action. It is also true that the contentions advanced by the petitioner in habeas corpus have been determined by this court on the appeal from the judgment of conviction. It would therefore serve no useful purpose to continue the prosecution of either the habeas corpus proceeding or the proceeding in prohibition. However, if the trial court should assume, under these circumstances, to discharge the petitioner in the habeas corpus proceeding its order would be subject to appeal by the People as provided in section 1506 of the Penal Code.

The present proceeding in prohibition is dismissed.

Plaintiff and Respondent,

v.

James REESE, Defendant and Appellant.

Cr. 5923.

Supreme Court of California,

In Bank.

Oct. 5, 1956.

Defendant was convicted of two murders of the first degree, three burglaries of the first degree, assault with intent to murder, and rape. The Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco, Orla St. Clair, J., entered judgment, and the case was brought to Supreme Court by automatic appeal from the judgment and order denying a new trial. The Supreme Court held, inter alia, that statement by district attorney in argument to jury that one sentenced to penitentiary for life becomes eligible for parole after seven years or, "perhaps, a couple of years more", and instruction that defendant, though given a life sentence, would be eligible for parole after serving a minimum term of nine years did not have the effect of improperly bringing prior felony conviction of defendant to attention of jury.

Judgment and order affirmed.

1. Criminal Law Ⓒ1202(4)

Where defendant does not testify and admits prior conviction, it is improper to bring such prior conviction to the attention of jury. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 1025.

2. Criminal Law Ⓒ1202(4)

In prosecution for first degree murder and other offenses, wherein defendant admitted prior felony conviction and did not testify, statement by district attorney in argument to jury that one sentenced to the penitentiary for life becomes eligible for parole after seven years or, "perhaps, a couple of years more", and instruction that, even though given a life sentence, defendant would become eligible for parole after serving a minimum term of nine years, did not have the effect of improperly bringing prior conviction to attention of jury. Pen.Code, §§ 1025, 3046.

3. Criminal Law Ⓒ1172(9)

Where defense counsel in prosecution for first degree murder and other offenses argued to jury that defendant would never be paroled if given a life sentence, instruction that, even though given a life sentence, defendant would be eligible for parole after serving minimum term of nine years, was not prejudicial to defendant, even if statute prescribing minimum term of sentence and imprisonment of ten years for a person previously convicted of a felony and armed with a deadly weapon was applicable, since under statute dealing with paroles he would be eligible for parole after expiration of one-third of such minimum term. 4. Homicide Ⓒ174(2), 264

Relevant evidence of the condition of victim's body is admissible in prosecution for murder, though it may be gruesome and possibly inflammatory, and cumulative evidence on the subject may be proper.

5. Homicide Ⓒ264

In prosecution for first-degree murder, testimony of physicians and police officers that after death of victim her breasts had been amputated and abdomen cut from vagina to navel was admissible as relevant to intent, motive and circumstances of the killing, even though condition of victim's body was shown by photographs and other evidence.

6. Criminal Law Ⓒ1165(1)

Record on appeal from convictions for two murders of the first degree, three burglaries of the first degree, assault with intent to murder, and rape disclosed no error prejudicial to rights of defendant.

PER CURIAM.

Defendant was indicted on seven counts for the murder of Georgia Barrett, on December 26, 1955, and of Elizabeth Simpson on December 28, 1955, assault with intent to murder Betty Luke on December 26, 1955, burglary of Luke's apartment, Barrett's apartment and Simpson's apartment, and the rape of Elizabeth Simpson on December 28, 1955. By amendment he was also charged with a prior felony conviction, which he admitted. He pleaded not guilty and not guilty by reason of insanity to the seven counts and the jury found him sane and guilty on all counts, specifying the murders and burglaries as of first degree and making no recommendation as to the penalty for the murders. Judgment was accordingly entered imposing the death penalties for each of the murders and that prescribed by law for the other counts. The case is here by automatic appeal from the judgment and order denying a motion for a new trial. No contention is made that the evidence does not support the judgment. Defendant did not testify.

The evidence shows that about midnight on December 25, 1955, an intruder entered Mrs. Luke's apartment at 950 Eddy Street in San Francisco. A struggle ensued and the intruder demanded, "Your money or your life." Mrs. Luke was hit on the head with a chair and cut with a knife. The intruder fled. His general description fit that of defendant and the latter left a button from his coat on the floor. The intruder took a knife from the Luke's kitchen. Blood of the type of Mrs. Luke's and defendant's was found in the apartment.

On December 26, 1955, at about 6:00 a. m., a short distance from the Luke's place, Georgia Barrett was slain by a stab in the neck causing her to bleed to death. Before she died, Georgia gave a description of her assailant which was generally that of defendant. In her room was a great deal of blood and the knife that had been taken from the Luke's apartment. Defendant's clothes had blood on them of the type of Georgia's.

About 2:30 a. m. on December 28, 1955, defendant returned to his room at an apartment building at 1230 O'Farrell Street, which was on the same floor as that on which Elizabeth Simpson, a 13-year-old girl, lived with her mother. Elizabeth's mother awakened and finding Elizabeth gone from her bed and blood on the bed, notified the police who, when they came, roused all the tenants but could get no response at defendant's room. They forced an entrance, defendant having pushed a refrigerator against the door, and there found Elizabeth's body. A knife was lying on top of it. Defendant had fled through his window and down the fire escape when he saw the police cars in the street. A short time later he was arrested at the Pacific Greyhound bus depot where he told the police, in reply to why he did it, that he guessed it was the wine; it made him crazy. Elizabeth died from stab wounds in her neck. There was spermatozoa in her vagina. Her body was mutilated in that her breasts were amputated and abdomen slashed. Defendant's ring was found in Elizabeth's room and a trail of blood ran from there to defendant's room.

Defendant contends that he was deprived of a fair trial in violation of his constitutional rights to not testify because his prior conviction of a felony was improperly brought to the jury's attention. He asserts that he was entitled to desist from taking the witness stand; that inasmuch as he admitted the prior conviction and did not testify, there was no basis for injecting the prior conviction into the trial and that he was prejudiced by its presentation to the jury. He cites section 1025 of the Penal Code¹ and People v. Beal, 108 Cal.App.2d 200, 239 P.2d 84, and People v. Cordero, 92 Cal.App.2d 196, 206 P.2d 665.

[1,2] Inasmuch as defendant did not testify and admitted the prior conviction, it was not proper to bring it to the attention of the jury, but defendant has not established such a situation here. He did admit the prior conviction and did not testify, nor was there any attempt to compel him to testify. He refers to the district attorney's argument to the jury,² and the instruction offered by the prosecution

1. "In case the defendant pleads not guilty, and answers that he has suffered the previous conviction, the charge of the previous conviction must not be read to the jury, nor alluded to on the trial."

2. The district attorney stated: "Do you say 'Send him over to the penitentiary with a life sentence?' Ladies and gentlemen, a life sentence in California is not a life sentence. A man who goes to the penitentiary with a natural life sentence in California, becomes eligible for parole after a period of seven years, or, in some cases, perhaps, a couple of years more. We have men on the streets now who have been in San Quentin for life, and are walking the streets again. Pray God that none of them ever repeats the crime, but it has happened in these courts and given to the jury,³ and the fact that the jury had been sitting as such in other cases (what kind does not appear) and had had experience. From these things he argues that the jury was in effect told that defendant had suffered a prior conviction, otherwise there would be no occasion to the reference to seven years by the district attorney and nine years in the instruction.

We do not so interpret the record. Nothing was said about a prior conviction and to give defendant's argument force would require the jury to know more law than is to be supposed. It is too remote a possibility that the jury would infer that defendant suffered a prior conviction from the circumstances that they were told of the possibility of parole involved in a life sentence. Defendant agrees that it is proper for the jury to be advised of the possibility of parole in a life sentence where the punishment, life imprisonment or death, is left to the jury. We said in People v. Barclay, 40 Cal.2d 146, 158, 252 P.2d 321, 327: "[T]he jury is not allowed to weigh the possibility of parole or pardon in determining the guilt of the defendant, and it is therefore error to give an instruction that allows the jury to take into consideration the consequences of a recommendation of life imprisonment in arriving at that determination. * * * To aid the jury in fixing the punishment of the defendant, however, the court may instruct the jury as to the consequences of the different penalties that may be imposed so that an intelligent decision may be made. People v. Chessman, 38 Cal.2d 166, 189-190, 238 P.2d 1001; People v. Osborn, 37 Cal.2d 380, 384-385, 231 P.2d 850; People v. Caetano, 29 Cal.2d 616, 619, 177 P.2d 1; People v. La Verne, 212 Cal. 29, 31, 297 P. 561; People v. Hall, 199 Cal. 451, 459, 249 P. 859; People v. Hong Ah Duck, 61 Cal. 387, 393. In the Osborn case, the court informed the jury that a recommendation of life imprisonment without possibility of parole would not be binding, thus impliedly answering in the affirmative the question of the jury whether a person sentenced to life imprisonment might be paroled. We stated: 'It is understandable that jurors, who are charged with the duty of fixing the penalty in the event that they find a defendant guilty of first degree murder, should be interested in knowing the nature and effect of the penalties which they may impose; and neither reason nor authority indicates that the trial court should be prohibited from enlightening the jurors when questions are asked upon that subject.' 37 Cal.2d at page 385, 231 P.2d [850] at page 853. Recently, in People v. Chessman, supra, it was held that there was no error in informing a jury that when a person is sentenced to life imprisonment without possibility of parole there nevertheless remains the chance that the defendant will be freed by pardon, commutation, or action of the Legislature. The recent decisions of this court thus establish that a jury may within the last two years, that the same thing has happened. * * *" (Emphasis added.)

3. "If, however, after deliberation and consideration of all the evidence as viewed in the light of the Court's instructions, and if, without considering penalty or punishment, you do find the defendant guilty of murder in the first degree, you must then determine which of the two penalties—death or confinement in the State Prison—shall be imposed by you. In this respect, and without in any way attempting to influence your determination of the punishment, it is proper for you to know that even though the defendant should be sentenced to confinement in the State Prison for life, he will become, under our law, eligible to go on parole outside the prison walls and enclosures when he shall have served a minimum term of nine years. Although a jury may fix the punishment as confinement in the State Prison for life, the legal effect is not necessarily that the prisoner will not become eligible for parole. Whether or not a parole is granted to him is within the discretion of the Board known as the Adult Authority, which meets regularly to determine and re-determine what length of time such person shall be imprisoned, unless the sentence be sooner terminated by commutation or pardon by the Governor of the State." (Emphasis added.)

consider the consequences of a recommendation of life imprisonment in determining the punishment of the defendant, although it may not consider the possible penalties in determining the guilt of the defendant." (Emphasis added.) See, also, People v. Byrd, 42 Cal.2d 200, 266 P.2d 505.

In this same connection defendant urges that the prosecution intended to bring the prior conviction to the jury's attention in that the jury instruction heretofore quoted as offered by the prosecution contained the words "seven years" or, in the case of one who has been convicted of a felony, perhaps a longer period. The instruction was given as heretofore quoted, however, and we fail to see how the prosecution's intention is important.

[3] As a further attack on the quoted instruction defendant claims that the time would be at least 10 years instead of the nine years under section 3024⁴ of the Penal Code. The prosecution cited sections 3020, 3040 and 3046 of the Penal Code as authority for the instruction. Section 3046 provides: "No prisoner imprisoned under a life sentence may be paroled until he has served at least seven calendar years. The board shall, in considering a parole for such prisoner, consider all statements and recommendations which may have been submitted by the judge, district attorney, and sheriff, pursuant to Section 1203.1, or in response to notices given under Sections 3022 and 3042, and recommendations of other persons interested in the granting or denying of such parole. The board shall enter on its order granting or denying parole to such prisoners, the fact that such statements and recommendations have been considered by the board. Such statements and recommendations shall, however, be and remain confidential." The prosecution claims that section 3024, supra, is not applicable because under paragraph (e) there-

4. "The following shall be the minimum term of sentence and imprisonment in certain cases, notwithstanding any other provisions of this code, or any provision of law specifying a lesser sentence:

"(a) For a person previously convicted of a felony, but armed with a deadly weapon either at the time of his commission of the offense, or a concealed deadly weapon at the time of his arrest, five years;

"(b) For a person previously convicted of a felony either in this State or elsewhere, and armed with a deadly weapon, either at the time of his commission of the offense, or a concealed deadly weapon at the time of his arrest, 10 years;

"(c) For a person previously convicted of a felony either in this State or elsewhere, but not armed with a deadly weapon at the time of his commission of the offense, or a concealed deadly weapon at the time of his arrest, five years;

"(d) For a person convicted at one trial of more than one felony, and upon whom are imposed cumulative or consecutive sentences the aggregate of the minimum terms of which exceed 10 years, 10 years;

"(e) Such minimum penalties shall apply only when such possession of a deadly weapon or previous conviction of a felony as above specified has been charged and admitted or found to be true in the manner provided by law and the minimum terms specified in paragraphs (a) and (b) shall not apply in those cases wherein the property stolen or sought to be stolen is an animal or animals and the manner in which such property is taken or attempted to be taken constitutes the crime of theft and the weapon used during the commission thereof is not used or intended to be used against a person or to resist arrest.

"(f) The words 'deadly weapon' as used in this section are hereby defined to include any instrument or weapon of the kind commonly known as a blackjack, slung shot, billy, sandclub, sandbag, metal knuckles, any dirk, dagger, pistol, revolver, or any other firearm, any knife having a blade longer than five inches, any razor with an unguarded blade and any metal pipe or bar used or intended to be used as a club.

"(g) For the purpose of determining whether or not a conviction for a public offense in another jurisdiction is a previous felony conviction under this section, the word 'felony' is defined as a public offense which, if committed in this State, could have been punished as a felony under the laws of this State. Where such an offense is punishable in this State either as a felony or as a misdemeanor, it may be deemed a felony for the purposes of this section." Pen. Code, § 3024.

of there must have been a charge that defendant was armed with a deadly weapon and such charge must be found true, and no such charge was made here. They also urge that section 3046 is controlling as it specially deals with parole of one imprisoned for life. This last argument appears meritorious for section 3024 is in a portion of the Penal Code dealing with the length of sentences and the fixing thereof while section 3046 is in the group of sections dealing with paroles. The latter group of sections covers all situations in regard to when and how parole may be granted. Pen.Code, §§ 3040-3065. In that group appears section 3049 providing: "In all other cases not heretofore provided for, no prisoner may be paroled until he has served the minimum term of imprisonment provided by law for the offense of which he was convicted * * * provided, that any prisoner, received on or after January 1, 1948, at any state prison or institution under the jurisdiction of the Director of Corrections, whose minimum term of imprisonment is more than one year, may be paroled at any time after the expiration of one-third of the minimum term. In all other cases he may be paroled at any time after he has served the minimum term prescribed by law." Thus even if section 3024 applies, parole may be granted after one-third of the minimum term in section 3024 has expired. Moreover the matter of one or two years is not of such importance as to prejudice defendant. The main thing is that he would have been subject to parole in the event of a life sentence and defendant had argued to the jury that defendant would never be paroled if he were given a life rather than a death sentence.

Defendant claims that evidence of the mutilation of the body of Elizabeth Simpson was given which served to inflame the jury. He points to the testimony of Drs. Warrens, Turkel and Moon and police officers Nelder and Higgins that her breasts were amputated and abdomen cut from the vagina to the navel. This was done after Miss Simpson was dead from a stab wound in the neck. Defendant objected to this testimony but in other instances it was admitted without objection by him, which may be explained by the clear indication by the court that it would not sustain his objection. His main complaint is that photographs and other evidence showed the condition of Miss Simpson's body and the additional evidence adverted to by him served no purpose except to inflame the jury.

It is said in People v. Burns, 109 Cal. App.2d 524, 541, 241 P.2d 308, 319, 242 P.2d 9, cited by defendant: "In California it has been held that photographs of this kind are admissible even though they show marks of the incisions for the autopsy, People v. Gomez, 209 Cal. 296, 286 P. 998, and even though they might inflame the minds of the jurors against the defendant. People v. Burkhardt, 211 Cal. 726, 297 P. 11. However, in every case in which they were admitted, with the possible exception of the Burkhardt case, supra, where the evidence points positively and unmistakably to the defendant as the perpetrator of the homicide', 211 Cal. at page 730, 297 P. [11] at page 13, there was some necessity for exhibiting the wound or wounds to the jury. In People v. Elmore, 167 Cal. 205, 212, 138 P. 989, the court pointed out that photographs should not be offered or admitted for any purpose other than to help the jury. The admission of photographs of this type is within the sound discretion of the trial court. Surely, there is a line between admitting a photograph which is of some help to the jury in solving the facts of the case and one which is of no value other than to inflame the minds of the jurors. That line was crossed in this case." But in that case the photographs were particularly horrible because of the incisions by the autopsy physician rather than that caused by defendant.

[4, 5] Relevant evidence of the condition of deceased's body is admissible although it may be gruesome and possibly inflammatory. People v. Isby, 30 Cal.2d 879, 186 P.2d 405; People v. Guldbrandsen, 35 Cal.2d 514, 218 P.2d 977; People v.

Dunn, 29 Cal.2d 654, 177 P.2d 553; People v. Burwell, 44 Cal.2d 16, 279 P.2d 744; People v. Cavanaugh, 44 Cal.2d 252, 282 P.2d 53; People v. Sutic, 41 Cal.2d 483, 261 P.2d 241. And cumulative evidence on the subject may be proper, People v. Dunn, supra, 29 Cal.2d 654, 659, 177 P.2d 553; People v. Reed, 38 Cal.2d 423, 240 P.2d 590. Here the evidence was clearly relevant to intent, motive and the circumstances of the killing and we cannot say that it added appreciably to the other evidence to the same effect.

[6] We have examined the entire record in this case. It discloses a career of crime almost unparalleled in the history of this state. It also discloses that defendant was accorded a fair and impartial trial before a jury presided over by an able and experienced trial judge. He was ably defended by the public defender who was zealous in seeking to protect and safeguard all of defendant's rights. We find no error prejudicial to the rights of the defendant. The evidence of guilt of each and all of the crimes charged is overwhelming.

The judgment and order denying a new trial are affirmed.

Cr. 1210.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District,
California.

Sept. 28, 1956.

Hearing Denied Oct. 24, 1956.

Prosecution of defendant, marshal of judicial district, for wilful misconduct in office. Following a jury verdict of guilty on certain specifications, the Superior Court of Kern County, Charles E. Blackstock, J., entered order granting defendant a new trial, and State appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Burch, J., pro tem., held that under evidence showing that bookkeeping function of office was almost entirely handled by employee, there was enough to indicate reasonable doubt of defendant's guilt in connection with issuance of checks without sufficient funds to make the granting of a new trial within the discretion of the trial court.

Affirmed.

1. Officers ⇐121

Phrase "misconduct in office" is broad enough to include any wilful malfeasance, misfeasance or nonfeasance in office.

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Misconduct in Office".

2. Officers ⇐66

The misconduct for which a public officer may be removed from office on accusation by a grand jury may be either wilful or corrupt, and in this connection, "wilfully" implies simply a purpose of willingness to commit the act or make the omission referred to and does not require an intent to violate law, injure another or to acquire any advantage.

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Wilfully".

3. Criminal Law ⇐935(1)

In determining sufficiency of evidence on a motion for new trial, trial judge is not bound by rules as to conflicts in evidence but may disregard such evidence as he believes to be untrue and draw inferences therefrom at variance from those drawn by the jury.

4. Criminal Law ⇐935(1)

Rule that court will not disturb findings based on conflicting evidence applies only to the appellate court and has no application to a judge in passing on a motion for new trial.

5. Criminal Law §935(1)

Where defendant in criminal case moves for a new trial, he is entitled to a decision on the evidence by the trial court even though the jury has brought in a verdict against him.

6. Criminal Law §935(1)

In prosecution of marshal of judicial district for misconduct in office, under evidence showing that bookkeeping function of office was almost entirely handled by an employee, there was enough to indicate reasonable doubt of marshal's guilt in connection with issuance of checks without sufficient funds so that granting of a new trial was within discretion of trial court.

7. Criminal Law §1156(1)

Where it is within the discretion of the trial court to grant a motion for new trial, appellate court may not overrule that discretion.

BURCH, Justice pro tem.

This is an appeal by the people from an order granting a motion for a new trial following a trial in which the jury found defendant guilty of misconduct in office. The defendant is the Marshal of the Kern County Bakersfield Judicial District, an office which he has occupied since the institution of that Judicial District in 1952.

On November 17, 1955, an accusation was presented by the Kern County Grand Jury accusing the defendant of twenty-one specifications of wilful misconduct in office as Marshal of the Municipal Court in said district. Eight of the twenty-one specifications were dismissed on motion before trial. After the jury returned a verdict of guilty on specifications 3 to 7 inclusive the remainder of the twenty-one were dismissed by the court.

The five specifications upon which the jury found the defendant guilty alleged that on the several dates of March 29, March 30, April 1, April 5 and April 7, respectively, the defendant issued checks upon a bank deposit of public funds under his official control as Marshal, which checks were drawn upon insufficient funds.

The defendant moved for a new trial alleging that the verdicts were contrary to the law and the evidence, and that the trial judge erred in admitting evidence of conduct that occurred in a term of office prior to the term he was serving when charged with misconduct. The motion was granted on both grounds.

Defendant's office was administered by him with an assistant and deputy marshals providing bailiff service for the Municipal Court and the service and execution of legal process. With respect to the latter function the defendant was provided receipt forms furnished by the County.

Defendant's records and accounts, including funds on hand in the office, on deposit in banks authorized to receive county funds, and deposits made into the County Treasury were audited annually and no irregularities thereby were shown in evidence. The latest audit of that character was in January, 1955. A special audit thereafter revealed the overdrafts involved here. The defendant had deposited moneys in his control in a bank as a depository of public funds, subject to remittance monthly to the County Treasury. It was proved that on the dates of March 29th and 30th, and April 1st, 5th and 7th, the bank funds on deposit were insufficient to meet checks drawn thereon on those dates. The fact that checks were issued and outstanding with insufficient funds in the depository went to the jury as a stipulated fact binding upon the defendant.

The question on appeal is whether this fact, supported by evidence that the defendant was informed of the failure of his office, on other occasions, to correctly and lawfully handle the public moneys in his charge, made the granting of a new trial by the trial judge an abuse of judicial discretion. The record discloses that the public moneys in defendant's charge were handled with something less than the care which would protect their unwarranted and unlawful uses by office personnel who might prove untrustworthy. There was, for instance, evidence that money received was sometimes kept in a cash box, in desks, files and envelopes, and that checks were found which were delayed in deposit. At times checks were drawn but not delivered.

Defendant testified in his own behalf, stating the nature of his work as Marshal, in general, and the administrative methods he employed in his office, including the duties assigned to office personnel, process servers and bailiffs under the control of the Marshal and Assistant Marshal. He was questioned about the bookkeeping system, and said:

"Mr. Mansfield was the administrator for the County of Kern at that time, and he came in and assisted us in ordering all types of forms and systems * * * he was over there from the time we opened * * * maybe most of the whole month * *. He instructed me and Miss Camp at that time was in the office—taking care of the office, the money and systems to be carried out, and he instructed her and I together."

He testified that Miss Camp had worked for defendant since 1947, when he was a constable in Bakersfield. Defendant and Miss Camp were instructed as to funds by Mr. Mansfield.

"Well, when we went out and brought in any money * * * for services * * * or money that belonged to the plaintiffs * * * or attorneys on executions or attachments, we didn't always get the money on attachments because the employer or the bank held that money until the execution, but whenever we did get the money, it was put in our checking account which was opened up, and endorsed by him in the Anglo Bank; and then it was checked out what money was to be paid over to the County that was held pending a judgment, called trust money, and then at the end of the month all the County fees were made up and the amount reached and a check issued from that account to the County Treasurer; and any individual that had any money coming on execution * * *. That was the instructions given to Miss Camp in the office."

He said Miss Camp had been his trusted employee handling the funds when he was a constable, and had theretofore proved trustworthy.

"Q. Now who had charge of the money after you were Marshal? A. Well, Miss Camp had charge of all of the making out of the papers and all the banking and all the issues of checks * * * under my instructions that was her duty."

"Now did you ever know that Miss Camp was not following out your instruction? I did not * * * Miss Camp was given the power to sign the checks by me."

"Q. And did you ever sign any checks? I believe during the whole course of time I might have signed a half dozen * * * that would only be in her absence. * * *"

"My office was audited once a year and as late as January, 1955. * * * No complaints was ever made to me by the auditors that anything was wrong in my office."

The attorney for the people makes the point that the defendant knew or should have known of the stipulated overdrafts of specifications 2 to 7 inclusive. The following testimony of defendant bears upon the point:

"Miss Campbell from the County Counsel's office was little anxious sometimes to get her papers back, and the girls were piled up with quite a bit of work; * * * she called up and wanted to know why she couldn't get her papers back, and I told her that I would see to it that she got them back in a short time, and I did; and they were sent back. That's the only time that I had ever had any complaint, and I did find that they were overstacked with work, and there were other papers to get out before hers that came in * * *.

"Did anybody ever complain to you any time about any shortage? They did not."

All the checks were honored by the bank, without informing defendant of the overdraft.

If, as appears to us, we have extracted from almost a thousand pages of transcript, enough to indicate a reasonable doubt of guilt projected upon the trained mind of the trial judge, it is unnecessary to lengthen the statement of the evidence.

[1-4] It is true the phrase "misconduct in office" is broad enough to include any wilful malfeasance, misfeasance or nonfeasance in office. As pointed out in People v. Elliott, 115 Cal.App.2d 410, 252 P.2d 661, 666, misconduct for which a public officer may be removed from office on accusation by a Grand Jury may be either wilful or corrupt. "Wilfully", in this connection, "implies simply a purpose of willingness to commit the act, or make the omission referred to. It does not require an intent to violate law, or to injure another, or to acquire any advantage." However, "knowingly" requires "knowledge that the facts exist which constitute the transgression." See People v. Elliott, supra, 115 Cal.App.2d at page 419, 252 P.2d at page 667.

"It is elementary that, in determining the sufficiency of the evidence on a motion for a new trial, the trial judge is not bound by the rule as to conflicts in the evidence. He may disregard such evidence as he believes to be untrue and may draw inferences therefrom at variance from those drawn by the jury. The rule that the court will not disturb findings based on conflicting evidence applies only to the appellate court. It has no application to a trial judge in passing on a motion for a new trial. People v. Harband, 99 Cal.App. 32, 277 P. 1102." People v. Megladdery, 40 Cal. App.2d 748, 768, 106 P.2d 84, 95.

An extensive quotation from People v. Canfield, 173 Cal. 309, 311, 159 P. 1046, set out in the Megladdery opinion, 40 Cal. App.2d at pages 768-769, 106 P.2d at pages 94-95, spells out the sharp line of distinction between the duties of the trial and reviewing courts in cases of this character.

[5] The defendant is entitled to a decision on the evidence by the trial court even though the jury has brought in a verdict against him.

"While the solemn verdict of a jury should not lightly be vacated the responsibility nevertheless rests with the court again to review the cause and only after such review to decide the application for a new trial. Olinger v. Pacific Greyhound Lines, 7 Cal.App. 2d 484 [46 P.2d 774]." People v. Megladdery, supra, 40 Cal.App.2d at page 770, 106 P.2d at page 96.

[6,7] In the instant case the stipulated overdrafts are not conclusive of wilful misconduct in office on the part of the Marshal. The specifications charged the defendant "did wilfully and unlawfully know or should have known" of the several overdrafts. Upon the record there is ample reason to support the conclusion by the trial court that defendant did not know of the irregularities, and beyond that his failure of awareness might impress the court as more a mistake of judgment than a purposeful disregard of the care and diligence which would have avoided the overdrafts. If this be true and the trial court so believed it was his duty under the authorities above cited to grant the motion for a new trial. "That is a matter solely within his power. This court is not permitted to overrule that discretion." People v. Megladdery, supra, 40 Cal.App.2d at page 785, 106 P.2d at page 103.

Civ. 5431.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District, California.

Oct. 5, 1956.

Action to quiet title to mining claims. The Superior Court, San Diego County, William A. Glen, J., entered judgment adverse to all but one of the plaintiffs and plaintiffs adversely affected appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Griffin, J., held that although plaintiffs had not signed a lease which had been signed by defendants as lessors and under which plaintiffs had gone into possession of mining claims, plaintiffs were estopped from claiming mining claims in their own name.

Affirmed.

1. Mines and Minerals ☞38(15)

In action to quiet title to mining claims, evidence was sufficient to show that lease which was signed by defendants as lessors but which was not signed by plaintiffs was in effect and that plaintiffs were in possession under such lease during time plaintiffs attempted to establish their own title by filing their own location notices.

2. Frauds, Statute of ☞129(4)

Mines and Minerals ☞38(15)

Although plaintiffs in action to quiet title to mining claims had not signed lease which had been signed by defendants as lessors and under which plaintiffs had gone into possession of mining claims, such lease was binding on plaintiffs and was admissible in evidence. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 1624.

3. Mines and Minerals ☞60

Although plaintiffs in action to quiet title to mining claims had not signed lease which had been signed by defendants as lessors and under which plaintiffs had gone into possession of mining claims, plaintiffs were estopped from claiming mining claims in their own name.

4. Mines and Minerals ☞38(2, 14)

In action to quiet title to mining claims, burden rested upon plaintiffs to show that their title was superior to that of defendants and plaintiffs must recover upon strength of their own title and not upon weakness of defendants' title.

GRIFFIN, Justice.

Plaintiffs Lois Hines, individually and as administratrix of the estate of Kenneth J. Hines, deceased, Fred Wuertz, Pauline Wuertz, and Mina I. Johnson brought this action against defendant Joseph H. Hubble, Lucille Hubble, Chemical Plant Food Corporation, et al., for declaratory relief, to quiet title to certain mining claims in Jacumba Mining District in San Diego County, known as Vermiculite No. 1, No. 2, No. 3, No. 4A, and 5A, alleging that the Hines were owners in common and of record, and were in possession of said claims for a long time; that they and the Wuertzs were such owners in common of the Vermiculite No. 4 claim; that plaintiff Mina I. Johnson was such owner of Ceresite-Muscovite No. 2 claim, and that all of them had performed all the acts as required under the Public Resources Code of the State of California and the Federal Laws to perfect their claims to said mining locations; that defendants claim some estate or interest in them adverse to plaintiffs. Judgment is sought declaring their respective rights.

Defendants, by way of answer, deny plaintiffs' claims and by way of cross-complaint allege that they own certain designated claims in that district described as Mountain View No. 1, No. 2, Center View, Center View No. 2, End View, End View No. 2, Poodle Dog, and Terminal, covering the same property and described as "Circle Group" claims; that defendants are the owners thereof; that on June 3, 1952, defendant Hubble, Dan Nolan, L. E. Watt and F. S. Kearney signed and executed a mining lease of said property to Wilbur C. Kinney and Kenneth J. Hines for a period of 20 years beginning June 3, 1952, but that said lease was abandoned by the lessees about December, 1952; that Nolan, Watt and Kearney have no interest in said property; that the interest of Nolan and Kearney terminated by virtue of their failure to contribute the labor and improvement from 1942 to 1954, which was necessary to hold said claims; that notice of forfeiture under section 2324 of the Revised Statutes of the United States, 30 U.S.C.A. § 28, was served on them on August 6, 1954; that L. E. Watt never had an interest in said mine; that Kinney claims no interest in said lease; that plaintiffs refused to quitclaim the interest of Hines in said mines covered by said lease; that on March 10, 1955, defendants demanded such a deed, and that the claims of the plaintiffs are frivolous. Judgment is sought against plaintiffs for damages for failure of plaintiffs to execute such a deed. Defendants ask for judgment quieting their title to such claims. The trial court found that plaintiff Mina I. Johnson's title to the claim should be quieted against defendants but found in favor of defendants against the claimed title of the other plaintiffs to the property alleged. The latter appealed from the portion of the judgment denying them relief under their complaint. They also claim that the order denying their motion to vacate that portion of the judgment and to grant them a new trial should be reversed.

The record comes to us on a settled statement of facts. Between 1938 and 1943, Hubble, Nolan and others filed lode mining claims upon the lands which are the subject of this controversy. About June, 1952, Kenneth J. Hines, now deceased, sought out Hubble and expressed an interest in leasing certain of the claims which Hubble and his associates had filed on, for the purpose of mining them. Conversations ensued between Hines and the prospective lessors, Hubble, Nolan, Watt and Kearney. On June 3, 1952, a document was drawn by the prospective lessors entitled "Mine Lease", describing the subject claims and setting forth a lease for 20 years with certain considerations going to the lessors. The lessees named were Kenneth J. Hines and one Wilbur C. Kinney. This document was signed by Hubble, Nolan, Watt and Kearney, as lessors. It was never signed by Hines nor Kinney. Hines and Kinney went upon the ground and started exploratory and development work. A controversy came up afterwards as to the validity of the lessors' ownership or right in the subject claims. Nolan and Kearney testified that after going upon the ground Hines had gone to the Hubble group and stated to them that he had come to the conclusion that their claims were not good in that they required discovery work, and annual labor had never been done upon the claims; that he was not willing to sign a lease to the claims as he did not believe that they had the right to lease them; that he regarded the ground as open for location and he proposed that he and the Hubble group cooperate in relocating and proving the claims; that if they would not agree to such proposal he proposed to locate the claims in his own name.

Nolan, a co-locator with Hubble as to three of the six subject claims, testified that he had been one of the parties along with Hubble and others, in locating the said three claims during the years 1938 to 1943; that he had difficulty in remembering but as to work done "we made a cut on the top of a hill, probably six feet deep * * * we were just prospecting"; that the work done by Hines was the first work he had seen done upon the ground; and that he did not know what Hubble had done. Nolan further testified that he had participated in the leasing discussion between Hines and Hubble; that Hines came to him and told him that he did not believe their claims upon the ground were good for lack of the necessary discovery and assessment work; that he (Hines) would not sign a lease to the claims for that reason; that he believed the ground to be open for location; that he (Hines) would cooperate with Hubble, Nolan, et al., in relocating the claims, and if not, he planned to file upon the claims in his own right; that following this conversation with Hines he gave to Hines his quitclaim deed to his rights in the claims in return for Hines' promise to associate him in the Hines' development of the claims. Kearney, one of the lessors, testified in the same vein as Nolan.

Plaintiffs offered evidence that Hines, between September 22, 1952, and April 30, 1954, filed the six claims upon which plaintiffs' appeal is based; that during this time he was actively working upon the ground and had expended considerable money in development work; that during this same period of time Mina I. Johnson, who does not appeal, filed her claim upon the ground adjoining the Hines claims which, in its entirety, overlays a portion of the ground claimed by the Hubble group under one or more of the six claims alleged. Plaintiffs offered their proof of discovery, location and assessment work. The Wuertzs acquired their interest in the claims by way of conveyance from the plaintiffs Hines. Plaintiffs offered evidence that they had remained in peaceful possession of the subject claims from the dates of their filings until June 1, 1954, at which time Hubble served upon them his notice that they vacate said claims immediately.

By way of defense, Hubble sought to show that Kenneth J. Hines had gone into possession of the claims which Hines and Wuertz now claim, under a lease from Joseph H. Hubble, et al., and that therefore plaintiffs were estopped to prove their title under the familiar rule that a tenant is estopped to deny the title of his landlord, and by the familiar rule that a person who knows that a mining claim is in the possession of another, and that it has been located by him, cannot, in good faith, make a claim of location thereon. Defendants offered in evidence the written document of lease, previously described, which had been drawn up and signed by the parties indicated, excepting the signatures of the Hines and Kinney.

Plaintiffs objected to the reception of this document in evidence, relying on the Statute of Frauds, Civ.Code, Sec. 1624. It was received in evidence and the court held that the lease was taken out of the Statute of Frauds by part performance on the part of plaintiffs, i. e., Hines and Kinney going into possession of the ground plus payments made by Kinney to Hubble which are hereafter described; and that it also bore on the question of good faith of the plaintiffs.

Hubble testified in some detail that the discovery and location work had been done on the ground as to each of the claims in dispute; that he had recorded the necessary notices of proof of annual labor and that annual labor had been performed upon some portion of the claims in each required year in an amount that would suffice to preserve his rights in all of the claims; that the claims were grouped for the purpose of annual labor and that much of the work was in the construction of roads of access to the claims; that Hines did not ever state to him that he would not sign the lease nor that he did not believe that the Hubble group had a valid claim to the ground nor that he considered the ground open for location nor that he proposed an association of all the parties in relocating and developing the claims nor that, if the group could not work together he (Hines) planned to file upon the claims in his own right, until after he had, in fact, filed on said claims; and that the persons, other than himself, named in the lease agreement, were so named only as promoters.

Kinney testified that he and Hines had an oral agreement that they would work the subject ground as equal partners under the purported lease; that he did not participate in any discussion of leasing with the lessors; that he was never asked to sign the lease but had had it in his possession "until recently" and believed it had been delivered to him by Mr. Hines; that he first went upon the ground within a month of June 3, 1952 (the date of the instrument); that he was, at various times, working upon the ground during the period between the latter part of June and sometime in September, 1952; that he had from one to three men working there at different times; that under the rental agreement he and Hines were to pay either one hundred or two hundred dollars per month; that he paid that amount of rental himself "for a couple of months" and that Hines was to reimburse him as to one-half of the rent, but that Hines never did; that later the rent was reduced to fifty dollars a month and then finally to twenty-five dollars a month; that Hines never did contribute either financially or physically at any time to their operation; that he had notice from Hines at one time that Hines was terminating their working agreement; and that their agreement then "just more or less died a natural death".

Copies of original notices of location, duly recorded, were introduced in evidence on behalf of the defendants. Proof of annual labor bearing recordation marks for the years 1938 through 1954 were introduced into evidence, excepting the years 1939, 1940 and 1941, and in certain instances moratorium affidavits were recorded in lieu of the proofs of annual labor in the years in which the same was permissible.

On May 12, 1954, Hines entered into a contract with defendant Chemical Plant Food Corporation wherein said defendant undertook to take certain ores from the claims on a royalty basis. On July 25, 1954, Mr. Hines died. In August, 1954, Hubble padlocked the existing way of travel leading into the area in which the claims lie. On February 3, 1955, performance under the Hines Chemical Plant Food Corporation contract having been terminated, Mrs. Hines, the widow, filed her complaint in this action as indicated.

The court filed a written memorandum opinion indicating that Kenneth J. Hines entered upon the mining claims in question pursuant to a lease with defendants and others which lease, although not signed by Hines or his associate Kinney, was nevertheless partially performed on his part by the payment of rent to Hubble pursuant to the terms of the lease; that his successors in interest were therefore estopped to deny Hubble's title, citing Storrs v. Belmont Gold Mining & Milling Co., 24 Cal. App.2d 551, 76 P.2d 197; and Pease v. Johnson, 106 Cal.App.2d 449, 235 P.2d 229. It further found that the defendants failed to comply with the mining statute in respect to the discovery and annual assessment work in all respects, and therefore their claims were open for location by plaintiff Johnson and, she not being estopped, was entitled to locate a valid claim. Judgment was entered as indicated. More formal findings were entered in which the same conclusion was reached. Judgment was entered accordingly.

Plaintiffs claim that the trial court's ruling that plaintiffs were estopped to assert the Statute of Frauds, Sec. 1624, Civ.Code, against defendants' evidence of a contract for the lease of real property not evidenced by a writing signed by the party to be charged was erroneous. That section provides that an agreement for the leasing for a longer period than one year is invalid unless the same or some note or memorandum thereof is in writing and subscribed by the party to be charged. Plaintiffs rely on such cases as Seymour v. Oelrichs, 156 Cal. 782, 106 P. 88; Mason v. Home Ins. Co. of New York, 10 Cal. App.2d 696, 52 P.2d 491; and Monarco v. Lo Greco, 35 Cal.2d 621, 623, 220 P.2d 737, as establishing the rule of equitable estoppel to rely on the Statute of Frauds. It was there held that before the doctrine would apply it must appear the plaintiff had been placed in such a changed position that to allow defendants to assert the statutory defense would be to work an unjust and unconscionable loss upon plaintiffs. The claim here is that there was no writing signed by plaintiffs and no showing of a change of position by defendants in reliance upon the lease, no unconscionable loss to defendants or unjust enrichment to plaintiffs, and that to estop plaintiffs to assert the statutory defense is to aid the defendant Joseph H. Hubble in the perpetration of a fraud, i. e., leasing the real property in which he did not have the interest he professed to have.

Although in dispute, there is evidence that the written lease, signed by the lessors, was accepted by Hines and Kinney, the lessees, and they went into possession under it, paid rent under its terms and later, under an oral agreement, paid a reduced amount. The lease agreement was manually delivered to lessors and was retained in their possession. They went into possession of the property on the date of the lease agreement.

[1,2] Similar facts were considered in Munford v. Humphreys, 68 Cal.App. 530, 535, 229 P. 860, where it was held that it is not essential to the validity of a lease for the purpose of binding the lessee that it be signed by him provided he accepts the lease and acts thereunder, which exception is generally shown by taking possession or by the payment of rent; that a lease must be signed by the lessor, but need not, as a general rule, be signed by the lessee if accepted by him, as his acceptance of the lease not only binds him but the lessor as well and obviates the unilateral character of the instrument; and that to accept a written lease is to consent to the terms thereof, and the physical taking possession or retention of the instrument is merely evidence of such acceptance or consent. There is sufficient evidence to show that the lease was in effect and plaintiffs were in possession of the property under it during the time the Hines attempted to establish their own title thereto by filing their own location notices. The lease was properly received in evidence.

[3] Under the circumstances related there is sufficient evidence to support the finding that the Hines were estopped from claiming these mining claims in their own name, Brown v. Murphy, 36 Cal.App.2d 171, 97 P.2d 281; Pease v. Johnson, 106 Cal.App.2d 449, 452, 235 P.2d 229.

[4] There was a conflict in the evidence as to whether the necessary work was or was not done upon the claims by Hubble. Defendants offered exhibits and testimony showing that discovery, location, and annual work had been completed. The burden of proof rested upon the plaintiffs to show that their title was superior to that of the defendants and they must recover upon the strength of their own title and not upon the weakness of the defendants' title. Pease v. Johnson, supra.

Plaintiffs concede the basic rule of law that a tenant may not deny the title of his landlord but contend that under the facts of this case an exception to that rule arises, citing Kearney Investment Co. v. Golden Gate Ferry Co., 198 Cal. 560, 246 P. 322; and Yuba River Sand Co. v. City of Marysville, 78 Cal.App.2d 421, 177 P.2d 642.

In the instant case there is no direct finding of fraud on the part of the lessors' or other reasons which would bring plaintiffs within the exception. These appealing plaintiffs, upon whom the burden rested, did not show superior title in themselves. The motion for a new trial and to vacate the judgment was properly denied.

The portion of the judgment from which this appeal was perfected is affirmed.

Defendants and Appellants.

No. 16769.

District Court of Appeal, First District,
Division 2, California.

Sept. 28, 1956.

Action by buyer of an interest in a partnership against sellers for rescission of contract of sale. The Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco, I. L. Harris, J., entered judgment for buyer and sellers appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Agee, J. pro tem., held that evidence sustained finding that for purpose of inducing buyer to purchase a partnership interest sellers falsely and with fraudulent intent misrepresented to buyer the value of the business, its monthly net income, and that all debts had been paid when in fact the business was in debt.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Appeal and Error ☞110

An order denying a motion for a new trial is non-appealable.

2. Sales ☞40

Representation of the value of a business to a prospective buyer generally is a mere expression of opinion and not actionable, but where the representation of value is coupled with statements of extrinsic facts materially affecting the value of such representation, if untrue, it may amount to fraud and be actionable.

3. Sales ☞40

Misrepresentations of material facts bearing upon a question of value or condition of assets or past earnings to a prospective buyer of a business may amount to fraud.

4. Sales ☞38(7)

Negligence on the part of a buyer in failing to discover the falsity of a statement of the seller is no defense when the misrepresentation is intentional rather than negligent.

5. Sales ☞52(7)

In action by buyer of an interest in a partnership against sellers for rescission of contract of sale, evidence sustained finding that, for the purpose of inducing buyer to purchase a partnership interest, the sellers falsely and with fraudulent intent misrepresented to buyer the value of the business, its monthly net income, and that all indebtedness had been paid when in fact the business was in debt.

6. Trial ☞66

A trial judge may properly refuse to reopen a case for the introduction of further testimony where there is no showing of due diligence.

7. Trial ☞66

Where sellers, in an action by buyer for rescission of a contract for sale of an interest in a partnership, sought to reopen the case based on their discovery of a material witness, but failed to show that such witness could not have been discovered before the trial by an exercise of due diligence, trial court did not abuse its discretion in not reopening the case.

8. Appeal and Error ☞970(4)

Trial ☞66

Trial courts are vested with a broad discretion in permitting parties to reopen a case for the purpose of introducing further proof, and a trial court's ruling upon a request to reopen a case will be disturbed on appeal only where there has been a clear abuse of discretion to the prejudice of the party complaining.

AGEE, Justice pro tem.

[1] Defendants, husband and wife, appeal from a judgment recovered against them by plaintiff in an action brought to rescind a contract of sale of a partnership interest in a bakery. The purported appeal from an order denying defendants' motion for a new trial is dismissed, such order being nonappealable.

In April, 1945, defendants and one Picenti bought the bakery for $4,400. In November, 1945, defendants returned to Picenti the $2,200 which he had put up and they thereupon became the sole owners.

In November, 1946, plaintiff contacted defendants. He told them that he knew nothing about the bakery business but he was interested in investing in some type of business in which he could be employed. Defendants told him that they had just sold a one-tenth interest to one Bortolazzo for $2,000 but that they would sell him one-half of the remaining nine-tenths interest for $9,000 and give him a job driving a delivery truck on one of the routes. The sale was closed on December 12, 1946, at which time the plaintiff paid $1,000. The balance of $8,000 was paid on December 19, 1946. Less than a year later the business was in bankruptcy.

Plaintiff alleged, and the trial court found, that for the purpose of inducing him to buy said partnership interest the defendants falsely and with fraudulent intent represented to him that the value of the business as a whole was $20,000, that the monthly net income therefrom was $1,500, and that all of the debts of the business had been paid.

[2, 3] Defendants contend that the representation of the value of the business was a mere expression of opinion and not actionable. This is the general rule. 23 Cal.Jur.2d p. 38. However, an exception to this rule is well recognized where the representation of value is coupled with statements of extrinsic facts materially affecting the value. 23 Cal.Jur.2d p. 40. Here, defendants represented to plaintiff that the business was making net profits of $1,500 per month; in fact, the business was losing money. (Defendant Viotti testified that the "profits" were eaten up by the payment of wages of $61.50 per week to himself and Bortolazzo.) Defendants represented that all indebtedness had been paid when, in fact, the business owed thousands of dollars. Defendants represented that the business owned five trucks when, in fact, it owned only two trucks, one of which was not usable. (The other three trucks were leased.) Defendants told plaintiff that his $9,000 would be used for capital improvement but not one cent of it was put into the business. In Conner v. Butler, 113 Cal.App. 502, at page 511, 298 P. 546, at page 550, the court said: "Misrepresentations of material facts bearing upon the question of value or condition of the assets or past earnings of a business may amount to fraud." And in Stumpf v. Lawrence, 4 Cal.App.2d 373, at page 376, 40 P.2d 920, at page 921, it was said: "The statement of the owner of property with respect to its value is usually considered the expression of a mere opinion on his part which may not become the basis of a suit for damages for fraud on that account. But when a positive statement of the value of property is made by the owner, coupled with other asserted facts or circumstances like a false representation of past income therefrom, it may constitute competent evidence in proof of the alleged fraudulent representations upon which a judgment for damages may be supported." See also: Russell v. Roscoe, 106 Cal.App. 293, 298, 289 P. 185; Willson v. Municipal Bond Co., 7 Cal.2d 144, 150, 59 P.2d 974;

McElligott v. Freeland, 139 Cal.App. 143, 150, 33 P.2d 430; Yeoman v. Sherry, 10 Cal.App.2d 567, 572, 52 P.2d 555.

[4] Plaintiff testified, and the trial court found, that he relied upon the said representations made by defendants and was induced thereby to purchase. Defendants argue that he could have ascertained the falsity of the representations by making a reasonable investigation. Hefferan v. Freebairn, 34 Cal.2d 715, 214 P.2d 386, involves a factual situation very similar to that in the instant case. There a judgment in favor of plaintiff rescinding his purchase of a restaurant and ordering the return of his cash payment was affirmed. The Supreme Court rejected defendant's contention that the plaintiff was precluded from rescinding because of the knowledge of the business which he acquired or should have acquired during the course of the negotiations. It held that negligence on the part of the plaintiff in failing to discover the falsity of a statement is no defense when the misrepresentation is intentional rather than negligent. The court pointed out, 34 Cal.2d at page 719, 214 P.2d at page 388, that exceptionally gullible or ignorant people may recover in circumstances where persons of normal intelligence would not have been misled. Further, that it is not incumbent on a buyer in a situation of this sort to investigate claims as to earnings realized.

[5] We conclude that the evidence was amply sufficient to support the findings and judgment of the trial court.

[6-8] The second point raised by defendants is that the trial court erred in denying their motion to reopen the case for the purpose of introducing additional testimony. The trial was concluded on November 4, 1954. On December 3, 1954, after a minute order had been made directing judgment for plaintiff, defendants filed a notice that they intended to move to reopen. The affidavit in support of this motion alleged that at the time of the trial the attorney representing defendants was under the impression that Leslie Hubbard, Esq., of the law firm of Hubbard & Hubbard, was the attorney representing defendants at the time of the transaction with plaintiff and that he was unable to contact Leslie Hubbard prior to trial; that, since the trial, defendants' attorney learned that it was H. R. Hubbard, Esq., who had represented the defendants; that H. R. Hubbard could testify to certain matters which would indicate that plaintiff's real reason for wanting to rescind was because of personal differences which had arisen and not because he had been defrauded. It is well settled that a motion to reopen after trial and before entry of judgment rests in the sound discretion of the trial judge. 24 Cal.Jur. 768. And it is equally fundamental that a trial judge may properly refuse to reopen a case for the introduction of further testimony when there is no showing of due diligence. 24 Cal.Jur. 770. There is a complete lack of any such showing. At the very outset of the trial, plaintiff testified that there were two Hubbards and that the one handling the transaction was a stout man. Defendants called Victor E. Cappa, an attorney, as their witness. He testified that he was requested to talk over the transaction with plaintiff because he could speak in Italian fluently.

"The Court: Q. Who requested you to do that? A. H. R. Hubbard.

"Q. That is, Hubbard represented Giomi [plaintiff]? A. No, he was representing the Viottis, the defendants in this action; he was representing them. Mr. Giomi was not represented, so Mr. Hubbard wanted to be satisfied that he knew what he was doing and understood the import of these papers that were to be signed, so he turned him over to me and I talked to him.

"Q. Were you the attorney for the Viottis? A. In a sense I was because I was associated with Hubbard & Hubbard."

It is clear that the denial of the motion to reopen was not an abuse of discretion.

"The rule is established by a long line of authorities that trial courts are vested with a broad discretion in permitting parties to reopen a case for the purpose of introducing further proof, and the trial court's ruling upon a request to reopen a case will be disturbed on appeal only where there has been a clear abuse of discretion to the prejudice of the party complaining." Gelberg v. Consolo, 51 Cal.App. 2d 516, 517, 125 P.2d 74.

The judgment is affirmed.

v.

Ralph F. RUSS, Defendant and Respondent.
Civ. 16932.

District Court of Appeal, First District,
Division 2, California.

Sept. 28, 1956.

Divorce action, wherein the Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco, Clarence W. Morris, J., entered an interlocutory decree dividing the property of the parties, and the wife appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Draper, J. pro tem., held that even though it had power to make finding, and finding that certain realty was community property would support decree which awarded it to husband, reviewing court would have to reverse and remand, since there had been no direct finding that property was either community or separate and evidence would support finding to either effect, and since there was also a possibility that decree had been based upon an apportionment of community and separate interests in property of parties.

Reversed with directions.

1. Husband and Wife ⇨258

Property is not necessarily made community by fact that all or substantial portion of cost of improvements came from community funds. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 164.

2. Appeal and Error ⇨1122(1)

Reviewing court's power to make findings of fact is generally not to be exercised when evidence before trial court was conflicting. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc., § 956a.

3. Divorce ⇨287

Even though finding that certain realty was community would support decree which awarded it to husband, reviewing court would reverse and remand where there was no direct finding that property was either community or separate and evidence would support finding to either effect, and where there was also possibility that decree had been based upon an apportionment of community and separate interests in property of parties to divorce action. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc., § 956a.

DRAPER, Justice pro tem.

This appeal questions the award, by interlocutory decree of divorce, of real property not specifically found to be either community or separate. Decree was granted to plaintiff wife upon the ground of defendant's extreme cruelty. The community property was not extensive. An automobile and a boat were awarded to the parties in equal shares. Furniture (community property) located in a residence admittedly the separate property of plaintiff was awarded to her. Furniture of a lesser value, located in another house, was awarded to defendant.

Real property in El Granada, San Mateo County, was awarded to defendant, and he was ordered to pay $2,600 to plaintiff. The transcript indicates that the value of the El Granada property was taken to be $5,000. Plaintiff's notice of appeal is "from the whole of said judgment," but her only attack is upon the award of the El Granada property.

Some three and one-half years after the marriage of the parties, appellant wife sold to the State of California property in Santa Clara County which was admittedly her separate property. From the proceeds of the sale she paid $600 to the attorney representing her, deposited $2,387.09 in a commercial account which contained $21.14 at the time, and deposited the remaining $3,000 in a savings account whose immediately preceding balance had been $1.

Both of these accounts were in the name of plaintiff alone. However, it seems to be conceded that they were, to the extent of the small balances at the time of the above deposits, community property. Throughout the marriage, defendant had no bank account or property in his own name because of a deficiency judgment against him. Substantially all earnings of both parties, throughout their marriage, were deposited in bank accounts in the name of the wife.

On the day she deposited the sale proceeds, plaintiff paid $500 from the same bank account as a deposit on purchase price of the El Granada property, and four days later paid, from the same account, $881.20 as the remainder of the purchase price. Title was taken in plaintiff's name. The property was then unimproved, but thereafter the present house was added, with the costs thereof being paid from the bank account, and defendant doing some labor upon improvements. Plaintiff testified that the improvements cost $2,000, and that all this sum was paid from proceeds of the above sale. However, she testified to other expenditures from these proceeds which would make it impossible for more than $914.80 to have come from this source for the improvements. The trial court was therefore entitled to find that at least a substantial part of the improvement cost came from earnings of the two parties deposited in the community account.

Upon these facts, the court found:

"That plaintiff purchased with her separate funds certain real property in El Granada * * *; that said real property has at all times stood of record in the name of plaintiff; that said plaintiff and defendant from time to time resided on said property, but since the separation of the parties on August 25, 1952, said defendant has made his home at said property, to which plaintiff made no objection; that the separate and community funds of the parties were so comingled [sic] that it has been impossible for this Court to determine whether or not all of the funds used for the purchase of said property were the separate property of plaintiff or community funds of the plaintiff and defendant."

Nowhere else in the findings, conclusions, or decree is the El Granada property described as either separate or community. The decree awards this property to defendant.

[1] As indicated above, the evidence warrants a finding that the purchase price of the El Granada lots was separate property. The negligible community balances in the accounts at the time of sale of the Santa Clara County property present no insuperable bar in tracing the proceeds of that sale into the prompt purchase of the El Granada land. Cone v. Cone, 131 Cal. App.2d 424, 431, 280 P.2d 871; In re Estate of Granniss, 142 Cal. 1, 6, 75 P. 324. Nor is the property necessarily made community by the fact that all or a substantial portion of the cost of the improvements came from community funds. Shaw v. Bernal, 163 Cal. 262, 124 P. 1012. The taking of the property in plaintiff's name raises a presumption that it is her separate property, Civ.Code, § 164.

On the other hand, the court could have found the property to be community in character. An agreement to this effect would be recognized. Faust v. Faust, 91 Cal.App.2d 304, 204 P.2d 906. The fact that the parties throughout the marriage avoided the holding of property in defendant's name, and that both recognize the bank accounts as community property, although in the wife's name, gives some color to an inference that such an agreement existed as to the real property. Support for such an inference might be found in the fact that proceeds of the Santa Clara County sale were deposited in these community accounts, and thence withdrawn for investment in the El Granada land. The wife testified that "It was a joint place." However, it should be noted that the transcript shows no direct testimony by defendant as to any such agreement.

The only question on this appeal is whether the property is separate or community in character. If the property is separately that of the wife, the decree awarding it to the husband must fall. Unfortunately, there is no direct finding that the property itself is either community or separate. As to the source of the funds which were used to purchase it, the findings are in direct conflict. After finding that "plaintiff purchased with her separate funds" the property in question, the same finding concludes with the statement that "it has been impossible * * * to determine whether or not all of the funds used for the purchase of said property were * * * separate property * * * or community funds."

[2,3] It is true that a finding that the property is community would support the decree. Under Code of Civil Procedure, section 956a, this court is empowered to make findings of fact. We should prefer to do so, in the spirit of that section, rather than remand the case for further proceedings. However, such power generally is not to be exercised when the evidence before the trial court is conflicting. Treu v. Kirkwood, 42 Cal.2d 602, 268 P.2d 482. In addition, there is the possibility, suggested by respondent's brief, that the decree is based upon an apportionment of community and separate interests in the property. The briefs on appeal leave us in some doubt as to the theory upon which the case was tried below. The transcript indicates a number of discussions between court and counsel which are not reported. These gaps in the transcript make most uncertain any attempt by us to resolve doubts as to the theory of the case as tried.

The decree is reversed with respect to the division of property, with directions to the trial court to amend, modify and clarify its findings, with leave to the trial court to take further evidence if in its discretion such is required.

No. 16741.

District Court of Appeal, First District,
Division 2, California.

Sept. 25, 1956.

Action for declaratory judgment to determine liability of three insurers relative to damage caused in one and the same accident. The Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco, Milton D. Sapiro, J., prorated liability between insurance policies of lessor and lessee covering the tractor and trailer involved in accident and lessee's insurer appealed. The District Court of Appeal held that where lessor's policy on tractor and trailer provided for prorating of a loss with other applicable insurance, and lessee's policy provided for liability for loss in excess of policy limits of other applicable insurance, clause of lessor's policy was applicable and loss would be prorated in proportion to maximum coverage provided by the respective policies and in addition third insurer was not liable under its policy which provided excess insurance above stated amount of primary insurance, in view of fact primary insurance policy was not exhausted.

Judgment affirmed.

Opinion, 296 P.2d 108, vacated.

1. Insurance \S 512½

Where liability policy issued to lessee of tractor and trailer provided that policy would afford only excess insurance with respect to any loss if insured had other collectible insurance, and policy issued to lessor covering same tractor and trailer contained clause providing for the prorating of any loss with other applicable insurance in the proportion that limits stated in declaration bear to applicable limits of the other insurance, clause of lessor's policy would control and liability for accident involving tractor and trailer would be prorated between the two insurers.

2. Insurance \S 512½

Although language of other insurance clauses and in liability insurance policies is prime material for consideration in determining respective responsibilities of insurers of same vehicle involved in accident, when such clauses are irreconcilable, other considerations, expressed or not, must determine results.

3. Insurance \S 512½

When a policy of insurance provides coverage for the excess over primary insurance to a specifically stated amount only, such provision must be given effect, but when excess clause is so formulated as to give policy which contains it the advantage, not only over primary coverage to a specific amount but also over all other unknown insurance which contributes in the loss, together with said specific primary insurance, it is doubtful whether such clause should be upheld.

4. Insurance \S 512½

When liability policy, which provides excess insurance above a stated amount of primary insurance, contains provisions which make it also excess insurance above all other insurance which contributes to the payment of the loss together with the specifically stated primary insurance, such provisions will be given effect as written.

5. Insurance \S 512½

Where liability insurance policy, which provided for excess insurance above stated amount of primary insurance on tractor and trailer, contained provisions which made it also excess insurance above all other insurance which would contribute to payment of any loss involving tractor and trailer, and after prorating of liability, arising out of accident involving tractor and trailer, between primary insurance policy and other applicable insurance, primary insurance policy was not exhausted, liability policy providing for such excess insurance would not attach to the accident.

PER CURIAM.

In this case we granted a rehearing for the sole purpose of giving further consideration to the question whether one excess insurance policy of the Underwriters at Lloyd's should to some extent contribute in the loss here involved, with respect to which point Lamb v. Belt Casualty Co., 3 Cal.App.2d 624, 40 P.2d 311, was called to our attention by the petition for rehearing only. Thereafter Oil Base, Inc., v. Transport Indem. Co., 143 Cal.App.2d 453, 299 P.2d 952, which involved a similar point, was decided. Finally, Prudential Assurance Company, Ltd., a corporation, Andrew Weir Insurance Company, Ltd., a corporation and City General Insurance Company, Ltd., a corporation, have been substituted as respondents in place of Underwriters at Lloyd's. The name of the Underwriters at Lloyd's has been retained in this opinion also where the named corporations have succeeded to their rights. In view of the cited decisions we have concluded that the rejection by the trial court of all liability of the Underwriters at Lloyd's must be upheld, as will be stated hereinafter. Otherwise, we assume our former opinion with some revisions necessitated by the interrelation of the problems presented as follows:

This is an appeal on an agreed statement from a declaratory judgment determining the liability of three insurers, relative to the damage caused in one and the same accident. A tractor and trailer, leased by its owner, Nevada Trading Company (further called Nevada) to Vaughn Millwork Company (further called Vaughn) and driven by Vaughn's employee Campbell, collided in this state with a truck and trailer which suffered property damage and whose driver was injured. At the time of the accident Nevada had in its name:

1. a policy of comprehensive liability insurance issued by the Peerless Casualty Company (further called Peerless) covering the motor vehicle involved, with a limit for bodily injury of $10,000 for each person injured and of $5,000 for property damage.

2. two policies of excess liability insurance issued by the Underwriters at Lloyd's, London (further called Lloyd's), the first of which provided coverage after exhaustion of the coverage of the above Peerless policy, to which specific reference was made, with a limit for bodily injuries of $15,000 for each person injured (after the $10,000 of the Peerless policy) and $20,000 for property damage (after the $5,000 of the Peerless policy) and the second of which provided coverage after exhaustion of the coverage of the above two policies, with a limit for personal injuries of $175,000 for each person injured (after the above total of $25,000 primary coverage).

Vaughn had at said time in its name one policy of comprehensive liability insurance issued by Continental Casualty Company, (further called Continental) with a limit for bodily injuries of $100,000 for each person injured and of $25,000 for property damage.

Each of the above policies provided liability insurance directly to Campbell as an additional insured for the claims ensuing from the accident. Pursuant to an agreement reserving judicial determination of the respective liabilities of the several insurers, Peerless and Lloyd's settled said claims by payment of $5,946.60 for personal injuries and $6,053.40 for property damage. The controversy of the parties relates mainly to the effect to be given to the "other insurance" clauses of the Peerless and Continental Policies.

The other insurance clause of the Continental Policy reads:

"13. Other Insurance.

"If the insured has other valid and collectible insurance against a loss covered by this policy, the insurance under this policy shall be excess insurance with respect to such loss but shall apply only in the amount by which the applicable limit of liability stated in the declarations exceeds the total applicable limits of liability of such other insurance."

The part of the other insurance clause of the Peerless policy applicable to the circumstances of this case reads:

"N. Other Insurance.

"If the insured has other insurance against a loss covered by this policy, the company shall not be liable under this policy for a greater proportion of such loss than the applicable limits of liability stated in the declaration bear to the total applicable limit of liability of all valid and collectible insurance against such loss; * * *."

[1] The trial court held that Peerless and Continental were liable for the total amounts of the settlements in proportion of the maximum coverage provided by their respective policies for the two kinds of damage involved. Lloyd's was held not liable on its policies. (The proportionate liability of Peerless does not exhaust the coverage provided by its policy.) Continental appeals, claiming primarily that this decision in prorating the loss, disregards the other insurance clause of its policy. We have concluded that the decision is supported by the authority of Air Transport Mfg. Co. v. Employers' Liab., etc., Corp., 91 Cal.App.2d 129, 204 P.2d 647, 648 (hearing in the Supreme Court denied), and should be upheld.

In the Air Transport case, supra, a truck rented by Air Transport from American U-Drive and driven by an employee of Air Transport, was involved in an accident in which one person was injured. Air Transport and American U-Drive each had in its name a liability policy with a limit of $25,000 as to the claim of one injured person. The policy in the name of Air Transport issued by Pacific contained an other insurance clause requiring prorating like the Peerless policy in our case. The policy in the name of American U-Drive issued by Employers' contained an other insurance clause reading as follows:

"8. Other Insurance. If other valid insurance exists protecting the Insured from liability for such bodily injury, sickness, disease or death or such injury to or destruction of property, this policy shall be null and void with respect to such specific hazard otherwise covered, whether the Insured is specifically named in such other policy or not; provided, however, that if the applicable limit of liability of this policy exceeds the applicable limit of liability of such other valid insurance, then this policy shall apply as excess insurance against such hazard in an amount equal to the applicable limit of liability of this policy minus the applicable limit of liability of such other valid insurance."

Both the trial court and the appellate court held that notwithstanding the latter clause Employers' was liable for its proportionate part (half) of the claim. Rejecting other bases of decision sometimes used, the court held that the liability of the insurers should be decided by construction of the other insurance clauses involved and in so doing held, that because of its pro rata clause the Pacific policy did not constitute such unconditional insurance as would render void the policy of Employers' under its clause and that by reason of the latter's policy, that of Pacific afforded only pro rata insurance. Employers' had therefore to bear the remaining portion of the loss.

Appellant tries to distinguish the Air Transport case, supra, by the contention that it involves a conflict between a "pro rata" clause and an "escape" clause, whereas the present case is said to involve a conflict between a "pro rata" and an "excess" clause, which "excess" clause is more regularly granted recognition and preponderance by the courts than an "escape" clause. We do not agree. The other insurance clauses, generally inserted in liability insurance policies and given many different formulations are often distinguished in three types: "Pro rata" clauses providing for the apportionment of the loss with other valid insurance; "excess" clauses providing for liability up to the limits of the policy covering excess loss only after exhaustion of other valid insurance; and "escape" clauses providing for avoidance of liability when there is other valid insurance. See 5 Stanford L.R. 147; 38 Minn.L.R. 838, 840. The clauses of Continental in the case before us and of Employers' in the Air Transport case are neither characteristic excess nor characteristic escape clauses. Although the clause of Continental is formulated more like an excess clause and the one of Employers' more like an escape clause their effect is exactly the same and each is a composite of escape and excess elements. Each provides for excess insurance if and in so far only as its coverage exceeds all other valid coverage combined and does not provide for any coverage if its coverage is not so in excess. In the absence of such excess it works as an escape clause, if there is such excess as a modified excess clause, (which does not cover excess loss to the limit of its agreed coverage but only to the excess of such limit over other valid coverage). The clause of Continental does not say so expressly as the clause of Employers' that it shall be void in the absence of an excess of its coverage over all other coverage, but as it applies only in the amount of such excess it does not provide any coverage if there is no excess.

Both in the Air Transport case and in our case there was no such excess. In the Air Transport case the coverage under both policies was the same; in our case the combined coverage of the other policies (Peerless and Lloyd's) is the same as that of Continental with respect to property damage (each $25,000) and exceeds that of Continental with respect to coverage of injury to one person ($200,000 as against $100,000). In both cases the clauses compared worked as escape clauses conflicting with pro rata clauses. With respect to the Air Transport case such was recognized expressly by the appellate court which decided it in distinguishing said case in Norris v. Pacific Indemnity Co., Cal.App., 237 P.2d 666, 672.

Under approximately similar facts and policy provisions a contrary result was reached in McFarland v. Chicago Exp., 7 Cir., 200 F.2d 5, 7. In that case Employers', whose policy had the mixed escape and excess clause, was the insurer of the owner of the truck and the pro rata clause was contained in the policy of the user of the truck, directly responsible for the accident. Such may have influenced the decision although according to its terms the opinion, like the one in the Air Transport case, is based on "a construction of the language employed by the respective insurers". The McFarland opinion, however, starts its reasoning from the other side and holds that because of its escape clause the Employers' policy is not valid and collectible insurance to which the pro rata clause in the other policy applies, on which ground it is concluded that the writer of said policy was not entitled to prorating with Employers' but must bear the whole loss.

[2] No other cases involving a conflict between an escape clause and a pro rata clause have been found. Cf. Annotation 46 A.L.R.2d 1159, subd. (c), pp. 1167-1168. It is clear that the reasoning used in the above two cases, ostensibly based on construction of the language of the policy clauses but reaching opposite results, cannot be conclusive. It was pointed out in Oregon Auto Ins. Co. v. United States Fidelity & Guar. Co., 9 Cir., 195 F.2d 958, 960, that such reasoning is "completely circular, depending, as it were, on which policy one happens to read first." Although the language of the policy clauses is the prime material for our consideration, when said clauses are irreconcilable other considerations, expressed or not, must determine the result. The validity of both clauses, leaving the insured unprotected, is generally considered unacceptable. The Oregon case, supra, which involves a conflict between an escape clause and an excess clause, rejects all reasoning on the basis of which other cases grant preference to one or the other of the conflicting other insurance clauses and, holding that one cannot rationally choose between the two clauses involved, takes the position that the mutually repugnant clauses should be disregarded and prorating applied as if the policies did not contain any other insurance clauses. Although this solution seems sensible the case stands alone. The great majority of the cases treating a conflict of an excess and an escape clause give effect to the excess clause. See Annotation 46 A.L.R.2d 1159, subd. (b), p. 1165 et seq.; 5 Stanford L.Rev. 147, 148. The reasonings used to justify this result may not be convincing, the fact must be noted that the decisions in general show favor of excess clauses, disfavor of escape clauses. Such is understandable because an escape clause is less desirable, than a pro rata or excess clause in that, without prohibiting other insurance, it deprives the insured, when other insurance is taken out, of some of the protection he expects, whereas pro rata and excess clauses leave him all coverage expected and regulate the distribution of the loss among the several insurers only. The clause contained in the Continental policy before us has the added disadvantage that its partial escape character is more or less camouflaged and does not provide clear warning for the insured. In our case, where the conflict is between an escape clause and a pro rata clause, the reasoning of the Oregon case, supra, and the disfavor of escape clauses found in other cases lead to the same result. The proportionate liability of Peerless and Continental must be upheld.

Continental further contends that if prorating is applied, the coverage provided by the Lloyd's policies should also be included. Evidently, the second Lloyd's policy, whose primary limits are not reached by the total damage claims, cannot be involved and the same applies to the personal injury coverage of the first Lloyd's policy, as the primary limit of $10,- 000 for loss with respect to one person is not reached. A question is, however, presented with respect to the property damage coverage of the first Lloyd's policy because the settlement for property damage, $6,053.40 exceeds the primary limit of $5,000 contained therefor in said policy, but the primary coverage of $5,000 of Peerless, expressly referred to in said Lloyd's policy, has not been exhausted because of the prorating with the Continental coverage, not expressly referred to in the Lloyd's policy.

Lloyd's defends the exclusion from prorating of this part of its coverage on the basis of the following provisions of its policy, the second paragraph of its insuring agreement, which reads:

"Provided Always that it is expressly agreed that liability shall attach to the Underwriters only after the Primary Insurers have paid or have been held liable to pay the full amount of their respective ultimate net loss liability as follows:

"(a) Bodily Injury * * *

"(b) Property Damage

$5,000.00 ultimate net loss in respect to each accident,
* * *" (Emphasis added.)

and the definition reading:

"2. Ultimate Net Loss.—The words 'ultimate net loss' shall be understood to mean the sums paid in settlement of losses for which the Assured is liable after making deductions for all recoveries, salvages and other insurances (other than recoveries under the policy/ies of the Primary Insurers), whether recoverable or not * * *." (Emphasis added.)

It concludes therefrom that liability under its policy can attach only after Peerless alone has paid $5,000 for property losses of the assured, not counting amounts paid by other insurers. A further provision of its policy reading,

"3. Attachment of Liability.—Liability under this Insurance shall not attach unless and until the Primary Insurers shall have admitted liability for the Primary Limit or Limits, or unless and until the Assured has by final judgment been adjudged to pay a sum which exceeds such Primary Limit or Limits."

it explains as adding further conditions to the provisions first stated and as not conflicting with them.

Continental does not deny that the above is a correct construction of the language of the Lloyd's policy as such, but urges that when this language comes in conflict with the other insurance clause of Continental's own policy, Lloyd's language is not decisive but an equitable solution must be found on another basis, as which prorating in accordance with the Oregon case, supra, could be considered.

[3-5] There can be no doubt that when a policy provides coverage for the excess over primary insurance to a specifically stated amount only, such provision must be given effect. Such insurance fulfills a special need for excess coverage at a special lower premium, comparable to insurance with a certain amount deductible from loss (own risk). However, when the excess clause is so formulated as to give the policy which contains it the advantage, not only over primary coverage to a specific amount, but also over all other unknown insurance which contributes in the loss, together with said specific primary insurance, it is doubtful whether such clause in that respect differs from other general clauses by which insurers try to shift the burden of a loss to possible other insurers and whether it should be held more invulnerable than such other clauses. On the basis of the Oregon case prorating with other insurance exceeding the stated amount of primary insurance might well be defensible. However, as stated before, the solution of the Oregon case is not generally accepted law, and with respect to the problem here under consideration, it is not accepted in California. In a situation very similar to the one in this case and also involving a Lloyd's excess policy, it was held in Lamb v. Belt Casualty Co., 3 Cal.App.2d 624, 634, 40 P.2d 311, that because of the prorating between the primary insurers, the excess policy of Lloyd's never attached. The Supreme Court denied a hearing. A case also very much in point is Oil Base, Inc., v. Transport Indem. Co., 143 Cal.App.2d 453, 299 P.2d 952. In that case the lessee of a tractor involved in an accident was protected by the following liability policies: 1. A policy of Hardware with limit of $100,000 for each person, containing a clause which with respect to any non-owned automobile made it excess insurance to all other available insurance. 2. A policy of Transport with a limit of $10,000 for each occurrence containing a provision that, if there was other insurance against an occurrence covered by it, its insurance would be excess insurance above the applicable limits of such other insurance. 3. An excess policy of Security insuring $40,000 for each occurrence in excess of $10,000 ultimate net loss or of such greater amount as the insured shall be covered by primary insurance. 4. An excess policy of Transport with a limit of $950,000 as excess insurance over underlying primary insurance of $10,000 and $40,000. With respect to a loss of $360,000 it was held that the loss should primarily be prorated between the insurance of $100,000 of Hardware and the primary insurance of $10,000 of Transport. Only after these two prorated policies would be exhausted the first excess policy of Security would attach and the second excess policy of Transport only after exhaustion of the first one. The clauses of the excess policies of Security and Transport were sustained to their full extent, notwithstanding the fact that the policy of Hardware also contained an excess clause. The Supreme Court denied a hearing. We must conclude that when a policy which provides excess insurance above a stated amount of primary insurance contains provisions which make it also excess insurance above all other insurance which contributes to the payment of the loss together with the specifically stated primary insurance, such clause will be given effect as written. Under this rule the first Lloyd's policy did not attach because the prorating of the Continental and Peerless policies prevented the Peerless policy from being exhausted.

The judgment is affirmed, Continental to pay all costs of the appeal.

California.

Sept. 28, 1956.

Defendant was convicted in the Superior Court, San Bernardino County, Jesse W. Curtis, Jr., J., of having committed lewd and lascivious acts with his daughter, and he appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Griffin, Acting P. J., held that the evidence sustained conviction.

Affirmed.

1. Lewdness ☞10

Conviction of defendant for having committed lewd and lascivious acts with his daughter was sustained by evidence. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 288.

2. Criminal Law

☞369(1), 370, 371(1, 12), 372(1)

In California, trend has been to allow evidence of other crimes generally to show guilty knowledge, motive, intent or a common scheme or plan; but in cases involving lewdness, rule that evidence of other crimes is not admissible has not been relaxed. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 288.

3. Criminal Law ☞1036(1)

Defendant could not raise for first time on appeal from conviction for having committed lewd and lascivious acts with his daughter contention that evidence of similar conduct toward other girls was inadmissible. West's Ann.Pen.Code, § 288.

Casey & Kerrigan and Richard J. Weller, San Bernardino, for appellant.

GRIFFIN, Acting Presiding Judge.

Defendant was charged in one count of the information with committing incest with his daughter, Carolyn (aged 15) on August 31, 1955, in violation of section 285 of the Penal Code. And in count two he was charged with having committed lewd and lascivious acts with another daughter Linda (aged 13) on October 7, 1955, in violation of section 288 of the Penal Code. Defendant pleaded not guilty and waived a jury trial. He was found not guilty on count one and guilty on count two. The court ordered a psychiatric examination of defendant and found he was not a sexual psychopath. Defendant moved for a new trial and it was denied. He was sentenced to State's prison, execution was suspended, and he was placed on probation for three years. This appeal followed.

The points raised are that the court erred in the reception of certain evidence; that the evidence was insufficient to sustain the findings and that the court erred in not granting a new trial for these reasons.

Linda, in support of count two, testified generally that she lived with her father in Colton after her stepmother had left him; that on the week-end of October 7th to 9th she was at home alone with him and he asked her to bring him a drink to his bedroom where he was lying on the bed partially undressed; that subsequently he took off part of her clothing and started massaging her breasts and "sort of making love" to her by kissing her breasts and putting his arms around her; that he had done these things to her before and on one occasion came close to having sexual intercourse with her. She also testified that on one occasion she walked in on him when he was doing the same thing to her sister Carolyn.

The testimony of the prosecuting witness, given at the preliminary examination, was somewhat in conflict with her testimony at the trial in reference to the date and time of this claimed affair. She testified she subsequently reported these incidents to others because she was tired of living that kind of a life. She testified that when quite young she lived with her own mother and father in a nudist camp due to her mother's poor health and before she died.

A girl friend of Carolyn's, aged 15, then testified in chief for the prosecution that in October, 1955, she stayed all night at defendant's home with Carolyn; that defendant fixed them a Vodka drink; that she and Carolyn put on their robes and that defendant then told Carolyn to go in the bedroom and he would massage her legs because she was tired; that Carolyn did so and she followed her to the bedroom while defendant massaged Carolyn's legs and body and suggested to the witness that he do the same for her; that she was on the bed and he pulled up her robe from the bottom, massaged her legs, and then unhooked her "bra"; that he started rubbing her back and then her breasts and she was told by him that it would develop her; that he suggested she come over often and have it done; that she then told him she had enough and accordingly went to her room to bed; that defendant thought they should be massaged again the next morning but they refused; and that Carolyn told her this had been going on with her for some time. The witness said she later told her sister, Linda Sue, and her mother about the occurrence. Linda Sue then testified to a similar experience when she slept at defendant's home one week-end in October.

Another girl friend, 18 years old, visited Carolyn one night in the same month and defendant attempted, after massaging Carolyn, to massage the girl friend's legs and body but was repulsed. She testified that later defendant showed pictures of nude persons who lived in the nudist colony and who were related to defendant. Thereafter the people rested their case.

Defendant took the stand and testified that in 1952, he took his two daughters back East and left them with relatives; that later in 1953, he remarried and it aggravated the girls; that as a result of this they told defendant's relatives in the East that defendant had had sexual intercourse with both of them in California; that by consent of the girls they were examined there and it was found that there was no evidence of rupture of Linda's hymen; that thereafter the girls returned to California and lived with him and their stepmother whom they did not like; and that Carolyn was causing considerable trouble and had bragged to him about breaking up his marriage. He denied specifically and generally the charges made by his two daughters and the other girls but stated that he probably did massage one of the other girls' neck. He admitted massaging the two daughters on several occasions but claimed his wife was present at the time. He also said that he was at lodge on the days indicated and brought in a record of the roll-call indicating defendant's presence on certain dates enumerated. Defendant also claimed he was being treated by a doctor for sexual impotency during this period.

Essie Smith, the stepmother, testified that Carolyn was a source of trouble and had denied to her the charge made against the defendant in Illinois; that defendant did give his two daughters rubdowns or massages on certain occasions when they were tired but always in her presence; that defendant went shopping with her on the date and time charged in the first count of the information; that prior to October 1, 1955, the daughters complained to her about their father walking in on them in their privacy but did not say that defendant had committed any indecent acts towards them.

There was evidence of complaints made to others by the two girls concerning defendant's conduct.

[1] Without further discussion, it clearly appears that the evidence is sufficient to support the court's finding as to the charge contained in count two.

[2] The only other question is the claimed error in admitting evidence of similar conduct toward the other girls as part of the people's case in chief. Defendant relies principally upon the holding in People v. Anthony, 185 Cal. 152, 196 P. 47; People v. Westek, 31 Cal.2d 469, 476, 190 P.2d 9; People v. Asavis, 22 Cal.App.2d 492, 71 P. 2d 307; People v. Buchel, 141 Cal.App.2d 91, 296 P.2d 113; People v. Hills, 30 Cal. 2d 694, 185 P.2d 11; and People v. Rogers, 26 Cal.App.2d 371, 79 P.2d 404, disapproved in People v. Westek, supra.

It is the general rule, gathered from the above authorities, that in a prosecution for committing lewd and lascivious acts, prohibited by section 288 of the Penal Code, evidence that defendant perpetrated similar acts with a person or persons other than the prosecuting witness is inadmissible; that in this state the trend of decisions has been to allow evidence of other crimes generally to show guilty knowledge, motive, intent or a common scheme or plan, but in cases involving lewdness the rule that evidence of other crimes is not admissible has not been relaxed.

There are cases upholding certain exceptions to the general rule such as the Westek case where defendant, on direct examination, was asked whether he had ever committed any lewd act on certain of the prosecuting witnesses and he replied that he may have so touched them but that it was done without any lustful intent, and then to emphasize his innocence defendant volunteered the statement that he had never at any time or at any place committed on any boy any sexual crime as was charged. The prosecution had the right, on rebuttal, to present evidence which would tend to contradict defendant's self-serving statement or to weaken or modify its effect, such as evidence that he had committed similar acts with boys other than the prosecuting witnesses. See also People v. Hoffman, 199 Cal. 155, 162, 248 P. 504; People v. Turco, 29 Cal.App. 608, 611, 156 P. 1001; People v. Harrison, 46 Cal.App.2d 779, 117 P.2d 19; People v. Evans, 113 Cal.App. 2d 124, 126, 247 P.2d 915; and People v. Boyd, 95 Cal.App.2d 831, 213 P.2d 724. In the latter case other claimed offenses against the sister of the prosecuting witness took place in the presence of the prosecuting witness and the facts indicated circumstances from which it could be inferred that defendant intended a second offense upon the prosecutrix.

Assuming it was error to allow testimony of the commission of claimed similar offenses on other girls when offered in evidence as a part of the people's case in chief, it affirmatively appears that counsel for defendant made no objection to the reception of such testimony at the time or during the trial, and without moving to strike such evidence, proceeded to cross-examine these witnesses in full in relation to such testimony.

It further appears from the proceedings on the motion for new trial that counsel for the defendant failed to call the court's attention to any such claimed error but rested solely on the insufficiency of the evidence to support the findings.

[3] It further appears that the trial court had no opportunity to rule on the admissibility of such testimony and the question was raised for the first time on appeal. Defendant is therefore precluded from raising this question for the first time in this court. People v. Boyd, supra, 95 Cal.App. 2d at page 833, 213 P.2d 724, was affirmed on this same additional ground. See also People v. Simeone, 26 Cal.2d 795, 161 P.2d 369; People v. Westek, supra; and People v. Buchel, supra. The order denying a new trial was justified.

Florence SEXTON, Plaintiff and Respondent,

v.

KEY SYSTEM TRANSIT LINES, a corporation, Defendant and Appellant.

No. 16905.

District Court of Appeal, First District,
Division 2, California.

Sept. 28, 1956.

Rehearing Denied Oct. 26, 1956.

Hearing Denied Nov. 21, 1956.

Passenger brought action against transit company for injuries sustained by passenger at station when she was walking over to eastbound interurban electric train, which had stopped at station, and was struck by westbound train, which came into the station in violation of company regulation that when a train is in the station no other train may approach. The Superior Court, Alameda County, A. J. Woolsey, J., entered judgment for passenger, and company appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Draper, J. pro tem., held that question whether passenger was contributorily negligent in failing to look in direction from which westbound train was approaching, was for jury.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Carriers ⇨328(1)

In action by passenger against transportation company for injuries sustained by passenger at station when she was walking over to eastbound interurban electric train, which had stopped at station, and was struck by westbound train, which came into station in violation of company regulation that when a train is in the station no other train may approach, rule that a railroad track is itself a warning requiring a pedestrian to make use of all his senses to avoid danger of being struck by a train was not applicable, since such rule is not applicable at stations maintained for the use of passengers.

2. Carriers ⇨286(1)

A railroad owes a high degree of care to its passengers at a station maintained for the use of the passengers.

3. Carriers ⇨328(1)

Passenger, though not absolved from duty of exercising care for his own safety at railroad station, has right to presume that tracks intervening between him and train, which he is to board, will be kept safe while he is crossing them, so that the mere fact that he fails to look and listen will not necessarily be ascribed to his contributory negligence, and will not prevent a recovery of damages.

4. Carriers ⇨347(4)

In action by passenger against transportation company for injuries sustained by passenger at station when she was walking over to eastbound interurban electric train, which had stopped at station, and was struck by westbound train, which came into station in violation of company regulation that when a train is in the station no other train may approach, question whether passenger was contributorily negligent for failure to look in direction from which westbound train was approaching was for jury.

5. Appeal and Error ⇨1004(1)

It is not the function of a reviewing court to fix award of damages in a personal injury action, even within broad limits, and thus to impose its views on the trier of the fact.

6. Damages ⇨208(2)

Pain and suffering are not subject to precise measurement by any scale, and their translation into terms of money damages is peculiarly the function of the trier of the facts.

7. Appeal and Error ⇨1004(3)

Where trial judge, on motion for new trial in personal injury action, had opportunity to review amount of award, District Court of Appeal on appeal could interfere only in event that it appeared, as a matter of law, that verdict was a result of passion or prejudice.

8. Damages ⇨130(3)

Award of $13,259.18 to woman who was badly bruised when struck by interurban train, and who, because of the accident, was in an anxiety state, which resulted in considerable emotional difficulty for many weeks, was not excessive.

Stafford P. Buckley, Edward J. Rice, Jr., Oakland, for appellant.

Charles Bagby, John F. Foley, San Francisco, for respondent.

DRAPER, Justice pro tem.

Plaintiff had judgment upon a jury verdict for injuries sustained when she was struck by an interurban electric train of defendant. Defendant appeals.

The accident occurred at Wesley Station on appellant's private right of way in Oakland, where respondent was about to board a train which had come from San Francisco and was headed east toward the Trestle Glen district of Oakland. She was struck by another train of appellant, which was westbound to San Francisco.

At Wesley Station appellant maintains a small building for the convenience of its passengers. This structure is about 10 feet west of the westernmost of the double tracks, which here run in a north-south direction. Westbound trains use the western tracks—those nearest the station building—and eastbound trains use the tracks farthest from the building.

Respondent had worked in this area for a number of years, and it was her habit to take the Glen train home each evening. She left work at about 5:30 p. m. on the day of the accident, did some shopping in the area, and went to Wesley Station, where she sat down to wait for her train. Several people were in the station. After respondent had waited about 15 minutes, she saw the eastbound Glen train approaching the station. She stood up, walked out of the building, and waited to see where the train would stop. When the doors of the train started to open she began to walk toward it. She had arrived at the first rail when she glanced to her left and saw the westbound San Francisco train bearing down upon her, about 7½ feet away. She had heard no bell, whistle or other warning signal of any kind before she was struck. Other witnesses corroborated her statement that there was no audible warning.

A regulation of appellant requires that when a train is in the station no other train may approach that station. Respondent, through her long use of this line, knew that westbound trains always stopped short of the station when an eastbound train was stopped there.

There is testimony contradicting some of the facts stated above, but all conflicts in the evidence were for the jury to resolve. Hence appellant does not urge insufficiency of the evidence to establish its negligence. Rather, appellant contends that the evidence establishes contributory negligence of respondent as a matter of law. The argument is that in failing to look to her left before starting to cross the track intervening between her and the train she intended to board, respondent failed to exercise any care whatever.

[1] But appellant here cannot have the benefit of the rule that a railroad track "is itself a warning" requiring a pedestrian "to make use of all his senses * * * to avoid the danger" of being struck by a train. This rule, stated in Holmes v. South Pac. C. Ry. Co., 97 Cal. 161, 167, 31 P. 834, 835, is often referred to as the "stop, look and listen" rule, since it stamps as contributory negligence per se the failure to stop, look and listen before crossing the tracks. Wilkinson v. United Railroads, 195 Cal. 185, 196, 232 P. 131.

[2,3] This rule is not applicable at stations maintained for the use of passengers. There the high degree of care owed by a common carrier to its passengers comes into play. The "station rule" does not require a passenger to stop, look and listen before approaching intervening tracks to reach a train. On the contrary "the passenger, while not absolved from the duty of exercising care for his own safety, has the right to presume that the tracks, intervening * * * will be kept safe while he is crossing; so that the mere fact that he fails to look and listen * * * will not necessarily be ascribed to his contributory negligence, and will not prevent a recovery of damages * * *." Wilkinson v. United Railroads, supra, 195 Cal. at page 199, 232 P. at page 136. See also Ferran v. Southern Pac. Co., 3 Cal.2d 350, 44 P.2d 533, and MacGregor v. Pacific Elec. Ry. Co., 6 Cal.2d 596, 59 P.2d 123.

Here respondent did fail to look to her left before crossing the westbound tracks. But there is no evidence that she failed to listen, and any such inference from the fact that she failed to hear the westbound train is dispelled by the testimony of other intending passengers that they did not hear the train which struck respondent.

The present case is even stronger on its facts than the three cases last cited. Here, appellant's operating rule required the westbound train to stop short of the station when an eastbound train was stopped at the station. Respondent, from her long experience as a passenger on this line, knew this practice of appellant. Thus respondent had not only the "right to assume that the company will so regulate the movement of its trains * * * as to enable [her] to cross the tracks in safety,"" MacGregor v. Pacific Elec. Ry. Co., supra, 6 Cal.2d at page 600, 59 P.2d at page 125, but she knew of and relied upon a specific practice of appellant in this respect.

[4] The cases cited above are clear that failure to look and listen does not constitute contributory negligence as a matter of law, but that the question is, on all the circumstances of the case, one of fact for the jury. We cannot accept appellant's argument that the Wilkinson case is to be distinguished, and we conclude that the rule of that case governs here.

[5-7] Appellant also contends that the award of $13,259.18 is so excessive as to require reversal. But it is not the function of an appellate court to fix the award of damages, even within broad limits, and thus to impose its views upon the trier of the fact. Pain and suffering are not subject to precise measurement by any scale, and their translation into terms of money damages is peculiarly the function of the trier of the facts. Hallinan v. Prindle, 17 Cal. App.2d 656, 671, 62 P.2d 1075. Here the trial judge, on motion for new trial, had the opportunity to review the award. In these circumstances, "an appellate court may interfere only in the event it appears * * *, as a matter of law, that the verdict was the result of passion or prejudice." Harris v. Lampert, 131 Cal.App.2d 751, 752, 281 P.2d 292, 293.

[8] There is evidence that respondent was badly bruised, suffered great pain, and that one result of the injury was "an anxiety state induced by adequate cause" which afforded considerable emotional difficulty for many weeks and which had continued in lesser degree up to the time of trial. Her physician described her injuries as "moderately severe." She was hospitalized for 12 days and lost 6 weeks' work. Her work requires her to stand, and the injury to her knee made this very difficult. At trial, 18 months after the accident, she still suffered pain in the knee. Her doctor gave some testimony that this knee injury will have permanent results.

Her hospital bills were $459.15, doctor's bill was $200, clothing and personal effects destroyed in the accident were valued at nearly $200, and she had a substantial loss of wages. In the eyes of many, the award may be high. But we cannot say that it is excessive as a matter of law.

The judgment is affirmed.

Hearing Denied Nov. 14, 1956.

'Action against assignee of partnership payee and others for a declaratory judgment to determine validity of several hundred promissory notes executed by veterans as a secret side agreement over and above the agreed purchase price of homes purchased under loans guaranteed by the United States. After the Superior Court, San Diego County, Arthur L. Mundo, J., ruled in favor of assignee and the other defendants on the pleadings, assignee severed herself from co-defendants and filed a cross-complaint against two plaintiffs for balance due on their note and for a declaration of her rights in respect to the other outstanding notes. The Court denied the relief requested and assignee appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Griffin, Acting P. J., held that where partnership payee had failed to file a certification with county authorities showing names of partners as required of businesses operating under a fictitious name, partnership payee could not bring an action on notes, and as assignee took notes after maturity, she was subject to the same disabilities as partnership, but that ruling that judgment on cross-complaint applied to all notes was improper.

Judgment modified, and as modified, affirmed.

1. Partnership ⚖64

Where assignee who obtained note from a partnership payee after maturity, failed to allege and prove in cross-action to recover balance due on note, that partnership had complied with fictitious name statute, assignee could not proceed further or recover judgment on the note. West's Ann. Civ.Code, §§ 2466, 2468, 2469.

2. Partnership ⚖64

Under fictitious name statute, partnership is required not only to show names of persons comprising partnership but names must be stated truthfully. West's Ann.Civ. Code, §§ 2466, 2468, 2469.

3. Partnership ⚖64

Fictitious name statute applies to an action for declaratory relief by an assignee of partnership as well as to the maintenance of another type of action. West's Ann.Civ. Code, §§ 2466, 2468, 2469.

4. Partnership ⚖64

In cross-action by assignee of a partnership payee to recover balance due on a note, evidence was sufficient to support finding that neither partnership nor assignee had made timely and truthful compliance with fictitious name statute. West's Ann. Civ.Code, §§ 2466, 2468, 2469.

5. Constitutional Law ⚖154(1), 240(1), 296(1) Partnership ⚖64

Conditions imposed on persons doing business as a partnership under fictitious name statute do not impair obligation of contract, deny equal protection or deprive assignee of note, acquiring title after maturity from partnership payee which had failed to comply with statute, from exercising her right to protection of court in conducting a lawful business without due process of law. U.S.C.A.Const. Amend. 5; West's Ann.Const. art. 1, §§ 11, 13, 16, 21; West's Ann.Civ.Code, §§ 2466, 2468, 2469, 3141; West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc., § 1962.

6. Estoppel ⚖118

In cross-action by assignee of partnership payee to recover balance due on a note, evidence was sufficient to support finding that makers were not estopped by untimely delay from raising question of partnership's noncompliance with fictitious name statute. West's Ann.Civ.Code, §§ 2466, 2468, 2469.

7. Partnership Ⓒ64

Assignee in cross-action to recover balance due on a note, claiming title to note by assignment after maturity from partnership payee, an entity doing business under a fictitious name, had burden of proving compliance with fictitious name statute. West's Ann.Civ.Code, §§ 2466, 2468, 2469.

8. Partnership Ⓒ64

The mere acceptance of deeds by grantees and execution of notes payable to the grantors operating a partnership, would not raise a conclusive presumption that partnership had complied with fictitious name statute. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 2466; Servicemen's Readjustment Act of 1944, 38 U.S.C.A. § 693 et seq.

9. Declaratory Judgment Ⓒ385

In declaratory judgment action to determine validity of several hundred promissory notes wherein assignee of partnership payee of notes filed cross-complaint against two of makers to recover balance due on a note, and for a declaration of rights as to the other notes, trial court's recital in findings and judgment in favor of makers that the declaration applied to all notes executed by the purchasers of homes was improper, in view of fact that in other actions brought by assignee, compliance with the fictitious name statute might be waived by the defendants sued therein. West's Ann.Civ. Code, §§ 2466, et seq., 3141; Servicemen's Readjustment Act of 1944, 38 U.S.C.A. § 693 et seq.; West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc., § 1962.

GRIFFIN, Acting Presiding Justice.

In the original complaint for declaratory and injunctive relief filed July 30, 1953, by Joseph R. Hixson, et al, including William Lee Farris and Helen Sue Farris, it is alleged that, in a representative capacity, they represent several war veterans who had formed a Protective Committee to test the validity of several hundred promissory notes ranging from $130 to $150 each, which were signed by such veterans as a secret side agreement over and above the agreed purchase price of the home that each was purchasing under a loan guaranteed by the United States Government, Servicemen's Readjustment Act of 1944, 38 U.S.C.A. § 693 et seq.; that these notes were made payable to the Hubner Building Company, a copartnership, the grantor of the property; that about 1952, after the notes were past due and in default, defendant and appellant Delta M. Boren acquired from the Hubner Building Company, a thousand or more of the notes by assignment to her without recourse.

It appears from the files that defendant Delta M. Boren, et al, were successful in obtaining a ruling that such a representative suit would not lie in such a declaratory relief action under the pleadings as thus framed. The court allowed plaintiffs to amend but they refused. No judgment of dismissal followed. After several months defendant Boren, severing from her codefendants, then filed an answer and cross-complaint against William Lee Farris and wife, and therein stated that she "waived" the court's ruling in her favor and alone answered and denied generally the allegations of the first amended complaint. She alleged there was an actual controversy between plaintiff Hixson, the other veterans, and her concerning their liability on the notes, and by way of cross-complaint alleged that prior to December 9, 1952, Hubner Building Company was a copartnership engaged in the acquisition of lands in San Diego and the sale of such lands and buildings built thereon to veterans, and that E. J. Hubner and Ione C. Hubner, prior to the commencement of this action, caused to be filed and published, as required by section 2466 of the Civil Code, a certificate of fictitious name showing themselves to be the partners composing such partnership. She alleged the due execution of a $150 note by the Farrises on March 10, 1951; that it was for advances of money made by Hubner Building Company for certain costs agreed upon by the parties; that no fraud was committed and no conspiracy existed between her and any other person in relation to it; that on December 9, 1952, for a valuable consideration, Hubner Building Company transferred and assigned said note to her; and accordingly she claimed judgment against them and sought a declaration of her rights in respect to this and any other such outstanding notes.

The cross-complaint withstood an attack by demurrer and motion to strike. In Far-*r*is' answer to the cross-complaint, among other claimed defenses, it is pleaded as a special defense that Hubner Building Company was, at the time therein referred to, a copartnership, but it is denied that any of the partners thereof "ever, at any time prior hereto, caused to be filed or published as required by, or have fulfilled any of the requirements of section 2466 Civil Code". It is alleged in this regard that "the true partners were E. J. Hubner, Alton B. Jackson and Wrelton L. Clarke".

By amendment to the cross-complaint Mrs. Boren alleged that title of cross-defendants and all persons represented by them was derived solely from conveyances from Hubner Building Company, a copartnership composed of E. J. Hubner and Ione C. Hubner, and the notes were given in connection with this conveyance; that by their actions cross-defendants waived the necessity of filing and publishing any different certificate of fictitious name; that prior to December 9, 1952, when she purchased the notes, cross-defendants knew that Ione C. Hubner, E. J. Hubner, Clarke and Jackson had some interest in the assets of the copartnership; that cross-complainant did not discover the details of the relationship between E. J. Hubner and Ione C. Hubner and the other individuals named until the cross-complaint was filed and that cross-defendants, as well as other purchasers were estopped from showing any partnership relationship except that appearing on the public records. It was further alleged that Delta M. Boren, during the trial, caused to be published a certificate of partnership in accordance with section 2466, et seq. of the Civil Code, showing that between September 26, 1950, and June 7, 1951, Hubner, Clarke and Jackson were partners authorized to transact business under the name of Hubner Building Company.

In answer thereto cross-defendants denied generally these allegations and alleged that Mrs. Boren did know of the precise relationship and the actual partners at all times; that she knew a false certificate of partnership was filed and that it was for the sole and deliberate purpose of misleading and defrauding cross-defendants and to hide the true facts in relation to the members of said partnership from them and the public in general; and that she was a party to the filing of such false certificate through her own attorney and it was for the purpose of pretending that Jackson and Clarke were not copartners when, in fact, they were. They denied that they should be estopped from claiming this special defense, and alleged that cross-complainant should be estopped, by reason of her participation and knowledge of the true facts, from asserting that said partnership was other than one existing between Hubner, Clarke and Jackson; that the subsequent certificate of partnership was void, invalid, and had no effect on the present action.

Apparently the trial court postponed the trial of all issues and proceeded to trial on the issues presented by the special defense and held that both Jackson and Clarke were in fact partners in this transaction and that the certificate of copartnership, as published, was not a true certificate, was false and fictitious, and did not disclose the names of the true partners; that these facts were known by Mrs. Boren when she acquired the notes and when she offered the certificate of partnership in evidence in support of her cross-complaint that it was done deliberately, intentionally and fraudulently for the purpose of concealing from cross-defendants and the public generally the true names of the existing partners; that cross-complainant was not a holder in due course; that as assignee of said copartnership, Hub-ner Building Company, she took the notes subject to all defenses and equities existing in favor of the makers of said notes against said partnership; that Ione C. Hubner permitted her name to be used as one of the partners for the sole purpose of concealing the true facts; and that cross-defendants are not estopped from showing the true relationship. It then found generally that the other allegations of the amended cross-complaint were untrue and that there was no compliance by the Hubner Building Company or cross-complainant with the provisions of sections 2466, 2468, 2469 or 2469.1 of the Civil Code, and accordingly she is not entitled to maintain any action to enforce the terms and conditions of any of the notes referred to in said cross-complaint and all actions by her to enforce collection of said notes are barred by reason thereof; that by the death of one of said partners and the dissolution of the partnership it is now impossible for her to comply with said statute and accordingly no trial on the other issues joined by the cross-complaint is necessary. Judgment was entered accordingly and cross-complainant appealed.

Without setting forth the complete evidence on this subject, it appears from the testimony of Jackson that he, Clarke, and Hubner sold homes under the name of Hubner Building Company, each participating in one-third of the profits; that the only interest Ione C. Hubner had was a one-half interest she subsequently obtained in a divorce settlement of her husband's one-third share; that before the Hubner Building Company had been formed he, Clarke and Hubner had organized and each had received one-third of the shares of a corporation of that name to conduct this business; that each party contributed $7,000 cash for that purpose; that the corporation was dissolved and reorganized as a partnership and transferred the corporate business and assets to it; that the purported partnership agreement and certificate showing Ione and E. J. Hubner to be the partners was prepared and filed in order to make it appear of record that such persons were the only partners of the partnership because "we were in the loan business. We didn't want to be in competition with our customers"; that Ione and E. J. Hubner were merely "fronting" the deal for the real partners under an oral agreement to do so; that when his loan company acted for the veterans to obtain the loans for the purchasers he never informed them that he was a partner nor had any interest in the Hubner Building Company, and he acted on his attorney's advice in the manner in which the deal was brought up, the documents signed, and the false certificate filed of record and the deception practiced.

Ione C. Hubner testified she was never a partner in the building company; that Jackson, Clarke and E. J. Hubner were at all times the real partners and conducted the business of the Hubner Building Company. Mrs. Boren admitted, on cross-examination, that she previously testified in her municipal court case against Hixson that she knew Jackson and Clarke were partners with E. J. Hubner and she bought the notes in December, 1952, after discussing the sale price with them (the three partners) and that this testimony was long before she verified her cross-complaint alleging that the partnership consisted of Ione C. and E. J. Hubner.

It is Mrs. Boren's claim on this appeal that the intended position of Clarke and Jackson was fundamentally that of beneficiaries of a subdivision trust; that by reason of the acceptance of the deeds and execution of the notes payable to the grantor, the grantees and payors are bound by the recitals in the instruments and conclusively bound as to the identity and membership of the grantor and payee partnership as thus disclosed; that the failure to comply with said sections operates as a penalty and that such forfeiture penalties are not favored in law, citing Section 1962, Code Civil Procedure; Section 3141 Civil Code, and such cases as Commercial National Bank v. Reichelt, 62 Mont. 302, 204 P. 1037; People's State Bank v. Trombly, 241 Mich. 199, 217 N.W. 47; First Federal Trust Co. v. Stockfleth, 98 Cal.App. 21, 276 P. 371; and 18B McKinney's New California Digest, p. 302.

It is then argued that cross-defendants waived objection to full compliance with section 2466 et seq. of the Civil Code by untimely delay in raising the question in the pleadings, and by their conduct. It is then submitted that if the findings of the trial court are sustained, said sections herein referred to are unconstitutional and preclude cross-complainant from exercising her right to the protection of the court in conducting a lawful business guaranteed by sections 11, 13, 16 and 21, Article I of the California Constitution and Amendment 5 of the United States Constitution. Buxbom v. Smith, 23 Cal.2d 535, 546, 145 P.2d 305.

Cross-complainant concedes that she holds the notes as an assignee after maturity and would have no capacity to sue if her assignor, Hubner Building Company, had no capacity to sue.

Section 2466 of the Civil Code provides:

"* * * every person transacting business in this State under a fictitious name and every partnership transacting business in this State under a fictitious name, or a designation not showing the names of the persons interested as partners in such business, must file with the clerk of the county in which his or its principal place of business is situated, a certificate, stating the name in full and the place of residence of such person and stating the names in full of all the members of such partnership and their places of residence. * * *

Section 2468 of the Civil Code provides in part that "* * * No person doing business under a fictitious name, or his assignee or assignees, nor any persons doing business as partners contrary to the provisions of this article, or their assignee or assignees, shall maintain any action upon or on account of any contract or contracts made, or transactions had, under such fictitious name, or in their partnership name, in any court of this State until the certificate has been filed and the publication has been made as herein required."

Section 2469 of the Civil Code provides that

"On every change in the members of a partnership transacting business in this State under a fictitious name, or a designation which does not show the names of the persons interested as partners in its business, * * * a new certificate must be filed with the County Clerk * * *."

[1] Andrews v. Glick, 205 Cal. 699, 272 P. 587, definitely holds that the subject of section 2466, supra, is that public notice shall be given and a public record made of the individual members of the partnership with such definiteness and particularity that those dealing with them may at all times know who are the individuals with whom they are dealing or to whom they are giving credit or becoming bound. See also Bank of America N. T. & S. A. v. National Funding Corporation, 45 Cal.App.2d 320, 327, 114 P.2d 49. The cases are numerous holding that in view of the requirements of the statute the partnership or its assignee, as the case may be, must allege and prove compliance with the statute in any suit to enforce a partnership contract or transaction, and failure to comply with the statute is fatal to the maintenance of the action by either the assignor or the assignee.

In the absence of proof by the cross-complainant of compliance with the statute, or upon a showing that a certificate filed does not comply with the statutory requirements, the cross-complainant may not proceed further or recover judgment. See North v. Moore, 135 Cal. 621, 67 P. 1037; Collection Service Corp. v. Conlin, 98 Cal. App. 686, 277 P. 749; Cohen v. Levy, 108 Cal.App. 524, 291 P. 864; Rudneck v. Southern California M. & R. Co., 184 Cal. 274, 193 P. 775; Sweeney v. Stanford, 67 Cal. 635, 8 P. 444.

[2, 3] A false certificate obviously does not comply with the statute and by its very nature cannot constitute compliance. The statute requires not only the names of the persons comprising the fictitious partnership but they must be stated truthfully. A person should not be permitted to do business under a fictitious name and be protected by a certificate which falsely represents the names of the partners to be some other persons. The very object of the statute would be thwarted if such evasion of the statute were countenanced. Schwarz & Gottlieb, Inc., v. Marcuse, 175 Cal. 401, 165 P. 1015. This prohibition applies to an action for declaratory relief by an assignee as well as to the maintenance of another type of action. Bank of America N. T. & S. A. v. National Funding Corporation, 45 Cal.App.2d 320, 114 P.2d 49, supra.

[4, 5] The court's finding that neither the partnership nor the cross-complainant had made timely and truthful compliance with section 2466 of the Civil Code is sufficiently established. Originally, partnerships and individuals were not permitted to do business under fictitious names. The right to do so is a creature of statute and before a suit may be maintained by a fictitious partnership the legislature has the right to prescribe certain conditions. These conditions are not unconstitutional, as claimed. Schwarz & Gottlieb, Inc., v. Marcuse, supra.

[6-8] The trial court found, upon sufficient evidence, that cross-defendants were not estopped from raising this question at the time indicated. We cannot hold, as a matter of law, to the contrary. The burden of proof of compliance was upon plaintiff. Rudneck v. Southern California M. & R. Co., 184 Cal. 274, 281, 193 P. 775, supra. By the mere acceptance of the deeds and the execution of the notes it cannot be conclusively presumed that the Hubner Building Company complied with section 2466 et seq. of the Civil Code, entitling it to maintain an action on the notes. This sufficiently disposes of the main contentions raised on this appeal.

[9] Lastly, it is argued that the court erred in the terms of the findings and the judgment by reciting therein that this declaration applied to all of those certain promissory notes executed and delivered by purchasers of homes from the Hubner Building Company, a copartnership, to said partnership during the years 1950, 1951 and 1952, purportedly as part of the purchase prices thereof, or expenses incurred in connection therewith. The contention is that the trial court erred in the attempt to tie cross-complainant's hands in other actions and other courts in which actions she maintains compliance with the fictitious name statute might be waived by the defendants therein sued. There is merit to this claim and the declaration should not apply other than to those involved in the present proceeding.

As thus modified the judgment is affirmed. Respondent to recover costs.

Sept. 24, 1956.

Defendant was charged with robbery, and he interposed defense of insanity. From a judgment of the Superior Court of Riverside County, John G. Gabbert, J., the defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Mussell, J., held that the evidence sustained the conviction and that the defense of insanity was not sustained by the preponderance of evidence.

Judgment affirmed.

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Sanity".

3. Criminal Law §570(2)

MUSSELL, Justice.

Defendant was charged in an information with the crime of Robbery, a violation of Section 211 of the Penal Code. On August 26, 1955, he entered a plea of not guilty to the charge and on September 8th, on his motion, his plea of not guilty was ordered withdrawn and a plea of not guilty by reason of insanity was ordered entered. Alienists were appointed by the court and ordered to submit their reports. On October 11th the reports of the doctors were received and considered by the court and counsel and it was stipulated that the issue as to the defendant's sanity at the time of the commission of the crime be tried and determined on the doctors' reports. The court then found that the defendant was sane at the time of the commission of the offense and the matter was referred to the probation officer for investigation and report. On October 21st the report of the probation officer was received and the defendant, when asked by the court if there was any legal cause why judgment should not be pronounced, informed the court that he did not understand the nature of his former plea and requested further counsel. The matter was then continued to November 3rd, on which date defendant informed the court that he had retained one Dale C. Miller as counsel and a continuance of the case was thereupon had to November 8th. On that date Alan Nixen was appointed as defendant's counsel and Mr. Miller was relieved as attorney of record. The matter was again continued to November 10th when, on defendant's motion, his plea of not guilty by reason of insanity was withdrawn and a plea of not guilty and not guilty by reason of insanity was entered. A jury trial was ordered and set for November 28th. On November 18, 1955, the trial court reviewed the history of the proceedings to the defendant, who then withdrew his plea of not guilty and stated that it was his intention to have the matter tried on the issue of not guilty by reason of insanity only. The court then explained to the defendant the consequences of such a plea and he stated that he fully understood. His pleas of not guilty and not guilty by reason of insanity were ordered withdrawn and his plea of not guilty by reason of insanity entered. A jury trial was had on this issue and a verdict was returned by the jury finding that the defendant was sane at the time of the commission of the offense charged. His application for probation was denied and he was sentenced to the state prison for the term prescribed by law. He appeals from the judgment of conviction.

[1] On March 16, 1956, pursuant to the request of the defendant, this court appointed Alan Nixen, the attorney who represented the defendant at the trial, as counsel for defendant on this appeal. Mr.

Nixen filed a report herein rather than a brief, People v. Bennett, 120 Cal.App.2d 835, 262 P.2d 59. He states therein that he has examined the complete record in the lower court and has concluded, after careful research of the points raised by the appellant, that appellant does not have any meritorious grounds for appeal. After studying the record herein, we agree with this conclusion.

The evidence shows that on August 15, 1955, at about 1:00 p.m., the defendant entered a variety store in Riverside and there waited until the Proprietress (Ann Loucks) finished waiting on customers then in the store. Defendant asked to look at a certain kind of paint and when Ann Loucks' back was turned, lunged at her and said, "Hold it right there. This is a stickup." Ann Loucks testified that he then took her to a back room, tied a rope around her waist and arms and closed her mouth; that he told her not to make any noise, that he had a knife with him. She stated that the defendant had the rope with him when he entered the store. A witness who was in the store immediately after Ann Loucks was taken to the back room, testified that she saw the defendant taking money out of the cash register. Defendant was arrested by the police officers shortly thereafter and was taken to the store where he was identified. He made conflicting statements to the officers as to his whereabouts at the time of the commission of the offense and concerning the coins and other personal property found in his possession. While it was stipulated at the trial that the defendant had committed the offense charged and on his plea of not guilty by reason of insanity he admitted the commission of the offense, Pen.Code, Sec. 1016, the evidence is amply sufficient to establish the robbery charge. The evidence on the issue of insanity consisted principally of the testimony of psychiatrists who had examined the defendant.

Dr. Daniel S. Castile, a psychiatrist, testified that he made an electroencephalogram test and tracings of the defendant's brain which suggested damage thereto; that in his opinion the defendant was unable to differentiate between right and wrong and was therefore insane and that defendant was a man whose sanity was marginal.

Dr. Michael Koenig testified that from his examination of the defendant he concluded that the defendant did not have a clear idea of right and wrong; that he was not in a position to state whether the defendant was insane or not but that he did show evidence of mental impairment to a degree.

Dr. Robert Cook, a psychiatrist called by the People, testified that he examined the defendant and conducted several tests on the basis of which he stated that he found the defendant "by the legal definition of legal sanity to be sane."

[2-4] Dr. Otto L. Gericke, Superintendent and Medical Director of the hospital at Patton, Diplomat of the American Bureau of Psychiatrists and Neurologists and a Fellow in the American Psychiatric Association, testified that he examined the defendant and also reviewed the report of Dr. Castile and the electroencephalogram which he took; that he made a second examination of the defendant three weeks later; that it was his opinion that on the date of the alleged offense the defendant was sane and knew the difference between right and wrong and the nature and quality of his act.

As is said in People v. Daugherty, 40 Cal.2d 876, 894, 256 P.2d 911, 921:

"* * * Legal sanity, in a criminal case, under our court declared law, means "reasoning capacity sufficient to distinguish between right and wrong as to the particular act he is doing, knowledge and consciousness that what he is doing is wrong and criminal and will subject him to punishment." * * *

The defendant had the burden of proving insanity by a preponderance of the evidence, People v. Daugherty, supra, 40 Cal.2d 901, 256 P.2d 925, and we conclude that the defendant did not meet this burden and that the finding of the jury that he was sane at the time of the offense charged is amply supported by the record.

The judgment is affirmed.

Fred CARNER, Defendant and Appellant.

3 Cr. 2678.

District Court of Appeal, Third District,
California.

Sept. 27, 1956.

Defendant was convicted of forcible rape. The Superior Court, Solano County, Joseph M. Raines, J., entered judgment of conviction and order denying motion for new trial and defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Schottky, J., held that errors in admission of testimony that defendant had been previously arrested for drunken driving and in instruction that jury could consider such testimony in determining defendant's credibility were not prejudicial, where the matter of the prior arrest would have little weight with jury.

Judgment and order affirmed.

1. Witnesses \Leftrightarrow 337(5)

In forcible rape prosecution, where no attempt was made to show that defendant had been convicted of a felony, defendant's credibility could not be impeached by cross-examining him as to whether or not he had ever been arrested, notwithstanding that defendant stated that he had never been in trouble before and offered evidence that his general reputation for sexual morality was good. West's Ann. Code Civ.Proc. § 2051; West's Ann.Pen. Code, §§ 261, subd. 3, 1102.

2. Criminal Law \Leftrightarrow 786(6)

In forcible rape prosecution, instruction which permitted jury, in determining credibility of defendant, to consider inadmissible evidence that defendant had been arrested for a prior offense, should not have been given. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc. § 2051; West's Ann.Pen.Code, §§ 261, subd. 3, 1102.

3. Criminal Law \Leftrightarrow 693

Where subject matter of question is objectionable and a party fails to interpose objection until after it is answered, he thereby waives his right to complain of admission of the testimony.

4. Criminal Law \Leftrightarrow 1169(5)

Where evidence is stricken out on motion of defendant and jury are admonished to disregard it, any error in admitting such testimony is generally cured.

5. Criminal Law \Leftrightarrow 1169(1), 1172(1)

Robert K. Winters, Benicia, for appellant.
Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., by Doris H. Maier, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

SCHOTTKY, Justice.

Defendant was convicted of the crime of forcible rape, Pen.Code, sec. 261, subd. 3, and appeals from the judgment and order denying his motion for a new trial. Defendant does not dispute the sufficiency of the evidence to support the verdict of the jury but contends that reversible error was committed by the trial court in the improper admission of evidence and in an erroneous instruction to the jury.

It appears from the record that the defendant, Fred Carner, spent the late afternoon and evening of June 30, 1955, drinking at a Fairfield tavern. He left the inn at about 10:00 p. m. and drove to Vacaville where he stopped near a restaurant known as Corral Number 3.

Meanwhile, after a day of assisting her husband in a television repair business as well as caring for her baby and her household, 22 year old Carol June Lingo, the prosecutrix, decided to take a stroll near her Vacaville home and see how her friend and neighbor, Irma Smith, was getting along on a new job. At about 10:45 p. m. Carol arrived at the Corral Number 3 where Irma had just started working. She stayed only briefly since her friend was extremely busy.

Leaving the restaurant she paused for a moment to observe some construction work being done near the restaurant. As she gazed at the excavation she was addressed by the defendant and a brief casual conversation ensued. She was surprised when defendant called her by her first name and stated that he knew her father well. They talked politely for a moment then she stated that it was time for her to be getting home. He offered to drive her home but she declined politely saying that she would rather walk. He continued his offer to drive her home and appeared to be hurt and offended when she refused. Not wishing to offend a man whom she thought to be a friend of her father she finally consented to riding to her home with him.

It soon became abundantly clear that defendant had no intention of taking her home. She protested repeatedly and even tried to get him to stop at the home of one of her friends as they passed by. The defendant paid no attention and continued driving out of town at a high rate of speed.

The prosecutrix testified that defendant stopped the car on a lonely country road and after a violent struggle in which she resisted his advances to the limit of her strength, she was forced to submit to an act of sexual intercourse. Defendant later released the prosecutrix in the town of Vacaville and prosecutrix quickly reported to the police station the events that had transpired. Her testimony was corroborated by evidence of multiple scratches, abrasions and contusions upon her forehead, her right temple, her neck and upon her knees. Her husband testified that there were no observable bruises upon his wife when she left the house for her evening walk but that she was badly bruised when she returned home the next morning.

A medical examination of defendant following his arrest the next day revealed scratches, abrasions, and contusions upon his back, shoulders, legs, cheeks and lip. He also had a small abrasion on the inner edge of his foreskin. It was the opinion of the doctor that the injuries found upon the defendant's body were inflicted within 24 hours of the time of the examination.

Upon his arrest about 1:00 p. m. on July 1, 1955, defendant denied having seen the prosecutrix before and denied having had sexual intercourse with her, but upon the trial he admitted the act of sexual intercourse but maintained that the prosecutrix consented to the act and that no force or violence was used by him to accomplish the act.

[1] Defendant first contends that the court erred in overruling his objections to certain questions asked by the District Attorney during the cross-examination of defendant. The record shows the following:

"Q. [By Mr. Peterson]: * * * I believe you also testified in response to some of Mr. Winters' questions, that you decided to tell the truth after your attorney had talked to you, is that correct? A. That's true.

"Q. In other words, you weren't going to tell the truth until somebody told you to, is that right? A. Well, that's the first time I'd been into any trouble. I didn't tell them what happened until I got hold of an attorney. He told me to go ahead and tell the truth, and nothing but the truth.

"Q. This is the first time you've been in any trouble? A. That's true.

"Q. This is the first time you've been arrested?

"Mr. Winters: I will object to that question as not being relevant to any issue here.

"The Court: Overruled.

"By Mr. Peterson: Q. Is this the first time you've been arrested? A. No, it isn't.

"Mr. Winters: I'm going to object, and cite the District Attorney for prejudicial misconduct. The only question permitted is, have you ever been convicted of a felony.

"The Court: I've overruled it.

"Mr. Winters: I'd like to take an exception, and cite Your Honor for prejudicial misconduct.

"The Court: The Court is trying to show both of you courteous treatment, and give your client a fair trial.

"Mr. Winters: I understand that, but when your ruling permits a prejudicial question to be asked of a witness concerning an offense not amounting to a felony, I feel that it's highly prejudicial to my client, both on your part—

"The Court: You may have your exception, and your objection is again overruled.

* * * * *

"Q. Have you ever been arrested before? A. I have."

On redirect examination, defendant's counsel further developed defendant's testimony and therein he stated in response to his counsel's inquiry that said arrest was for drunk driving.

Defendant is correct in his contention that the trial court erred in permitting the prosecution to ask defendant on cross-examination whether or not he had ever been arrested. This question was presented in People v. Hamblin, 68 Cal. 101, 8 P. 687, 688, where, as in the present case, there was no attempt made to show that the defendant had been convicted of a felony and the question merely sought to establish that defendant had been arrested. That court quoted the following language from People v. Elster, 65 Cal. xx, 3 P. 884, "The only possible object of asking the questions was to impeach the credibility of the witness. But the testimony was not admissible for that purpose. The mere fact that the witness had been arrested does not prove, nor tend to prove, that he had been convicted of any offense; and until there is proof of conviction the witness was protected by the legal presumption of innocence. Hence the rule formulated by section 2051, Code of Civil Proc.: * *." See also 3 Wigmore on Evidence 545, section 980a, 3d Ed. The language of said section providing that a witness may not be impeached by evidence of particular wrongful acts limits impeachment of this character to cases where there has been a conviction of a felony. Penal Code section 1102 makes this rule applicable to criminal trials.

Respondent contends that because defendant offered evidence to prove his good character in respect to the trait involved in the charge, i. e., that his general reputation for sexual morality was good, the challenged evidence was admissible to show that his general reputation was bad and to rebut defendant's gratuitous statement that he had never been in trouble before. We do not think that respondent correctly states the California rule. The state is confined to evidence of the general bad reputation of defendant for sexual morality or evidence of judgment of conviction of a felony. See 22 So. Cal. L. Rev. 341-347; 3d Ed.; People v. Hamilton, 33 Cal. 2d 45, 3 Wigmore on Evidence 550, section 983, 198 P.2d 873. All of the cases cited by respondent introduce other acts of the same nature for the purpose of establishing guilty intent or motive and are not in point.

[2] Defendant contends further that the error in not sustaining his objections to said questions was aggravated by the following instruction which the court gave to the jury:

"Evidence was elicited from the defendant on his cross-examination by the District Attorney, that he had been arrested for a prior offense, to wit: a misdemeanor; said prior offense was in no way connected with the charge on which defendant is now being tried. Such evidence was elicited and allowed by the court only on the question on the credibility of the defendant, and is not to be considered by you, in the slightest degree, as tending to connect the defendant with the offense of rape on which he is so being tried, nor as tending to prove in any way, his guilt thereof."

The instruction should not have been given because as provided in section 2051 of the Code of Civil Procedure a witness may not be impeached "by evidence of particular wrongful acts, except that it may be shown by the examination of the witness, or the record of the judgment, that he had been convicted of a felony", and the instruction as given by the court permitted the jury to consider inadmissible evidence in determining the credibility of defendant.

[3,4] The remaining contentions of defendant are without merit. The record discloses that defendant's counsel objected to the question, "As a matter of fact, Mr. Button originally signed a surety on your bail, did he not?" after defendant's affirmative answer was given. Where the subject matter of the question is objectionable and a party fails to interpose objection until after it is answered, he thereby waives his right to complain of the admission of the testimony. People v.

Brazil, 53 Cal.App.2d 596, 598-599, 128 P.2d 204; People v. Caritativo, 46 Cal.2d 68, 292 P.2d 513. Then the question was asked, "And then Mr. Button subsequently withdrew as surety on your bail, did he not?" Objection by defendant's counsel was sustained and the jury admonished. Upon further cross-examination, defendant was asked a series of questions concerning whether or not he was still employed by Mr. Button and whether or not the latter took defendant home from two bars on a certain date. When defendant's counsel explained that said date was two days prior to the trial, the court sustained defendant's objection, ordered the answer stricken and admonished the jury. Where evidence is stricken out on motion of defendant and the jury are admonished to disregard it, any error in admitting such testimony is generally cured. People v. Bolton, 215 Cal. 12, 18-19, 8 P.2d 116. The jury is presumed to obey such orders. People v. Pearson, 111 Cal.App.2d 9, 21, 244 P.2d 35; People v. Young, 25 Cal.App.2d 148, 156, 77 P.2d 271.

[5] While, as we have hereinbefore stated, certain errors were committed in the admission of testimony and in instructions to the jury, we do not believe that such errors are sufficient to justify a reversal of the judgment. A reading of the entire record convinces us that the evidence was such that the admission of evidence that defendant had previously been arrested for drunk driving would have little weight with the jury in determining whether he was guilty of the crime of rape. We are convinced further that the instruction complained of would likewise have little weight with the jury. It must be borne in mind that the jury had an opportunity to see and hear the witnesses and that the record shows that defendant was ably defended. Defendant, a married man and the father of six children, admitted taking the prosecutrix in his automobile to a lonely road at a late hour of the night and there consummating an act of sexual intercourse with her. These admitted facts would undoubtedly prejjudice defendant in the eyes of the jury far more than evidence that he had previously been arrested on a charge of drunk driving. Having in mind the provisions of section 4½ of Article VI of our state Constitution that no judgment shall be set aside on the ground of misdirection of the jury or error in the introduction or rejection of evidence or for error as to any matter of pleading, "unless, after an examination of the entire cause, including the evidence, the court shall be of the opinion that the error complained of has resulted in a miscarriage of justice", we believe that no miscarriage of justice has resulted.

The judgment and order are affirmed.

In the Matter of the ESTATE OF Joseph FELDMAN, Deceased.

Helen Hayner FELDMAN, Petitioner and Appellant,

v.

ESTATE OF Rose F. METZGER,
Respondent.

Civ. 21669.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 1, California.

Oct. 8, 1956.

Hearing Denied Dec. 5, 1956.

Proceedings in the matter of a decedent's estate, wherein testamentary trustees petitioned for instructions. The Superior Court of Los Angeles County, Victor R. Hansen, J., held that the estate of the first life income beneficiary of testamentary trust was entitled to all of net income received by executors on corpus of trust for period commencing with date of decedent's death and continuing up to and including date of beneficiary's death, and an appeal was taken. The District Court of Appeal, Fourth, J., held that the word "trustee," as defined and used in the Principal and Income Law, does not include an executor, and that first life income beneficiary of testamentary trust was not entitled to income earned by trust and paid to executors, but not distributed to trustees during period between death of testator and death of such beneficiary.

Reversed with directions.

Opinion, 299 P.2d 441, vacated.

1. Wills ⇨684(7)

Both Probate Code section providing for income accrual from date of testator's death and Civil Code section providing for cessation of tenant's right to income are applicable to testamentary trust; and application of latter statute in those instances wherein beneficiary dies prior to decree of distribution does not by implication result in forfeiture of vested right. West's Ann. Civ.Code, § 730.06; West's Ann.Prob. Code, § 160.

2. Wills ⇨684(7)

The word "trustee," as defined and used in the Principal and Income Law, does not include an executor; and first life income beneficiary of testamentary trust was not entitled to income earned by trust and paid to executors, but not distributed to trustees during period between death of testator and death of such beneficiary. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 730.03.

FOURT, Justice.

This is an appeal by Helen Hayner Feldman, the widow of Joseph Feldman, deceased, and one of the beneficiaries under the terms of his will, from an order instructing the trustees to pay to the estate of Rose F. Metzger, also a beneficiary, all monies ascertained to have been received during the period *June 24, 1953*¹ to January 5, 1954, on the corpus of each of the trusts created by paragraphs Fifth (B) and Fifth (C)² of the will of decedent.

Joseph Feldman died on July 24, 1953. By his will, dated July 1, 1948, he created three trusts, only two of which are involved in this appeal. The three trusts were created by paragraph Fifth of decedent's will, the two trusts in question being those created by paragraphs Fifth (B) and Fifth (C).²

In essence, the trust created by paragraph Fifth (B) provided Rose F. Metzger, the sister of decedent, with a life estate in the income with a remainder over of the income to Helen Hayner Feldman, his wife, in the event his wife outlived Mrs. Metzger. The trust created by paragraph Fifth (C) established a life estate to Helen Hayner Feldman in the income to the extent that the trustees deemed it necessary that the income be paid to her in order to supplement (for her support and maintenance) the income received from the trust created by paragraph Fifth (A), and during the lifetime of Helen Hayner Feldman to pay the balance of the income to Rose F. Metzger.

Under the terms of the will, Helen Hayner Feldman, Rose F. Metzger and Percival E. Jackson were named as executors, qualified as such and acted until January 5, 1954, at which time Rose F. Metzger died. Decedent's will named Rose F. Metzger and Percival E. Jackson, together with the Farmers and Merchants National Bank of Los Angeles as trustees of the trusts created by paragraphs Fifth (B) and (C) of the will.

During the period of administration of the estate Helen Hayner Feldman has received a family allowance from the estate of $5,000 per month. Such sum has been ample, without reference to the income payable to her under the trust established by paragraph Fifth (A) of the will, for her proper support and maintenance. The

1. This is an obvious clerical error in the order which should read "July 24, 1953", the date of decedent's death. The findings of fact and conclusions of law correctly give the period in question as July 24, 1953 to January 5, 1954.
2. The pertinent provisions of paragraphs Fifth (B) and Fifth (C) are as follows:

"(B) Another such part of twenty-five (25%) per cent to my Trustees hereinafter named, in trust, nevertheless, to invest the same and keep the same invested, to collect the rents, income and profits thereof, and to pay over the net income arising therefrom to my sister, Rose F. Metzger, during her lifetime, and upon her death to pay over the net income arising therefrom to my wife, Helen Hayner Feldman, and upon the death of my sister and my wife, the principal shall be disposed of as follows:

* * * * *

"(C) Another such part of twenty-five (25%) per cent to my Trustees hereinafter named, in trust, nevertheless, to invest the same and to keep the same invested and collect the rents, income and profits thereof and to pay over such portion of the net income arising therefrom to my wife, Helen Hayner Feldman, during her lifetime, monthly, to the extent that my Trustees, in their discretion, deem necessary that the income provided to be paid her under the provisions of paragraph 'Fifth (A)' be supplemented for her proper support and maintenance during that period, and further, if in any calendar year subsequent to the year in which my death shall occur, the income from this Trust should, in the opinion of my Trustees, be insufficient together with the income from the Trust created in paragraph 'Fifth (A)' hereof, to provide for proper support and maintenance for my wife, then to pay over to my said wife out of the principal of this Trust so much thereof as my Trustees deem necessary for her support and maintenance during that period, and during the lifetime of my wife to pay over the balance of the net income, and upon her death the whole of the net income arising therefrom, to my sister, Rose F. Metzger, monthly during her lifetime, and upon the death of my wife and my sister, the principal or so much thereof as shall be remaining in the hands of my said Trustees, shall be disposed of as follows:

* * * * *

trustees made no finding that any additional monies were, during the period from July 24, 1953, through January 5, 1954, needed by Helen Hayner Feldman for her support and maintenance.

In their amended first account current and report, the executors reported net income from the estate in the amount of $146,407.45, as of June 30, 1954. Pursuant to an order for partial distribution dated September 2, 1954, the sum of $12,500 from the income cash on hand was distributed to the trustees of the trust created by paragraph Fifth (B) and a similar amount distributed to the trustees of the trust created by paragraph Fifth (C). Pursuant to a further order for partial distribution dated November 12, 1954, the sum of $24,101.86 cash from the income on hand was distributed to the trustees of the trust created by paragraph Fifth (B), and a similar amount distributed to the trustees of the trust created by paragraph Fifth (C).

On a petition for instructions filed by the trustees, the trial court determined that the estate of Rose F. Metzger is entitled to all of the net income received by the executors on the corpus of the trusts created by paragraphs Fifth (B) and Fifth (C) of the will of Joseph Feldman for the period commencing with the date of the death of Joseph Feldman on July 24, 1953, to and including January 5, 1954, the date of the death of Rose F. Metzger and entered its order accordingly. It is from that order that the appeal herein is taken.

The sole question for determination is whether the first life income beneficiary of a testamentary trust is entitled to all income earned by the trust and paid to the executors, but not distributed to the trustees, during the period between the death of the testator and the death of such beneficiary.

Appellant contends that the provisions of Section 730.06 of the Civil Code are applicable and that she, as successor beneficiary, is entitled to the income received by the executors but not distributed to the trustees until after the death of Rose F. Metzger, the first life income beneficiary.

Section 730.06 of the Civil Code provides as follows: "[Cessation of right of tenant to income]. Whenever a tenant's right to income shall cease by death, or in any other manner, all payments theretofore actually paid to the tenant or in the hands of the trustee for payment to the tenant shall belong to the tenant or his personal representative; all income actually received by the trustee after such termination shall be paid to the person next entitled to income by the terms of the transaction by which the principal was established."

It is appellant's contention that, applying the foregoing provisions of Section 730.06 of the Civil Code, when a trust is created to pay the income to a beneficiary for life and thereafter to pay the income to another beneficiary, upon the death of the first beneficiary the second beneficiary is entitled to receive all income from the trust which at the date of the death of the first life income beneficiary has not been paid to such beneficiary or is not yet in the hands of the trustees to pay to such beneficiary.

Respondent, upon the other hand, contends that Section 160 of the Probate Code is determinative of the issue, citing In re Estate of Platt, 21 Cal.2d 343, 131 P.2d 825, and that the construction of Section 730.06 of the Civil Code urged by appellant would nullify Section 160 of the Probate Code and result in a forfeiture of a vested right in those cases wherein the income beneficiary dies prior to the decree of distribution.

Section 160 of the Probate Code provides: "In case of a bequest of the interest or income of a certain sum or fund, the income accrues from the testator's death."

In Re Estate of Platt, supra, the issue was whether the income from a testamentary trust accrued from the date of the testator's death or from the date of distribution of the estate to the trustee. The applicability of the Principal and Income Law, Civil Code, Sections 730-730.15, which was originally adopted in 1941, Stats.1941, ch. 898, p. 2476, and added to the Civil Code in 1953, Stats.1953, ch. 37, p. 666, was not in issue, the trusts having come into existence prior to its enactment. Moreover, the life beneficiary survived distribution. The rule laid down in the Platt case is that Section 160 of the Probate Code is applicable to a testamentary trust; hence the right to income accrues from the testator's death where the will is silent in this respect. In holding that the life beneficiary was entitled to the earnings on the corpus during administration as against the remainderman, the court stated, 21 Cal. 2d at page 347, 131 P.2d at page 828: "As title to all testamentary dispositions vests at the testator's death (Prob.Code, §§ 38, 300), the title of the trustee to Mr. Platt's property vested as of that date, even though the trust estate was residuary in character. (Citing cases.) As a necessary corollary, the title of the life tenant also dates from the death of the testator. The income earned by the trust property during the period of administration inures, of course, to the benefit of the trust, and is payable by the executor to the trustee upon distribution."

In Re Estate of Van Wyck, 185 Cal. 49, 196 P. 50, cited by respondent, was decided long before the Principal and Income Law was adopted and is therefore inapplicable. In Re Estate of Schiffmann, 86 Cal.App.2d 638, 195 P.2d 484, the life beneficiary died prior to the date the estate was ordered distributed. The income received by the trustee after the death of the life beneficiary was distributed to the remaindermen pursuant to the express terms of the trust which provided that the life beneficiary was to receive the net income from the trust available for distribution. The decree set forth that the income to which the trustee would have been entitled upon distribution of the estate had not been received by the trustee and was therefore not available for distribution prior to the death of the life beneficiary.

Union Nat. Bank of Pasadena v. Hunter, 93 Cal.App.2d 669, 209 P.2d 621, involved an inter vivos trust. The net income accrued but not actually received by the trustee prior to the death of the trustor (the first life beneficiary) was ordered distributed pursuant to the provisions of Section 4 of the Principal and Income Act (now Section 730.06 of the Civil Code).

[1,2] It is our opinion that both Section 160 of the Probate Code and Section 730.06 of the Civil Code are applicable to testamentary trusts; further, that the application of the latter statute in those instances wherein the beneficiary dies prior to the decree of distribution does not, as contended by respondent, by implication result in the forfeiture of a vested right.

In the instant case, since the will does not expressly fix a date from which income shall be paid, it accrues from the testator's death. Probate Code, Section 160; In re Estate of Platt, supra. The death of the testator having occurred subsequent to September 1, 1941, the provisions of the Principal and Income Law are applicable. Civil Code, Sections 730.02, 730.04. Therefore, although title to the trust estate vested in the trustees as of the date of Mr. Feldman's death, and the income during the period of administration inured to the benefit of the trust, the provisions of Section 730.06 of the Civil Code are applicable in determining the rights of the respective beneficiaries to such income. Since concededly none of the income earned by the trust estate was actually received by the trustees prior to the death of Rose F. Metzger, the first life income beneficiary, Helen Hayner Feldman, the successor beneficiary is entitled to the income which was received by the executors during the period from the date of the testator's death to the date of the death of Rose F. Metzger and distributed to the trustees pursuant to the decrees of distribution of September 2, 1954 and November 9, 1954.

There is no merit in respondent's contention that the word "trustee" as defined and used in the Principal and Income Law includes an executor. A trustee is defined in Section 730.03 of the Civil Code as follows: "'Trustee' as used in this chapter includes the original trustee of any trust to which the principal may be subject and also any succeeding or added trustee." The trust came into being upon the death of the testator and the original trustees are specifically named in the will.

The judgment is reversed with directions to the trial court to order the trustees to pay to Helen Hayner Feldman, as successor beneficiary, the net income received by the executors for the period from July 24, 1953, through January 5, 1954, and paid to the trustees pursuant to the decrees of distribution of September 2, 1954 and November 9, 1954.

Civ. 20896.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 3, California.

Sept. 18, 1956.

Rehearing Denied Oct. 4, 1956.

Hearing Granted Nov. 14, 1956.

Suit to enjoin defendants labor unions, officers, members and representatives thereof, and others from soliciting an association of plaintiff corporation's employees to break a collective bargaining agreement, picketing places where plaintiff's products were sold, requesting transportation companies to refuse to deliver merchandise to plaintiff's customers, etc., and to recover damages for such alleged activities. From a judgment of the Superior Court of Los Angeles County, A. Curtis Smith, J., for plaintiff, defendants appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Parker Wood, J., held that evidence supported trial court's findings that plaintiff did not interfere with association or defendant unions and that there was a jurisdictional dispute, within Jurisdictional Strike Law, as to whether associ-tion or one of such unions should represent plaintiff's employees.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Labor Relations ⇨949

In suit to enjoin certain labor unions and others from soliciting association of plaintiff corporation's employees to break association's collective bargaining agreement with plaintiff and engaging in other activities violating Jurisdictional Strike Law, trial court found on issue whether association was financed, interfered with or controlled by plaintiff, in view of court's finding, in words of statute, that association was "not found" to be financed or interfered with by plaintiff, and finding that allegations of certain paragraph of complaint, containing allegation that association was not financed, wholly or partly, or interfered with, dominated or controlled by plaintiff, were true. West's Ann.Labor Code, § 1117.

2. Labor Relations ⇨949

In suit to enjoin defendant labor unions' solicitation of association of plaintiff corporation's employees to break collective bargaining agreement with plaintiff and other activities in alleged violation of Jurisdictional Strike Law, trial court, having found that association was not financed or interfered with, dominated or controlled by plaintiff, was not required to make findings respecting plaintiff's specific acts, from which question whether plaintiff interfered with association could be determined as court finding ultimate facts is not required to make findings as to various evidentiary matters. West's Ann.Labor Code, § 1117.

3. Trial ⇨397(1)

Special facts need not be detailed in trial court's findings, if court's general finding necessarily embodies implied finding on such facts.

4. Labor Relations ⇨948

In suit to enjoin labor unions from soliciting association of plaintiff corporation's employees to break collective bargaining agreement with plaintiff and engaging in other activities violating Jurisdictional

Strike Law, whether plaintiff interfered with association or defendant unions was fact question for determination by trial judge. West's Ann.Labor Code, § 1117.

5. Labor Relations ⇨942

In suit to enjoin labor unions from soliciting association of plaintiff corporation's employees to break collective bargaining agreement with plaintiff and engaging in other activities violating Jurisdictional Strike Law, evidence was sufficient to support trial court's finding that plaintiff did not interfere with association or defendant unions. West's Ann.Labor Code, § 1117.

6. Labor Relations ⇨765, 938

To prove existence of jurisdictional dispute within Jurisdictional Strike Law, so as to give state court jurisdiction of suit to enjoin and recover damages for labor unions' activities in alleged violation of such law, plaintiff was not required to prove that someone, on unions' behalf, stated that unions claimed right to represent plaintiff's employees. West's Ann.Labor Code, § 1118.

7. Labor Relations ⇨942

In suit to enjoin defendant labor unions' solicitation of association of plaintiff corporation's employees to break collective bargaining agreement with plaintiff and other activities in alleged violation of Jurisdictional Strike Law, evidence was sufficient to support trial court's finding that there was a jurisdictional dispute within such law as to whether association or one of such unions should represent plaintiff's employees, so as to give state court jurisdiction of suit. West's Ann.Labor Code, § 1118.

8. Pleading ⇨259

In suit to enjoin defendant labor unions' activities in alleged violation of Jurisdictional Strike Law, trial court did not err in denying defendants' motion to amend their answer so as to allege that plaintiff operated under exclusive franchise granted by foreign corporation, which shipped ingredients of beverage made and distributed by plaintiff to it in California from another state, for purpose of raising issues of interstate commerce and National Labor Relations Board's exclusive jurisdiction over acts alleged, where none of such unions were certified by Board as collective bargaining representative of plaintiff's employees. West's Ann.Labor Code, § 1115 et seq.

Labor Relations Ⓒ991

An injunction, restraining labor unions from preventing a corporation from securing, selling or delivering merchandise, inducing persons to refrain from using, transporting or selling corporation's products, representing that corporation's employees were unorganized or that corporation was unfair to organized labor, etc., did not exceed Superior Court's jurisdiction as not limited to alleged controversy over representation of corporation's employees in collective bargaining, but blanketing unions' activities as to free speech and other constitutional rights, regardless of whether they related to such representation. In suit to enjoin labor unions and others from interfering with plaintiff corporation's business by picketing, boycotting, and other activities in alleged violation of Jurisdictional Strike Law, evidence, including stipulations, warranting conclusion that several named defendants, claimed by defendants to be unconnected with case, participated in concerted interference with plaintiff's business, evidence that a defendant coordinating body, with which defendant local unions were affiliated, approved such activities, and defendants' stipulations that they intended to continue picketing plaintiff unless restrained, sustained judgment for plaintiff as to such named defendants and coordinating body. West's Ann.Labor Code, § 1115 et seq.

PARKER WOOD, Justice.

Plaintiff sought to enjoin defendant Grocery Drivers Union Local 848 and several other defendants from (1) soliciting the Seven Up Employees' Association to breach the collective bargaining agreement between plaintiff and said association; (2) picketing places where 7-Up is sold; (3) requesting transportation companies to refuse to deliver merchandise to customers of plaintiff; (4) soliciting plaintiff not to recognize the Seven Up Employees' Association as the exclusive collective bargaining agency for plaintiff's employees; (5) inducing purchasers of 7-Up to refrain from doing business with plaintiff; (6) publicly asserting that plaintiff is unfair to organized labor. Plaintiff also sought to recover damages based upon such alleged activities of defendants. The theory of plaintiff was that there was a jurisdictional strike involving the claim on the part of defendants that plaintiff should recognize defendants Teamster Unions as the collective bargaining agent of plaintiff's employees. Prior to the trial, the action was dismissed as to defendant Dave Beck. Judgment was in favor of plaintiff—injunction granted, and damages in amount of $4,000 awarded. Defendants appeal.

Appellants contend that the complaint does not state a cause of action under the Jurisdictional Strike Law.¹ They argue that the allegations of the complaint, with

1. Section 1115 of the Labor Code provides: "A jurisdictional strike as herein defined is hereby declared to be against the public policy of the State of California and is hereby declared to be unlawful."

Section 1118 of the Labor Code provides: "As used in this chapter, 'jurisdictional strike' means a concerted refusal to perform work for an employer or any other concerted interference with an employer's operation or business, arising out of a controversy between two or more respect to a jurisdictional dispute, fail to show that any controversy existed between the Seven Up Employees' Association and the Teamsters Union as to which of them has or should have the exclusive right to represent plaintiff's employees in collective bargaining with plaintiff. They also assert that, in all cases involving interstate commerce, the federal government has preempted the field which the Jurisdictional Strike Law attempts to control; and that the federal government has preempted the field of labor relations covered by the actions described in the pleadings.

There was a former appeal in this action. Seven Up Bottling Co. v. Grocery, etc., Union, 40 Cal.2d 368, 254 P.2d 544, 33 A.L.R.2d 327. At the former trial, defendants' objection to the introduction of any evidence on the ground that the complaint did not state a cause of action was sustained and the trial court rendered judgment that plaintiff recover nothing. On the former appeal it was said in 40 Cal.2d at page 370, 254 P.2d at page 546: "The primary issue presented for decision in the court below and here is the validity of California's Jurisdictional Strike Law, infra. The Court, in rendering its judgment, did not purport to pass upon anything but the sufficiency of the complaint." It was also said therein, 40 Cal.2d at page 372, 254 P.2d at page 547: "The jurisdictional strike is 'against the public policy' of the state and is 'unlawful,' Id., § 1115, and any person suffering injury from a violation of the act is entitled to injunctive relief and damages. Id., § 1116." It was also said therein, 40 Cal.2d at page 372, 254 P.2d at page 547: "There is no allegation showing that plaintiff was engaged in a business affecting interstate commerce and hence the Labor Management Relations Act of 1947 [29 U.S.C.A. § 141 et seq.], supra, has no application." It was also said therein, 40 Cal.2d at pages 372-373, 254 P.2d at page 547: "It should be clear that the activities of defendants, as alleged, fall within the terms of the act, Jurisdictional Strike Act. Defendants and the association are labor organizations and the latter is not financed, interfered with, dominated or controlled by plaintiff. There has been a concerted interference by defendants with plaintiff's-employer's business. That interference arises out of a controversy between two or more labor organizations—defendants and the association—as to which of them should have the right to collectively bargain with plaintiff-employer." It was held on the former appeal that the Jurisdictional Strike Act (of California) is valid. The judgment therein, based upon the ruling that a cause of action was not stated, was reversed. Since the substance of the allegations of the complaint is shown in the opinion on the former appeal, the allegations will not be set forth herein. During the trial, involved on the present appeal, plaintiff dismissed certain portions of the complaint as follows: paragraph II of the third cause of action; and paragraphs II, IV, V, and VI of the fourth cause of action. The allegations of these paragraphs are to the effect that defendants, by their activities, are endeavoring to induce plaintiff to breach its agreement with the Seven Up Employees' Association, and are endeavoring to compel plaintiff to recognize defendants as bargaining agents labor organizations as to which of them has or should have the exclusive right to bargain collectively with an employer on behalf of his employees or any of them, or arising out of a controversy between two or more labor organizations as to which of them has or should have the exclusive right to have its members perform work for an employer."

Section 1117 of the Labor Code provides: "As used herein, 'labor organization' means any organization or any agency or employee representation committee or any local unit thereof in which employees participate, and exists for the purpose, in whole or in part, of dealing with employers concerning grievances, labor disputes, wages, hours of employment or conditions of work, which labor organization is not found to be financed in whole or in part, interfered with, dominated or controlled by the employer.

"As used herein, 'person' means any person, association, organization, partnership, corporation, unincorporated association, or labor organization."

when it would be unlawful, under sections 921-923 of the Labor Code, for plaintiff to do so. The complaint states a cause of action.

The trial court found that defendant unions (referred to in the findings as Teamster Unions) are labor organizations which exist for the purpose of dealing with employers concerning grievances, labor disputes, and wages; that each individual named as a defendant is an officer and agent of a certain defendant union; that plaintiff employs a number of persons in the production, bottling and distribution of beverages; on March 4, 1949, a written collective bargaining agreement was executed by the plaintiff and the Seven Up Employees' Association; said association is a labor organization in which employees participate, and it exists for the purpose of dealing with plaintiff concerning grievances, labor disputes, wages, hours of employment and conditions of work; and said association is not financed in whole or in part, or interfered with, dominated or controlled by the plaintiff in any manner whatsoever; said agreement prescribes rates of pay, hours of employment and conditions of work for employees of plaintiff; said agreement was at all times and now is in full force and effect; defendants and their agents have been engaged in concerted interference with plaintiff's business; said concerted interference arises out of a controversy between defendant Grocery Drivers Union Local 848 and the Seven Up Employees' Association as to which of said labor organizations should have the exclusive right to bargain collectively with plaintiff on behalf of its non-supervisory production, bottling and distribution employees, and arises out of a controversy between said organizations as to which of them should have the exclusive right to have their members perform production, bottling and distribution work for plaintiff; the defendant labor organizations and the Seven Up Employees' Association are labor organizations as defined in section 1117 of the Labor Code, and said organizations are not found to be financed in whole or in part, interfered with, dominated or controlled by plaintiff, or by any of plaintiff's officers or agents, either in their organization or operation; plaintiff has no dispute or controversy of any kind with any of its employees; the effect of the unlawful activities, resulting in a refusal of retail markets to purchase and sell beverages produced and distributed by plaintiff, has been to impede the operation of plaintiff; plaintiff has been injured by the activities of defendants and is threatened with further injury by defendants, and this is a proper case for injunctive relief; said actions of defendants, particularly said labor organizations and their agents, are in violation of sections 1115 to 1120 inclusive of the Labor Code; plaintiff has been damaged in the sum of $4,000.

[1] Appellants assert in effect that the plaintiff was not entitled to rely on the Jurisdictional Strike Law as a basis for an injunction and damages. They argue that plaintiff interfered with the affairs of the Seven Up Employees' Association, and that such interference removed that association from the classification of a "labor organization," as defined in section 1117 of the Labor Code. That section states that a "labor organization" means any organization * * * in which employees participate, and exists for the purpose * * * of dealing with employers * * * which labor organization is not found to be financed in whole or in part, interfered with, dominated or controlled by the employer." Appellants also argue that the court did not find on the issue as to whether the Seven Up Employees' Association was financed, interfered with, or controlled by plaintiff; that said issue is jurisdictional; and until there is a conclusive showing by findings of fact that the association was not financed in whole or in part, interfered with, dominated or controlled by plaintiff, the court has no jurisdiction of the action. They argue further that the finding that the defendant labor organizations and said association "are not found" to be financed or interfered with by plaintiff is not a valid finding—it is not a finding that they were not financed or interfered with—but it is a negative legal conclusion which leaves the record with no finding on the subject of interference. That finding follows the language of section 1117 of the Labor Code wherein it is stated, "which labor organization is not found to be financed in whole or in part, interfered with, dominated or controlled by the employer." In other words, the court has made a finding, in the words of the statute, that the association is not found to be financed or interfered with by the plaintiff (employer). Also, it is to be noted that the court did find (at another place in the findings) that the association was not financed in whole or in part, or interfered with, dominated or controlled by the plaintiff. (This is finding V which states that the allegations of paragraph VI [of the first cause of action] of the complaint are true. One of the allegations therein is: "* * * said labor organization [Seven Up Employees' Association] is not financed in whole or in part, or interfered with, dominated or controlled by the plaintiff employer in any manner whatsoever.") In view of those two findings, it is clear that, contrary to appellants' argument, the court did find on the issue as to whether the association was financed or interfered with by plaintiff.

[2, 3] Appellants assert further that a finding that a labor organization is "not interfered with" is a legal conclusion, and that the court should have made findings with respect to specific acts on the part of plaintiff, so that a determination could be made from a consideration of the acts whether plaintiff interfered with the association. The court made findings as to ultimate facts. It was not required to make findings as to various evidentiary matters. In Petersen v. Murphy, 59 Cal.App.2d 528, at page 534, 139 P.2d 49, at page 52, it was said: "[S]pecial facts need not be detailed in the findings if a general finding necessarily embodies an implied finding on such special facts." Some of the evidence presented by appellants, with reference to such alleged specific acts on the part of plaintiff, was as follows: that plaintiff spied on the activities of the company union (association) and the teamsters union; that plaintiff induced new employees (before and at the time they were employed) to sign a wage deduction authorization or card² by which the employee directed that dues in the company association be deducted from his wages each month and turned over to the association, and the association had no other application forms for membership; that plaintiff deducted all such dues and remitted them to the association, together with a list of the new employees paying such dues; that plaintiff maintained control of the official positions in the association "because of an association by-law that no employee could be a candidate for association office" unless he had been an employee for one year; that plaintiff maintained control of the association officers by an arrangement with the association that when the officers were discharged by plaintiff their removal from office in the association was automatic; that plaintiff removed the vice-president of the association while he was a negotiator in negotiations which were in progress; that plaintiff discharged an employee (White) for protesting the discharge of the vice-president; that the association had no procedure for expulsion or suspension of a member, and the association officers did not know who the new members were until they received the dues-deduction check from plaintiff at the end of each month; that the contracts between the association and the company were never discussed at length in association meetings, and every president of the association who remained in the employment of the company was made a supervisor after he had served in one of the contract sessions.

[4, 5] The evidence presented by appellants with reference to those alleged matters was in conflict with evidence presented by plaintiff with reference thereto. Some of such evidence presented by plaintiff was as follows: the company association was formed in 1940 by the employees at their own instance without the knowledge of the company; the meetings of the association have been held off the premises of plaintiff; the officials of plaintiff first knew of the existence of the association when the association requested plaintiff to recognize it; plaintiff had nothing to do with the preparation of the constitution or bylaws or the amendments thereto; the association issued membership cards and maintained membership rolls; plaintiff never contributed any money to the association; dues-deduction cards and membership cards are printed and paid for by the association; meetings of the association are not attended by officers or supervisors of plaintiff; no official or supervisor of plaintiff has had anything to do with the administration of the affairs of the association; plaintiff has not expressed to any employee any preference in favor of any union or any opposition to any union; plaintiff had nothing to do with spying or attempted spying on the teamsters union; there was no discriminatory practice by plaintiff, based on union activities, with reference to employing or discharging employees. Many witnesses testified that there was no such discriminatory practice by plaintiff. An offer of proof was made by plaintiff and accepted by appellants that 32 witnesses would testify that there was no such discriminatory practice by plaintiff, that there was no spying by plaintiff, that there was no opposition by plaintiff to the teamster union, and that at various meetings of the association various members spoke up in the same manner as White and others had spoken, and such employees were not discharged.

The reporters' transcript consists of 3,781 pages. It is not necessary to state the details of the testimony. The question as to whether plaintiff interfered with the company union or the defendant unions was a question of fact for the determination of the trial judge. The above general references to the testimony are sufficient to show that there was substantial evidence in support of the finding that plaintiff did not interfere with the association or the defendant unions.

[6, 7] Appellants also contend that the finding to the effect that there was a jurisdictional dispute, between the company association and the defendant unions as to which of them should represent the employees of plaintiff, is unsupported by the evidence. They assert that the teamster unions were in "a dispute over company [plaintiff] violations of every principle of our Labor Code"—that the picketing or activity of the teamsters in 1949 was conducted solely as a protest against discharges, spying and discrimination by plaintiff against employees who were favorable to the teamsters' union; that it was a typical "unfair labor practice" protest, which had no relation to a controversy over representation. They also argue that there was no evidence that anyone asserted on behalf of defendant unions that the defendant unions claimed the right to represent plaintiff's employees; and that on the contrary there was testimony that the defendants did not assert that they claimed the right to represent plaintiff's employees. The Seven Up Employees' Association is a labor organization and it has had a collective bargaining agreement with plaintiff since 1940 which requires plaintiff to recognize it as said association's exclusive bargaining agent. There was evidence (testimony of a witness on behalf of defendants, and stipulations) that the picketing and boycotting was for the purpose of adversely affecting plaintiff's business so that plaintiff would make a contract with defendant unions whereby those unions would be the bargaining agents of plaintiff's employees. There was evidence (testimony of a witness on behalf of defendants, and stipulations) to the effect that picketing, boycotting, and listing as unfair by defendant unions cease when a company makes a bargaining contract with defendant unions. There was no controversy between plaintiff and its employees. In order to prove that a jurisdictional dispute existed, it is not necessary to prove that someone on behalf of the defendant unions stated that the unions claimed the right to represent plaintiff's employees. It was stipulated that the appellants were engaged in concerted activity involving plaintiff. The court found, upon substantial evidence, that appellants have been engaged in concerted interference with plaintiff's business and that such interference arises out of a controversy between defendant Grocery Drivers Union Local 848 and the company association as to which of them should have the exclusive right to bargain with plaintiff. There was substantial evidence in support of the finding to the effect that there was a jurisdictional dispute.

[8] Appellants assert further that the court erred in denying their motion to amend their answer to allege that plaintiff operates under a franchise granted by the Seven Up Company of St. Louis, Missouri, which gives plaintiff exclusive right to make and distribute 7-Up in the Los Angeles area; that the syrup and extract necessary to manufacture 7-Up is shipped from St. Louis; and that exclusive jurisdiction over the acts alleged in the complaint is in the National Labor Relations Board. Appellants stated that under the amendment they desired to raise the issue of interstate commerce and to submit evidence showing exclusive jurisdiction in federal agencies. The motion to amend was made more than four years after the complaint was filed, and of course was made after the first appeal in this case.

In Sommer v. Metal Trades Council, 40 Cal.2d 392, 254 P.2d 559, the defendant unions demanded that plaintiff recognize them as the bargaining representative of plaintiff's employees. At that time the employees were not organized. A few months later the employees formed an association or union and demanded that plaintiff recognize it as their bargaining representative. Plaintiff refused to recognize either of them. Defendant unions commenced picketing and boycotting, which interfered with plaintiff's business. The employees' union filed a petition with the National Labor Relations Board for certification as a representative for collective bargaining purposes. Defendant unions intervened and contested for recognition. The Board found that plaintiff was engaged in commerce within the meaning of the federal labor relations law and ordered an election. An election was conducted which resulted in favor of the employees' union, but it did not appear whether certification followed. Defendant unions continued their concerted activity, and plaintiff obtained an injunction. Plaintiff contended on appeal that the activity of defendants constituted a jurisdictional strike in violation of the Jurisdictional Strike Act of which the state court had jurisdiction. The defendants contended that their activity was not in violation of that act and in any event was governable solely pursuant to federal law. The court said in 40 Cal.2d at page 396, 254 P.2d at page 563, that it may be assumed that evidence before the National Labor Relations Board bears on the issues before the court, "[b]ut it does not follow that the state court does not have jurisdiction of this controversy." It was also said in 40 Cal.2d at pages 399-400, 254 P.2d at page 564: "[T]he factors of protection and condemnation under the federal act largely determine whether the area is one closed to state control. The decisions indicate that the presence of those factors are deemed to disclose an intention on the part of Congress to place exclusive jurisdiction in the National Board. They also demonstrate that the problem is not one which in every case is resolved solely by looking to the provisions of the federal act; but that if the subject matter of the local statute is otherwise one within the area of permissible exercise of state power in the maintenance of industrial peace, and state policy is consistent with federal policy, the state does not necessarily encroach upon the area of control vested in the National Board." It was also said in 40 Cal.2d at pages 400-401, 254 P.2d at page 565: "If the union activity here involved is not protected under the federal act it is not immunized from state action. The union concerted activity was not protected under the federal act if another union was certified by the national board as the collective bargaining representative of the plaintiff's employees. And in the absence of such certification there is no immunity under the state law if the employees' Local constitutes a collective bargaining representative within the meaning of the anti-jurisdictional strike provisions. [Citation.] Since the certification of a union other than the defendant is not shown, a case of condemnation of the union activity under the federal act is not presented. And as it does not appear that the National Board has seen fit to act finally in either the representation or the unfair charges proceedings there is involved a possible area of activity which is neither protected nor condemned under the federal act, and pursuant to the foregoing decisions is subject to state action under the anti-jurisdictional strike provisions of the Labor Code. Thus, there is here an area open to the state for the exercise of its police power." The order granting the injunction was affirmed. In the present case none of the unions involved had been certified as the representative of plaintiff's employees. The trial court in the present case did not err in denying defendants' motion to amend.

[9] Appellants contend further that the injunction exceeds the jurisdiction of the court. They argue that the injunction is not limited to the alleged controversy over representation, and that it blankets the activities of the unions as to free speech and other constitutional rights regardless of whether the activities relate to the matter of representation. The injunction provides in substance that defendants refrain from: preventing plaintiff from securing, selling or delivering merchandise; inducing any person or customer to refrain from using, transporting or selling any of plaintiff's products; representing to any person that plaintiff's employees are unorganized or that plaintiff's products are made by non-union labor or that plaintiff is unfair to organized labor; maintaining plaintiff on any "we do not patronize" list; taking part in any interference with the business of any person for the purpose of inducing the person to cease handling or selling plaintiff's merchandise; serving consumer, who requests plaintiff's beverage, a substitute beverage; interfering with plaintiff's business; intimidating or interfering with any employee of plaintiff. The matter of free speech with respect to the claim of unconstitutionality of the Jurisdictional Strike Act is discussed in the opinion on the former appeal. Seven Up Bottling Co. v. Grocery etc. Union, supra, 40 Cal.2d 368, 373-380, 254 P.2d 544, 33 A.L.R.2d 327. Also, in the opinion on the former appeal, 40 Cal.2d at page 380, 254 P.2d at page 552, there is a quotation, with respect to the breadth of a restraining order, which is applicable here. It was there stated, in part: "They contend that its language prohibits inducement not only of employees of Deltorto but also the inducement of employees of any other employer to strike, where an object thereof is to force Giorgi or any other employer or person to cease doing business with Langer. To confine the order solely to secondary pressure through Giorgi or Deltorto would leave Langer and other employers who do business with him exposed to the same type of pressure through other comparable channels. * * *

"When the purpose to restrain trade appears from a clear violation of law, it is not necessary that all of the untraveled roads to that end be left open and that only the worn one be closed." " This contention of appellants is not sustainable.

[10] Appellants also contend that there was no evidence to sustain the judgment as to many defendants. They named several defendants who, according to appellants' argument, were unconnected with the case. There is evidence (including stipulations) from which it could be concluded that the defendants participated in the concerted interference with plaintiff's business. There was evidence that appellant Joint Council of Teamsters No. 42 constitutes a co-ordinating body with which all teamsters local unions are affiliated, and that said council approved the picketing, boycotting and unfair listing of plaintiff. There were stipulations on behalf of defendants to the effect that the intention of defendants, unless restrained, was to continue to picket plaintiff. This contention is not sustainable.

By reason of the above conclusions, it is not necessary to discuss other points on appeal.

The judgment is affirmed.

v.

WESTERN PACIFIC RAILROAD COMPANY, a corporation, Defendant and Respondent.

L. A. 23646.

Supreme Court of California.

In Bank.

Oct. 5, 1956.

Rehearing Denied Oct. 31, 1956.

Action by licensed realty broker for compensation for alleged services rendered in connection with defendant's procurement of an option to purchase certain realty. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Clarence M. Hanson, J., entered judgment for defendant and broker appealed. The Supreme Court, Spence, J., held that a contract employing a broker to obtain an option for the purchase of realty came within the statute of frauds, and therefore had to be in writing, and where writings did not establish such a contract broker could not recover on an alleged agreement for payment of commission and defendant was not estopped from pleading the statute in bar of claim, notwithstanding fact that broker had conducted unsuccessful negotiations with vendor for purchase by defendant of an option for the realty in question.

Judgment affirmed.

McComb, Carter and Schauer, JJ., dissented.

Opinion, 293 P.2d 800, vacated.

1. Vendor and Purchaser ⇨18, 57

An "option to purchase real property" is a contract containing an irrevocable and continuing offer to sell at a stipulated price within a specified time conveying no interest in land to the optionee but vesting in him only a right in personam to buy at his election and such agreement relating to the sale of land is not a sale of property, but a sale of a right to purchase.

initions of "Option to Purchase Real Property".

2. Frauds, Statute of ⇨74(1)

An option to purchase real property falls within the statute of frauds and therefore must be in writing. West's Ann.Civ. Code, § 1624, subd. 5; West's Code Civ. Proc., § 1973, subd. 5.

3. Frauds, Statute of ⇨55

The term "real estate" as used in the statute of frauds conforms with the common law definition of real property as including only a freehold interest in land, excluding estates for years or lesser duration. West's Ann.Civ. Code, § 1624, subd. 5; West's Code Civ. Proc., § 1973, subd. 5.

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Real Estate".

4. Brokers ⇨43(2)

While a contract employing a broker to purchase or sell realty comes within the statute of frauds, a contract employing a broker to sell oil and gas leases running only for a fixed term of years does not, since the latter employment relates to "chattels real," a species of personal property as distinguished from real estate or real property. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 1624, subd. 5; West's Code Civ.Proc., § 1973, subd. 5.

5. Brokers ⇨43(2)

In determining the nature of the services which will bring an employment contract within portion of statute of frauds providing that an agreement authorizing or employing an agent or broker to purchase or sell real estate for compensation or a commission is invalid unless in writing, the phrase "sell or purchase" includes, aiding or assisting in the purchase or sale of real estate. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 1624, subd. 5; West's Code Civ.Proc., § 1973, subd. 5.

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Sell or Purchase".

6. Brokers ⇨43(2)

One of the primary purposes of the statute of frauds is the protection of realty owners from the assertion of false claims by brokers and agents. West's Ann.Civ. Code, § 1624, subd. 5; West's Code Civ. Proc., § 1973, subd. 5.

7. Brokers ⇨43(2)

The procurement of an option agreement for the purchase of realty is a contract that aids or assists in the purchase of sale or realty and comes within the provisions of the statute of frauds, and therefore, a contract employing a broker to obtain an option for the purchase of realty must be in writing in order to be valid. West's Ann. Civ.Code, § 1624, subd. 5; West's Code Civ. Proc., § 1973, subd. 5.

8. Brokers ⇨43(3)

The chief element required to be shown in writing in order to show a compliance with portion of statute of frauds providing that an agreement employing a broker to purchase or sell realty for compensation must be in writing and subscribed by the party to be charged is the fact of employment of the broker to act for the principal in the transaction. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 1624, subd. 5; West's Code Civ.Proc., § 1973, subd. 5.

9. Brokers ⇨43(3)

Although a reference to compensation is not essential to establishing the employment of a broker for the purchase or sale of realty if there is in fact a contract of employment since a reasonable amount as a commission will be inferred, where there is a failure in the writings offered to mention the fact of employment the further fact that there is no mention of a commission is significant in considering whether such writing in fact established a written contract of employment within statute of frauds. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 1624, subd. 5; West's Code Civ.Proc., § 1973, subd. 5.

10. Brokers ⇨43(3)

In action by licensed realty broker for compensation for alleged services rendered in connection with defendant's procurement of an option to purchase certain realty, evidence, including a letter to an agent of broker indicating defendant's interest in purchasing certain property, was insufficient under the statute of frauds to establish employment of broker in writing. West's Ann. Civ.Code, § 1624, subd. 5; West's Code Civ.Proc. § 1973, subd. 5.

11. Statutes ⇨235

When a law has been enacted for the purpose of protection against the assertion of unfounded claims it should be so construed as to effect the object of the enactment.

12. Brokers ⇨43(2)

Where there was no unconscionable injury to a broker because of a change of position in reliance upon his alleged contract of employment by defendant, or an unjust enrichment of defendant through acceptance of the benefits of the alleged contract without itself being obligated thereunder, defendant was not estopped to plead the statute of frauds in defense of broker's claim for commission. West's Ann.Civ. Code, § 1624, subd. 5; West's Code Civ. Proc., § 1973, subd. 5.

13. Brokers ⇨43(2)

Mere fact that a broker rendered services and conducted unsuccessful negotiations with a prospective seller on behalf of purchaser did not constitute a change of position to broker's detriment, nor did the fact that purchaser refused to pay broker a realty commission upon an option which purchaser later procured through direct negotiations with vendor constitute an unjust enrichment within the meaning of the doctrine of estoppel so as to prevent purchaser from pleading the statute of frauds in bar to brokers' claim for a commission. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 1624, subd. 5; West's Code Civ.Proc., § 1973, subd. 5.

14. Evidence ⇨65

A licensed real estate broker is presumed to know that contracts for real estate commissions are invalid and unenforceable unless put in writing and subscribed by the person to be charged. West's Ann.Civ. Code, § 1624, subd. 5; West's Code Civ. Proc., § 1973, subd. 5.

Gregory M. Creutz, Los Angeles, for appellant.

Smith, Van Dyke & Hildreth, H. Allen Smith and Jack E. Hildreth, Los Angeles, for respondent.

SPENCE, Justice.

Plaintiff, a licensed real estate broker, sought compensation for alleged services rendered in connection with defendant's procurement of an option to purchase certain real property. The amended complaint contained in evidentiary detail all the facts on which plaintiff based its right to compensation, including the correspondence between the parties, which was set out in haec verba. At the outset of the trial, the court declared its opinion that plaintiff could not recover because the pleaded agreement was not in writing as required by the statute of frauds. Plaintiff thereupon made an offer of proof, and it was stipulated that the documents pleaded in the amended complaint were deemed to have been offered in evidence, that an objection was made thereto and sustained by the court. Judgment was then entered for defendant, and plaintiff appeals.

As grounds for reversal, plaintiff contends: (1) that the pleaded agreement does not come within the statute of frauds; but (2) if the statute does apply, there was a sufficient writing as required; and (3) in any event defendant is estopped to rely on the statute as a defense. Our review of the record, in the light of the authorities hereinafter cited, leads to the conclusion that plaintiff's contentions cannot be sustained.

The substance of plaintiff's offer of proof is as follows: Cliff A. Nelson, then an employee of the Fortune Realty Company of San Jose, conducted certain negotiations with defendant's representative, F. B. Stratton, for the purchase of the property in question. Various propositions, offers, and counter-offers were discussed by the parties relating to the purchase but no definite arrangements were concluded as to the price to be paid, or concerning any employment of Nelson individually, or of Fortune Realty Company to represent defendant. While negotiations were still pending and on August 15, 1950, Nelson became an employee of plaintiff and remained in such employ until December 15, 1950. Meanwhile Nelson and Stratton continued to correspond. On August 29, Stratton wrote to Nelson suggesting a price of $3,000 per acre and $1,500 for an option. Nelson responded by letter of August 31, advising Stratton that a meeting should be arranged and proposing a five per cent commission as defendant's broker.

On September 6, 1950, Stratton met Nelson and plaintiff's president Creutz in Los Angeles. At that time Creutz examined a proposed option agreement submitted by Stratton, subsequently redrafted it, and on September 8 he mailed it to Stratton. Defendant apparently was endeavoring to obtain an option for a purchase price of less than $3,000 per acre. Another meeting of Stratton, Nelson and Creutz was had on September 21, and the option agreement was revised to state the price of $2,500 per acre for the property and $1,500 payable for the option. A few days later Creutz and Nelson conferred with Lenfest, the owner of the property, and the latter's attorney concerning the option agreement. At that time Lenfest objected to the $2,500 per acre price contained in the option agreement and subsequently, on October 3, through his attorney, declined the offer. Nelson reported the outcome immediately to Stratton, who thereupon declared that there was "no hurry about the deal" and "just kind of let him (Lenfest) simmer along." Then without further call upon plaintiff or Nelson, and on October 5, 1950, Lenfest met Stratton and they orally agreed upon an option for a purchase price of $2,750 per acre. This oral agreement was reduced to writing and signed on December 15, 1950. Thereafter pursuant to its terms, defendant purchased the property for $204,517.50, escrow arrangements were concluded, and on June 25, 1951, Stratton forwarded to the Fortune Realty Company defendant's check for $5,112.94, "representing agreed to commission in connection with the purchase * * * of the Lenfest property" and with the understanding that "one-half of the above amount, or $2,556.47, will be paid by you to Mr. Nelson." This reference to "agreed to commission" obviously related to the correspondence between Nelson, Stratton, and Fortune Realty Company in May and June, 1951, whereby those parties agreed upon a commission of two and one-half per cent of the purchase price to be divided equally between Nelson and Fortune Realty Company, which correspondence was written long after Nelson had left the employ of plaintiff and long after the time that Stratton had obtained the option from Lenfest. Now plaintiff by this action claims that five per cent of the total price, or $10,225.87, is owing for its alleged services to defendant.

[1] Plaintiff contends that an agreement authorizing or employing a broker to obtain an option to purchase real property is not within the statute of frauds and therefore is not subject to the requirement that it or some note or memorandum thereof be in writing. Civ.Code, § 1624, subd. 5; Code Civ.Proc. § 1973, subd. 5. In support of its position, plaintiff relies on these settled principles: that an option to purchase real property is a contract containing an irrevocable and continuing offer to sell at a stipulated price within a specified time; that it conveys no interest in land to the optionee but vests in him only a right in personam to buy at his election; and that such agreement relating to the sale of land is "by no means a sale of property, but is a sale of a right to purchase." Warner Bros. Pictures v. Brodel, 31 Cal.2d 766, 772, 192 P.2d 949, 952, 3 A.L.R.2d 691; Hicks v. Christeson, 174 Cal. 712, 716, 164 P. 395; Transamerica Corp. v. Parrington, 115 Cal.App.2d 346, 351-353, 252 P.2d 385; see, also, Kritt v. Athens Hills Development Co., 109 Cal. App.2d 642, 646, 241 P.2d 606; Seeburg v. El Royale Corp., 54 Cal.App.2d 1, 4, 128 P.2d 362. However, the cases upon which plaintiff relies were not concerned with the application of the statute of frauds but only with the distinction between the "option contract" and the "contract to which the irrevocable offer of the optionor relates". Warner Bros. Pictures v. Brodel, supra. It therefore does not follow, as plaintiff contends, that since an option contract is not itself a contract for the purchase or sale of real estate but only evidences the "right" to performance of such agreed act, a contract employing a broker to obtain the option does not fall within the statute of frauds.

[2] In California an option to purchase real property has been held to come within the statute of frauds and so must be in writing. Bovo v. Abrahamson, 100 Cal.App. 373, 383, 280 P. 191. The propriety of this holding was recognized in Wilson v. Bailey, 8 Cal.2d 416, 65 P.2d 770, 772, where the enforcement of an oral extension of a written option to repurchase certain real property was in question. After observing that "certain contracts to be enforceable are required to be in writing, or that some note or memorandum thereof be in writing, subscribed by the party to be charged or his agent" Civ.Code, § 1624; Code Civ.Proc. § 1973, the court stated that it is "equally well settled that the facts of a particular case may give rise to an equitable estoppel against the party seeking to set up the statute of frauds and foreclose such party from relying thereon." 8 Cal.2d at page 421, 65 P.2d at page 772. Upon this basis of equitable estoppel, the court held that the fact of oral extension of the option would not defeat the optionee's rights thereunder.

Plaintiff cites Howard v. D. W. Hobson Co., 38 Cal.App. 445, 176 P. 715, for the proposition that a broker may recover on an oral contract of employment to procure an option for the purchase of real property. But that case concerned an agreement between two brokers to divide equally a commission to be paid upon the sale of the land. This court, upon denying the application for a hearing in that case, said 38 Cal.App. at pages 460-461, 176 P. at page 722: " * * * we deem it proper to say that we are not prepared to hold that subdivision 6 of section 1624 of the Civil Code [now subdivision 5] is not applicable in the case of a simple contract between a real estate agent or broker and a proposed purchaser to obtain an option for the purchase of real estate by the purchaser. The opinion clearly shows that this was in substance a joint venture on the part of plaintiff and defendant for the sale of real property of a third party, and the distribution of the profits between them. The District Court of Appeal was clearly right in concluding that subdivision 6 of section 1624 of the Civil Code [now subdivision 5] does not extend to agreements between brokers to co-operate in making sales for the sake of the commission or profits and that this substantially was such a case."

[3, 4] The term "real estate" as used in our statute of frauds, Civ.Code, § 1624, subd. 5; Code Civ.Proc. § 1973, subd. 5, conforms with the common law definition of real property as including only a freehold interest in land, and excludes estates for years or lesser duration. Dabney v. Edwards, 5 Cal.2d 1, 6-7, 53 P.2d 962, 103 A.L.R. 822. Therefore, it has been held that while a contract employing a broker to purchase or sell real estate comes within the statute of frauds, Marks v. Walter G. McCarty Corp., 33 Cal.2d 814, 819, 205 P.2d 1025, a contract employing a broker to sell oil and gas leases running only for a fixed term of years does not, because the latter employment relates to "chattels real," a species of personal property as distinguished from "real estate" or "real property." Dabney v. Edwards, supra.

[5-7] In determining the nature of the services which will bring an employment contract within the statute, the phrase "to sell or purchase" includes "to aid or assist in the purchase or sale" of real estate. Hooper v. Mayfield, 114 Cal.App.2d 802, 806, 251 P.2d 330; Duckworth v. Schumacher, 135 Cal.App. 661, 666, 27 P.2d 919. Such broad construction of the term conforms with one of the primary purposes of the statute, the protection of real estate owners from the assertion of false claims by brokers and agents. Toomy v. Dunphy, 86 Cal. 639, 642, 25 P. 130; also Gorham v. Heiman, 90 Cal. 346, 358, 27 P. 289; Hoop- er v. Mayfield, supra, 114 Cal.App.2d 802, 807, 251 P.2d 330. Likewise, the procurement of an option agreement for the purchase of real property is a contract that aids or assists in the purchase or sale of real property, and properly comes within the provisions of the statute. Accordingly, a contract employing a broker to obtain an option for the purchase of real property, like a contract employing a broker to purchase or sell real property, Steiner v. Rowley, 35 Cal.2d 713, 717, 221 P.2d 9; Marks v. Walter G. McCarty Corp., supra, comes within the statute and must be in writing. To hold otherwise would open the door to the assertion of unfounded claims by brokers and others on the pretense of oral employment in real estate transactions relative to options, and so frustrate the purpose of the statute.

Plaintiff next claims that if the statute of frauds is held to apply to the contract of employment in procuring the option, there nevertheless was a sufficient writing to comply therewith "subscribed by the party to be charged or by his agent." Civ.Code, § 1624, subd. 5; Code Civ.Proc. § 1973, subd. 5. But an examination of the documents on which plaintiff relies to meet the specifications of the statute discloses their insufficiency.

[8] The chief element required to be shown in writing is the fact of employment of the broker to act for the principal in the transaction. 9 Cal.Jur.2d § 40, p. 185; Toomy v. Dunphy, supra, 86 Cal. 639, 642, 25 P. 130; Hooper v. Mayfield, supra, 114 Cal.App.2d 802, 807, 251 P.2d 330; Moore v. Borgfeldt, 96 Cal.App. 306, 309-310, 273 P. 1114. To satisfy this requirement, plaintiff refers to the considerable correspondence between Nelson and Stratton on the subject, but in such exchange there is only one letter written by Stratton, while Nelson was employed by plaintiff. In that letter dated August 29, 1950, and addressed to Nelson, Stratton stated: "I am in a position to take an option on the Lenfest property at $3,000.00 per acre. We would not wish to pay more than $1,500.00 for the option and would want it for 90 days, with a contingent extension of time long enough to have the property rezoned. * * * If you think this proposal is worth your trip, let me know perhaps by telephone tomorrow and I will arrange to meet you at San Jose—maybe we can get the deal signed up. * * *

The above letter merely states the terms and conditions on which defendant was willing to negotiate for the property, but it does not show employment of plaintiff to act for defendant. Morrill v. Barneson, 30 Cal.App.2d 598, 600, 86 P.2d 924; Egan v. Pacific Southwest Trust & Sav. Bk., 92 Cal.App. 1, 3, 267 P. 719; Patterson v. Torrey, 18 Cal.App. 346, 348, 123 P. 224; Kleinsorge & Heilbron v. Liness, 17 Cal. App. 534, 535-537, 120 P. 444. Furthermore, the last sentence of the letter indicates that various details yet remained for consideration in completing any transaction. It is true that Nelson, on plaintiff's behalf, acknowledged Stratton's letter stating that he would be "willing to start negotiations on the basis of $2,500 per acre—[defendant] to pay the 5% commission"; that thereafter Stratton met with Nelson and plaintiff's president, Creutz, and the option papers were drawn, submitted to Lenfest, and finally rejected because Lenfest refused to sell at the $2,500 acreage price. But such writing by Nelson and subsequent meetings with Stratton in attempting to work out a suitable arrangement for purchase of the Lenfest property cannot satisfy the statutory requirement of a writing "subscribed by the party to be charged, or his agent."

[9-11] The only writing with which defendant can be charged here is the letter of August 29, 1950, by Stratton to Nelson, and as above quoted, it made no reference to the fact of employment by defendant of plaintiff or to any compensation. True, the latter reference is not essential if there is a contract of employment, for a reasonable amount as a commission will be inferred. Toomy v. Dunphy, supra, 86 Cal. 639, 642-643, 25 P. 130; Caminetti v. National Guar. Life Co., 56 Cal.App.2d 92,

96, 132 P.2d 318. But where there is a failure to mention the fact of employment, the further fact that there is no mention of a commission is significant. The authorities require that a writing "subscribed by the party to be charged, or his agent" must unequivocally show the fact of employment of the broker seeking to recover a real estate commission. Steiner v. Rowley, supra, 35 Cal.2d 713, 717, 221 P.2d 9; Marks v. Walter G. McCarty Corp., supra, 33 Cal.2d 814, 819, 205 P.2d 1025, Sanstrum v. Gonser, 140 Cal.App.2d 732, 295 P.2d 532; Hooper v. Mayfield, supra, 114 Cal.App.2d 802, 807, 251 P.2d 330; Colburn v. Sessin, 94 Cal.App.2d 4, 6, 209 P.2d 989; Blanchard v. Pauley, 92 Cal.App.2d 244, 247, 206 P.2d 864; Herzog v. Blatt, 80 Cal.App.2d 340, 342, 180 P.2d 30. It must therefore be concluded that the writings here are insufficient under the statute of frauds to sustain plaintiff's claim. As was said regarding this statute in Egan v. Pacific Southwest Trust & Sav. Bk., supra, 92 Cal.App. 1, at page 5, 267 P. 719, at page 721: "When a law has been enacted for the purpose of protection against the assertion of unfounded claims, it should be so construed as to effect the object of the enactment."

[12, 13] Nor is there any merit to plaintiff's contention that defendant is estopped to plead the statute of frauds by reason of the fact that Stratton, on behalf of defendant, finally concluded an option agreement with Lenfest for purchase of the property and the sale was subsequently consummated. This is not a case of unconscionable injury to plaintiff because of a change of position in reliance upon the alleged contract of employment Le Blond v. Wolfe, 83 Cal.App.2d 282, 188 P.2d 278, or an unjust enrichment of defendant through acceptance of the benefits of the alleged contract without itself being obligated thereunder. Monarco v. Lo Greco, 35 Cal.2d 621, 220 P.2d 737. The fact that plaintiff rendered services and conducted unsuccessful negotiations with Lenfest does not constitute a change of position to plaintiff's detriment, nor does the fact that defendant refused to pay plaintiff a real estate commission upon an option which defendant later procured through direct negotiations with Lenfest constitute an unjust enrichment within the meaning of the estoppel doctrine. To hold otherwise, in the absence of any showing of fraud, would defeat the purpose of the statute of frauds in relation to real estate transactions. Hicks v. Post, 154 Cal. 22, 28, 96 P. 878; Augustine v. Trucco, 124 Cal.App.2d 229, 241-244, 268 P.2d 780; Hooper v. Mayfield, supra, 114 Cal.App.2d 802, 809, 251 P.2d 330; Colburn v. Sessin, supra, 94 Cal.App.2d 4, 6, 209 P.2d 989.

[14] Plaintiff is a licensed real estate broker and, as such, is presumed to know that contracts for real estate commissions are invalid and unenforceable unless put in writing and subscribed by the person to be charged. Civ.Code, § 1624, subd. 5; Code Civ.Proc. § 1973, subd. 5; Steiner v. Rowley, supra, 35 Cal.2d 713, 717, 221 P.2d 9; Marks v. Walter G. McCarty Corp., supra, 33 Cal.2d 814, 819, 205 P.2d 1025. Nevertheless, plaintiff failed to secure proper written authorization to protect itself in the transaction. Rather it assumed the risk of relying upon claimed oral promises of defendant, and it has no cause for complaint if its efforts go unrewarded. Augustine v. Trucco, supra, 124 Cal.App.2d 229, 241, 268 P.2d 780.

In conclusion, it should be said that this case clearly illustrates the desirability of requiring a written memorandum of a contract employing any person as a broker in a transaction of the type involved. Prior to the time that Stratton obtained the option directly from Lenfest at the price of $2,750 per acre, there was no memorandum signed by Stratton which unequivocally evidenced the employment, as defendant's broker, of Nelson individually or Fortune Realty Company, which was Nelson's former employer, or plaintiff, which was Nelson's subsequent employer. A reference to employment and compensation was contained in the above-mentioned letter from Nelson to Stratton dated August 31, 1950, which suggested that a five per cent commission be paid by defendant, but this was on the basis of securing an option from Lenfest, the seller, at the price of $2,500 per acre and subject to negotiations concerning certain further conditions. Prior to that letter, the correspondence between Nelson and Stratton is entirely consistent with the idea that Nelson or his employer should look to the owner of the property for any compensation which might be anticipated. Not only did Stratton never agree in writing to Nelson's suggestion of August 31, concerning employment or commission but furthermore, no option to purchase at $2,500 per acre was ever obtained. After Lenfest refused to grant an option at that price and on satisfactory conditions, Stratton and Lenfest negotiated directly, and without the aid of any broker, upon the final terms of an option at $2,750 per acre. In this situation, and without any showing in the record that there was any binding obligation on the part of defendant to pay a broker's commission to anyone, defendant finally agreed to, and did pay to, Fortune Realty Company and Nelson the sum of $5,112.94 for their services. There is therefore no legal or equitable basis shown to sustain plaintiff's action against defendant for its claimed compensation in said transaction.

The judgment is affirmed.

GIBSON, C. J., and SHENK and TRAYNOR, JJ., concur.

McCOMB, Justice.

I dissent for the reasons set forth by Mr. Justice Fourt in the opinion prepared by him for the District Court of Appeal in 293 P.2d 800.

SCHAUER, Justice.

I agree with Justice McCOMB that the judgment should be reversed but I prefer to place the reversal on another ground.

Regardless of whether an agreement employing a real estate broker, for a commission, to secure an option to purchase real property does or does not come within the provisions of subdivision 5 of section 1624 of the Civil Code (and subd. 5, § 1973, Code Civ.Proc.), I am of the view that plaintiff is entitled to a hearing on the merits of his claim.

The amended complaint alleges, and the offer of proof comprehends a showing, that: (1) Nelson, the negotiating salesman, was, throughout most of the period he was rendering the service to defendant, an employe of plaintiff broker; (2) defendant was aware of the above stated relationship, and its dealings with salesman Nelson, under the circumstances, appear to be dealings with Nelson's employer, the broker-plaintiff; (3) defendant, through its authorized employe Stratton, wrote Nelson, "I think everything is in order for the acquisition of the property and as soon as the escrow is closed will get in touch with you so that the commission factor can be disposed of. Believe I told you we would pay 50% [sic] commission through Fortune with the understanding that you would receive half."

The above quoted writing, which is subscribed by Stratton with his signature over the designation of his office with defendant, "Industrial Commissioner," appears on its face to constitute "some note or memorandum" of employment and of obligation to pay a commission. Perhaps "Fortune," as well as plaintiff and Nelson, should be parties to the litigation with defendant, but defendant, having acknowledged the employment of an "agent or broker" and an obligation to pay a commission for Nelson's services as a real estate agent rendered during a time when he was employed by the plaintiff broker, is not in my view entitled to judgment on demurrer. A writing made subsequent to partial execution of the agreement meets the statute of frauds. (See Walsh v. Standart (1917), 174 Cal. 807, 810, 164 P. 795; 23 Cal.Jur.2d 365-366, and cases there cited.)

In this connection it is further to be noted that Nelson on July 24, 1950, advised defendant that "Re my new connection, I will be in charge of the Industrial Department of Pacific Southwest Development Corporation * * * Have written my superior, Mr. Gregory M. Creutz, who is President * * * about our development deal here in San Jose. Haven't had a chance to discuss it with him personally yet but believe we will be interested." In response to the above mentioned letter defendant's representative addressed his letter as follows, "Mr. Cliff A. Nelson, Manager Industrial Department, Pacific Southwest Development Corp.," and stated therein that "I am in a position to take an option on the Lenfest property at $3,000.00 per acre. We would not wish to pay more than $1,500.00 for the option * * *". Thereafter, under date of September 8, 1950, Mr. Nelson on the letterhead of "Pacific Southwest Development Corporation" wrote to defendant's representative that "In keeping with our conversation of Wednesday it is our understanding that the five per cent commission on the final sale price of the properties mentioned * * * would be paid to us by Western Pacific Railroad and we would not look to Lenfest or Cappelloni for any commissions. We prefer this since we are going to represent you rather than the sellers * * * As mentioned, Pacific Southwest Development Corporation will take care of an equitable payment that may appear to be due to Fortune Realty for their work up to the date of my coming with this corporation and transferring my salesman's license down here from Fortune Realty Co."

In the light of the circumstances shown I am of the view that a question of mixed law and fact arises. Is it not permissible to construe defendant's admission of employment of a broker or agent, and admission of liability for a commission, as running in favor of plaintiff? It seems to me that we should not hold on demurrer (to the evidence as well as the pleading) that a construction in favor of plaintiff could not be supported.

For the reasons above stated I would reverse the judgment.

CARTER, Justice.

I dissent.

I agree with Mr. Justice McCOMB that an agreement to obtain an option to buy real property does not come within an agreement employing an agent "to purchase or sell real estate" within the statute of frauds inasmuch as it is nothing more than employing an agent to obtain personal property—a chose in action. Civ. Code, § 1624(5). In addition to the discussion in the able and learned opinion prepared by Mr. Justice Fourt for the District Court of Appeal, 293 P.2d 800, adopted by Mr. Justice McCOMB, it should be mentioned that real property is defined as lands, tenements and hereditaments, Code Civ.Proc. § 17(2), and personal property includes goods, chattels and "things in action" Id., § 17(3). Hence an option being a chose in action is personal, not real, property. Real estate and real property are synonymous, City of Santa Barbara v. Maher, 25 Cal.App.2d 325, 77 P.2d 306, and that is true with reference to the statute of frauds, Civ.Code, § 1624(5), here involved. Dabney v. Edwards, 5 Cal.2d 1, 53 P.2d 962, 103 A.L.R. 822. An agent's charge for procuring a lease is not subject to the statute of frauds. Dabney v. Edwards, supra, 5 Cal.2d 1, 53 P.2d 962. There is no more reason why, therefore, obtaining an option to buy, should be read into the statute.

I also agree with Mr. Justice SCHAUER in his dissent, that, assuming a writing is necessary the case should be tried to see if there is a sufficient memorandum here. The memorandum pleaded appears to be sufficient.

I further believe, however, that on the third ground urged by plaintiff, estoppel, the defendant could not rely on the statute of frauds. In Monarco v. Lo Greco, 35 Cal.2d 621, 220 P.2d 737, this court clarified the law in relation to estoppel to plead the statute of frauds. This court stated two fundamental principles: (1) Estoppel to rely on the statute of frauds may exist where injury would result when the party has changed his position in reliance on the oral contract, or (2) unjust enrichment would result to the other person if he were permitted to assert the statute successfully. The question then is only, was the injury which resulted from plaintiff's change of position, and the resulting unjust enrichment of defendant, sufficient. In the Monarco case the supplying of services to the parents for many years in reliance on the oral contract was held enough under both principles. In the instant case plaintiff had rendered valuable services to defendant to obtain an option on the land in reliance on the oral contract and hence was injured. Defendant was unjustly enriched by the acceptance of those services (he obtained the option) for which he refused to pay. Suppose plaintiff had devoted all of his time to the project for five years, would there be any doubt that there was both injury and unjust enrichment? In Ruinello v. Murray, 36 Cal.2d 687, 227 P.2d 251, this court held there was no injury because the employee was paid for his services but clearly intimated he could recover the reasonable value thereof to the extent it was above what he was actually paid. There can be no doubt, therefore, that plaintiff here should be entitled to recover the reasonable value of his services even though the contract was oral. Some of the cases cited in the majority opinion for the proposition that there cannot be estoppel as to real estate brokers' contracts were before the decision in the Monarco case, see Hicks v. Post, 154 Cal. 22, 96 P. 878; Colburn v. Sessin, 94 Cal.App.2d 4, 209 P.2d 989, and the others do not mention or discuss it. See, Augustine v. Trucco, 124 Cal.App.2d 229, 268 P.2d 780; Hooper v. Mayfield, 114 Cal.App.2d 802, 251 P.2d 330.

I would reverse the judgment.

William Branch RILEY, also known as William Brand Riley, Plaintiff and Respondent,

v.

Hallie Ford TURPIN, Defendant and Appellant.

S. F. 19261.

Supreme Court of California.

In Bank.

Oct. 11, 1956.

Action was brought for partition of realty and for recovery of taxes paid by plaintiff. The Superior Court, Marin County, B. C. Hawkins, J., granted the relief sought, and defendant appealed. The Supreme Court, Schauer, J., held that since defendant was both life tenant and contingent remainderman, it had been error for court, in apportioning proceeds of sale, to fail to take into account value of life estate.

Reversed and remanded with directions.

Opinion, 296 P.2d 901, vacated.

1. Joint Tenancy ⚡

A joint tenancy may be created in an equitable or legal estate or any other kind of estate recognized by law.

2. Joint Tenancy ⚡3

Remainders ⚡4

Provision for nephew was not irreconcilable and repugnant to joint tenancy estate created by agreement under which property was to be held by man and woman in joint tenancy, subject to condition that property should vest in man's nephew if he survived both of them, and under such agreement (1) man and woman held a life estate in joint tenancy and (2) man, woman and nephew each held contingent remainder, dependent upon surviving other two.

3. Partition ⚡16

Taxation ⚡531(2)

Contingent remainderman had such interest in property as would entitle him to make tax payment without being considered a mere volunteer; and, having made such payment, he succeeded to lien held by public taxing bodies, and, as holder of such lien, was entitled to bring action for partition as against life tenant.

4. Partition ⚡87

Where contingent remainderman, holding lien on property for amount of taxes which he had paid to meet obligation which legally was that of life tenant, brought partition action, he was entitled to have trial court therein deduct from life tenant's share of proceeds of sale of property amount of taxes paid. West's Ann. Civ.Code, § 840.

5. New Trial ⚡151

On conflicting affidavits presented, in connection with life tenant's motion for new trial, in partition action brought by contingent remainderman, on ground of newly discovered evidence of unrepresented interest in property, trial court was warranted in concluding that there was no such unrepresented interest.

6. Partition ⚡111(1)

Where defendant in partition proceedings was both life tenant and contingent remainderman, it was error for court, in apportioning proceeds of sale, to fail to take into account value of life estate. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc., §§ 778, 779.

SCHAUER, Justice.

Defendant appeals from an interlocutory judgment in partition under which certain real property is ordered sold and the proceeds divided between plaintiff and defendant according to a formula set forth in the judgment. We have concluded that the judgment is correct except as to computation of the percentages of the proceeds to which the respective parties are entitled, but that a reversal is required for further proceedings to permit correction of the error.

In February, 1941, Arthur Brand and Hallie Turpin (defendant) entered into a written agreement whereby a home owned by Brand would thereafter be "the joint property of the parties hereto with the right of survivorship, except that in the event that" William Riley (Brand's nephew, and plaintiff herein) survived both of them the property "shall vest in William Branch Riley, in fee simple, but in the event of the death of William Branch Riley, dying before both of the parties to this Agreement, then the survivor of * * * [Brand and Turpin] shall take all the property in fee simple absolute."

Brand died in May, 1947, and defendant, Mrs. Turpin, has lived in the home ever since. She did not pay the real property taxes and on June 25, 1948, the property was sold to the state. (Rev. & Tax.Code, § 3436.) Near the end of the five-year redemption period plaintiff Riley made formal demand upon defendant to pay the taxes but she failed to do so. In May, 1953, plaintiff paid enough on the taxes to prevent a final forfeiture. (Rev. & Tax.Code, § 3613.)

In July, 1953, plaintiff filed this suit against Mrs. Turpin seeking partition and sale of the property and recovery, from defendant's share of the sale proceeds, of the taxes paid by plaintiff. The court entered its interlocutory judgment so ordering,¹ and this appeal by defendant followed.

[1,2] As grounds for reversal, defendant first urges that under the written agreement plaintiff has no interest in the property whatsoever, and suggests that he acted as a mere volunteer in paying the taxes. It is apparent, however, that the trial court properly held that defendant is the owner of a life interest in the property with a contingent remainder in the fee dependent upon her surviving plaintiff, and that plaintiff is owner of a contingent remainder in the fee dependent upon his surviving defendant.

Defendant argues that because the right of survivorship is one of the essential elements to a joint tenancy, therefore any exception to such right contained in the agreement is irreconcilable and repugnant to a joint tenancy estate and is therefore void. This contention is without merit. McDonald v. Morley (1940), 15 Cal.2d 409, 101 P.2d 690, 129 A.L.R. 810, and California Trust Co. v. Anderson (1949), 91 Cal.App.2d 832, 205 P.2d 1127, relied upon by defendant, both involved joint tenancies in the entire estate in the property involved, whereas in the present case the joint tenancy created was of a life estate only, based upon the life of the survivor of the two parties to the agreement, Brand and defendant. A joint tenancy may, of course, be created in an equitable or legal estate or any other kind of estate recognized by the law. (See O'Neill v. O'Malley (1946), 75 Cal.App.2d 821, 824, 171 P.2d 907; Lowenthal v. Kunz (1951), 104 Cal.App.2d 181, 183, 231 P.2d 62; 13 Cal.Jur.2d 300.) Brand and Mrs. Turpin agreed that as between themselves the survivor should retain the property until his or her death, and that the remainder would be the property of the survivor as between themselves and plaintiff Riley. Thus, Brand and Mrs. Turpin held a life estate in joint tenancy, and Brand, Mrs. Turpin and Riley each held a contingent remainder, dependent upon surviving the other two. In Zeigler v. Bonnell (1942), 52 Cal.App.2d 217, 220, 126 P.2d 118, the court remarked that "While both joint tenants are alive each has a specialized form of life estate, with what amounts to a contingent remainder in the fee, the contingency being dependent upon which joint tenant survives."

McGarrigle v. Roman Catholic Orphan Asylum (1905), 145 Cal. 694, 79 P. 447, 1 L.R.A.,N.S., 315, and Litten v. Warren (1936), 11 Cal.App.2d 635, 54 P.2d 39, also relied upon by defendant, concern writings lacking the specific and definite language employed by the parties to the agreement here involved, and contain nothing in point or persuasive on the issues before us.

[3] The next question is whether Riley is entitled to bring an action in partition

1. See Code of Civil Procedure, sections 752, 763, under which sale of the property is authorized in lieu of physical partition.

against Mrs. Turpin. Section 752 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that " * * where real property is subject to a lien on a parity with that on which the owner's title is based, [an action in partition may be brought] by the owner or by the holder of such lien, for a partition thereof according to the respective rights of the persons interested therein, and for a sale of such property, or a part thereof, if it appears that a partition can not be made without great prejudice to the parties." Here, the obligation to pay the taxes was upon Mrs. Turpin as life tenant (Civ.Code, § 840), and, as we have seen, Riley paid them in order to prevent final forfeiture of the property. It is established that, as a contingent remainderman, his interest in the property was such as to entitle him to make such payment without being considered a mere volunteer (Schofield v. Green (1944), 115 Ind.App. 160, 56 N.E.2d 506, 507 [1], 508 [7]; Sheldon on Subrogation, p. 12; 31 C.J.S., Estates, § 98, pp. 116-117; see also *Treat v. Further, it is specifically provided in section 2903 of the Civil Code that "Every person, having an interest in property subject to a lien, has the right to redeem it from the lien, at any time after the claim is due, and before his right of redemption is foreclosed, and, by such redemption, becomes subrogated to all the benefits of the lien, as against all owners of other interests in the property, except in so far as he was bound to make such redemption for their benefit." (See Stein v. Simpson (1951), 37 Cal.2d 79, 83-85 [3, 4, 5, 6], 230 P.2d 816; Bumiller v. Bumiller (1918), supra, 179 Cal. 119, 124, 175 P. 897; Kenney v. Kenney (1950), supra, 97 Cal. We conclude that plaintiff holds a lien against the involved property which qualifies him to bring this action in partition under the provisions of section 752, quoted hereinabove.

[4] Defendant next contends that the trial court erred in providing that the amount of taxes paid by plaintiff be deducted from defendant's share of the proceeds of sale of the property. As already indicated, however, plaintiff held a lien on the property for the amount of such taxes, which he had paid to meet an obligation which legally was that of defendant. Under such circumstances no error appears in the respect complained of by defendant. (Willmon v. Koyer (1914), supra, 168 Cal. 369, 374, 143 P. 694, L.R.A.1915B, 961.)

[5] Defendant further urges that her motion for a new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence should have been granted. Such motion was supported by affidavit of her attorney that following the trial he had discovered a recorded deed by which Brand had conveyed his interest in the property to plaintiff's father and that the father was therefore a necessary party in the partition action. The father executed a counter-affidavit in which he denied any delivery of the deed; and alleged that during Brand's last illness he, the father, had found it among Brand's personal effects and had it recorded without realizing that there had been no delivery of the deed to him, that as executor of Brand's last will and testament the father had in 1947 filed a federal estate tax return in which it was stated that the deed had not been delivered, that the father claimed no interest in the property, and that property covered by the deed (other than the "joint tenancy" property involved in the present partition action) had been included in the estate inventory and was being administered as part of Brand's estate. In his affidavit the father further disclaimed any interest in the property, and a quitclaim deed was executed by him and recorded before the court ruled on the new trial motion. The trial court was therefore warranted in concluding that the father had never acquired any interest in the property and in denying a new trial.

[6] Defendant's final contention is that the trial court erred in apportioning the proceeds of sale between the parties in proportion only to the respective values of their contingent remainders, based on their respective life expectancies, and in failing to take into account the value of defendant's life estate. In this defendant is correct. Section 778 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides that "The person entitled to a tenancy for life, * * * whose estate has been sold [in partition proceedings], is entitled to receive such sum as may be deemed a reasonable satisfaction for such estate, and which the person so entitled may consent to accept instead thereof, by an instrument in writing * * *," and section 779 of the same code states that if the amount of such reasonable satisfaction is not agreed upon, "at or before a judgment of sale is rendered, the court must ascertain and determine what proportion of the proceeds of the sale, after deducting expenses, will be a just and reasonable sum * * *" It follows that the judgment must be reversed to permit determination, in accordance with the above-quoted sections, of the sum to be received by defendant as satisfaction for her life estate.

The judgment is reversed and remanded for such further proceedings as may be necessary to make findings of fact and conclusions of law and to enter a judgment not inconsistent with the views expressed herein, each party to bear his or her own costs on appeal.

v.

Ethel Ruth MARR, Defendant and Appellant.

S. F. 19283.

Supreme Court of California.

In Bank.

Oct. 11, 1956.

Action by administrator of estate of deceased grantor to cancel a deed on ground that it had been delivered to defendant by reason of fraudulent representation that she would care for elderly grantor during his declining years. The Superior Court, San Mateo County, Aylett R. Cotton, J., entered judgment for plaintiff and defendant appealed and the cause was transferred to Supreme Court on its own motion. The Supreme Court, Shenk, J., held that testimony of grantee that first of several canceled checks, introduced in evidence by plaintiff to rebut grantee's assertion that deed was given in payment for services previously performed for grantor, represented a loan from grantor, for which there should be a canceled note, and similar testimony offered by grantee in explanation of other checks did not violate best evidence rule and could not properly be excluded on ground that court found it unworthy of belief.

Judgment reversed.

Opinion, 295 P.2d 43, vacated.

1. Courts ⚡488(1)

A cause transferred from District Court of Appeal to Supreme Court is removed from jurisdiction of District Court of Appeal and is then pending in Supreme Court the same as if originally lodged there.

2. Courts ⚡488(1)

Upon transfer of cause from District Court of Appeal to Supreme Court, opinion and decision of District Court of Appeal become a nullity and are of no force or effect either as a judgment or as an authoritative statement of any principle of law therein discussed, unless approved or adopted by Supreme Court.

3. Appeal and Error ⚡1056(1)

Where administrator of estate of deceased grantor, in action to cancel deed on ground that it had been delivered to defendant by reason of fraudulent representation that she would care for elderly grantor during his declining years, introduced in evidence canceled checks indicating payments by grantor to grantee to rebut grantee's assertion that deed was given in payment for services previously performed for grantor, rejection of grantee's testimony that first check represented a loan from grantor and other similar testimony offered in explanation of other checks was prejudicial to grantee.

4. Evidence ⚡158(27)

Parol testimony that canceled check, indicating payment of money by drawer, since deceased, to witness, represented a loan from drawer, for which there should be a canceled note, and similar testimony offered in explanation of other such checks did not violate "best evidence" rule, since such testimony did not attempt to show by parol the terms of a written instrument.

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Best Evidence".

5. Evidence ⚡425

Where the question is as to whether a writing has been made and not as to contents thereof and the question comes collaterally in issue, it may be proved by parol.

6. Deeds ⚡202

Where administrator of estate of deceased grantor, in action to cancel deed on ground that it had been delivered to defendant by reason of fraudulent representation that she would care for elderly grantor during his declining years, introduced canceled checks, indicating payments by grantor to grantee, to rebut grantee's assertion that deed was given in payment for services previously performed for grantor, grantee was entitled to present otherwise competent testimony in explanation of such checks and court could not properly exclude such testimony as unworthy of belief, even if, after being heard, it might be rejected on such ground.

7. Cancellation of Instruments ⚡46, 49

In action by administrator of estate of deceased grantor to cancel deed allegedly delivered to defendant by reason of fraudulent representation that she would care for elderly grantor during his declining years, defendant was entitled to a complete hearing and to produce all relevant, competent and material evidence on any material issue.

8. Trial ⚡45(1)

SHENK, Justice.

This cause was transferred to this court on its own motion. A trial in the Superior Court in and for the County of San Mateo resulted in a judgment for the plaintiff. On appeal the judgment was reversed by the District Court of Appeal. Ponce v. Marr, 295 P.2d 43, 45. A hearing was ordered because of the italicized portion of the following quotation concerning the continuing effect of an opinion and decision of the District Court of Appeal after an order of transfer to this court:

"An excellent explanation of the distinction between an attempt to show the terms of an instrument by secondary evidence, which attempt properly would be denied under the best evidence rule, and the producing of oral evidence although written evidence also exists, is given in the case of Altramano v. Swan (Cal.App.), 119 P.2d 401. That case does not appear in the California Appellate Reports because the Supreme Court granted a hearing. Altramano v. Swan, 20 Cal.2d 622, [128 P.2d 353]. The Supreme Court came to the same conclusion as the district court of appeal as to the disposition of the cause, but did not mention the point of evidence; however, since the cause was remanded for further trial and since the district court of appeal had made its ruling on the point of evidence specifically for the guidance of the trial court at the new trial, and the supreme court did not interfere with that ruling, the ruling may be regarded as authoritative."

[1,2] The emphasized language in the foregoing quotation is not a correct statement of the law and, if allowed to stand, would result in confusion with reference to the subject. It therefore seems necessary to reiterate that the effect of an order of transfer to this court is to remove the cause in its entirety from the District Court of Appeal. Thereafter it is pending in this court the same as if originally lodged here. Moran v. District Court of Appeal, 15 Cal.2d 527, 530, 102 P.2d 1079; In re Stierlen's Estate, 199 Cal. 140, 144, 248 P. 509; Rockridge Place Co. v. City Council, 178 Cal. 58, 60, 172 P. 1110. Again it was stated in Knouse v. Nimocks, 8 Cal. 2d 482, at page 483, 66 P.2d 438: "The opinion and decision of the District Court of Appeal, by our order of transfer, have become a nullity and are of no force or effect, either as a judgment or as an authoritative statement of any principle of law therein discussed. * * * [W]ithout some further express act of approval or adoption of said opinion by this court, that opinion and decision are of no more effect as a judgment or as a precedent to be followed in the decision of legal questions that may hereafter arise, than if they had not been written." To the same effect see In re Estate of Kent, 6 Cal.2d 154, 156, 57 P.2d 901; E. J. Stanton & Sons v. County of Los Angeles, 78 Cal.App.2d 181, 193, 177 P.2d 804.

From the foregoing it necessarily follows that upon the transfer to this court of the case of Altramano v. Swan referred to in the above quoted paragraph from the opinion of the District Court of Appeal that case ceased to be authoritative in any sense as a precedent. Likewise the decision and opinion of the District Court of Appeal in the present case has been rendered a nullity and of no force and effect by the order of transfer to this court.

On the merits of the appeal it appears that the plaintiff, S. A. Ponce, as administrator of the estate of his deceased father, commenced the action to cancel a deed which the decedent had delivered to the defendant, Ethel Ruth Marr. The complaint alleged and the plaintiff sought to prove that the deed in question was delivered to the defendant by reason of the fraudulent representation to the elderly grantor that she would care for and nurse him during his declining years. The defendant denied that she had made such an agreement, claiming that the deed was delivered in consideration of certain prior services performed by her for which she had not been paid. To rebut that assertion and to impeach the defendant's testimony the plaintiff offered in evidence a number of cancelled checks which on their face indicated payments of money from the decedent to the defendant and claimed by the plaintiff to be in consideration for the services performed by the defendant. As a witness in her own behalf the defendant attempted to explain the payments indicated by the checks. Prior to their introduction she had admitted that she had obtained a loan from the decedent. She testified that a particular check in the amount of $200 was a loan to be used in adding a room to her home and that the loan had been repaid. She stated: "I think there should be a cancelled note."

[3] At that point the plaintiff's counsel moved that the defendant's testimony be stricken on the ground that it was not the best evidence. The court granted the motion, but it is not clear whether the evidence was rejected on the ground that it violated the best evidence rule or that the court found it, so far as it went, unworthy of belief and decided to hear no more on the same subject. The defendant's counsel unsuccessfully attempted to introduce evidence in explanation of the other checks. Judgment for the plaintiff was directed from the bench and it is apparent from the record that if the evidence of the defendant thus tendered was improperly rejected the error was prejudicial to her cause.

[4,5] The parol explanation that the first check was a loan and the offer of similar explanations as to other checks were not in violation of the best evidence rule as there was no attempt to show by parol the terms of a written instrument. The defendant was attempting to testify as to claimed repayments, and she should not be foreclosed from doing so by the existence of a written instrument which also would show the fact sought to be proved. The existence of the writing was collateral to the issue of repayment and we "understand the rule to be that, where the question is not as to the contents of a writing, but as to whether one has been made or not, and the question comes collaterally in issue, it may be proved by parol." Marriner v. Dennison, 78 Cal. 202, 213, 20 P. 386, 391; see also People v. Skeen, 93 Cal.App.2d 489, 491, 209 P.2d 132; Wigmore on Evidence, 3rd Ed., vol. IV, p. 485.

[6,7] If, on the other hand, the court excluded the defendant's testimony relating to the checks because it found it to be unworthy of belief, there was error in doing so. Without suggesting that the court did not have the right to disbelieve the defendant or to reject her testimony after hearing it, still she should not have been deprived, for that reason alone, of her right to present such testimony. Her further testimony may have satisfied the court that the other checks could be properly explained and may have caused the court to alter its opinion as to the first check. The defendant was entitled to a complete hearing, and to produce all relevant, competent and material evidence on any material issue. Lawless v. Calaway, 24 Cal.2d 81, 92, 147 P.2d 604; Foster v. Keating, 120 Cal.App.2d 435, 451, 261 P.2d 529; Bole v. Bole, 76 Cal. App.2d 344, 345-346, 172 P.2d 936; Mashbir v. Mashbir, 29 Cal.App.2d 733, 735, 85 P.2d 482.

[8] A complete offer of proof by the defendant was rendered unnecessary as the court made it clear that additional testimony in explanation of the checks would not be received. Tomaier v. Tomaier, 23 Cal.2d 754, 146 P.2d 905; Caminetti v. Pacific Mut. Life Ins. Co., 23 Cal.2d 94, 100, 142 P.2d 741.

Jean J. SILVA et al., Defendants and Respondents.
S. F. 19572.

Supreme Court of California.
In Bank.
Oct. 11, 1956.

Proceeding in eminent domain by public utility district to acquire improvements in right of way for power system. The Superior Court, Contra Costa County, Harold Jacoby, J., entered an order denying the plaintiff's motion for an order of abandonment and dismissal of the proceeding and the plaintiff appealed. The Supreme Court, McComb, J., held that the condemnation proceeding could not be voluntarily abandoned by the public utility district more than 30 days after judgment notwithstanding extension of the time allowed by statute for payment of the award as authorized by the statute where the state or public corporation is the condemner.

Order affirmed.

Opinion, 297 P.2d 705, vacated.

1. Eminent Domain ⇨246(2)

Extension of time allowed by statute for payment of award by filing affidavit pursuant to statutory provisions did not extend time allowed by statute for abandonment of proceedings by condemner where time for appeal, motion for new trial, or motion to vacate judgment had passed, and notwithstanding such extension of time for payment of award, condemnation proceedings to acquire improvements and rights of way for condemner's power system could not be abandoned by public utility district more than 30 days after judgment. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc., §§ 1251, 1255a.

2. Eminent Domain ⇨246(2)

Under the statute authorizing condemner to abandon proceedings at any time after filing complaint and before expiration of 30 days after judgment, the term "final judgment" means a judgment when all possibility of a direct attack thereon by way of appeal motion for new trial or motion to vacate the judgment has been exhausted. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc., § 1255a.

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Final Judgment".

3. Statutes ⇨223.2(35)

The statute allowing an extension of time for payment of condemnation award is not in pari materia with the statute providing for the abandonment of condemnation proceedings, since the statutes deal with different subjects and have different purposes and objectives. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc., §§ 1251, 1255a.

4. Eminent Domain ⇨246(3)

Under the statute a condemnee has the option either to enforce judgment as best he may or treat such nonpayment of the award as implied abandonment of the proceedings but the statute does not give the condemner who has not abandoned the proceeding within the time limited thereby, the privilege of treating his own default in payment of an award as an abandonment of the proceedings particularly in view of the remedies afforded the condemnee by the statute where the condemner fails to pay the award within the time required. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc., §§ 1251, 1252, 1255a.

McCOMB, Justice.

This cause was transferred to this court after decision by the District Court of Appeal, First Appellate District, Division

One. Upon further examination of the record, we adopt the opinion of that court prepared by Mr. Justice Wood (Fred B.), with such omissions and additions as hereinafter appear, as and for the decision of this court. As modified, it reads:

In this proceeding in eminent domain judgment was rendered authorizing the plaintiff to acquire certain improvements and rights of way for its sewer system upon payment of $62,000 and interest to defendant Scherer-Hobart Company. Neither party appealed.

Within 30 days from the date of the judgment, plaintiff filed an affidavit pursuant to section 1251 of the Code of Civil Procedure, declaring that to provide money necessary to pay the award, bonds of the district must be issued and sold. That, of course, extended to one year from the date of the judgment the period of time within which to pay the award.

Six months later (nearly seven months after the date of the judgment) plaintiff filed a notice declaring that it "hereby abandons the proceeding on file herein," and moved for an order of abandonment and for judgment dismissing the proceeding. This motion was denied and plaintiff has appealed from the order of denial.

[1] The order must be affirmed. The purported abandonment was without authority in law. It came too late. [The time for appeal, motion for a new trial, or a motion to vacate the judgment had passed.]¹ The applicable statute authorizes a plaintiff to "abandon the proceedings at any time after filing the complaint and before the expiration of thirty days after final judgment". (Code Civ.Proc., § 1255a.) [Italics added.]

[2] [The term "final judgment" as used in section 1255a of the Code of Civil Procedure means a judgment when all possibility of direct attack thereon by way of (1) appeal, (2) motion for a new trial, or (3) motion to vacate the judgment, has been exhausted. (Code Civ.Proc., § 1264.7) Any statements to the contrary in City of Los Angeles v. Deacon, 3 Cal.2d 641, at page 648 [2], 46 P.2d 165, are overruled; likewise, contrary statements in City of Los Angeles v. Aitken, 32 Cal.App.2d 524, at page 528 [2] et seq., 90 P.2d 377, are disapproved.]

[3] Plaintiff's main argument is that sections 1251 and 1255a are to be read together, with the result, it claims, that extension of the time within which to pay (by filing the affidavit sanctioned by § 1251) extends the time within which to abandon (by filing the affidavit prescribed by § 1255a).

There is no such interlacing of the provisions of these two sections. They deal with different subjects (payment and abandonment, respectively) and have different purposes and objectives. Section 1251 has been in the code ever since 1872. Originally, it prescribed 30 days after final judgment as the period of time within which the condemner must pay the sum of money assessed, without any provision for extension of that period. Commencing in 1911 (Stats. 1911, ch. 80, p. 92) the section has been amended from time to time to provide, as it now does, that this 30-day period may be extended to enable the raising of money by issuing bonds if the state or a public corporation is the condemner.

In January of 1911, the decision in Southern Pac. R. Co. v. Reis Estate Co., 15 Cal.App. 216 [114 P. 808, 810], was rendered in which the court stated that a condemner "is entitled to abandon the claim to the property and ask a dismissal before the expiration of 30 days from the entry of the judgment" (15 Cal.App. at page 218, 114 P. at page 809) and held that in such a case the costs to which the condemnee was entitled did not include "necessary and reasonable expenses in preparing for and defending this action" (15 Cal. App. at page 217, 114 P. at page 809), such as expenses incurred for "surveying

1. Brackets enclosing material (other than editor's added parallel citations) are used to denote insertions or additions by this court.

and engineering work and maps and * * attorney's fees" (15 Cal.App. at page 218, 114 P. at page 809). By a legislative bill introduced and passed that session and approved by the governor March 17, 1911, the Legislature added section 1255a to the code, using therein language so similar to that used by the court in the case cited that it is a fair inference that the Legislature had that decision before it and was considering solely the subject of abandonment and costs upon abandonment and was not considering any other subject such as the time within which an award must be paid by a condemner as prescribed in section 1251. []²

[The judgment of the award to the defendant had become final.]

[The extension, from 30 days to one year, of the time within which the plaintiff must pay the award is for the convenience of the plaintiff in seeking to obtain the money through the medium of a bond issue. Its obligation to pay is fixed and is not subject to diminution or modification by the lapse of time.]

[4] Plaintiff makes an additional argument based upon that provision of section 1255a which declares that "failure to comply with section 1251 of this code shall constitute an implied abandonment of the proceeding." That simply means that if the condemner (not having abandoned within the time limited therefor by section 1255a) fails to pay the amount of award (either directly to the defendant or by deposit in court for his benefit) within the time limited therefor, the condemnee has the option of enforcing the judgment as best he may or of treating such nonpayment as an implied abandonment. It would be unreasonable to ascribe to the Legislature, as plaintiff would have us do, an intent to authorize voluntary abandonment not later than 30 days after entry of judgment and then give the condemner the privilege of treating his own default as an abandonment, especially in view of the remedies accorded the condemnee by the provisions of section 1252 of the Code of Civil Procedure when the condemner fails to pay within the time required.

The order appealed from is affirmed.

Earl F. Hedlund, in pro. per.

Rawlins Coffman, Red Bluff, for respondent Davis.

No appearance for respondent supervisors.

Edward J. Allen, Red Bluff, in pro. per.

SCHAUER, Justice.

Earl F. Hedlund petitions for a writ of mandate to be addressed to the county clerk and to the board of supervisors of Tehama County. Petitioner asks that respondents be directed to perform such official duties respectively as under the law devolve upon them to the end (1) that the office of district attorney of the County of Tehama shall be placed upon the ballot at the general election to be held on November 6, 1956, in order that a qualified candidate may be elected at such general election to serve for the remainder of the unexpired term of Bruce Werlhof, who was elected in November, 1954, for a term which is to expire in January, 1959, and who resigned from such office on June 11, 1956; (2) that there shall be accepted, examined, and otherwise dealt with in accordance with law all independent nomination papers which may be timely tendered by candidates for the office of district attorney of the County of Tehama, to be voted on at the general election of November 6, 1956; and (3) that there shall be printed on the ballots to be used at the general election of November 6, 1956, in the County of Tehama, the name or names of any person or persons who pursuant to law may be found to have qualified as a candidate or candidates for the office of district attorney of such County of Tehama, pursuant to the provisions of sections 3000 et seq. of the Elections Code of the State of California.

Due to the industry of petitioner, of the incumbent district attorney as a real party in interest, and of counsel for respondent county clerk, the issue before us has been fairly, promptly, and concisely presented. It is purely one of law. From the petition and the returns thereto filed by the county clerk, and by the incumbent district attorney,¹ it appears that at the time of the holding of the primary election in California on June 5, 1956, and thereafter until June 11, 1956, one Bruce Werlhof was the duly elected and acting district attorney for Tehama County; he had been elected for the term which will expire in January, 1959. On June 11, 1956, subsequent to the primary election, Werlhof resigned his office effective immediately, and immediately thereafter respondent board of supervisors appointed Edward J. Allen to the office which had been made vacant as above noted; the board purported to appoint Allen to serve "for the 'unexpired term'" of Werlhof, although, petitioner contends, by virtue of the charter provisions of the County of Tehama the appointment of Allen is, and can be, effective only until the general election on November 6, 1956.

On September 11, 1956, petitioner caused a statement to be published in the newspapers of Tehama County stating that in his understanding of the law the term of the incumbent district attorney will expire on November 6, 1956, and that the people have the right to elect their district attorney on that date. His published statement concludes, "I am making this public announcement of my intention in order that, should my construction of the law be correct, every attorney who is interested in the office will have a fair and equal opportunity to seek it * * *"

On September 14, 1956, petitioner and Allen, the incumbent district attorney,² each tendered to the county clerk $180 for prepayment of the filing fee required by law, and received from her appropriate nomination forms. The clerk at that time informed them, however, that she was "conditionally" accepting the fees and "conditionally" issuing the nomination papers and that because of shortness of time for the completion of the nomination procedure provided by sections 3000 et seq. of the Elections Code she could not assure them that the name of either petitioner or Allen would actually appear on the ballot at the November 6 election or that an election would in fact be held for the office of district attorney on that date or that she might not demand, as a condition to the acceptance of nomination papers when completed, a court order requiring her to accept such papers.

Sections 3000 et seq. of the Elections Code provide for the type of independent nomination procedure which petitioner seeks to follow here. Sections 3046 to 3050, inclusive, prescribe the form and substance which the nomination papers shall follow. Such nomination papers, according to section 3043, shall be filed not more than 65 nor less than 40 days before the day of election. September 27 is the fortieth day before November 6. There is a further provision, however, in section 3045, that "Not more than five days before the first day, and not less than five days before the last day on which a nomination paper may legally be filed, it shall be * * * left with the county clerk for examination, or for examination and filing"; the last day for compliance with this last requirement would be September 22 which, being a Saturday, the parties agree would make the last day fall on September 21. The al-

1. The board of supervisors have stated that no return will be filed by them.

2. Although Mr. Allen takes the position that his appointment continues for the full unexpired term of Werlhof (that is, until January, 1959), he seeks to qualify as a candidate for the November 6, 1956, ballot, if it is determined that the office should appear on such ballot.

ternative writ herein was issued on September 19.

Both petitioner and Allen circulated their respective nomination papers throughout the County of Tehama and filed them with respondent county clerk on or before September 21. That official, at the date of her return, was in the course of examining them, although she alleges that "she is unaware of any vacancy in the office of district attorney of the County of Tehama."

The basic issue before us is whether under applicable law the appointment of the incumbent, Allen, is inherently effective for the full unexpired term of Werlhof, which will terminate in January, 1959, or whether such appointment terminates at the general election³ to be held on November 6, 1956. If the appointment as a matter of law carries over for the full unexpired term then no vacancy will exist in the office of district attorney to be voted on at the November 6, 1956, general election, but if petitioner is correct in his contentions then the office should appear on the November 6, 1956, ballot, together also with the names of candidates for that office who have qualified as such under the independent nomination procedures.

The charter of Tehama County (art. IX, § 6; Stats.1917, p. 1891) provides, "Whenever a vacancy shall occur in an elective office in this County other than a member of the Board of Supervisors the Board of Supervisors shall fill such vacancy, except as otherwise provided in this Charter, until the election and qualification of his successor. In case of any such vacancy there shall be elected at the next general election an officer to fill such vacancy for the unexpired term, unless such unexpired term ends on the first Monday after the first day of January next succeeding the election, in which case the election shall be for the unexpired term and for an entire new term in addition." (Italics added.)

3. We are not in this proceeding concerned with any question as to whether, technically, the appointive term would ipso facto end on the day of the election or

The Constitution of this state declares, in section 7½ of article XI, that in county charters "It shall be competent * * * to provide * * * for the following matters: * * *

"2. For sheriffs, * * * district attorneys * * *, for the election or appointment of such officers, or any of them, for the times at which and the terms for which, said officers shall be elected or appointed, * * * and, if appointed, for the manner of their appointment; and * * *

"Whenever any county has framed and adopted a charter, and the same shall have been approved by the Legislature, as herein provided, the general laws adopted by the Legislature in pursuance of Sections 4 [repealed in 1933] and 5 [having to do, among other things, with the election or appointment of county officers] of this article, shall, as to such county, be superseded by said charter as to matters for which, under this section it is competent to make provision in such charter, and for which provision is made therein * * *

[1,2] Pursuant to the above constitutional provisions the charter of the County of Tehama (art. IX, § 6, also quoted above) has made the authorized provision for the "times at which and the terms for which" the county district attorney shall be elected or appointed. It is established that the charter provisions thus adopted are not limited by the general law which might otherwise apply. (Estate of Miller (1936), 5 Cal.2d 588, 592-593, 55 P.2d 491; County of Tehama v. Winter (1922), 56 Cal.App. 341, 205 P. 97; see also 11 Ops.Cal.Atty.Gen. 136; 28 Ops.Cal.Atty.Gen. 17.) Under such charter provisions it is plain that the unexpired term of Werlhof is to be filled by election at the very first general election which occurs following the vacancy, for which election candidates could qualify under any method prescribed by law. (See also DeWoody v. Belding (1930), 210 Cal. 461, 465, 292 P. 265.)

[3] Respondents and the real party in interest argue that the term "general election," when applied to nonpartisan offices such as the office of district attorney here involved, embraces the entire elective process, including the June primary, since nonpartisan candidates may be and often are elected at the primary by receiving a majority of the votes," and, further, that because of the shortness of time in which candidates could qualify to appear on the November 6 ballot, following announcement by petitioner of his position on the issue, the right of suffrage of the people will not be exercised in a well-considered and deliberate election. But the charter requirement that "there shall be elected at the next general election an officer to fill such vacancy [created by Werlhof's resignation] for the unexpired term" is clear and inclusive, not exclusive, and was applicable at the very time (June 11, 1956) that Werlhof resigned and Allen was appointed district attorney to fill the vacancy. The language of the law cannot be altered by any misunderstanding of its effect nor can the meaning of that language be changed by failure of administrative agents to make earlier announcement of the necessity for the election. The fact that the vacancy did not occur until after the primary election of June, 1956, is wholly immaterial when considered in the light of the language of the charter. To hold, as further suggested by the appearing respondent and the real party in interest, that the term "next general election" refers to the first general election at which the office of district attorney is normally filled for the full four-year term would render meaningless the words "for the unexpired term" and would make surplusage of the provision for tacking the unexpired term to the succeeding four-year term. The conjunction of the last mentioned charter provisions makes altogether clear the conclusions we have reached.

[4-6] It is our view, furthermore, that the failure of the county officers of Tehama County to announce that the unexpired term should be filled at the election of November 6, 1956, cannot properly be held to justify, as within administrative discretion, withholding the office of district attorney from the ballot or to affect the rights of qualified persons to circulate and file nominating papers pursuant to sections 3000 et seq. of the Elections Code. The right of suffrage is protected by the Constitution of California (art. II; see also Pierce v. Superior Court (1934), 1 Cal.2d 759, 762 [4], 37 P.2d 453, 96 A.L.R. 1020) and every reasonable presumption and interpretation is to be indulged in favor of the right of the people to exercise the elective process. (See generally, 18 Am.Jur. 188, § 11.) The provisions of article IX, section 6, of the Tehama County Charter and of article XI, section 7½, of the state Constitution are controlling here, and petitioner is entitled to the peremptory writ which he seeks.

For the reasons above stated we did, on September 25, 1956, enter our order as follows:

It Is Hereby Ordered That a peremptory writ of mandate issue forthwith directing that respondents Alice Davis, as County Clerk of the County of Tehama, State of California; Board of Supervisors of the County of Tehama, State of California; Earl Davies, Albert Pryor, Clarence Mendenhall, Lynn Raymond and Walter Dale, as Members of said Board of Supervisors, perform such official duties respectively as under the law devolve upon them to the end that:

1. The office of district attorney of the County of Tehama, State of California, shall be placed upon the ballot at the general election to be held on November 6, 1956, in order that a qualified candidate, if any there shall be, may be elected at such November 6, 1956, general election, to serve for the remainder of the unexpired term of Bruce Werlhof, who had been elected in November, 1954, for a term which is to expire in January, 1959, and who resigned from such office on June 11, 1956.

2. There shall be accepted, examined, and otherwise dealt with in accordance with law all independent nomination papers of candidates for the office of district attorney of the County of Tehama, State of California (unexpired term of Bruce Werlhof, resigned), at the general election of November 6, 1956.

3. There shall be printed on the ballots to be used at the general election of November 6, 1956, in the County of Tehama, State of California, the name or names of any person or persons who pursuant to law may be found to have qualified as a candidate or candidates for the office of district attorney of such County of Tehama (unexpired term of Bruce Werlhof, resigned), pursuant to the provisions of sections 3000 et seq. of the Elections Code of the State of California.

In re ESTATE of Charlie Ella FRAYSHER, Deceased.

Georgia REYNOLDS, Objector and Appellant,

v.

David N. FRAYSHER, Executor and
Respondent.
L. A. 23995.

Supreme Court of California,
In Bank.

Oct. 11, 1956.

Proceeding on objections as to first account current and report of executor and petition for allowances upon commissions of executor and attorneys' fees and confirmation of sale of personalty. From portions of order of Superior Court, San Bernardino County, Martin J. Coughlin, J., approving account and report including allowances and confirming sale of personalty and from order denying motion for an order requiring executor to produce for inspection bank account, checks and diary of testatrix, the objector appealed. The Supreme Court, Spence, J., held that where every item of executor's claim for reimbursements for advances made on behalf of deceased except small amounts for postage was supported by receipts or cancelled checks, court's order settling issues of fact after review of conflicting affidavits filed in proceeding on objections to claim and court's finding as to propriety of contested items would not be disturbed on appeal.

Portions of order approving account from which appeal was taken affirmed and attempted appeal from order denying objector's motion for order requiring executor to produce for inspection bank statement, cancelled checks and diary of deceased dismissed.

Opinion, Cal.App., 297 P.2d 466, vacated.

1. Executors and Administrators ⚡510(2)

Order denying motion for an order requiring executor to produce for inspection bank account, check and diary of testatrix was not an appealable order. West's Ann. Prob.Code, § 1240.

2. Executors and Administrators ⚡510(7)

Normally in contest of an executor's accounts, respective parties produce witnesses to be examined in open court, and when appeal is taken on issues of fact, it is necessary to bring a record of the evidence before the appellate court.

3. Affidavits ⚡18

Ordinarily affidavits may not be used in evidence unless permitted by statute.

4. Executors and Administrators ⚡510(8)

Where both parties in proceeding on objections to executor's account participated in presentation of evidence by affidavits as matters of convenience, in view of fact that both were nonresidents of state, parties could not question propriety of such procedure on appeal.

5. Appeal and Error ⇨204(1)

Evidence which is admitted in trial court without objection although incompetent should be considered in support of that court's action and objection may not be first raised at appellate level.

6. Executors and Administrators ⇨510(11)

Where every item of executor's claim for reimbursement or advances made on behalf of deceased, except small amounts of postage, was supported by receipt or cancelled check, court's order settling issues of fact after review of conflicting affidavits in proceeding on objections to claim and court's findings as to propriety of contested items would not be disturbed on appeal.

7. Executors and Administrators ⇨510(4)

On appeal from order approving executor's account, propriety of yearly water charges paid by executor could not be raised where such point had not been in issue in proceeding on objections to account.

8. Executors and Administrators ⇨109(1), 510(10)

In passing upon reasonableness and necessity of expenditures during administration, court below is vested with broad discretion which will not be disturbed on appeal except when abused.

9. Executors and Administrators ⇨111(1)

Allowance of extraordinary attorney fees for such service as commencement of proceedings for sale of real property and successful representation of executor on two separate court hearings required on objector's motion for executor's removal rests largely in discretion of court in first instance.

10. Executors and Administrators ⇨111(1)

Where record in proceeding on objection to account of executor disclosed that attorneys had commenced proceedings for sale of real property in the estate and had successfully represented executor on two separate court hearings required by objector's motions for executor's removal, there was basis for allowance of $200 for extraordinary attorneys' fees.

11. Executors and Administrators ⇨496(1)

Computation of statutory fees allowed executor and attorneys on basis of full inventoried assets as set forth in inventory which included two disputed claims which were against decedent's daughters and on which court directed executor not to file suit was proper under circumstances and in absence of bad faith on part of executor in preparing inventory.

12. Executors and Administrators ⇨358(4)

Where both parties presented evidence by affidavits in proceeding and court accepted executor's sworn statement that four months prior to sale of household goods appraiser's finding of value of property and summary of estate's indebtedness was sent objector's attorney, that attorney indicated that objector would pay expenses and let property be distributed to her, that objector failed to pay expenses and that property was sold to pay estate's indebtedness as allowed by statute, order confirming sale would not be disturbed on appeal. West's Ann.Prob.Code, §§ 750, 751.

13. Executors and Administrators ⇨508(2)

Implicit in court's order approving executor's account is finding that executor had acted properly, with due diligence and in good faith in administration of estate.

14. Executors and Administrators ⇨506(3)

In proceeding on objection to executor's account, evidence sustained finding that executor made various attempts to rent house owned by estate and that tenant recommended by objector was not satisfactory. West's Ann.Prob.Code, § 581.

15. Executors and Administrators ⇨504(6)

It is the general rule that in absence of an independent inquiry undertaken by the court, issues for settlement are limited by executor's account and report on one hand and written objections on the other.

16. Executors and Administrators ⇨504(6)

Where affidavit relating to alleged failure of executor to account for money received by him for burial expenses were served on executor's attorney on day of hearing on objections to account, executor neither had opportunity nor was he required to submit evidence on alleged accounting discrepancies tardily raised and they were not properly before the court for settlement.

17. Executors and Administrators §510(8)

Where affidavit relating to alleged failure of executor to account for money received by him for burial expense were served on executor's attorney on day of hearing, alleged discrepancies were not matters for consideration on appeal from order approving account.

C. E. Crowley, Ontario, for appellant.

Edgar C. Keller, San Bernardino, for respondent.

SPENCE, Justice.

Charlie Ella Fraysher, a widow, died leaving a small estate and an holographic will, which gave to each of her children $1, except for her daughter Georgia Reynolds, to whom she bequeathed "the Place & all Households articulars." It is agreed that this bequest meant the deceased's home, appraised at $2,500, and the furnishings therein, appraised at $100, which property constituted the principal assets of the estate. Pursuant to the will, the deceased's son, David N. Fraysher, was appointed the executor. When the executor, a resident of Oregon, sought approval of his first account and accompanying report, Georgia Reynolds, a resident of Kansas and the principal beneficiary, filed written objections to several items, citing certain credits and debts, a sale of part of the personal property, and the failure to rent the real property. In support of her objections, she filed her own affidavit and that of her sister, Shirley Smith; and the executor filed an affidavit in his behalf. As the parties agree, the account and objections, affidavits and counteraffidavit, were all submitted to the court "without taking of testimony" and "after argument."

Thereafter, the court made its "Order Approving First Account Current and Report of Executor, Including Allowance upon Commissions of Executor, Attorney Fees and Extraordinary Attorney Fees; Confirming Sale of Personal Property; and Instructing Executor." The objector Georgia Reynolds appeals from those portions of the order (a) "approving the claim of David N. Fraysher in the sum of $461.67"; (b) "approving 'all items of expenses listed in Schedule "A" of said account excepting the certain items enumerated'"; (c) "approving the claim of $200 for extraordinary attorney's fees, and allowing statutory fees for executor and attorneys"; (d) "confirming the sale of the household furnishings set forth as Exhibit 'A,' sold to a son of the executor, at least six months before appraisement, without notice"; and (e) generally "approving said account current 'in all other respects, other than as otherwise herein set forth,' thereby overruling the objections to said report made by this appellant."

[1] Following the hearing and the making of the order, the objector moved for an order requiring the executor to produce for inspection the bank statements, cancelled checks and diary of the deceased. The court made its order denying such motion, and the objector appeals therefrom. As there is no authority for such an appeal, Prob.Code, § 1240, it must be dismissed.

Turning to the appeal from the order settling the executor's account, appellant contends that the challenged portions were approved without sufficient evidence, "without due consideration and without authority." Her position is not well taken.

[2] Preliminarily, there is a question of procedure to be determined. Normally, in the contest of an account the respective parties produce witnesses to be examined in open court. And when an appeal is taken on issues of fact, it is necessary to bring a record of the evidence before the appellate court. In re Estate of Reed, 9 Cal.App.2d 94, 96-97, 48 P.2d 177; see 34 C.J.S., Executors and Administrators, § 931 Record, pp.

1145-1147. Here the executor's account was settled solely upon the basis of opposing affidavits. There is therefore no reporter's transcript. Section 1233 of the Probate Code authorizes the use of affidavits or verified petitions as evidence " * * * in any uncontested probate proceedings"; but there appears to be no statutory provision authorizing the substitution of affidavits for oral evidence in a contested probate proceeding such as this.

[3-5] Ordinarily, affidavits may not be used in evidence unless permitted by statute. 2 Cal.Jur.2d § 30, p. 637. Thus, it has been held error to admit affidavits in evidence over objection, Lacrabere v. Wise, 141 Cal. 554, 556, 75 P. 185, or where the opposing party has no opportunity to object to their use. In re Estate of Paulsen, 35 Cal.App. 654, 656, 170 P. 855; Reidy v. Collins, 134 Cal.App. 713, 722, 26 P.2d 712. But this is a different situation in that the parties did not object to the use of affidavits in evidence, and both parties adopted that means of supporting their positions. Both having participated in such presentation of the evidence as a matter of convenience in view of the fact that both were nonresidents of this state, they cannot question the propriety of the procedure on appeal. In re Estate of Reilly, 81 Cal.App.2d 564, 569-570, 184 P.2d 922. Moreover, evidence which is admitted in the trial court without objection, although incompetent, should be considered in support of that court's action, Stickel v. San Diego Elec. Ry. Co., 32 Cal. 2d 157, 161, 195 P.2d 416; also Parsons v. Easton, 184 Cal. 764, 769, 195 P. 419, and objection may not be first raised at the appellate level. Soares v. Ghisletta, 1 Cal. App.2d 402, 404-405, 36 P.2d 668. The various disputed items of account must therefore be examined in the light of the opposing affidavits.

[6] Appellant first objects to the approval of the executor's claim for $461.67 as reimbursement for advances made on behalf of the deceased. While she contends that such claim is vague and uncertain, "fictitious" and "padded," it appears that every item, except for a small amount for postage, was supported by a receipt or cancelled check filed with the executor's affidavit. The court made its order settling these issues of fact after a review of the conflicting affidavits, and its implied findings as to the propriety of the contested items will not be disturbed on appeal. Doak v. Bruson, 152 Cal. 17, 19, 91 P. 1001; Hall v. Bohannon, 38 Cal.2d 458, 466, 241 P.2d 4; Voeltz v. Bakery, etc., Union, 40 Cal.2d 382, 386, 254 P.2d 553.

[7,8] Nor are appellant's objections well taken to certain items of expense listed in Schedule A and approved. These items consisted of expenses of administration, taxes, water bills, and gasoline costs for two trips made by the executor to California. At the hearing appellant only objected to the gasoline charges. One trip was for the executor's appearance in court resisting appellant's petition for his removal, and the other trip was for the executor's consultation some two months later with his attorney. The court allowed a portion of the gasoline expenses for the first trip and disallowed entirely such expenses for the second trip. Appellant now for the first time questions the propriety of the yearly water charges, contending that "for a year's time no water was used on the premises." There is nothing in the record which supports this statement, the matter was not in issue at the hearing, and the point may not now be raised. In passing upon the reasonableness and necessity of expenditures during administration, the court below is vested "with a broad discretion," which will not be disturbed on appeal except when abused. In re Estate of Parker, 186 Cal. 668, 670, 200 P. 619; In re Estate of Lindauer, 53 Cal.App.2d 160, 165, 127 P.2d 589.

[9,10] Appellant next objects to the allowance of $200 for extraordinary attorney fees, and to the allowance of statutory fees for the executor and his attorneys. As the basis for the extraordinary attorney fees, the account and report sets forth the commencement of proceedings for the sale of the real property in the estate (which were later discontinued at appellant's request), the successful representation of the executor on two separate court hearings required on appellant's motions for his removal, and the time spent, some thirty-seven hours, in performing these services. The allowance of extraordinary attorney fees for such professional services "rests largely in the discretion of the court in the first instance," In re Estate of Parker, 186 Cal. 671, 672, 200 P. 620, and it cannot be said here that there is no basis in the record for the extra compensation. In re Estate of Gump, 129 Cal.App.2d 783, 790, 277 P.2d 886.

[11] Nor can appellant prevail in her objections to the statutory fees allowed the executor and his attorneys. The computation was made on the basis of the full inventoried value of the assets of the estate as set forth in the amended inventory, which included a debt listed against appellant for $900 and one against Shirley Smith, also the deceased's daughter, for $375. Both alleged debtors denied, by affidavit, that they owed these sums. Appellant admitted that she had received $900 as proceeds of a mortgage on the deceased's home through a bank loan but claimed that she had subsequently repaid it in full. Affiant Smith likewise admitted she had received from the deceased $375 but claimed that such amount was only reimbursement for her payments on a mortgage for the deceased. Appellant refers to these two debts as endeavors of the executor to "pad" the inventory with false items. The executor requested the court for instructions as to whether he should file suit on these two claims, and the court directed him not to do so. Such instruction does not necessarily indicate the court's recognition of the invalidity of these two claims. Rather, the court may well have considered it economically impractical to litigate these debts in view of the conflicting affidavits, the requirements of their proof, and the resulting increase in family disputes as brother and sisters sought to resolve their differences. Moreover, appellant is substantially the sole beneficiary under the deceased's will and enforcement of the estate's claim against her, with the accompanying court costs, would only ultimately operate to her economic disadvantage. There is no evidence of bad faith on the part of the executor in preparing the amended inventory, and there is implicit in the court's order settling the executor's account a finding that no such factor entered into his handling of the estate. Under the circumstances the record supports the court's determination, in the exercise of its discretion, that the statutory fees should be computed in conformity with the amended inventory's listing of the estate's assets; and the executor agrees that any commissions coming to him should be applied on his indebtedness to the estate. In re Estate of Clary, 203 Cal. 335, 346-347, 264 P. 242.

[12] Likewise there is no merit to appellant's objection to the court's confirmation of the sale of certain household furnishings to a son of the executor for $60. These furnishings were part of the personal property in the deceased's home that were left to appellant by the will. The inventory was filed some six months after the sale, and the value of all household furnishings was listed at $100. Appellant complains that the sale was made before the items were appraised and without notice to her. The executor, however, in his affidavit states that while the formal appraisal was not filed until later, the appraiser some four months prior to the sale made his findings of value on the property and a copy thereof, with summary of the estate's indebtedness, was sent to appellant's attorney; that appellant made no objection thereto; that it was necessary to pay certain administration expenses and obligations of the estate; that in correspondence with the executor's attorneys, appellant's attorney had previously indicated that appellant would "pay all of the expenses of administration and legitimate claims against the estate, and let the property be distributed to her at the end of the administration"; that in reply thereto, the executor's attorneys set a "deadline" for appellant to advance the necessary moneys so that no part of the property would have to be sold; that some three months after the deadline had expired and having had no further word from appellant or her attorney, the particular items of household furnishings were sold to meet the estate's indebtedness as allowed by statute. Prob.Code, §§ 750, 751. Appellant does not question the amount of $60 received for the items sold, which was more than half the total appraised value of all household furnishings, or that the remaining items, if sold, would reasonably produce at least a like amount. These were all matters for the court to reconcile in the exercise of its sound discretion upon consideration of the opposing affidavits; and its acceptance of the executor's sworn statements as the basis for its order confirming the sale of the household furnishings will not be disturbed. Ex parte La Due, 161 Cal. 632, 635, 120 P. 13.

[13, 14] Finally, appellant attacks the court's general approval of the executor's account current except as specifically noted, "thereby overruling the objections to said report made by this appellant." Coming within this category was appellant's argument concerning the rental possibility of the deceased's home. It is appellant's position that said home had a rental value of $35 per month, that she had submitted to the executor the name of a person willing to pay such rent, but that the executor nevertheless elected to let the home stand vacant for over a year contrary to his duty to take charge of all property in the estate and account for available rents in the course of his administration. Prob.Code, § 581. In his affidavit, the executor referred to various attempts that he had made to rent the premises through a real estate agent "but was prevented from doing so by the actions of objector (appellant)"; that he did not feel that the tenant recommended by appellant would be satisfactory because such person had previously "used decedent's telephone for long distance calls," for which the estate was charged, and had failed to pay for the calls though demand therefor was twice made upon her by his attorneys.

Implicit in the court's order approving the executor's account is the finding that he had acted properly, with due diligence and in good faith in the administration of the estate. In re Moore, 96 Cal. 522, 525, 31 P. 584. Apparently, the court accredited the executor's stand in the matter, and the evidence sustains its conclusion. Wolfson v. Haddan, 105 Cal.App.2d 147, 149, 233 P.2d 145.

[15-17] Appellant further argues several factual issues relating to the alleged failure of the executor to account for certain moneys received by him for application to burial expenses for the deceased. These matters were not grounds of specific objection taken by appellant to the submitted account, but the first reference to them appears to have been made in the affidavits later filed by appellant and her sister Shirley Smith. The affidavits were served on the executor's attorney on the day of the hearing. It is the general rule that in the absence of an independent inquiry undertaken by the court, the issues for settlement are limited by the account and report on the one hand and the written objections on the other. In re Estate of Boyes, 151 Cal. 143, 147-148, 90 P. 454. Under the circumstances presented here, the executor neither had the opportunity nor was he required to submit evidence on the alleged accounting discrepancies tardily raised by appellant, they were not properly before the court for settlement, In re Estate of Mallory, 99 Cal.App. 96, 102, 278 P. 488; In re Estate of Roberts, 49 Cal.App. 2d 71, 81, 120 P.2d 933, and it did not undertake to pass upon them. Likewise they are not matters for consideration on this appeal.

In summary, the record indicates that the executor made such explanations of his administration as to impress the trial court with his honesty and good faith. The estate is relatively small and it unquestionably has provoked a great deal of unfortunate family feuding between brother and sisters. The trial court has apparently reconciled the differences fairly and reasonably, and there appears no reason for intervention in its settlement by the reviewing court.

The portions of the order approving the account from which the appeal was taken are affirmed. The attempted appeal from the order denying appellant's motion for an order requiring the executor to produce for inspection the bank statements, cancelled checks, and diary of the deceased is dismissed.

The PEOPLE of the State of California,
Plaintiff and Respondent,

v.

Charles E. COLE, Defendant and Appellant.
Cr. 5852.

Supreme Court of California.
In Bank.
Oct. 5, 1956.

Rehearing Denied Oct. 31, 1956.

Defendant was convicted of first degree murder. The Superior Court, Solano County, Joseph M. Raines, J., entered judgment and defendant appealed therefrom and from order denying new trial. The Supreme Court, Gibson, C. J., held that the evidence was sufficient to support the jury's finding that defendant was possessed of a willful, deliberate and premeditated intent to kill.

Judgment and order affirmed.

Carter and Schauer, JJ., dissented in part.

GIBSON, Chief Justice.

A jury found defendant guilty of first degree murder and fixed his punishment at life imprisonment. The principal questions raised on this appeal are whether the trial court erred in ruling upon the admissibility of evidence and whether the evidence is sufficient to support the verdict.

The body of the victim, Mrs. Helen Roberts, was found near a road in Sutter County on the afternoon of November 15, 1954. Dr. Paxton, a pathologist, examined the body and performed an autopsy. He testified that Mrs. Roberts was an obese woman about 50 years of age, that her death was caused by a gunshot wound, and that the fatal bullet, which he removed from the body, had entered below the left armpit and had traveled across the thorax, with a slight deviation backward and upward, penetrating the heart, right lung, and soft tissue beneath the right shoulder and striking the humerus of the right arm three inches below the shoulder joint.

Defendant did not testify at the trial, and there is no substantial conflict in the evidence. In August of 1954 Mrs. Roberts abandoned her husband and began living with defendant in various motels under fictitious names. Late in the afternoon of November 14, defendant and Mrs. Roberts drove away in a station wagon from a Vallejo motel where they were then staying. About 6:30 p. m. they stopped in front of a grocery store which Mrs. Roberts entered. Later defendant got out of the car, and a young man named Shelton made a remark about the damp weather. Defendant drew an automatic pistol from his belt, pointed it at the sky, asked whether he should do something about the weather, replaced the gun under his coat and went into the store. Shelton testified that the gun looked like the weapon identified at the trial as the one which fired the shot killing Mrs. Roberts. When defendant and Mrs. Roberts left the store, they drove across the street to a service station, where, before leaving together, they talked to the attendant for approximately 20 minutes. In the course of this conversation, Mrs. Roberts was in good spirits, and defendant was solemn.

For several months prior to November 14, defendant intermittently occupied a room which he rented in Vallejo at the home of a Mrs. Hill, an elderly widow who had agreed to marry him. Early in the afternoon of that day, he came to visit Mrs. Hill and left after about two hours. He returned at 9:00 p. m., and, when Mrs. Hill opened the door, he exclaimed, "Helen shot herself, Helen shot herself." He told Mrs. Hill that Mrs. Roberts, while in the station wagon, took a gun out of the glove compartment, said, "I ought to shoot you and the dog and myself," pointed the gun at herself and fired the fatal shot.

Mrs. Hill and defendant went out to the station wagon in front of the house, and the body of Mrs. Roberts, which was still warm, was on the front seat. They drove to a point in Sutter County, where defendant left the body in high grass beside the road. Upon returning to Vallejo, they went to the motel where defendant and Mrs. Roberts had been staying. Defendant awakened the motel owner in order to obtain a key, stating that "mama" had gone to the movies with another man and that, if she came back and wanted to reach defendant, he would be at Mrs. Hill's residence. After collecting his belongings, he drove with Mrs. Hill to her home.

Defendant cautioned Mrs. Hill not to reveal their activities of that evening and instructed her to say that he had left Mrs. Roberts at a theater, arranging to return for her at 9:00 p. m., but that, when he and Mrs. Hill went to the theater at that hour, Mrs. Roberts entered a car with another man and drove away. He gave Mrs. Hill a gun, requesting that she dispose of it, and she wrapped it up and asked one of her boarders to drop it in the bay. The boarder became suspicious and turned the gun over to the police. When questioned by the authorities, defendant stated that he and Mrs. Roberts left their motel in Vallejo on the afternoon of November 14, that, after stopping at a grocery store, he took her to a theater and that, when he returned for her, he saw her drive away with another man.

The gun which defendant gave Mrs. Hill after the death of Mrs. Roberts was introduced in evidence and was identified by a ballistics expert as the one which fired the bullet removed from Mrs. Roberts' body. Mrs. Hill testified that the gun looked like one which belonged to her. She said that about six weeks before the death of Mrs. Roberts she had given her gun to defendant to be cleaned and that he returned it in about a week. She placed it on the dresser in her bedroom, and later she noticed that it had disappeared. She could not say on what day she first became aware that it was missing but stated that it disappeared sometime during the week preceding Mrs. Roberts' death.

[1] The first question is whether the trial court erred in ruling on the admissibility of evidence. Upon being called as a witness, Dr. Paxton, who performed the autopsy, testified that he specialized in pathology and autopsy work to determine causes of death. Defendant stipulated to the qualifications of the witness. When the doctor was asked whether, in his opinion, the wound could have been self-inflicted, defendant objected on the grounds that no foundation had been laid as to the qualifications of the witness to form such an opinion and that the matter was not a proper subject for expert testimony. The objection was overruled, and the doctor testified that "This would be a very unusual pattern for a self-inflicted wound." In elaborating, he referred to the location of the wound, the course of the bullet and the obesity of the victim, and he stated that it would be difficult for a person, whether right-handed or left-handed, to hold the muzzle of a gun against himself in the position necessary to produce such a wound. He testified that his opinion was based on his training and experience, as well as the condition of the body, that he had examined suicide victims who had died of gunshot wounds and that he had never seen a self-inflicted wound "in this position."

[2] Many cases have set forth the general principles to be applied in considering the admissibility of expert opinion on the question whether a wound was self-inflicted. Although courts have not always used the same language, the decisive consideration in determining the admissibility of expert opinion evidence is whether the subject of inquiry is one of such common knowledge that men of ordinary education could reach a conclusion as intelligently as the witness or whether, on the other hand, the matter is sufficiently beyond common experience that the opinion of an expert would assist the trier of fact. Proc. § 1870, subd. 9;¹ 7 Wigmore on Evidence (3rd ed. 1940), § 1923, pp. 21, 22.

In two California cases a doctor's opinion that a fatal wound could not have been self-inflicted was relied upon in holding that there was sufficient evidence to establish the corpus delicti. People v. Black, 103 Cal.App.2d 69, 75, 229 P.2d 61; People v. Coker, 78 Cal.App. 151, 161, 248 P. 542. In a number of other jurisdictions it has been held that medical opinion as to whether a wound could have been self-inflicted was admissible. State v. Lee, 65 Conn. 265, 30 A. 1110, 1113-1114, 27 L.R.A. 498; Everett v. State, 62 Ga. 65, 71; State v. Schneck, 85 Kan. 334, 116 P. 823, 824; State v. Sharp, 145 La. 891, 83 So. 181, 182; State v. Knight, 43 Me. 11, 131; Commonwealth v. Spiropoulos, 208 Mass. 71, 94 N.E. 451, 452; Miera v. Territory, 13 N.M. 192, 81 P. 586, 588-589; People v. Wilson, 109 N.Y. 345, 16 N.E. 540, 543; Commonwealth v. Puglise, 276 Pa. 235, 120 A. 401, 402. The reasoning underlying these decisions is that the subject of self-inflicted wounds is not one of such common experience that laymen may not be assisted by the opinion of a doctor, who has special knowledge regarding anatomy and injuries to the human body.

[3] We are aware that cases in some jurisdictions have held that testimony of this type is not admissible. Treat v. Merchants' Life Ass'n, 198 Ill. 431, 64 N.E. 992, 994; Knights Templars & Masons' Life Indemnity Co. v. Crayton, 110 Ill.App. 648, 662-663; Aetna Life Ins. Co. v. Carr, 196 N.C. 129, 144 S.E. 698, 699-700; State v. Gibson, 69 N.D. 70, 284 N.W. 209, 217-218; State v. Bradley, 34 S.C. 136, 13 S.E. 315, 316-317; State v. McCravy, 133 Tenn. 358, 181 S.W.

165, 168; Maynard v. State, 154 Tex.Cr.R. 521, 229 S.W.2d 65, 67; Metropolitan Life Ins. Co. v. Wagner, 50 Tex.Civ.App. 233, 109 S.W. 1120, 1123-1124; see People v. Curtright, 258 Ill. 430, 101 N.E. 551, 554. In our opinion, however, they do not represent the better view with respect to whether the trier of fact would ordinarily be in a position to determine, as intelligently as a doctor, whether a wound was self-inflicted. Moreover, some of these cases rest, at least in part, upon the ground that the opinion of the doctor would go to an ultimate issue of fact to be resolved by the jury, whereas in this state we have followed the modern tendency and have refused to hold that expert opinion is inadmissible merely because it coincides with an ultimate issue of fact. People v. Wilson, 25 Cal.2d 341, 349, 153 P. 2d 720; People v. King, 104 Cal.App.2d 298, 304, 231 P.2d 156; see People v. Martinez, 38 Cal.2d 556, 564, 241 P.2d 224; Wells Truckways, Ltd. v. Cebrian, 122 Cal.App.2d 666, 678, 265 P.2d 557; 7 Wigmore on Evidence (3rd ed. 1940), §§ 1920, 1921, pp. 17, 18; 2 Morgan, Basic Problems of Evidence, p. 194 et seq.; 2 Wharton, Criminal Evidence (11th ed.), § 957, p. 1682.

[4, 5] A conclusion that the testimony complained of was inadmissible would amount to a holding that the jurors, although laymen whose experience with gunshot wounds and suicide was likely to be limited or nonexistent, could not have derived assistance from the opinion of a doctor who was an expert on those matters and had personally examined the body and performed the autopsy as a specialist on causes of death. Where expert opinion evidence is offered, much must be left to the discretion of the trial court, People v. Haeussler, 41 Cal.2d 252, 260, 260 P.2d 8, and we are satisfied that there was no abuse of discretion in permitting Dr. Paxton to express his opinion. The jurors,

1. Section 1870 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides:

"In conformity with the preceding provisions, evidence may be given upon a trial of the following facts: * * *

"9. The opinion of a witness respecting the identity or handwriting of a person, when he has knowledge of the person or handwriting; his opinion on a question of science, art, or trade, when he is skilled therein; * * *."

of course, were not bound by the opinion of the witness but were free to determine the weight to which it was entitled and to disregard it if they found it to be unreasonable, and they were so instructed. Pen.Code, § 1127b.²

The early cases of People v. Farley, 1899, 124 Cal. 594, 595, 57 P. 571; People v. Milner, 1898, 122 Cal. 171, 181, 54 P. 833; People v. Smith, 1892, 93 Cal. 445, 447, 29 P. 64, and People v. Westlake, 1882, 62 Cal. 303, 309, are readily distinguishable. They did not involve the question of suicide but held that a doctor may not give an opinion, based on the course of a bullet, as to the posture of a person shot by another or as to the relative positions of the victim and the one who fired the shot. As pointed out in the Milner case, it is impossible to determine those matters from the course of the bullet alone, since a number of variables might be involved, such as whether the victim was leaning forward or standing erect. See also People v. Salaz, 66 Cal.App. 173, 183, 225 P. 777.

[6] The next question is whether the evidence is sufficient to support the verdict of first degree murder. Section 187 of the Penal Code defines murder as the unlawful killing of a human being with malice aforethought, and section 189 of that code provides, in part, that all murder perpetrated by any kind of willful, deliberate and premeditated killing is murder of the first degree.

[7] The record clearly warrants a conclusion that defendant killed Mrs. Roberts, and there is nothing showing provocation or justification for the homicide. Under such circumstances, malice will be implied. Pen. Code, § 188.

2. Section 1127b of the Penal Code reads:

"When, in any criminal trial or proceeding, the opinion of any expert witness is received in evidence, the court shall instruct the jury substantially as follows:

"Duly qualified experts may give their opinions on questions in controversy at a trial. To assist the jury in deciding such questions, the jury may consider the opinion with the reasons stated therefor, if

[8] Deliberation and premeditation may be inferred from proof of circumstances which will furnish a reasonable foundation for such an inference, and, where the evidence is not in law insufficient, the matter is exclusively within the province of the jury for determination. People v. Gulbrandsen, 35 Cal.2d 514, 519-520, 218 P.2d 977. There was evidence that defendant had secretly taken Mrs. Hill's gun from her dresser during the week preceding Mrs. Roberts' death, that he was carrying the weapon on his person about 6:30 p. m. on the evening she died and that he used it to kill Mrs. Roberts some time before 9:00 p. m. The jury could infer that defendant had taken the gun for the purpose of killing her.

Moreover, the evidence was sufficient to show that defendant planned to implicate Mrs. Hill so as to secure her assistance in concealing his guilt and that he had formed this plan before committing the crime. It was established not only that he took her gun and used it in the killing but also that he brought the body to Mrs. Hill's home, represented that Mrs. Roberts had shot herself and asked Mrs. Hill to accompany him on the trip to Sutter County where he left the body in high grass beside the road. Defendant also requested Mrs. Hill to dispose of the gun used in the killing and instructed her not to disclose their activities but to give such an account of events as would substantiate his subsequent claim that he had last seen Mrs. Roberts driving away from a theater with another man. Mrs. Roberts had been seen alive two hours before defendant brought her body, which was still warm, to Mrs. Hill's home. The taking of Mrs. Hill's gun during the preceding any, by the expert who gives the opinion. The jury is not bound to accept the opinion of any expert as conclusive, but should give to it the weight to which they shall find it to be entitled. The jury may, however, disregard any such opinion, if it shall be found by them to be unreasonable.

"No further instruction on the subject of opinion evidence need be given."

week and the speed with which defendant acted following the killing would support the conclusion that his plan to involve Mrs. Hill had been conceived before the crime was committed.

[9] There was also evidence that, while defendant was living with Mrs. Roberts, who was in financial distress, he planned to marry Mrs. Hill, who had a substantial bank account and owned a home and other property. During the period that defendant was living with Mrs. Roberts he borrowed money from Mrs. Hill, and on the day of the killing he represented to the owner of the motel where he was staying that property belonging to Mrs. Hill was owned by him and expressed a desire to ascertain the feasibility of locating a service station on it. The jury might have determined that defendant had become dissatisfied with the relationship existing between him and Mrs. Roberts and that he planned to kill her in order to remove her as an obstacle to his plan of obtaining Mrs. Hill's property through marriage. A showing of motive indicating that the killing was planned is evidence tending to support a finding of deliberation and premeditation. For example, in People v. Gulbrandsen, supra, 35 Cal.2d 514, 218 P.2d 977, where we held that deliberation and premeditation were sufficiently shown, we relied, in part, on evidence that the defendant's motive in killing the two victims was to get them out of the way so that he could force himself upon a woman. See also People v. Werner, 111 Cal.App.2d 264, 272, 244 P.2d 476.

The evidence is sufficient to support the jury's finding that defendant was possessed of a willful, deliberate and premeditated intent to kill.

[10] There is no merit in defendant's contention that the court erred in refusing to instruct the jury that Mrs. Hill was an accomplice as a matter of law. The question of complicity was one of fact, and its determination was left to the jury under instructions which fully and correctly set forth the rules of law to be applied.

The judgment and the order denying a new trial are affirmed.

SHENK, TRAYNOR, SPENCE and McCOMB, JJ., concur.

SCHAUER, Justice (concurring in part and dissenting in part).

I agree that there was ample properly admitted evidence to support the finding that defendant murdered Mrs. Roberts wilfully, deliberately, and with premeditated intent to kill, and I find no miscarriage of justice. However, I disagree with the holding that in the circumstances of this case Dr. Paxton was properly allowed to testify, in answer to the question, "assuming that the bullet you took from the body * * * had come from a .32 caliber Colt automatic pistol, do you have an opinion as to whether or not that pistol could have been held by the deceased at the time the trigger was pulled and the gun was discharged?," that "I have an opinion * * * This would be a very unusual pattern for a self-inflicted wound." It seems obvious to me that the pertinent question here is not whether it was usual or unusual for persons who kill themselves to do so by shooting themselves in the manner in which deceased was shot, but whether this particular woman inflicted this particular wound upon herself. It appears to me that the doctor's testimony as to the frequencies of occurrences of this kind of wound and of other kinds of wounds among other persons committing suicide is irrelevant to any issue here.

The doctor (whose qualifications as a pathologist are not disputed) described the course taken by the bullet, indicated it on a photograph of deceased and sketched it on a blackboard. The bullet entered the body "anteriorally and laterally in the left chest" between the third and fourth ribs, traveled up through the heart and upper lobe of the right lung, and struck and shattered the humerus of the right arm about three inches below the shoulder joint.

Before the jury the prosecuting attorney asked, in various forms, if the doctor had an opinion as to whether the wound could have been self-inflicted. This might have been a proper approach if a sufficient factual foundation had been laid; but such foundation had not been established, and, as subsequently appeared, did not exist. Defense counsel objected, and said, "I feel this is going into a matter that is for the jury to decide, and not called upon for any expert witness' testimony. I don't believe there has been any foundation or ground showing this doctor is an expert, whether a wound can be self-inflicted or whether inflicted by some other agency." (Italics added.) This objection raised, although not in a particularly apt manner, the question whether a sufficient factual foundation had been laid upon which this doctor or any doctor could be qualified to give an opinion that this woman could or could not have shot herself in the fashion in which she was shot. The prosecuting attorney said, "We feel the doctor is qualified, having seen this body; he has noticed the length of the arms of the deceased person and * * * has already testified to her obesity and so forth and so on; we feel he is in a position to tell us whether he thinks that person could have discharged a pistol into her own person as to cause this wound." But as hereinafter shown the doctor himself established the facts showing want of foundation for formation of an opinion entitled to be received as "expert opinion" on the pertinent issue.

There was further argument on the question outside the presence of the jury, during which defense counsel correctly pointed out that "as far as the testimony as to the length of the arm, or anything like that, those facts are not yet in evidence." The trial court commented, "if the question of death of this woman depends solely * * * [on] the expert or opinion testimony of Dr. Paxton, they would be on very weak ground. However, I am making no ruling on that at this time. I am now overruling the objection, however. * * * The value will go to the jury, its weight. You of course will have full opportunity to cross-examine Dr. Paxton in that respect." This ruling, in my opinion, was error because the prosecution had not adduced evidence upon which the doctor could be qualified to either form or express an opinion that the wound in this case could or could not have been self-inflicted.

Before the jury the doctor then testified on direct examination that "This would be a very unusual pattern for a self-inflicted wound"; that he did not know whether deceased was right-handed or left-handed, but that (indicating upon himself with the pistol which inflicted the wound) it would be difficult to inflict such a wound upon himself with either hand. It appears to me that in the absence of showing some similarity or defined dissimilarity between the doctor's and the decedent's pertinent capabilities, the doctor's testimony concerning himself would be immaterial. On cross-examination the doctor testified that he had not measured the deceased's arms. The basis of the doctor's opinion that the wound was not self-inflicted was then brought out: he had examined by autopsy "perhaps twenty people" who died from gunshot wounds and seen "numerable cases in the emergency hospitals which I have worked in"; "I can form an opinion from my past experiences in examining the suicidal victims * * * and I would say that ninety percent of the suicidal victims I have examined have shot themselves in the head * * * And a majority of those are in the right temple * * * The next most common site is through the mouth * * * The next most common site is an attempt at the heart * * * and I have never seen one in this position. * * * The location in my opinion indicates that this is not self-inflicted."

The basis of the doctor's opinion as expressed in his testimony shows that there was not adequate factual foundation for, and that he was not qualified to express, the opinion above quoted. It was of no concern to the jury, and not helpful to them, to know that "ninety percent of the suicidal victims" examined by Dr. Paxton had "shot themselves in the head" rather than shot themselves in certain other places, or it may be interpolated, had jumped off bridges or hit themselves over the head with axes. The case here concerned the woman who did die from the wound in the chest described above. The question for the jury was whether that particular wound was inflicted by decedent or by another person. Since the prosecution had not, before the doctor gave his opinion, shown a factual base upon which the doctor as a pathologist could intelligently and reasonably form and support the opinion that the wound here involved was not self-inflicted,¹ that opinion should not have been received in evidence. The error of receiving it became more apparent when on his cross-examination it developed that he had no basis for an opinion that this particular woman could not have shot herself as she was shot. However, as stated above, it does not appear to me, from an examination of the entire record, that the error resulted in a miscarriage of justice.

Accordingly I concur in the judgment and, generally, in the other propositions of law discussed in the opinion of the Chief Justice.

CARTER, Justice (concurring in part and dissenting in part).

In view of the record before us in this case, I am of the opinion that it was error to permit Dr. Paxton to express an opinion that the wound inflicted upon the victim of the homicide "would be a very unusual pattern for a self-inflicted wound." I think it is clear that, even conceding that the subject matter of the inquiry might be within the realm of expert testimony, sufficient foundation was not laid for the opinion of an expert on this subject. Ordinarily, expert testimony is based upon a full and fair statement of all of the pertinent facts relating to the problem on which the expert is called upon to give his opinion. Here, vital and material facts were omitted from the statement and were not within the knowledge of the expert. These facts relate to the length of the victim's arms and the character and quality of the clothing, if any, worn by the victim at the time the shot was fired.

A basic objection to expert opinion evidence in a case such as this is, that the expert is called upon to answer the exact question which is to be determined by the trier of fact, and therefore invades its province. Obviously, if the wound here was self-inflicted, the defendant did not fire the shot, and would therefore not be guilty of the offense charged. If the wound were not self-inflicted, its infliction could be traced directly to defendant.

In my opinion the proper procedure in a case such as this would be for the prosecution to develop all of the facts with respect to the location of the point of entry of the bullet, its course through the body of the victim and the probable distance from the body of the muzzle of the gun at the time it was discharged together with physical facts relative to the size of the victim, clothing worn, length of her arms and ability to move her muscles, and leave the question as to who inflicted the wound for the determination of the trier of fact. It seems to me that upon the presentation of such a factual situation, any one familiar with the use of firearms is as capable of arriving at an opinion as to whether or not the wound was self-inflicted as a so-called expert in this field.

Notwithstanding my opinion that it was error to admit the testimony of Dr. Paxton on this subject, I am satisfied, after a review of the record, that defendant suffered no infringement of any of his substantial rights, and was not prejudiced thereby and that such error has not resulted in a miscarriage of justice. It is therefore my duty, by virtue of the provisions of section 4½ of Article VI of the Constitution of California, to concur in the affirmance of the judgment, and that is my conclusion.

1. The evidence contains no suggestion that the doctor was acquainted with the decedent in her lifetime and knew her character as evidencing a propensity to commit an act such as suicide in a conventional rather than unusual manner.

v.

PUBLIC UTILITIES COMMISSION of the State of California, Respondent.

S. F. 19501.

Supreme Court of California.
In Bank.

Oct. 5, 1956.

Proceeding by community television antenna to review orders of Public Utilities Commission. The Supreme Court, Traynor, J., held that community television antenna which received television signals from available sources, amplified them and sent them through a coaxial cable to subscribers' sets by tapoff devices was not a telephone corporation and so was not a public utility subject to jurisdiction of Public Utilities Commission.

Orders annulled.

1. Public Service Commissions ⇨6.3

Although "includes" is ordinarily not a word of limitation, a legislative declaration that "public utility" includes those performing certain enumerated services is not a declaration that those performing other services, not encompassed by the services enumerated, are public utilities subject to control and regulation by Public Utilities Commission. 2. Telecommunications ⇨389

The Public Utilities Commission has no jurisdiction over community television antenna unless the antenna falls within one of the classes of public utilities enumerated in the statute. West's Ann.Public Util.Code, § 216(a); West's Ann.Const. art. 12, § 23.

3. Telecommunications ⇨389

Community television antenna which received television signals from available

TRAYNOR, Justice.

Petitioner Television Transmission, Inc. operates a "community television antenna" furnishing coaxial television antenna service to approximately 950 television sets in the Walnut Creek, Lafayette, and Martinez areas of Contra Costa County. Approximately 700 of the 950 television sets are in Martinez. To provide this service petitioner places a high-gain antenna at a point of higher elevation than the area to be served. The antenna receives television signals from available sources, amplifies them, and sends them through a coaxial cable to the subscribers' television sets by tapoff devices. Under an agreement with the Pacific Gas and Electric Company and the Pacific Telephone and Telegraph Company, petitioner uses poles owned jointly or separately by these companies for which it pays certain fixed charges per pole per year. Of the four television antenna systems in Martinez alone, petitioner is the only one that uses utility poles to provide service. 'Subscribers' to petitioner's television antenna service pay an initial "connect" fee and a continuing monthly charge.

Residents of the area served by petitioner filed a complaint with the Public Utilities Commission alleging deficiencies in petitioner's service and requesting the commission to make an investigation and require petitioner to remedy the deficiencies or cease operating.

After a hearing the commission found that petitioner operates as a telephone corporation and is therefore subject to its jurisdiction. The commission then issued an interim order requiring petitioner to make a detailed survey of its facilities and to submit a written report within 90 days setting forth criteria for establishing reasonable standards of service. It also ordered that further hearings be had to receive evidence relating to the adequacy of petitioner's service. A petition for rehearing was denied, and in this proceeding petitioner seeks to have the foregoing orders annulled on the grounds that it is not a public utility and that the commission therefore acted without jurisdiction.

The commission is a regulatory body of constitutional origin and derives its powers from the Constitution and the Legislature. People v. Western Airlines, 42 Cal.2d 621, 634, 268 P.2d 723. Unless petitioner is a public utility, as defined in the Constitution or the Public Utilities Code, the commission was without power to issue the orders in question. Article XII section 23 of the Constitution provides:

"Every private corporation, and every individual or association of individuals, owning, operating, managing, or controlling any * * * plant or equipment within this State, for * * * the transmission of telephone or telegraph messages, or for the production, generation, transmission, delivery or furnishing of heat, light, water or power * * * either directly or indirectly, to or for the public, and every common carrier, is hereby declared to be a public utility subject to such control and regulation by the * * * Commission as may be provided by the Legislature, and every class of private corporations, individuals, or associations of individuals hereafter declared by the Legislature to be public utilities shall likewise be subject to such control and regulation." (Italics added.)

In section 216(a) of the Public Utilities Code the Legislature has declared that

"'Public utility' includes every common carrier, toll bridge corporation, pipeline corporation, gas corporation, electrical corporation, telephone corporation, telegraph corporation, water corporation, wharfinger, warehouseman, and heat corporation, where the service is performed for or the commodity delivered to the public or any portion thereof."

[1, 2] Although "includes" is ordinarily not a word of limitation, People v. Western Airlines, 42 Cal.2d 621, 639, 268 P.2d 723, a legislative declaration that "public utility" includes those performing certain enumerated services is not a declaration that those performing other services, not encompassed by the services enumerated, are public utilities. In People v. Western Airlines, supra, on which the commission relies, we were concerned with the scope of a business activity declared by the Legislature to be a public utility, not with the question of expanding that section to embrace additional classes of business not mentioned in the section. Thus, unless a community television antenna falls within one of the enumerated classes of public utilities, the commission has no jurisdiction over it.

[3] The only classes enumerated that could conceivably include petitioner are electrical corporation, telephone corporation, or telegraph corporation. The commission held that it could make no finding that petitioner is an electrical corporation,¹ since there is nothing in the record to show that its community television antenna system is used " * * * in connection with or to facilitate the production, generation, transmission, delivery, or furnishing of electricity for light, heat, or power, * * ." Nor did it find that petitioner is a telegraph corporation.² See Sunset Telephone & Telegraph Co. v. Pasadena, 161 Cal. 265, 276-277, 118 P. 796; City of Richmond v. Southern Bell Telephone & Telegraph Co., 174 U.S. 761, 773-777, 19 S.Ct. 778, 43 L.Ed. 1162. It did find, however, that petitioner operates as a telephone corporation³ and is therefore subject to its jurisdiction.

To be a telephone corporation petitioner must operate a telephone line. Pub.Util. Code, § 234. Although it may control, operate, or manage "conduits, ducts, poles, wires, cables, instruments, and appliances * * * real estate, fixtures, and personal property" Pub.Util.Code, § 233, and do so "in connection with or to facilitate communication" Ibid., it does not operate a telephone line and is therefore not a telephone corporation unless such control, operation, or management are in connection with or to facilitate communication "by telephone." Ibid. The crucial word

"telephone" is not defined in the code. Neither is the word "telegraph" as used in section 235. Yet the Legislature apparently regarded telephone and telegraph corporations as different from each other by providing separately for each, and this court has so regarded them. Sunset Telephone & Telegraph Co. v. Pasadena, supra, 161 Cal. 265, 276-277, 118 P. 796; see also Richmond v. Southern Bell Telephone & Telegraph Co., supra, 174 U.S. 761, 773-777, 19 S.Ct. 778. Nor is there any evidence in the record as to activities, methods of operation, services, or anything else they may have in common on which a conclusion can be based that one also means the other or that either also means radio or television corporation. In common understanding telephone, telegraph, radio, and television corporations are each different from the other, and until the Legislature otherwise provides we must so regard them.

In Pacific Telephone & Telegraph Company v. Los Angeles, 44 Cal.2d 272, 281-283, 282 P.2d 36, on which the commission relies, the city attacked a declaration in a judgment that Pacific was entitled to use its lines to transmit telephone messages, telegraph messages, teletypewriter messages, telephotographs, program serv-

" 'Electric plant' includes all real estate, fixtures and personal property owned, controlled, operated, or managed in connection with or to facilitate the production, generation, transmission, delivery, or furnishing of electricity for light, heat, or power, and all conduits, ducts, or other devices, materials, apparatus, or property for containing, holding, or carrying conductors used or to be used for the transmission of electricity for light, heat, or power." Pub.Util.Code, § 217.

2. " 'Telegraph corporation' includes every corporation or person owning, controlling, operating, or managing any telegraph line for compensation within this State." Pub.Util.Code, § 236.

" 'Telegraph line' includes all conduits, ducts, poles, wires, cables, instruments, and appliances, and all other real estate, fixtures, and personal property owned, controlled, operated, or managed in connection with or to facilitate communication by telegraph, whether such communication is had with or without the use of transmission wires." Pub.Util.Code, § 235.

3. " 'Telephone corporation' includes every corporation or person owning, controlling, operating, or managing any telephone line for compensation within this State." Pub.Util.Code, § 234.

" 'Telephone line' includes all conduits, ducts, poles, wires, cables, instruments, and appliances, and all other real estate, fixtures, and personal property owned, controlled, operated, or managed in connection with or to facilitate communication by telephone, whether such communication is had with or without the use of transmission wires." Pub.Util. Code, § 233.

ices (including radio and television broadcasts) and any other communications service by means of transmission of electrical impulses. We held that section 536 of the Civil Code (now § 7901 of the Pub.Util. Code), which authorizes telephone corporations to construct their lines along public highways, places no restrictions upon what may be transmitted by means of electrical impulses over those lines. Pacific Telephone and Telegraph Company was unquestionably a telephone corporation, and it remained a telephone corporation and its lines remained telephone lines, even though they were incidentally used to transmit other forms of communication. The commission apparently reasoned that since section 7901 permits television broadcasts to be carried over telephone lines, any line erected to carry television broadcasts is a telephone line and that anyone who operates such a line is therefore a telephone corporation. It does not follow, however, that because telephone corporations are not prevented by law from using their lines, which are unquestionably telephone lines, for the transmission of television broadcasts, any corporation that uses poles, wires, et cetera to transmit such broadcasts is a telephone corporation. It is not enough that there be a transmission by the use of poles, wires, et cetera; the transmission must be "in connection with or to facilitate communication by telephone". Pub.Util.Code, § 233. Petitioner's community television antenna is not operated "in connection with or to facilitate communication by telephone" or "in connection with or to facilitate communication by telegraph" as those words are commonly understood, but simply to enable its subscribers to receive television broadcasts that might otherwise be inaccessible to them.

The commission urges that television is merely an advanced form of telephony, the art of reproducing sounds at a distance. It is true that television and telephony have in common the transmission of voices, for sounds, including voices, usually accompany the pictures of the persons or things televised. Not only are the methods of transmission different in each art, however, but in telephony one may carry on a two-way communication by speaking as well as listening, and pictures of speaker and listener do not yet form a part of the communication. See Re Edwin Bennett, 89 P.U.R.,N.S., 149, 150. Telegraphy differs from both in that ordinarily neither voices nor pictures are transmitted. Each may have in common the use of electricity, conduits, ducts, poles, wires, cables, instruments, appliances, et cetera, but no one of them includes all of the features of the others. Furthermore, the service by television as well as radio is more akin to that of music halls, theaters, and newspapers than it is to that of either telephone or telegraph corporations. Thus, under the Communications Act of 1934⁴ those engaged in the telephone or telegraph business are regulated as common carriers,⁵ whereas television and radio broadcasting⁶ is recognized as a field of free competition. F. C. C. v. Sanders Bros., 309 U.S. 470, 474-475, 60 S.Ct. 693, 84 L.Ed. 869.

The question whether a community television antenna is a public utility has been considered in at least two other states. In holding that it lacked jurisdiction because Congress had completely occupied the television field, the Wisconsin commission expressed "considerable doubt" whether a community television antenna was a telephone company. Re Edwin Bennett, supra, 89 P.U.R.,N.S., 149, 150. The Wyoming commission, however, determined that a community television antenna was a public utility. It is significant that the commission based its conclusion on the

as a form of radio communication. Allen B. Dumont Laboratories v. Carroll, 3 Cir., 184 F.2d 153, 155, certiorari denied 340 U.S. 929, 71 S.Ct. 490, 95 L.Ed. 670.

4. 47 U.S.C.A. § 151 et seq.

5. 47 U.S.C.A. §§ 201-222.

6. 47 U.S.C.A. § 153(b), which defines communication by radio, includes television ground, not that a community television antenna was a telephone corporation, but that under the Wyoming statute public utilities also included plants, property, or facilities for the transmission of intelligence by electricity. Re Cokeville Radio and Electric Co., 6 P.U.R.(3rd) 129, 133-134.

Since petitioner is not a telephone corporation or within any other class of public utility enumerated in section 216(a) of the Public Utilities Code, the commission had no jurisdiction to issue the orders in question.

The orders are annulled.

SUPERIOR COURT of the State of California, in and for the COUNTY OF LOS ANGELES, Respondent.

L. A. 24265.

Supreme Court of California,

Proceeding for writ of prohibition against Superior Court to stay proceedings therein pending final determination of jurisdiction by Industrial Accident Commission. The Supreme Court, Schauer, J., held that in personal injury action the pleadings, papers and proceedings which were before the Superior Court were sufficient to bring all essential facts concerning injured workman's prior proceedings before Industrial Accident Commission to court's attention and to require court to stay proceedings pending final adjudication by Commission as to whether workman was injured within employment relationship.

Peremptory writ of prohibition granted.

Prohibition ⚡10(1)

Where two tribunals in same state have concurrent jurisdiction to determine jurisdiction, the question of which shall have exclusive jurisdiction should be determined by the tribunal whose jurisdiction was first invoked, and proceedings in the tribunal where jurisdiction was subsequently sought will, if not voluntarily stayed, be halted by prohibition until final determination of the jurisdictional question by the tribunal where jurisdiction was first laid.

2. Action ⚡69(7)

Where employer affirmatively defended superior court action by injured workman on the ground workman had previously instituted proceedings before Industrial Accident Commission based on same accident and that Commission had exclusive jurisdiction, superior court should have stayed proceedings until Commission had made final adjudication as to whether workman was injured during employment relationship.

3. Trial ⚡3

Where employer affirmatively defended superior court action by injured workman on the ground that workman had previously instituted proceedings before Industrial Accident Commission based on same accident and Commission had exclusive jurisdiction, and at pre-trial hearing moved superior court to proceed to trial on affirmative defense prior to trial of other issues, the pleadings, papers and proceedings before the superior court were sufficient to bring to court's attention and charge the court with knowledge of issues raised concerning court's lack of jurisdiction pending commission's determination of jurisdiction.

4. Workmen's Compensation \hookrightarrow 1792

A final adjudication by the Industrial Accident Commission as to whether workman injured within employment relationship, is conclusive on all parties.

5. Prohibition \hookrightarrow 9

Prohibition lies to restrain superior court from proceeding on merits in personal injury action brought by workman who had previously instituted proceedings based on same accident before Industrial Accident Commission which had not made an adjudication as to whether workman had been injured during employment relationship.

SCHAUER, Justice.

[1] Petitioner seeks prohibition, pursuant to the rule laid down in Scott v. Industrial Acc. Comm. (Feb. 3, 1956), 46 Cal. 2d 76, 293 P.2d 18, to halt proceedings in the superior court in an action brought against petitioner to recover for personal injuries. The Scott case holds that where two tribunals in this state have concurrent jurisdiction to determine jurisdiction, the question of which shall have exclusive jurisdiction shall be determined by the tribunal whose jurisdiction was first invoked, and proceedings in the tribunal whose jurisdiction was subsequently sought will, if not voluntarily stayed, be halted by prohibition until final determination of the jurisdictional question by the tribunal where jurisdiction was first laid. We have concluded that the superior court is precluded from proceeding in the action before it, and that the writ sought by petitioner should issue.

The petition for the writ alleges, so far as here material, that on March 29, 1954, one McVey filed with the Industrial Accident Commission an "Application for Hearing" in which he named petitioner as his employer and alleged that McVey was injured on December 31, 1953, and had received compensation in the sum of $169.50. At a commission hearing on November 5, 1954, all parties admitted that on December 31, 1953, McVey was employed by petitioner and sustained compensable injury; issues for hearing were stated; and the matter was continued.

[2] The petition further alleges that on December 28, 1954, McVey filed a superior court action against petitioner, "based on the same alleged accident as set forth in the Industrial Accident Commission proceeding." In the complaint in such action McVey alleges that on December 31, 1953, he was employed by the United States Forestry Service and was injured by the negligence of petitioner. Petitioner answered, alleging as an affirmative defense that the commission has "exclusive jurisdiction over * * * [the subject] matter." Although this plea, if substantiated, would constitute a defense in the superior court it is a defense which, under the Scott case and in view of the prior inception of the commission proceeding, could be finally determined only after the Industrial Accident Commission had ruled on the question. In the meantime, however, it would be incumbent upon the superior court to stay proceedings before it.

On February 23, 1955, at a commission hearing McVey's counsel stated that the above described superior court action had been filed by McVey against petitioner. On March 2, 1955, the commission ordered that the matter go off calendar subject to being reset, after notice, upon request of any party.

[3] Subsequent to the filing, on May 29, 1956, of the verified petition for the writ, which was served on the respondent court on May 25, 1956, and prior to the date this court issued the alternative writ (August 10, 1956), a pre-trial hearing was held in the superior court action. Instead of ordering that the action abate until the Industrial Accident Commission had determined the question of jurisdiction as between the two tribunals, the superior court ordered the case set for trial on the merits for September 4, 1956. Thereafter McVey filed an answer to the petition for the writ, admitting that the superior court action arises out of the same accident as that involved in the commission proceedings and alleging that his employer at the time was the United States Forestry Service. Also, respondent superior court has filed a return herein alleging that after the pre-trial hearing petitioner moved the court "to proceed to trial before the trial of any other issues on the affirmative defense" that exclusive jurisdiction over the subject matter is in the commission, and that the motion was denied; that other than such motion petitioner has instituted no proceeding of any kind in the superior court to dismiss or abate the action upon the ground that the court lacked jurisdiction by reason of pendency of the commission proceeding; that the facts concerning the commission proceeding "were never brought to the attention of respondent Court by affidavit or otherwise." The return, however, does not disclose the substance of the proceedings at the pre-trial conference or how the facts pertinent to the jurisdictional issue could have escaped the attention of the court at such conference. The issue was raised by the affirmative defense. We must presume that the pleadings were before the court. The affidavit of the process server shows that a copy of the verified petition for the writ was left with the presiding judge of the superior court on May 25, 1956. The respondent court is charged with knowledge of the issues so raised and of the sworn averments in the petition. We think also that the most elementary of inquiries at the pre-trial hearing should have disclosed that the facts as to prior commencement of the Industrial Accident Commission proceeding were not disputed. (In truth, it appears from the answer of the real party in interest, McVey, also served on the superior court, that he admits the essential allegations of the petition.) Notwithstanding the facts before it the court ordered the case to trial on the merits and subsequently denied a motion to consider the affirmative defense before the other issues.

[4] It is apparent from the above recited matters that McVey first invoked the jurisdiction of the commission and thereafter sought that of the superior court to adjudicate his claims as to the same injury, and that the question as to which tribunal has jurisdiction over the subject matter of the injury depends upon whether McVey was injured within an employment relationship with petitioner. Therefore, under the holding of Scott v. Industrial Acc. Comm. (1956), supra, 46 Cal.2d 76, 293 P.2d 18, the superior court should not try the case until the commission has made a final determination of the issue as to whether it or the court has jurisdiction to proceed; i. e., as to whether McVey's alleged injuries are covered by the workmen's compensation laws so far as concerns his claims against petitioner. Meanwhile, the commission should proceed to a determination of such issue. Its adjudication, when final, will be conclusive on all parties.

We note that respondent court suggests in the points and authorities accompanying its return that "Had the question been properly presented respondent court might have determined that it lacked jurisdiction of the action" and that "The case of Scott v. Industrial Accident Commission * * * would seem to be controlling upon the facts alleged in the petition herein, and the Superior Court action should abate by reason of the prior application to the Industrial Accident Commission."

[5] Although it would have been better practice for petitioner to have expressly moved in the superior court that that court abate all proceedings in the McVey action until the jurisdictional issue had been determined by the Industrial Accident Commission, and to have specifically alleged all pertinent facts as to the inception and pendency of the commission proceeding, we conclude that the pleadings, papers and proceedings which were before the court at the times here involved were sufficient to bring all essential facts to its attention and to require it to stay further proceedings in the McVey action, pending further action by the Industrial Accident Commission, rather than to order the case to trial.

Let the peremptory writ issue as prayed.

As Modified on Denial of Rehearing
Oct. 31, 1956.

Action by an alleged insured against public liability insurer to recover on basis of an alleged policy, wherein a cross complaint was filed. From a judgment of the Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco, Thomas M. Foley, J., an insurer appeals. The Supreme Court, Carter, J., held that there was no contract of liability insurance between the insurer and the highway carrier and that where a reversal was required as to one defendant the portion of the judgment in favor of the other defendants would have to be reversed even though the plaintiff did not appeal as to such defendants.

Judgment affirmed in part and reversed in part.

Vacating opinions, 293 P.2d 527; 294 P.2d 767.

1. Insurance ⇐124

The contract of insurance is purely a personal contract between the insured and the insurer.

2. Insurance ⇐130(1)

It is essential to making of a contract of insurance that there be an agreement or meeting of the minds of the parties thereto.

3. Insurance ⇐130(7), 136(2)

Where highway carrier informed solicitor from whom it had obtained public liability policy that it did not wish renewal but was glad to insure with another but that solicitor hoping to retain account had insurer issue new policy which solicitor tendered to the carrier but was refused, there was neither assent by the carrier to being bound by the new policy nor delivery thereof and negotiations did not form a contract between the insurer and the carrier. West's Ann. Insurance Code, § 22.

4. Insurance ⇐124

Filing with Public Utilities Commission by liability insurer of certificate reciting that it had issued policy to highway carrier after carrier had accident within period supposedly covered did not create contract between carrier and insurer rendering insurer liable to indemnify carrier for its liability arising out of accident when old policy was actually in force.

5. Appeal and Error ⇐1173(1)

Portion of a judgment in favor of certain defendants was required to be reversed even though the plaintiff did not appeal as to such defendants where the legal basis for such judgment was gone by the reversal as to another codefendant and the judgment on its face said nothing about the liability of such defendants but was merely a judgment for plaintiff against the codefendant and for the other defendants to recover costs where defending the complaint.

Plaintiff, a highway common carrier, commenced an action alleging that one of his trucks was involved in an accident on June 5, 1951, in which two persons named Kuhwarth were killed; that at that time there were in effect, covering his truck, policies of public liability insurance issued by Northwest Casualty Company, Norwich Union Fire Insurance Society, Ltd. and St. Paul Mercury Indemnity Company; that the Kuhwarths' representatives commenced actions against him which he settled by paying a total of $6,600; that St. Paul is willing to pay one-third of the amount. Only Northwest and Norwich were made defendants; he asked for judgment against them for their share of the $6,600.

By order of court St. Paul and Royal Indemnity Company were made parties to the proceeding. Norwich and Northwest filed cross-complaints which were answered; plaintiff's complaint was also answered. The issues as joined presented mainly the question of which of the four insurance companies was liable for the settlement with Kuhwarths' representatives or what portion each should bear. It is conceded that Royal had no outstanding policy covering plaintiff; judgment was in its favor, and no contention is made here for reversal.

The court rendered judgment concluding that plaintiff was insured with Norwich and it must pay all of the settlement because, although plaintiff also had insurance with Northwest and St. Paul, those policies had "other insurance" provisions under which they were not liable except to the extent that the claim exceeded the coverage offered by the Norwich policy which contained no such "other insurance" clause. Judgment was accordingly entered that plaintiff recover the $6,600 from Norwich and for St. Paul against Northwest and Norwich for costs; that Northwest recover its costs of "defending the Complaint." Norwich, alone, appeals from the judgment, asserting the evidence is insufficient to support the judgment that it had an insurance contract with plaintiff and in any case plaintiff had no interest in the controversy because St. Paul rather than plaintiff had paid the $6,600 Kuhwarth settlement.

It is undisputed that the Kuhwarth settlement was fair and reasonable. St. Paul alone defended plaintiff in the actions and negotiated the settlement. The policy of each of the three insurers, Norwich, Northwest and St. Paul, is in an amount more than sufficient to pay the settlement. The court found that all three insurance companies were notified of the Kuhwarth accident. When the Kuhwarth settlement was made, St. Paul paid plaintiff the amount thereof and plaintiff obtained a cashier's check for the balance which was paid to the Kuhwarths' representatives, and a loan agreement was made between St. Paul and plaintiff under which plaintiff was to pay the $6,600 if and when he recovered it from the other alleged insurers.

Norwich asserts that there was no evidence that there was an insurance contract between it and plaintiff because the policy was not delivered to plaintiff nor accepted by him; that there was no meeting of minds. Plaintiff testified that at the time of the Kuhwarth accident he did not "have" a Norwich policy; that he had never "ordered" any policy from Norwich; that no policy was tendered to him; that the only policy he had was with St. Paul; that he had notified Williams of Williams Insurance Center, insurance agent for Norwich and Northwest, prior to June 1, 1951, that he was not going to take any insurance from him and had placed his insurance elsewhere; that he placed his insurance with St. Paul through an agent other than Williams; that he did not give notice of the accident to any insurance carrier except St. Paul, to whom he handed the papers served on him in the Kuhwarth actions.

The uncontradicted testimony of Hazel Reed, the office manager of Williams Insurance Center, Norwich's agent, is in harmony with plaintiff's testimony and shows that Williams had been handling plaintiff's automobile insurance and had placed a Northwest policy for him which expired on June 1, 1951; that although they were told by plaintiff prior to June 1st that he was placing his insurance elsewhere and they had no request for insurance from plaintiff, they ordered Norwich and Northwest policies for plaintiff hoping to keep his business. When the Norwich policy arrived, they attempted to deliver it to plaintiff and to his bank which held a loan on his equipment but both refused the policy, plaintiff stating he had obtained insurance elsewhere; that being unable to deliver the policy they returned it to Norwich.

Plaintiff does not question this evidence but calls our attention to the following facts in the record: That at Williams' request Norwich issued, that is, executed, a policy to plaintiff to run from June 1, 1951, to June 1, 1952, and sent it to Williams; it also filed a notice with the state Public Utilities Commission that as required by the Public Utilities Code, it had insured plaintiff for the period in question. Norwich cancelled the policy in June after the accident, and on June 7, 1951, so advised the Public Utilities Commission, to be effective on June 26, 1951. On April 11, 1952, Williams sent a bill to plaintiff on a Norwich form for premium for the policy from June 1, 1951 to June 24, 1951, and plaintiff paid the bill.

Accepting this undisputed evidence, there is no basis for liability under the Norwich policy where the premium was paid long after the loss (the accident) and St. Paul was negotiating a settlement of the claim arising out of the accident. It is said in Hargett v. Gulf Ins. Co., 12 Cal.App. 2d 449, 457, 55 P.2d 1258, 1261: "Even though at the time the premium was paid to the Monarch Company the company had actual knowledge of the existence of the chattel mortgage, which fact does not appear to have been established, the property had already been destroyed. Plaintiff must rely entirely upon the doctrine of estoppel to foreclose the defenses interposed by this company; obviously no estoppel could have arisen after the destruction of the property. An estoppel arises when the assured, because of some act or conduct of the insurer, has been dissuaded from obtaining other insurance upon the property and has proceeded to rely upon the validity of the policies he holds. Plaintiff was not, nor could he have been, prejudiced in any way by the acceptance and retention of the premium by the Monarch Company after the destruction of the property. The evidence of plaintiff in the particulars we have pointed out falls far short of establishing an estoppel against any of the companies to rely upon the provisions of the policies, under which the property destroyed by the fire was not at the time covered by insurance." It is said in Commercial Casualty Ins. Co. v. Columbia Cas. Co., 22 Tenn.App. 656, 125 S.W.2d 493, 495: "It appears that a policy covering this automobile was issued by the Columbia Casualty Insurance Company, but the evidence is unsatisfactory as to whether it was issued before the accident or afterwards. But whether a policy was ever issued, is not material in this case, as the evidence is uncontroverted that Carter did not apply for the policy, had no knowledge of its issuance, never accepted it; that he was insured in the Commercial Casualty Insurance Company, which policy he had not cancelled; and that he refused to ratify the issuance of the policy in the Columbia Casualty Company after the accident. There was, therefore, no contract between Carter and the Columbia Casualty Company, even if a policy was issued dated September 26, 1928.

[1] "The contract of insurance is purely a personal contract between the insured and the insurance company. 32 C.J. 1092, sec. 175; 14 R.C.L. 1365, sec. 535; John Weis, Inc. v. Reed [22 Tenn.App. 90] 118 S.W.2d 677, 682; Hackney Co. v. Wood, 3 Tenn.App. 421.

[2-4] "The assent of insured obtaining a fire policy from one insurer to a policy from another insurer as a substitute for the first policy is essential to the existence of a completed contract evidenced by the second policy, and, where such assent is not procured until after (a loss), the second insurer is not bound." Waterloo Lumber Co. v. Des Moines Ins. Co., 158 Iowa 563, 138 N.W. 504, 51 L.R.A.,N.S., 539." In Byrne v. Prudential Ins. Co. of America, Mo., 88 S.W.2d 344, 346, the court said: "While a contract of insurance 'has some features which distinguish it from an ordinary commercial contract, yet in general respects it is like any other contract and is governed by the same rules.' 32 C.J. p. 1091. It is as essential to the making of a contract of insurance as it is to any other contract that there be 'an agreement, or meeting of the minds of the parties' thereto. 32 C.J. p. 1095. Here the action is based upon an alleged contract between Schockley and the defendant insurance company. The application is a request or proposal for insurance and also supplies the insurance company with the information necessary to enable it to pass upon the application. An acceptance by the company and the issuance and delivery of its policy of insurance in reliance upon and in conformity with the application completes the contract. Admittedly Schockley did not make out or sign the application, was not present at the time, nor was it shown that he ever consented to the issuance of the policy of insurance on his life and in his name or had knowledge thereof. Absent any evidence tending to show that either before or at the time he consented to the taking of the insurance in his name or subsequent to the making of the application or issuance of the policy had knowledge thereof and either specifically or impliedly ratified same it seems to follow, in such situation, as a matter of law, that no contract was entered into or existed between Schockley and the insurance company." See, Hicks v. Hicklin, 187 S.C. 355, 197 S.E. 390; Hicklin v. State Farm Mut. Automobile Ins. Co., 176 S.C. 504, 180 S.E. 666; Mallard v. Hardware Indemnity Ins. Co., Tex.Civ.App., 216 S.W. 2d 263. Clearly, under plaintiff's theory there would not be an insurance contract, under the facts here presented, because the contingency was known to both plaintiff and Norwich when the premium was paid. "Insurance is a contract whereby one undertakes to indemnify another against loss, damage, or liability arising from a contingent or unknown event." Ins.Code, § 22. "Except as provided in this article, any contingent or unknown event, whether past or future, which may damnify a person having an insurable interest, or create a liability against him, may be insured against, subject to the provisions of this code." Id., § 250. The exceptions refer to lotteries, gaming and wagering, Id., §§ 251-252. The notice to the Public Utilities Commission did not have the effect of creating a contract of insurance between the parties here involved, we are not concerned with a member of the public.

Reference is made to a letter written by counsel for Norwich on June 19, 1952. That is of no aid, for even though it stated that notice was given to the Public Utilities Commission by Norwich, it also stated that Norwich had issued no policy to plaintiff, but it was "collaborating" with St. Paul, which was plaintiff's insurer.

Cases such as Hill v. Industrial Acc. Comm., 10 Cal.App.2d 178, 51 P.2d 1126, cited by plaintiff concerning the effect of the sending of a policy by the company to its agent and the payment of premium did not involve a situation such as we have here where plaintiff never ordered any insurance, informed the insurance agent he did not want any insurance and the payment of premium was made long after the loss and another insurer was actively handling the case for the insured.

[5] Inasmuch as the judgment against Norwich must be reversed for insufficiency of the evidence to show that it had insured plaintiff and only Norwich appeals, the question arises as to the disposition or effect on the remainder of the judgment. As heretofore stated the court found that plaintiff was insured by Norwich, Northwest and St. Paul but that only Norwich was liable because the policies of Northwest and St. Paul were to pay any loss over and above that covered by other insurance.¹ Since by reason of the reversal as to Norwich there is not other insurance insofar as Norwich would be the other insurance carrier, the basis for the judgment exonerating Northwest and St. Paul falls. This would mean that the question on retrial would be, which was liable of those two for the whole loss or some portion thereof.² It must therefore follow that the portion of the judgment in favor of Northwest and St. Paul will have to be reversed even though plaintiff did not appeal, because the legal basis for such judgment is gone by the reversal. The judgment as to them on that basis is so interwoven and dependent on the judgment against Norwich that that portion must be reversed even though no appeal was taken therefrom. American Enterprise, Inc. v. Van Winkle, 39 Cal.2d 210, 246 P.2d 935. It is still true, however, that in addition to that basis for the judgment, the court found that Northwest and St. Paul had policies in effect at the time of the Kuhwarth accident covering plaintiff which may appear to be severable and unaffected by the reversal of the Norwich judgment and destructive of the other insurance basis for exonerating them. However, the judgment must be reversed because, on its face it says nothing about the liability of Northwest or St. Paul. It is merely a judgment for plaintiff against Norwich and for St. Paul against Northwest and Norwich for costs; and that Northwest recover costs of "defending the Complaint." Hence a reversal, which is necessary, leaves no judgment as to St. Paul's and Northwest's liability. There is only the finding above mentioned that they carried insurance for plaintiff. Thus it follows that the whole matter is thrown open to reascertainment on retrial.

It may be mentioned that the evidence is probably insufficient to show that Northwest insured plaintiff because it is substantially the same as that with respect to Norwich but that is a matter which may be determined on retrial. It is unnecessary to consider Norwich's objection that plaintiff does not have a standing to sue because of its claim that he was paid by St. Paul and the "loan" arrangement whereby plaintiff agreed to repay the settlement money to St. Paul if it recovered from the other insurers, was not a true loan. Since the judgment must be reversed the matter is one subject for determination on a retrial, and in this connection it should be observed that all the parties are before the court for a determination of the amount if any to be borne by each insurer. See, Fidelity & Casualty Co. v. Fireman's F. I. Co., 38

1. Northwest's policy says if there is other valid insurance the policy shall be void, except to the extent the limits of the policy are in excess of the limits in the other insurance in which case the excess is covered. St. Paul's policy says no insuring agreement thereof shall apply to any loss if the insured has other insurance except as respects any excess beyond the amount which would have been payable under the other insurance.

2. This is assuming that no better case could be made than has been made to show plaintiff was insured with Norwich.

The judgment in favor of Royal Indemnity Company is affirmed. The remaining portion of the judgment is reversed.

R. M. PEART and Margaret Peart, and Alfred Anderson, Petitioners and Appellants,

v.

The BOARD OF SUPERVISORS OF the COUNTY OF SANTA CLARA, State of California; and A. W. Brown, Sam P. Della Magglore, Ed R. Levin, J. M. McKinnon and Walter S. Gaspar, as members of the Board of Supervisors of the County of Santa Clara, State of California, Respondents.

No. 16820.

District Court of Appeal, First District,
Division 2, California.

Oct. 8, 1956.

Proceeding in mandamus alleging that the exclusionary act of the board of supervisors in excluding from a proposed city much of the land described in the petition for incorporation was arbitrary and seeking a peremptory writ annulling the acts of the board. Judgment for respondents in the Superior Court, County of Santa Clara, Edwin J. Owens, J., and the petitioners appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Draper, J. pro tem., held that in the absence of fraudulent or corrupt conduct, the determination by a board of supervisors of the boundaries, size and shape of a proposed city is not subject to review by the courts.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Constitutional Law ⇨68(1)

The Legislature not having exceeded constitutional limitations in conferring broad powers upon a board of supervisors in the incorporation of new cities with respect to the inclusion of land, the court cannot impose limitations, since the question to be determined by the board is legislative or political in essence, and is beyond the consideration by the courts. West's Ann. Gov.Code, §§ 34300-34332.

2. Municipal Corporations ⇨24

The power devolved on boards of supervisors to determine boundaries of a proposed municipality is legislative in its nature and is vested in the board. West's Ann.Gov.Code, §§ 34300-34332.

3. Municipal Corporations ⇨7

The question as to whether territory proposed to be included in new city should be brought under municipal control is to be finally determined by the board of supervisors. West's Ann.Gov.Code, §§ 34300-34332.

4. Municipal Corporations ⇨3, 7

The words "sound discretion" appearing in the statute respecting incorporation of new cities did not show the legislative intent to place a limitation upon the board in determining whether to incorporate new cities and the amount of territory to be included therein. West's Ann.Gov.Code, § 34312.

See publication Words and Phrases, for other judicial constructions and definitions of "Sound Discretion".

5. Constitutional Law ⇨70(3)

Whether it is good or bad policy to leave to supervisors a discretion with respect to incorporation of new cities so unguided that it may be exercised in an arbitrary manner where no vested right is involved is a question for the Legislature and not for the courts. West's Ann.Gov. Code, §§ 34300-34332.

6. Municipal Corporations ⇨12(12)

In the absence of fraudulent or corrupt conduct, the determination by a board of supervisors of the boundaries, size and shape of a proposed city is not subject to review by the courts. West's Ann.Gov. Code, §§ 34300-34332.

DRAPER, Justice pro tem.

Appellants and other owners of land in unincorporated territory of Santa Clara County filed a petition with the board of supervisors of that county for the incorporation of a new city to be known as the City of South San Jose. It is conceded that the petition complied with the statutory provisions for organization of new cities. Government Code, §§ 34300-34332. After hearings upon the petition, respondent board excluded from the proposed city much of the land described in the petition for incorporation, with the result that the boundaries of the proposed city included less than the required 500 inhabitants. The board then refused to call an election upon the issue of incorporation because of this deficiency in population.

Petitioners brought this proceeding in mandamus, alleging that the exclusionary act of the board was arbitrary, and seeking a peremptory writ "annulling said acts of the Board of Supervisors, and having the boundaries of the proposed City of South San Jose, as described in the petition for incorporation, filed with the Board of Supervisors; and ordering the Board of Supervisors to call an election * *." Respondents answered, denying the allegations of arbitrary and capricious action, and moved for judgment on the pleadings. The trial court filed a memorandum opinion expressing its view that the board's action could be reviewed only if it were fraudulent or corrupt, granted petitioners leave to amend their petition, and ordered that if there were no amendment the motion for judgment be granted. Petitioners declined to amend and judgment for respondents on the pleadings was ordered. Petitioners appeal. The parties agree that the issue of the sufficiency of the petition is properly before us.

Appellants rely upon general statements in several decisions that the acts of the board in creating districts are judicial in character, and thus are subject to review by the courts. Respondents reply that these cases are distinguishable in that they deal with districts, rather than cities (an argument which we reject as too narrow), and rely upon general statements in a number of cases that the board's determinations, in creating cities or districts, are legislative in character, and thus are beyond the control of the courts. In our view, the claimed conflict in the two lines of cases cited is more apparent than real, and is fully resolved by a careful study of the acts sought to be reviewed and the statutes under which the several subordinate legislative bodies acted.

It is an oversimplification to group together all acts of a board of supervisors in the creation of a new city or district, and stamp all such acts, as a group, as either within or beyond the scope of court review. Rather, each statute authorizing such action places upon the subordinate legislative body some restrictions which are conditions for its exercise of jurisdiction, and which require finding of specified facts. Thus, a board's finding as to sufficiency of the notice of hearing, Imperial Water Co. No. 1 v. Board of Supervisors, 162 Cal. 14, 120 P. 780; Wheatley v. Superior Court, 207 Cal. 722, 279 P. 989, or of the petition, Borchard v. Board of Supervisors, 144 Cal. 10, 77 P. 708, whether such findings be termed "judicial," "quasi-judicial," or otherwise, are clearly subject to some review by the courts under sufficient pleadings in a proper form of proceeding.

Similarly, where the board is required by statute to act when certain facts are established, the courts will intervene when the required facts are clearly shown. Inglin v. Hoppin, 156 Cal. 483, 105 P. 582. Also, where the discretion to be exercised by the board is itself limited by the statute, the courts may inquire whether the limitations have been recognized and properly honored by the board. Thus, where the statute limits inclusion in an irrigation district to lands irrigable from a proposed source of water, Imperial Water Co. No. 1 v. Board of Supervisors, supra, 162 Cal. 14, 120 P. 780, or the consolidation of school districts to lands within a fixed distance, Broyles v. Mahon, 72 Cal.App. 484, 237 P. 763, the courts may review the board's decision.

However, neither of these situations exists here. The parties concede that all conditions precedent to the hearing by the board were properly met. The sole complaint is as to the board's decision excluding from the proposed city a substantial part of the land described in the petition for incorporation. The board acted under Government Code, section 34312, which provides:

"Establishment of the boundaries and determination of the size and shape of a proposed city are matters for the sound discretion of the board of supervisors."

It is solely in the light of this language that we can consider whether the discretion exercised by the board is reviewable by the courts.

[1] This statute prescribes no limitation whatever upon the discretion of the board. No vested right is here involved to bring into play broad constitutional limitations. The only right of those seeking incorporation is to have the statute, including the grant of broad discretion to the board, applied to them. The legislature has not exceeded constitutional limitations in conferring broad powers upon the board of supervisors, People ex rel. Russell v. Town of Loyalton, 147 Cal. 774, 776, 82 P. 620, and it does not rest with the courts to impose limitations. Moreover, if a court sought to exercise jurisdiction, it could find in the statute neither guide-post, landmark nor sextant to plot a course toward any result to be reached by it. Clearly, the question to be determined by the board is legislative or political in its essence, and is beyond consideration by the courts.

[2] "The power devolved on boards of supervisors * * * to determine boundaries of a proposed town is legislative in its nature, and is vested in the board, not as an indifferent party, but as the legislative body of the county whose territory is to be taken for the proposed town, and consequently as representing the interests of the people of the county at large as well as those of the town." Vernon v. Board of Supervisors, 142 Cal. 513, 515, 76 P. 253, 254, followed and approved in Borchard v. Board of Supervisors, supra, 144 Cal. 10, 77 P. 708.

[3] "The question as to whether territory proposed to be included should be brought under municipal control is left to be finally determined by the board of supervisors." People ex rel. Russell v. Town of Loyalton, supra, 147 Cal. 774, 778, 82 P. 620, 622. This decision also points out the lack of statutory limitation upon the powers of the board in fixing boundaries, and refers to "the broad words used in our statute." See also People v. City of Riverside, 70 Cal. 461, 9 P. 662, 11 P. 759; People v. City of Belmont, 100 Cal.App. 537, 280 P. 540.

The same rule has been applied to annexation cases. The principle "that it was exclusively a matter for the legislature to say [by] what tribunal or how these boundaries should be fixed, is equally applicable to the fixing of the boundaries of territory to be annexed to an existing municipality * * *. [T]he question of the extent and character of territory proposed to be incorporated is left * * * as the Legislature was authorized to leave it, exclusively to the board of supervisors * * * and * * * the courts have no control of the subject." People ex rel. Peck v. City of Los Angeles, 154 Cal. 220, 225, 97 P. 311, 313; see also City of Burlingame v. County of San Mateo, 90 Cal.App.2d 705, 203 P.2d 807.

[4] Some suggestion has been made that the words "sound discretion," appearing in Government Code, section 34312, place a limitation upon the board. Until 1937, the statute provided that, upon hearing, the board "shall make such changes in the proposed boundaries as they may find to be proper, and shall establish and define such boundaries." Stats.1883, p. 93. In 1937, the statute was amended, leaving the language above quoted, but adding, with a number of other provisions, substantially the same language contained in the present section 34312. Stats.1937, p. 1811. There is nothing whatever to indicate a limitation upon the discretion long previously found by Vernon v. Board of Supervisors, supra, Borchard v. Board of Supervisors, supra, and People ex rel. Russell v. Town of Loy-alton, supra, to exist. The present provisions of the Government Code merely codify the long-existing statute, eliminating some repetitions, but substantially carrying into the new code the old provisions.

Appellant relies upon general language, to the effect that proceedings for the formation of an irrigation district, Imperial Water Co. No. 1 v. Board of Supervisors, supra, 162 Cal. 14, 120 P. 780, a bridge district, Wheatley v. Superior Court, supra, 207 Cal. 722, 279 P. 989, or for the alteration of school district boundaries, Crane v. Board of Supervisors, 17 Cal.App. 2d 360, 62 P.2d 189, are "judicial" in character, and thus subject to court review. As we have pointed out, many fact-finding functions are imposed upon the supervisors in all the statutes regulating proceedings of this type. The exercise of such functions is reviewable under certain circumstances and in a proper form of action, whether the facts are found by the board in ascertaining the conditions establishing jurisdiction, or in exercise of a discretion limited by the particular statute to fixed fact situations. In none of these three decisions is the board's exercise of discretion in fact revised or modified, and there is nothing to indicate that in any of them would the court have extended its broad language to the precise situation here in issue.

[5] There is no more room for intervention of the courts here than in the decision by a board of supervisors as to the amount of land needed for a county hospital, Nickerson v. San Bernardino County, 179 Cal. 518, 177 P. 465, or as to issuance of tax-anticipation notes. Berkeley High School Dist. of Alameda County v. Coit, 7 Cal.2d 132, 59 P.2d 992. Whether it is good or bad policy to leave to supervisors a discretion so unfettered that it may be exercised in an arbitrary manner is, where no vested right is involved, a question for the legislature and not for the courts.

[6] In the absence of fraudulent or corrupt conduct, the determination by a board of supervisors of the boundaries, size and shape of a proposed city is, under the present statutory grant of discretion, not subject to review by the courts.

The judgment is affirmed.

pealed. The District Court of Appeal, Devine, J. pro tem., held that provision of settlement contract for monthly payments to former wife for support, properly construed, terminated upon the parties' minor children obtaining majority, and upon remarriage of former wife, and under provision of such contract providing that former husband should indemnify former wife for all expenses and cost in prosecuting or defending any motion affecting the agreement, former wife was entitled to counsel fees in connection with former husband's motion to terminate payments, including counsel fees for appeal from the granting of his motion, notwithstanding fact that order granting motion was sustained.

1. Divorce Ⓒ255, 309

An order of the Superior Court denying a husband's application for modification of a provision of a divorce decree awarding former wife $250 a month support where one of the two minor children of the parties had reached majority did not determine whether former husband's duty to make such payments to wife continued after second child of the parties had reached majority and after wife's remarriage, and therefore was not res judicata as to such issue.

2. Contracts Ⓒ147(1)

The cardinal rule of interpretation of contracts is to find the intention of the parties, and in seeking that intention, the object to be attained is the principal factor. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 1636.

3. Evidence Ⓒ448

If a contract is explicit, extrinsic evidence cannot be used to interpret it, but if it is ambiguous, extrinsic evidence is admissible.

4. Appeal and Error Ⓒ991

If an issue of fact, such as the intent of the parties to an ambiguous agreement, has been determined by the trial court upon extrinsic evidence, the determination, if not unreasonable, will not be disturbed on appeal even though a contrary finding might be equally tenable.

5. Evidence Ⓒ450(2)

Where a divorce settlement agreement set forth no duration for support payments provided for wife, it was ambiguous, and extrinsic evidence was properly admissible to determine the duration for such payments.

6. Husband and Wife Ⓒ278(2)

A contract by a former husband to support a former wife even after remarriage is not against public policy.

7. Husband and Wife Ⓒ279(1)

Where a settlement contract incorporated by reference into a divorce decree merely provided that former husband was to pay $250 monthly to former wife for support, without mention of the period for which such payments were to be made, the payments would be construed to have been for alimony and child support, rather than representing a part of an integrated property settlement agreement, with the duty to continue such payments terminating upon the parties' minor children obtaining majority, and upon remarriage of former wife. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 139.

8. Husband and Wife Ⓒ279(1)

Where a settlement agreement incorporated by reference into a divorce decree specifically provided that former husband should indemnify former wife for all expenses and costs in prosecuting or defending any motion or proceeding in any manner affecting the agreement, former wife was entitled to counsel fees in connection with former husband's motion to terminate support payments under such agreement, including counsel fees for former wife's appeal from the granting of such motion, notwithstanding fact that order granting the motion was sustained.

DEVINE, Justice pro tem.

The main question presented on this appeal is whether or not the trial court's interpretation of a contract between spouses at the time of separation and divorce is to be sustained. (A lesser question, relating to allowance of counsel fees, is considered at the end of this opinion.) The agreement, drawn in 1938, provided, among other things, for payment of the sum of $250 to the wife "as and for the support and maintenance of herself and the minor children of said parties, said payments to commence on March 1, 1938 and to continue monthly thereafter on the first (1st) day of each and every month thereafter." These provisions, with slight changes in wording, were contained in the divorce decrees, interlocutory and final, and the husband was ordered by the decrees to pay $250 every month for the support of the wife and the children. The agreement as a whole was not copied into the decrees, but reference was made to it as an exhibit attached to the complaint. The trial court construed the agreement and the decrees as imposing an obligation on the husband to pay the stated sum for the support of the wife only until her remarriage. The wife appeals, contending that the sum of $250, as reduced by such amount as should be apportioned for the children, must be paid to her every month without regard to her remarriage.

[1] There is no contention that further support is required for the two children of the parties, for both have attained majority and neither is under any disability. The husband paid the $250 every month until the younger child had attained majority in 1954. One contention of appellant is that because the husband applied for a modification of the amount of support money in 1944 when the older child was about to enter the armed forces and after the wife's remarriage in 1943, and the modification was denied by the court, the matter is res judicata, and it has been determined that the support money is a periodic payment upon a division of community property. However, nothing is before us to show the reasoning of the court when that application was made. The court may have decided that the sum should be paid without reduction for the continuing support of the children, and especially of the younger child, who was then 10 years old. In Meek v. Meek, 51 Cal.App.2d 492, 125 P.2d 117, it was held that the doctrine of res judicata could not apply where prior petitions for reduction of a support order had been denied, but a second child had become of age since the last denial, thus changing the facts sufficiently to prevent application of the doctrine.

We hold that the order based on the earlier application for modification did not determine the question now before us.

It is argued by the wife that the required payment was not in the nature of alimony, but was an inseverable part of an integrated property settlement agreement and was not subject to termination on her remarriage; and by the husband, that the award essentially was alimony, although that term was not used.

The agreement, it is to be observed, does not provide that the payments are to be for the lifetime of the wife, or for a specified time. Nor is there an award of a certain sum to be paid at the rate of $250 a month until satisfied. The contract simply states that it is for support, and it is to be paid every month.

[2-4] In construing the agreement and in determining the nature of the periodic payments, there are basic principles of interpretation to be observed. The cardinal rule of interpretation of contracts is to find the intention of the parties, Civil Code, Section 1636, and in seeking that intention, the object to be attained is the principal factor. In re City and County of San Francisco, 191 Cal. 172, 177, 215 P. 549; Miranda v. Miranda, 81 Cal.App. 2d 61, 66, 183 P.2d 61. If a contract is explicit, extrinsic evidence cannot be used to interpret it, but if it is ambiguous, extrinsic evidence is admissible. Tuttle v. Tuttle, 38 Cal.2d 419, 421, 240 P.2d 587. If an issue of fact, such as the intent of the parties to an ambiguous agreement, has been determined by the trial court upon such evidence, the determination, if not unreasonable, will not be disturbed on appeal even though a contrary finding might be equally tenable. Weedon v. Weedon, 92 Cal.App.2d 367, 207 P.2d 78; Pearman v. Pearman, 104 Cal.App.2d 250, 256, 231 P.2d 101.

[5] Applying these basic principles to the cause before us, we believe the trial court's order terminating support for the wife should be affirmed. Extrinsic evidence relating to the history of the settlement and the property of the parties was admitted, not over objection of appellant, but chiefly as presented by her. Although this followed the suggestion of the court that such evidence be produced, still appellant cannot complain (and does not) of its admission, and, in any event, the contract was ambiguous. It sets forth no duration for the payments.

[6,7] The history of the settlement shows that in 1938, the parties had very little community property to divide. The wife received a heavily encumbered home, its furniture and a life insurance policy. The husband received an automobile. He was earning between $450 and $500 a month. He paid the wife $250, the same amount as appears in the agreement, for the support of the wife and children during the several months preceding the interlocutory decree. These facts may have led the court to conclude in the present proceeding that the periodic payment was intended as support money and was not integrated with a division of property. The agreement was drawn by counsel for appellant, who thus caused the ambiguity to exist. The object herein was to support the wife and the children. For how long? For the children, obviously, until they would become of age, partly because the agreement referred to them, at the time the provision for them was made, as "the minor children", and partly because the law would not impose the duty of support on the father after the children had attained majority, unless they were ill or infirm. In the same way, it is reasonable to infer that the support for the "wife", as she was described as such in the agreement, would continue not until death, but until the duty of support would devolve upon another spouse. There is a certain incongruity in interpreting an indefinite contract for support of a wife as requiring a man to continue payments after another has undertaken the duty of support. Although a contract to support a spouse even after remarriage is not against public policy, nevertheless, in interpreting this agreement of uncertain duration, the trial court reasonably weighed the noted incongruity as a factor.

To construe the contract as requiring lifetime payments to the wife would allow her to collect from her former spouse's estate, should he predecease her, the then present value for her life expectancy of that part of the award which might be apportioned to her. Miller v. Superior Court, 9 Cal.2d 733, 735, 72 P.2d 868; Anthony v. Anthony, 94 Cal.App.2d 507, 211 P.2d 331. A clearer expression than was contained in the contract herein should be required in order to make necessary an interpretation which would impose so large a burden.

There remain to be discussed the chief cases cited by appellant relating to: 1. Integrated agreements generally; and 2. agreements which were held to survive remarriage. In the present case, the wife waives all support other than that agreed upon, and the contract recites that the parties intend to settle their rights, and that the wife accepts the support provisions in full satisfaction of her right to community property. These provisions may make the contract unmodifiable in that the periodic payments cannot be revised upwards or downwards. Such provisions are to be found in the contracts considered in Et- tlinger v. Ettlinger, 3 Cal.2d 172, 44 P.2d 540; Puckett v. Puckett, 21 Cal.2d 833, 136 P.2d 1; Adams v. Adams, 29 Cal.2d 621, 177 P.2d 265; Dexter v. Dexter, 42 Cal.2d 36, 265 P.2d 873; Fox v. Fox, 42 Cal.2d 49, 265 P.2d 881; Flynn v. Flynn, 42 Cal.2d 55, 265 P.2d 865; Messenger v. Messenger, 46 Cal.2d 619, 297 P.2d 988, and Helvern v. Helvern, 139 Cal.App.2d 819, 294 P.2d 482. In all of those cases, the termination date of payments was expressed (usually, as death or remarriage) and there was no question of ascertaining the intention of the parties in that regard.

The expressions of finality were held, in those cases, to prevent increase or reduction in payments. We do not regard such expressions as necessarily requiring that payments continue for a lifetime where the contract does not say that they are to do so. In the absence of contract, the wife would have no right to such support after remarriage, and when this agreement was drawn, section 139 of the Civil Code provided that the husband's duty to support the wife (not only his duty as imposed by a decree of divorce but his general legal duty), ended with the wife's remarriage. Thus, the wife gave up no right to a larger amount of post-marital support for she had none. She could have gained a right to post-marital payment by contract, of course.

We come now to the subject of cases in which remarriage has been held not to terminate support provisions. In Rosson v. Crellin, 90 Cal.App.2d 753, 203 P.2d 841, 842, the contract expressly provided for payments to the wife "so long as you shall live," and in Landres v. Rosasco, 62 Cal. App.2d 99, 144 P.2d 20, and Harnden v. Harnden, 102 Cal.App.2d 209, 227 P.2d 51, the payments were to continue for an agreed period of years. In Lane v. Bradley, 124 Cal.App.2d 661, 268 P.2d 1092, the agreed payment of 40 per cent of the husband's net income was not described as for the wife's support; large property interests were held in escrow therefor and the agreement contained a provision referring to the death of the wife as terminating the escrow giving evidence that it was to remain for her lifetime. In Taliaferro v. Taliaferro, 125 Cal.App.2d 419, 270 P.2d 1036, a going business was divided between the parties, a fact noted by the trial judge in the present case, and the wife in the Taliaferro case testified, under cross-examination, that she regarded the monthly payments as a share of rentals. The trial court's interpretation, based in part on extrinsic evidence, was upheld.

The case of Hopkins v. Hopkins, 46 Cal. 2d 313, 294 P.2d 1, does not require that the conclusion of the trial court be reversed. In that case, the parties had agreed that payments would end with remarriage and there had been no remarriage, so that there, again, the question of ending of payments upon remarriage was not the question. That case is authority for the proposition that where support money for wife and for children is lumped together in a property settlement agreement, the contract is not too uncertain to be enforced, but upon the arrival at majority of the children, the court should apportion the amount. In the present case, it is the remarriage of the wife which is the basis of respondent's petition; the attaining of majority of the younger child is the occasion for the petition, but not the basis of it.

[8] Counsel fees should have been awarded, and now should be allowed for this appeal. The agreement specifically provides that the husband shall indemnify the wife for all expenses, costs and expenses in prosecuting or defending any motion or proceeding in any manner affecting the agreement. Sufficient application for such fees was made at the commencement of the proceedings.

The order terminating monthly payments to the wife is affirmed but the cause is remanded with directions for the allowance of attorneys fees and costs in connection with the proceeding, including counsel fees for this appeal.

Costs on appeal to appellant.

I dissent.

I cannot agree with the majority opinion in the interpretation and application of the decisions of our Supreme Court in the cases of Messenger v. Messenger, 46 Cal. 2d 619, 297 P.2d 988 and Hopkins v. Hopkins, 46 Cal.2d 313, 294 P.2d 1. In my judgment these decisions applied to the facts of this case compel a reversal of the judgment with directions to the trial court as hereinafter specified.

The appeal herein is from an order of the Superior Court of San Mateo County granting respondent's motion to terminate support and maintenance payments in a divorce action. The trial court determined that the payments provided for in a Property Settlement Agreement were for alimony and child support and did not represent a division of the property.

Appellant, Claudine Herda, and respondent, Clarence Herda, were married on June 6, 1925 in Chicago, Illinois. There were two children of this marriage, a son born in 1926, and a daughter born in 1933. The family moved to California, and at the time of the divorce were living in Burlingame. On March 1, 1938, the parties entered into an agreement entitled "Property Settlement Agreement." On March 18, 1938, a divorce complaint was filed by Mrs. Herda, alleging extreme cruelty. It was alleged that there was community property, that the rights of the parties had been adjusted and a division of property rights made. A copy of the agreement was made a part of the complaint. In the next and final paragraph of the complaint it was alleged that in said agreement, defendant had agreed to pay plaintiff "as and for her support and maintenance and the support and maintenance of the minor children of the said parties the sum of Two Hundred Fifty Dollars ($250.00) monthly."

An interlocutory decree of divorce was granted on April 18, 1938, the court ordering that "the contract of settlement between plaintiff and defendant, a copy of which is attached to plaintiff's complaint as 'Exhibit A' thereof, be, and the same is hereby approved, and each and every of the provisions thereof are hereby expressly incorporated herein by way of reference and made a part of this decree to the same extent as though expressly set out herein." The interlocutory decree restated several paragraphs of the property settlement agreement in substantially the same language used in the agreement. Paragraph Eighth of the Agreement read as follows: "The husband agrees in consideration of the premises and mutual covenants and agreements herein contained to pay to the wife the sum of Two Hundred Fifty Dollars ($250.00) per month as and for the support and maintenance of herself and the minor children of said parties, said payments to commence on March 1, 1938 and to continue monthly thereafter on the first (1st) day of each and every month thereafter. * * *"

The interlocutory and final decrees of divorce provided:

"It is further ordered, adjudged and decreed that defendant be, and he hereby is, required to pay to plaintiff herein, as and for her support and the support, care and education of the minor children of said parties, the sum of Two Hundred Fifty Dollars ($250.00) per month, which said payments to commence March 1, 1938, and continue monthly thereafter on the 1st day of each and every month."

In 1943 appellant remarried. On May 17, 1944, respondent filed a motion to modify the final decree of divorce, asking that he be relieved of paying anything further for plaintiff's support, and requesting that he be required to pay $50 per month for the care, support and education of each minor child. The affidavit in support thereof stated that appellant had remarried, and that the minor, Robert Herda, was about to enter the armed forces. The motion was denied on May 22, 1944, the court allowing appellant $50.00 attorney's fees. At this time the children were eighteen and ten years of age.

On November 5, 1954, respondent filed his motion to terminate the $250 monthly payments, Robert Herda was then 28 years of age and married. Joyce Herda was 21 years of age. Neither child was living with appellant. She was not contributing to their support, nor did they require any assistance from her.

On December 2, 1954, respondent's motion was argued and submitted. Appellant orally moved for attorney's fees for defending the matter. On December 8, 1954, the court rendered a tentative memorandum decision, and gave the parties the opportunity of introducing evidence and offering further argument and authorities as an aid to interpretation of the agreement and decree.

On March 17, 1955, the court made its order terminating the monthly payments.

Appellant contends that the order was erroneous because a court may not alter a decree for support based upon a property settlement agreement between the parties which provides for payment of support.

The first question to be determined is whether or not the court below correctly admitted extrinsic evidence to aid in the interpretation of the agreement and divorce decrees. It is clear that such evidence is admissible if there is any ambiguity upon the face of the agreement or decrees as to the nature of agreement. Messenger v. Messenger, 46 Cal.2d 619, 297 P.2d 988; Fox v. Fox, 42 Cal.2d 49, 52, 265 P.2d 881; Flynn v. Flynn, 42 Cal.2d 55, 60, 265 P.2d 865; Tuttle v. Tuttle, 38 Cal.2d 419, 420, 240 P.2d 587. The agreement herein was incorporated in the decree and made a part thereof by reference. The court did not specifically order the parties to comply with all of its terms and provisions. Only certain provisions of the agreement were set forth in the decree and the parties ordered to comply therewith, namely, provisions relating to household furnishings, a life insurance policy, the automobile, custody of the children and visitation rights, monthly payments for support of the wife and support, care and education of the children, the right of the wife to move the family from the state at the expense of the husband, and payment by the husband of all bills, and budget accounts of the parties. There can be no question but that those provisions of the agreement have been merged in the decree, and it appears that the entire agreement was so merged by the incorporation therein. Hough v. Hough, 26 Cal.2d 605, 160 P.2d 15. But regardless of the merger, it must be determined whether the provision relating to the $250 per month payments is on its face a provision for child support and alimony, or a provision that is at least in part a division of the property of the spouses.

The intention of the parties in entering into this agreement is expressed as follows therein:

"Whereas, it is the mutual wish and desire of said parties that a full and final adjustment of all their property rights, interests and claims be had, settled and determined by said parties in this Agreement, including the custody and maintenance of the minor children of said parties.

"Now, therefore, it is agreed that in consideration of the mutual promises, agreements, and covenants contained herein, it is covenanted, agreed, and promised by each party hereto, to and with the other party hereto, as follows:"

Other significant provisions of the agreement are as follows:

"First: That, except as hereinafter specified, each party hereto is hereby released and absolved from any and all obligations and liabilities for the future acts and duties of the other, and that each of said parties hereby release the other from any and all liabilities, debts or obligations of any kind or character incurred by the other from and after this date, and from any and all claims and demands, including all claims of either party upon the other for support and maintenance as wife or husband or otherwise, it being understood that this instrument is intended to settle the rights of the parties hereto in all respects, except as hereinafter provided."

"Fourth: The said parties hereto each hereby waive any and all right to the estate of the other left at his or her death and forever quitclaim any and all right to share in the same of the other, by the laws of succession, and said parties hereby release one to the other all right to be administrator or administratrix or executor or executrix of the estate of the other and hereby release and waive all right to inherit under any will of the other and each of the said parties hereby waive any and all right of homestead in the real property of the other, and said parties hereby waive any and all right to the estate or any interest in the estate of the other for family allowance by way of inheritance, and from the date of this Agreement to the end of the world said waiver of the other in the estate of the other party shall from the date of this agreement be effective and they shall have all the rights of single persons and maintain the same relation of such toward each other."

If the nature of the provision in question can be determined by an examination of the decrees and agreement, then extrinsic evidence could not be admitted to determine that question. The ambiguity which beset the trial judge was the confusion as to what part of the monthly payment was allocable to the children and what part to the wife. The trial court in a tentative memorandum decision shows that aside from the difficulty presented by the above provision, an examination of the agreement showed that it was an integrated agreement having all the indicia relied on in Dexter v. Dexter, 42 Cal.2d 36, 40, 265 P.2d 873. It is my view that the agreement before us is an integrated property settlement agreement and that the amount properly payable to the wife may not be denied her by the court.

Having decided that an ambiguity existed in the provision relating to the payments, extrinsic evidence was received relative to the background of the agreement, the intention of the parties in entering into it, the nature and amount of property owned by the respective parties at the time of its execution. From this evidence the trial judge concluded that the parties understood this to be merely a support provision, and that it did not represent in any way a division of the property.

The most recent pronouncement of the Supreme Court in Messenger v. Messenger, 46 Cal.2d 619, 297 P.2d 988, holds that where the parties have included a waiver in a support provision in such an integrated agreement stating that they will not seek maintenance or support except as provided in the agreement, they are precluded from contending that the provision is for alimony, since an order allowing alimony is subject to revision at any time, and since the waiver is part of the consideration for the husband's agreement, he cannot seek a modification thereof without changing the property settlement agreement. And, see, Helvern v. Helvern, 139 Cal.App. 819, 294 P.2d 482. It is true that the court in the cited case [46 Cal.2d 626, 297 P.2d 992], follows this pronouncement with the statement that "In the absence of conflicting extrinsic evidence as to the meaning of the agreement, the trial court's interpretation of it is not binding on this court." The court then states that some extrinsic evidence was received on the division of the property but holds that the trial court's finding that defendant did not receive a greater part of the community property did not support its conclusion that the support provisions were not a part of the consideration for the division of property. The agreement was for a permanent and lasting division of all their property rights. Since the parties could not know how the court would settle property and support rights the amicable adjustment of all doubtful questions would supply sufficient consideration to support the entire agreement. Furthermore since plaintiff in the Messenger case, as in the case herein, secured her divorce on the ground of extreme cruelty, had the parties not settled their rights by agreement, the court could have awarded plaintiff all of the community property, and less alimony. Hence, it was said the fact that the community property was in the cited case divided equally, had "no bearing on the validity of the provision of the agreement whereby both parties waived all rights to support and maintenance other than as provided herein."

The trial judge, at the time he was endeavoring to solve the problem in this case did not have the benefit of the above decision, nor of that in the recent case of Hopkins v. Hopkins, 46 Cal.2d 313, 294 P.2d 1, which appears to involve a question almost identical with that herein. In the Hopkins case there was a provision for a monthly payment of $150 for support and maintenance of the wife and minor children as a part of an integrated property settlement agreement. It was held that the provision contained a latent ambiguity which could be solved both by reference to other provisions of the decree and by taking evidence of the subsequent acts and declarations of the parties to arrive at a proper division of the amount. Plaintiff wife in the cited case had not remarried, and was held entitled to receive her proportionate share of the $150 per month under the agreement, since in that case the agreement provided that payments to her were to cease upon her remarriage.

I hold that the trial court should follow the procedure in the Hopkins case, supra, and limit the extrinsic evidence to the solution of this question.

In the present case the wife has remarried. The agreement herein did not provide for that contingency, and it might be argued that the parties contracted in regard to the support provision with section 139, Civil Code, as an inherent part of the agreement for support, but since the installments as to the wife's share are part of the consideration for the agreement as a whole, they cannot be modified. This court in Lane v. Bradley, 124 Cal.App.2d 661, 665, 268 P.2d 1092, held that in such an agreement where it is not expressly or implicitly provided that such payments cease upon remarriage, section 139, Civil Code, will not apply to effect such termination.

Appellant argues that the minute order of May 22, 1944, denying respondent's motion for modification was res judicata that the decree herein was one for continuous payments as an integrated part of a property settlement agreement. No appeal was taken from that order. That motion for reduction was based not only on the fact that the wife had remarried, but also on the fact that the son, who was still a minor, was about to enter the service. He was then 18 years of age. The son had not yet entered the service, and in May, 1944, there was no way of predicting that if he did, he would remain in the army for three years until he reached majority. Both children were minors, and the court could judicially notice that the cost of living had advanced considerably since this decree was made in 1938. The order does not show on what ground it was denied. It may very well have been denied on the ground that $250 was only an adequate allowance for the needs of the two minors. Section 1911, Code of Civil Procedure provides: "That only is deemed to have been adjudged in a former judgment which appears upon its face to have been so adjudged, or which was actually and necessarily included therein or necessary thereto." And, see, Johnston v. Ota, 43 Cal.App.2d 94, 110 P.2d 507; Beronio v. Ventura County Lbr. Co., 129 Cal. 232, 61 P. 958.

Finally, appellant contends that she was erroneously denied attorney's fees in defending this action. It appears that under the terms of the divorce decree appellant is entitled to payment of counsel fees in defending a suit for modification by the husband, and that her ability to pay has no bearing on the matter. The motion for fees was placed before the court, and the court indicated that it would reserve its decision till later. Since the decree provides that the husband is to pay and indemnify the wife for fees and costs in such action, the court should, in the absence of any evidence offered by the appellant as to what the fee actually was, include a reasonable attorney's fee in the order.

I would reverse the judgment with directions to the trial court to take evidence bearing on the question as to what portion of the $250 payment is allocable to child support as of the date of the decree and to then enter an order modifying the decree by reducing said payment by that amount.

I would order the trial court to enter an order allowing appellant a reasonable attorney's fee for defending the motion here involved.

The PEOPLE of the State of California,
Plaintiff and Respondent,
v.

James RODIS, Defendant and Appellant.
Cr. 2668.

District Court of Appeal, Third District,
California.
Oct. 10, 1958.

Defendant was convicted of burglary in the second degree. The Superior Court, Colusa County, Ben R. Ragain, J., rendered judgment, and defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Peek, J., held that since proof of identity of perpetrator of burglary depended largely upon circumstantial evidence and narcotics had been taken from burglarized drug store, district attorney was properly permitted to question defendant on cross-examination as to whether he was or had been a user of narcotics and to introduce for purposes of impeachment evidence that defendant had stated to sheriff that he had been addicted to use of narcotics, but had used no narcotics for eight months.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Burglary ☞41(1)

Evidence, including defendant's fingerprint on the outside of rear window of burglarized store, more than nine feet above the ground, was sufficient to sustain conviction for burglary in the second degree.

2. Criminal Law ☞552(1)

Facts relating to the guilt of an accused may be established by circumstantial as well as direct evidence.

3. Criminal Law ☞1159(2)

Drawing proper inferences from the evidence is a function of jury, and so long as its conclusions do not do violence to reason or challenge credulity, reviewing court is without power to substitute its finding of the ultimate fact.

4. Criminal Law ☞342

Where proof of identity of perpetrator of burglary depended largely on circumstantial evidence, the issue of motive was important, and where narcotics had been taken from special, locked compartment in burglarized drug store, evidence that defendant was or had been a user of narcotics was relevant on issue of motive.

5. Criminal Law ☞369(2)

Where proof of identity of perpetrator of burglary depended largely on circumstantial evidence and narcotics had been taken from special, locked compartment in burglarized drug store, permitting district attorney to ask defendant on cross-examination, over objection of his counsel, whether defendant was or had been a user of narcotics was not improper, even though such question called for an answer which might indicate other criminal offenses.

6. Witnesses ☞390

Where narcotics had been taken from special locked compartment in burglarized drug store and defendant, on cross-examination, denied that he was or had been a user of narcotics, evidence that in conversation with sheriff following arrest, defendant stated that he had been addicted to use of narcotics, but had used no narcotics for eight months, was admissible for purpose of impeachment.

Peter M. Koutchis, George E. Paras, Sacramento, for appellant.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., by G. A. Strader, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

PEEK, Justice.

This is an appeal by defendant from a judgment of conviction of the crime of burglary in the second degree.

On the evening of June 7, 1955, when LaMotte H. Stinson left his drug store in Arbuckle, all of the doors and windows were intact and locked. The following morning when he opened the store he discovered that several radios, electric shavers, pens, cigarette lighters and watches were missing. He then examined the separate case where the narcotics were kept under lock and found that it had been opened and the contents taken. The safe had also been opened and approximately $600 to $700 was missing. The total value of all of the property taken amounted to approximately $1,500, the narcotics being valued at approximately $500. One or two of the panes in a window at the rear of the store had been previously broken and cardboard inserted in place of the broken panes. This window was covered with a screen on the outside and was approximately nine feet above the ground. The screen showed that it had been torn off from the outside and that entry into the drug store had been made by removing some of the cardboard. The lock on the back door had been broken from the inside. A deputy sheriff of Colusa County investigated the scene on the morning of June 8 and found a fingerprint on the outside of the window. The fingerprint was removed by a process known as "transo-lift" which consists of dusting the fingerprint with a powder, placing a piece of Scotch tape over the print and then removing it. Following the arrest of the defendant his fingerprints were taken and were compared by a technician in the State Bureau of Criminal Identification who testified he had found them to be identical. One of the radios was recovered in a pawn shop in Sacramento and traced to two individuals who were in no way connected with the defendant herein, nor were they prosecuted. The defendant's mother, brother and sister-in-law all testified that on the night in question defendant stayed at the home of his brother and sister-in-law in Sacramento; that he was last seen at approximately 2 a.m.; that he was still asleep at the hour of approximately 6 a.m.; and that he could not have left the house without the knowledge of the brother or sister-in-law. The defendant testified in his own behalf and denied ever having been in Arbuckle. Upon cross-examination he was asked by the district attorney if he had ever been addicted to the use of narcotics. Over the objection of his counsel, the prosecution was allowed to introduce a conversation with Sheriff Mayfield in which the defendant stated that he had once been an addict but had used no narcotics for approximately eight months. At the close of the prosecution's case, the defendant moved for a directed verdict, and at the close of defendant's case a similar motion was made, both of which were denied.

It is defendant's contention that the evidence was insufficient to justify the verdict; that the court committed prejudicial error in admitting over his objection evidence relative to his prior addiction; and that the court erred in denying his motion for a new trial.

[1] Defendant's argument in support of his first contention is essentially that the mere showing of a fingerprint on the outside of the rear window of the store is insufficient to sustain a conviction of burglary in the second degree. It is true, as he contends, that in each of the cases cited and relied upon by the State, something more than fingerprints of the defendant was presented. But that is also true in the present case. Here the print appeared upon the outside of a window at the rear of the drug store, which window was more than nine feet from the ground and protected by a screen on the outside; therefore, to gain access to the store through that window it was necessary for the person so doing to first obtain a ladder or other means to reach that height, and then to remove the screen before the window could be opened. Certainly such a factual circumstance removes the case from one wherein the fingerprints in question appeared upon an object more readily accessible than a window more than nine feet from the ground. Likewise such a situation is entirely different from that presented in the case of People v. Flores, 58 Cal.App.2d 764, 137 P.2d 767, the sole case cited and relied upon by defendant. It follows that under such circumstances the jury was entitled to draw the inference that the fingerprint left on the outside of the window was made by the defendant in burglarizing the store.

[2,3] It is well settled that a fact or facts relating to the guilt of an accused may be established by circumstantial as well as by direct evidence. The right to draw proper inferences from the evidence is a function of the jury, and so long as its conclusions do not do violence to reason or challenge credulity, an appellate court is without power to substitute its finding of the ultimate fact. People v. Richards, 74 Cal.App.2d 279, 168 P.2d 435.

[4-6] Defendant's second contention is equally without merit. Specifically he was asked, "Are you or have you been a user of narcotics?" Counsel's objection to the question was overruled, and the defendant testified, "No, sir." Thereafter, for the purpose of impeachment and as noted above, the prosecution introduced evidence that the defendant in the course of a conversation with Sheriff Mayfield following his arrest, stated that he had been addicted to the use of narcotics, but that he had quit eight months before. We find no error in such interrogation by the district attorney. Here the evidence showed that a narcotic had been taken from a special, locked compartment; hence proof of the fact that defendant was or had been a user of narcotics would be evidence of the value of the drug to him as a user or as a seller, and hence was relevant on the issue of motive. The fact that such a question as was propounded by the district attorney called for an answer which might indicate other criminal offenses, did not of itself render the question improper or the evidence irrelevant. Again, as the court noted in the Richards case, the issue of motive is important, particularly in a case where the identity of the perpetrator of the offense is based largely on circumstantial evidence. The court there stated, "While motive constitutes no element of the crime itself, it must be conceded that in cases where circumstantial evidence is largely relied upon for conviction, as in this case, then motive becomes a matter of most earnest inquiry. 74 Cal.App.2d 279, 289-290, 168 P.2d 435, 442. Although such evidence as was elicited herein might be subject to argument as to remoteness, it cannot be said that under all of the circumstances it was irrelevant, or that the court erred in allowing its admission.

The judgment is affirmed.

In the Matter of the ESTATE of Jack
H. GREEN, Deceased.*Civ. 21848.*District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 1, California.*Oct. 8, 1956.

Proceeding on objection to compromise which settled action against estate. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Harold P. Huls, J., made its order approving agreement of compromise and objectors appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Doran, J., held that record supported trial court's action in approving compromise by which plaintiffs agreed to pay $300 to estate and to secure release of claim of grantors against estate and to release plaintiffs' claim against estate in exchange for conveyance of property valued at from $12,500 to $15,000.

Order affirmed.

1. Executors and Administrators ⇐269

Approval of a compromise is within discretionary power of administrator and of probate court and upon appeal judgment will not be disturbed unless an abuse of discretion is clearly shown.

2. Executors and Administrators ⇐269

In proceeding on objection to compromise which settled action against estate to enforce a resulting or express trust in property held in decedent's name and by which plaintiffs agreed to pay $300 to estate and to secure release of claim of grantors against estate and to release plaintiffs' claim against estate in exchange for conveyance of property valued at from $12,500 to $15,000, evidence supported trial court's action in approving compromise.

Thomas A. Reynolds, Los Angeles, for appellants.

Ernest R. Mortenson, Pasadena, for respondent.

DORAN, Justice.

The record discloses substantial evidence to the effect that on May 11, 1950, the decedent, Jack H. Green, acquired by grant deed certain vacant property in Arcadia, California, from a brother and sister-in-law, William and Letha Green. The purchase price was $2,500, instalment payments thereon being made by Martha and Stanley DeGroof, and not by decedent. At the time of decedent's death on December 3, 1954, there remained an unpaid balance of $1,289.60.

Construction loans were secured by the decedent and later paid off by the proceeds of a California Department of Veterans purchase contract, instalment payments thereon being made by Martha and Stanley DeGroof, which payments included principal, interest, taxes, and the premium on a policy of life insurance policy on decedent's life. At the decedent's death a balance of $6,937.60 was paid off in full by the life insurance, and on June 10, 1955 the Department of Veterans Affairs conveyed the property to "The Heirs or Devisees of Jack H. Green, Deceased".

It appears that the decedent had executed a purported "Last Will and Testament" which, however, was invalid, having been notarized instead of being attested by witnesses. In this document, introduced in evidence, the decedent states that "The house and lot known as 1600 So. 6th Ave., Arcadia, Calif, although in my name is in fact the property of Constant and Martha DeGroof (who has been my constant companions for a number of years because all monies invested in construction, repair, upkeep, insurances, etc. have been paid by the DeGroofs with not one cent invested by me. The time I have invested in this project was and is a gift to them as a token repayment of care and kind consideration of me by them. Household furnishings are also included on above."

An action was filed by the DeGroofs to enforce in the alternative a resulting or an express trust in the property. The time for the administratrix, decedent's daughter Annetta Green Whiting, to answer or otherwise plead to this action was extended by stipulation in view of pending negotiations for compromise; no pleading was ever filed by the administratrix and a compromise agreement eventually was executed. Appellants, Gladys L. Green, a creditor, and Ernest Green, an heir at law, appeared as objectors at the hearing for approval of the compromise. The matter was thereafter taken under submission, written points and authorities were filed, and the compromise ultimately approved.

In approving the compromise, the trial court found that the value of the property in question was between $12,500 and $15,000; that the DeGroofs had "made payments on the purchase of said property believing that they were the owners of said property", and that Jack L. Green, deceased, "intended to hold title to the real property for the benefit of Stanley and Martha DeGroof". The court further found that "It is to the advantage and benefit of the estate and the parties interested in the estate that the suit (by the DeGroofs) against the Administratrix be compromised and settled", and that the proposed compromise "provides for a fair and reasonable settlement for said litigation".

The compromise thus approved, and which is objected to by appellants, provides that the DeGroofs shall pay to the Estate of Jack H. Green, the sum of $300, and that the administratrix shall convey the property by grant deed to the DeGroofs. It is further provided that the DeGroofs shall hold the estate "harmless from any and all liability to William and Letha Green or for their account which * * * may have arisen by reason of the purchase of said property and * * * shall be required by secure * * * a full and complete release by said parties of any and all claims that said parties have filed against the estate". The DeGroofs "further release their Creditor's Claim heretofore filed against the estate".

It is appellants' contention that before a compromise is approved, it must appear that it is "of advantage and benefit to the Estate and those interested therein, that the administratrix in proposing it is exercising good sound business judgment and is not actuated by sentiment". More specifically, appellants argue that the consideration received "should be adequate and when it appears that the Estate is to receive $300 for clear property having a value of from $12,500 to $15,000, the inadequacy of such consideration in and of itself is sufficient to reverse the order approving such a compromise".

Appellants further affirm that "The power to compromise does not include the power to make presents"; that in the present case, "under the guise of compromise", the administratrix is merely seeking to carry out the provisions of "decedent's abortive will". In this connection it is said that the administratrix did not sufficiently investigate or "impartially appraise the DeGroof's litigation"; that the court "did not evaluate" such litigation, and that "it is apparent that said action could be successfully defended".

[1,2] In view of the state of the record, the appellants' contentions must be deemed untenable. As stated in Re Estate of Vedder, 121 Cal.App.2d 402, 406, 263 P.2d 59, 62, the approval of a compromise "is within the discretionary power of the administrator and of the probate court, and upon appeal the judgment will not be disturbed unless an abuse of discretion is clearly shown". In the instant case, no such abuse of discretion has been shown. On the contrary, the record affords substantial evidence in support of the trial court's action.

The situation is not, as appellants contend, a mere matter of giving away estate property valued at from $12,500 to $15,000 for the small sum of $300, which would, indeed, shock the conscience. If, as the proof indicates, the property in question was paid for by the DeGroofs, and because of such payment was considered by the decedent to be "in fact the property of Constant and Martha DeGroof", it was not in equity and good conscience a proper asset of the decedent's estate but, as the trial court found, a situation where the decedent "intended to hold title to the real property for the benefit of" the DeGroofs. As pointed out in the respondent's brief, in the case of a resulting trust or an express trust, defense to the DeGroof's action would be difficult if not impossible.

The trial court had before it and considered both oral and documentary evidence; a fair and full hearing was had, and it cannot be said that the order approving the compromise was unreasonable or arbitrarily entered.

The order is affirmed.

v.

CITY OF SONORA, a Municipal Corporation of the Sixth Class, Defendant and Respondent.

Civ. 8797.

District Court of Appeal, Third District, California.

Sept. 28, 1956.

Rehearing Denied Oct. 23, 1956.

Hearing Denied Nov. 21, 1956.

Suit to enjoin city from collecting annual service charge for sewer use. The Superior Court, Tuolumne County, J. A. Smith, J., denied the relief sought, and plaintiff appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Peek, J., held that, construed in light of record, judgment declaring landowner residing outside city limits to be entitled to make "connections" with city sewer line traversing his property "free and clear of any costs, charges, taxes or license fees" entitled landowner to "use" system as well as to "connect" therewith; and held that even though no charge for use of system (as distinguished from connection charge) was being made prior to time when such judgment was entered, it was conclusive against city's right to make use charge under ordinance thereafter enacted.

Reversed and remanded with directions.

1. Constitutional Law ☞121(2)

Municipal Corporations ☞120

County residents not living within corporate limits of city did not constitute a class amenable to any ordinance passed by city council; and city, having agreed to allow such a county resident right to connect with sewer system, in exchange for right of way, could not, by ordinance, impair contract.

2. Judgment ☞524

Every judgment must be construed with relation to particular matter before court for adjudication.

3. Declaratory Judgment ☞390

Construed in light of record, judgment declaring landowner residing outside city limits to be entitled to make "connections" with city sewer line traversing his property "free and clear of any costs, charges, taxes or license fees" entitled landowner to "use" system, as well as to "connect" therewith; and even though no charge for use of system (as distinguished from connection charge) was being made when such judgment was entered, it was conclusive against city's right to make use charge under ordinance thereafter enacted.

Ross A. Carkeet, Sonora, for appellant.

William C. Coffill, Sonora, for respondent.

PEEK, Justice.

On April 18, 1936, plaintiff's predecessor in interest granted to the defendant city a right-of-way through grantor's land for a distance of approximately 1,800 feet for the purpose of installing the main sewer line to defendant's primary treatment plant. Among other things, the agreement provided that as a part of the consideration for the granting of the right-of-way, the city would construct, at its expense, two "Y" branches, one near the grantor's home and the other at whatever point on his property he might select, each branch to be sufficient in size to service as many dwellings as could reasonably be expected to be built upon the premises. At the time of the execution of the agreement it was the practice of the city to charge the one sum of $50 for any sewer connection made outside of the city limits. Subsequently this charge was progressively raised until it reached the sum of $300 per connection. During this same period, however, no monthly or other periodical charge was made by the city for use of the system.

Approximately five years after the right-of-way agreement was executed, a dispute arose between plaintiff and defendant concerning the provisions of said agreement, and plaintiff filed an action seeking a declaration of the rights and obligations of the parties thereunder. At the conclusion of the hearing upon the issues so raised, the court specifically found that in consideration of the grant of right-of-way, the city was to install two connections of sufficient size as necessary to care adequately for such amount of sewage as might reasonably be expected to result from such number of houses or dwelling quarters as might reasonably be built "within a reasonable service area." The court then concluded that by virtue of the right-of-way agreement, the grantor became entitled to the "use" of two "Y" connections "for the purpose of disposing of the sewage which might reasonably be expected to result from" the houses that might reasonably be built on the land, "said sewage to flow into the city main sewer line" through said connections. The judgment which was thereafter entered followed generally the findings and conclusions and held that "the right of plaintiff to make such connections and service such number of dwellings through each of said two six-inch 'Y' connections" was "independent of and free and clear of any costs, charges, taxes, or license fees levied by the resolutions, laws or ordinances of said defendant City of Sonora, a Municipal Corporation, for the connection of sewer lines from dwelling houses lying outside the corporate limits of the said City of Sonora, a municipal corporation, to the sewage disposal system of said defendant city; and subject only to the requirement that no lateral line shall be connected to either of said two six-inch 'Y' connections * * *" except upon notice in writing to the clerk of said city.

Thereafter plaintiff installed lateral lines and connected the same to the defendant's main line in accordance with the agreement as found by the court. Although numerous houses were thereafter built in said area and so connected, no charges were made or collected by the defendant for the use of said system from August 26, 1941, the date the judgment was entered, until June 15, 1953. On that date, by resolution, the defendant city adopted an ordinance wherein it was provided that an annual charge of $24 would be levied against each user occupying a one-family dwelling outside of its corporate limits. Plaintiff thereupon filed his present action for an injunction, and from the judgment which was thereafter entered in favor of defendant he now appeals.

Plaintiff, in his attack upon the judgment, contends that a valid contract was entered into between the defendant city and his predecessor in interest by which the one granted a right-of-way across his lands in consideration of the right to connect with and use the system, and that the judgment in the prior action was a complete adjudication of such rights and obligations of the parties under the contract. In answer to plaintiff's contention, defendant first relies upon the rule that the building and maintenance of a sewage system by a political body is an exercise of its police power which cannot be bartered away, and second that in any event it was only the right to connect with the system as distinguished from the right to use the system that was adjudicated in the prior proceeding, and hence the city was free to levy the service charge as it did.

[1] While in the abstract it may be said that defendant's first argument is a proper generalization of the rule, nevertheless we find no such question involved in the present proceeding. Although the installation of the sewage system was quite obviously an exercise of the police power of the defendant city for the public health and welfare of its residents, that is not to say that it was a like proceeding for the benefit of those persons residing outside of its corporate limits. Paraphrasing what we said in Hobby v. City of Sonora, 142 Cal.App.2d 457, 298 P.2d 578, neither plaintiffs nor all other residents of Tuolumne County constitute a class amenable to any ordinance passed by the Sonora City Council. The defendant city could no more compel plaintiff here, as a resident of the county, to connect with the sewer than could plaintiff compel the city to extend its lines into county territory and allow county residents to connect therewith. The system is wholly owned by one political subdivision, the city of Sonora; the plaintiff is a resident of another, the County of Tuolumne. The right-of-way across plaintiff's land could only have been acquired in one of two ways—either by condemnation or by contract. In the present case it may have been that the city, in lieu of condemnation of the property of plaintiff and payment to him of the damages which necessarily would have flowed therefrom or for one of many other reasons, decided in its discretion to escape what might have been a long and costly proceeding and to accomplish the same purpose by an agreement, i. e., that for the right to possess and use a way across plaintiff's land for the construction and maintenance of its sewer, it would give to plaintiff the right to connect with and to use the sewer. Its act in so doing could in no sense be said to have been an invalid exercise of its power to contract. And having entered into a valid contract, it could not,

by ordinance, impair the same. City of Los Angeles v. Los Angeles City Water Co., 61 Cal. 65.

[2,3] Our conclusion as to the first contention necessarily points up defendant's second contention; that is, even if the contract was valid it only contemplated the right to connect with the system—not to the use of the system for the flowage of sewage therein; that such was the conclusion of the trial court in the prior case, and hence the defendant city could validly levy the charge here in question. The uncertainty, if it be such, in the present case would appear to stem from use of the word "connect" in the judgment in the prior action. However reference to what we have heretofore quoted from that proceeding would appear to dispel that uncertainty. Furthermore, the rule is well established that "* * * every judgment must be construed with relation to the particular matter before the court for adjudication." Newport v. Superior Court, 192 Cal. 92, 94, 230 P. 168, 169. It is the further rule that when a question of interpretation of a judgment has arisen, reference may be had to the whole record. 28 California Jurisprudence 2d, Sec. 77, page 713. Here the court found that plaintiff was entitled to connect with the system and concluded this meant the use of the two "Y" connections for the disposal of sewage which could reasonably be expected from the building of the houses contemplated, and the judgment declared that the right so granted by the easement was "free and clear of any costs, charges, taxes, or license fees, levied by the resolutions, laws or ordinances" of the defendant city.

Necessarily, therefore, since the contract was a valid exercise of the city's right of contract to provide adequate sewage facilities for its residents; and since the city could not impair its valid contract by ordinance, City of Los Angeles v. Los Angeles City Water Co., 61 Cal. 65; and further since the rights of the parties to that contract were previously adjudicated by a judgment long since become final, this court is bound by the determination made therein.

The judgment is reversed, and the cause is remanded with instructions to enter judgment in favor of plaintiff as prayed.

The PEOPLE of the State of California,
Plaintiffs and Respondents,

v.

Raymond MAAS, Defendant and Appellant.
Cr. 5625.

District Court of Appeal, Second District,
Division 2, California.

Oct. 11, 1956.

Defendant was convicted of feloniously burning grass, woods, brush-covered land, and slashing, which were not his property. The Superior Court of San Luis Obispo County, Charles F. Blackstock, J., entered judgment and an order denying motion for new trial, and defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Moore, P. J., held that evidence was sufficient to establish the corpus delicti, so as to warrant the introduction of defendant's confession, that evidence sustained conviction, and that testimony of experts to effect that fire was of incendiary origin was properly admitted over objection that such testimony invaded the province of the jury.

Judgment and order affirmed.

1. Criminal Law ☞517(4)

In prosecution for feloniously burning grass, woods, brush-covered land, and slashing, which were not defendant's property, only slight evidence of the corpus delicti was necessary to warrant introduction of confession of defendant.

2. Criminal Law ☞517(4)

In prosecution for feloniously burning grass, woods, brush-covered land, and slashing, which were not defendant's property, evidence of the corpus delicti was not required to connect defendant with the crime in order to warrant introduction of defendant's confession.

3. Criminal Law ☞517(4)

In prosecution for feloniously burning grass, woods, brush-covered land, and slashing, which were not defendant's property, it was necessary only that facts reasonably showed that fire was of incendiary origin in order to prove the corpus delicti so as to warrant introduction of defendant's confession.

4. Criminal Law ☞517(4)

In prosecution for feloniously burning grass, woods, brush-covered land, and slashing, which were not defendant's property, neither a showing as to the identity of the author of the crime nor the method by which the fire was started was an essential of the corpus delicti, so as to warrant introduction of defendant's confession.

5. Criminal Law ☞517(4)

In prosecution for feloniously burning grass, woods, brush-covered land, and slashing, which were not defendant's property, evidence was sufficient to establish the corpus delicti, so as to justify admission of defendant's confession.

6. Fires ☞5

Evidence sustained conviction for feloniously burning grass, woods, brush-covered land, and slashing, which were not the property of the defendant.

7. Criminal Law ☞470

In prosecution for feloniously burning grass, woods, brush-covered land, and slashing, which were not defendant's property, testimony of experts to effect that fire was of incendiary origin was properly admitted over objection that the admission of such testimony invaded the province of the jury.

Fred A. Schenk, Jr., Cayucos, for appellant.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., Elizabeth Miller, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondents.

MOORE, Presiding Justice.

Appeal by defendant from a conviction of having feloniously burned grass, woods, brush-covered land and slashing which were not his property, and from the order denying his motion for a new trial. His application for probation having been denied, he was remanded to the custody of the sheriff pending his acceptance by the Youth Authority.

He bases his appeal on two propositions, to wit:

(1) Prejudicial error in the court's refusal to exclude the testimony of the witness Erhart as to appellant's confession prior to a demonstration of the corpus delicti; (2) prejudicial error in allowing expert witnesses to usurp the functions of the jury by allowing such witnesses to testify that in their opinions the fire in Toro Creek Canyon on November 4 was not of accidental origin.

Appellant's Behavior

Before considering the first assignment it is pertinent to observe defendant's contradictory situations resulting from his extrajudicial utterances and his testimony on the stand. Ten days after the fire he made a free and voluntary statement concerning his movements on the day of the fire to Mr. Henry Erhart and the deputy district attorney. He told them that on November 3 in the fifteen-cent store at Atascadero he purchased two candles, took them home and burned one to see how long it would endure; that on the morning of the fourth, about eight o'clock, he drove his car to Toro Creek Canyon, placed one of his candles in the brush and grass, wrapped paper around it, fifteen feet from the road, lighted it and returned home where he remained until ten o'clock; he then visited his grandmother's home where he picked apples until 12 noon when he saw smoke rising at the place he had set the candle.

Appellant accompanied Mr. Erhart, Mr. Dresser, a ranger, and Deputy Sheriff Miller to Atascadero in quest of the variety of candle he had used in Toro Creek Canyon to start the fire. He pointed to orange-colored candles, 18 inches long, two in a box. They returned to his grandmother's place and walked toward the locale of the fire. He finally designated the scene of his crime and told the officers he had set fire to the grass with the candle because he was mad at his uncle. He said the fire was on Baldwin's land.

Appellant conferred with Deputy Probation Officer Woods prior to the opening of the trial. At Woods' request, the boy told the officer that he left his work, drove to the canyon, set the candles in the bush, returned to his grandmother's and picked apples until he saw the smoke; that he then vainly attempted to communicate with the fire station at Santa Margarita; that he jumped on one of the trucks and went to the fire and fought it. He described to Woods how he took a piece of newspaper, punched a hole through it, poked it down in a bush on Baldwin's land so that, as the candle burned down, it would ignite the paper; that he did it to get even with Baldwin who had made him promises but never did "come across with them."

Appellant had been a companion of Francis Tillman as fire fighter in the State Forestry Service at Santa Margarita Station. On four or five occasions during their joint operations, appellant told Tillman that he liked to start fires; liked to see them burn and make the job last longer; that he said a candle might be used to start a fire so that one might have four hours to get out. All such conversations preceded November 4, 1955, but the witness thought he "was just kidding."

Corpus Delicti Was Proved

Such confessions or admissions and statements were resisted when offered by the prosecution on the ground that the corpus delicti had not been established. A review of the circumstances of the fire discloses that a crime was committed in Toro Canyon on November 4, 1955, and that the conduct of appellant and his admissions connect him with that crime.

While it is true that appellant at his trial denounced his admissions made to the officials and to Tillman, and explained that he had admitted his guilt because he was getting homesick and could not get in touch with anybody, yet, the conflicts in his admissions and his testimony are not material in view of the fact that the sufficiency of the evidence to support the judgment is not an issue.

In the absence of direct testimony to prove that a crime was committed on November 4, 1955, in Toro Canyon, it is necessary to detail the movements of appellant on the day of the fire as well as the facts relating to the climatic and atmospheric conditions obtaining in the vicinity of Toro Canyon November 4, 1955.

Mute Evidences

Appellant resided with his parents in Toro Canyon. Their home was upstream from that of Mrs. Baldwin, mother of Mrs. Maas, who lived with her son Richard, and below them was the Manuel Roza ranch home. November 3rd and 4th were appellant's days off from his place of employment by State Division of Forestry at the Santa Margarita fire fighting station.

Noel Dodd who worked for the Standard Oil Company went to Toro Canyon at 5:30 a. m. on November 4 to check pressure on the oil line. He remained at one place about 20 feet from the road until noon. He saw no automobiles enter the area but he believed Mrs. Maas' car left it.

Manuel Roza had two dogs that always barked at strange cars on the adjacent roadway, but there was no such incident on the morning of the 4th. About noon Manuel noticed the smoke from the burning area. He rode a horse to the fire, saw no one and returned home. At the same time, Jack Batson, a fire fighter with the Federal Forest Service, was notified that there was a fire. He arrived at the scene at 12:45 p. m. on the northwest side of Toro Creek road, found no one near but observed that about one hundred acres had burned. Robert Righetti of the Federal Forest Service arrived at Toro Creek at 1:00 p. m. On his way he saw appellant at his grandmother's ranch about a quarter of a mile from the fire, standing by a blue automobile. Righetti parked his conveyance near the truck which had been driven to the scene by Jack Batson and drove the truck down the canyon in search of a bulldozer to operate on the ridge tops. He observed fresh tire tracks on the road made by a common, commercial tire unlike the tires used by the Forest Service cars. In driving down the canyon to Roza's place, Righetti found the two gates closed and he observed that the three-mile area south of the fire was rugged, steep and covered with luxuriant brush through which people do not ordinarily travel.

When Mr. Dalen, Assistant for the United States Forest Service, arrived at the fire about 1:00 p. m., he concluded that the fire had originated in the flat area adjacent to the Toro Creek Road.

The facts that Mr. Dodd saw the Maas car leave the premises, that both Mr. and Mrs. Maas testified they had not gone down the canyon past the Baldwin ranch that morning, and Mr. Dresser opined that only one car had been present before Mr. Batson arrived at 1:00 p. m. are persuasive evidence of appellant's having preceded the fire fighters to the area of the vicinity of the fire which was rough, rocky and inaccessible.

Appellant knew the territory intimately. He saw smoke rising from the Toro Canyon about noon. He telephoned his mother on the Baldwin-Maas local wire, went some distance for a telephone to call his father, then tried to call Santa Margarita Station (which had closed for the season), then made his way to the fire where he spent the rest of the day fighting the blaze. But on the 14th of November he confessed to the witness Erhart that he had started the fire.

Atmospheric and Topographical Evidence

That a fire could not have started from a cigarette stump, a cinder from an exhaust or from sunlight through a glass is a reasonable conclusion from the facts given in evidence. It was established that the temperature in the canyon was 74 degrees and the humidity was 33. No lightning had occurred that day or during the two days preceding; the fire danger index of the San Luis Obispo area on November 4, 1955, was 15 which means that a fire could not have started easily. Competent witnesses who were there about 1:30 p. m. testified that the fire had not resulted from accidental means but had been caused by human agency. It was proved that in a rough, isolated area, with climatic conditions as they were, it would have been extremely difficult for a fire to start in the grasses and brush from any ordinary, accidental cause. Searches were vainly made at the fire's origin for burnt matches, cigarette stumps and glass.

It was the opinion of Maurice L. Davis, Forest Fire Dispatcher for the California Division of Forestry, that the temperature and humidity of the Toro Creek are basically the same as that of the City of San Luis Obispo Fire Station during November. Records are kept by the United States Forest Service at San Luis Obispo for the purpose of determining a fire danger index. They are used to ascertain existing conditions. The index is based upon the wind, its temperature and the humidity content of the fuel. The index rating is made out every day of the fire season, and that included November 4. The fire danger index for Toro Creek was 14 on November 3, 1955, which was a medium fire danger. On November 4, the fire danger index was 15, under which condition a fire does not start easily from accidental means. While the temperature and humidity at Toro Creek were not taken on November 4, Mr. William T. Dresser, Chief Ranger, was there. He testified that at 1:30 p. m. he observed the general weather conditions and was of the opinion that the fire had not resulted from accidental means but had its origin with human agency; that it was in an isolated area, not generally used, was topographically inaccessible and the humidity was relatively high, which rendered it difficult for a cigarette stump or a spark to ignite the living or dead grass or thicket. Nolan O'Neal, a university graduate who had worked for the Forest Service of California for twenty years, was familiar with Toro Creek Canyon, and testified that with a humidity of 33 and a temperature of 74 a lighted cigarette stub would not have ignited the grasses and light brush; that they would have absorbed enough moisture to require an open flame to start a fire.

Admission of Confession Not Error

Appellant vainly insists that it was prejudicial error to admit evidence of his confession prior to the receipt of proof of the corpus delicti. The answer to such contention is that the record abounds in competent proof of a burning of the grasses and thickets in Toro Canyon on November 4, 1955, by a human agency. Since it could not have resulted from accident, it necessarily was the fruitage of purpose and appellant came forth to say that he was the author of the holocaust at the designated time and place.

[1-4] It requires but slight evidence of the corpus delicti to warrant the introduction of a confession and it need not connect the accused with the crime. People v. Day, 71 Cal.App.2d 1, 3, 161 P.2d 803; People v. Fierro, 58 Cal.App.2d 215, 220, 136 P.2d 94; People v. Seymour, 54 Cal.App.2d 266, 275, 128 P.2d 726; People v. Hubbell, 54 Cal.App.2d 49, 57, 128 P.2d 579. It is necessary only that the facts reasonably show that fire was of incendiary origin. People v. Hays, 101 Cal.App.2d 305, 311, 225 P.2d 600. Such crimes are usually established by circumstantial evidence. People v. Hays, supra; People v. Sherman, 97 Cal.App.2d 245, 249, 217 P.2d 715. Also, neither the identity of the author of the crime is an essential of the corpus delicti, People v. Chan, Chaun, 41

Cal.App.2d 586, 589, 107 P.2d 455, nor is the method by which the fire was started. People v. Hays, supra.

[5,6] In view of the proof that no lightning had struck in the canyon for three days, that the atmospheric conditions there rendered accidental ignition of the grass by a spark, a cast-off match or stub utterly improbable, that the fire started in an isolated, rough area, it would be unreasonable not to find that the fire had its genesis in the mind and from the hand of a purposeful human being. Moreover, the testimony of Mr. Maas that he left home at 7:00 a. m. by the upper road out of the Toro Canyon, of Mrs. Maas that she had not gone past the Baldwin place the morning of the fire, of Richard Baldwin that he left Toro Canyon at 6:45 a. m., of Mr. Roza who lived nearest to the site of the initial fire and testified that he was in his home painting and that his alert dogs did not bark prior to noon, of the Standard Oil employee who testified that he went to work at 5:30 a. m. at a point within 20 feet of the road and continued there until noon without seeing any car come into the area—only the Maas car go out, the stage is set and all the props are in order to view the advent of the villain. Proof of his identity by circumstantial evidence is unnecessary. He marches to the center of the stage and announces that he is Raymond Maas; that he started the fire in Toro Canyon, that he was resentful toward his uncle and by his arson had evened the grudge. The confession was properly admitted and it completed the circle of proof and warranted the judgment of conviction.

[7] Appellant insists that the testimony of the experts to the effect that the fire was of incendiary origin invaded the province of the jury and was error because it was concerning a matter upon which persons of common understanding could have formed an intelligent judgment. In George v. Bekins Van & Storage Co., 33 Cal.2d 834, 843, 205 P.2d 1037, 1044, it was held that the "possible causes of warehouse fires are sufficiently beyond the common experience of the ordinary judge or juror to justify the admission of expert opinion testimony on that issue." It is not likely that a juror has had sufficient experience to gauge the probabilities of natural combustion solely by reason of information relative to the material burnt, the temperature and humidity of the area and to its topographical features.

The judgment and the order denying the motion for a new trial are affirmed.

Civ. 5439.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District,
California.

Oct. 8, 1956.

Action for personal injuries sustained by plaintiff when he fell off 28 inch high scaffold after defendant started a winch and moved a ship which plaintiff was painting. The Superior Court, San Diego County, William A. Glen, J., entered judgment for plaintiff and he appealed, requesting a new trial on the element of damages only. The District Court of Appeal, Griffin, J., held that an award of $500 damages to plaintiff who suffered sickness of the stomach, pain in the neck and lower spinal region, contusions of his back and shoulders, inability to do heavy work, and $149 in doctor, hospital and X-ray bills, was not grossly inadequate.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Trial ☞89

Where there was no attempt on part of counsel for plaintiff to have a doctor attempt to segregate injuries caused by other accidents in which plaintiff was involved from the injuries sustained in the accident for which suit in which doctor was testifying was brought, and there was no indication that the doctor could segregate such injuries, doctor's testimony was properly stricken.

2. Damages ☞130(4)

Award of $500 damages to a man who suffered sickness of the stomach, pain in the neck and lower spinal region, contusions of his back and shoulders, inability to do heavy work, and $149 in doctor, hospital and X-ray bills, was not grossly inadequate.

Clinton F. Jones, Escondido, for appellant.

McInnis, Hamilton & Fitzgerald, San Diego, for respondent.

GRIFFIN, Justice.

This is an appeal by plaintiff from a judgment against defendant Warren H. Powers, doing business as Coronado Marine Ways, in the sum of $500, on the ground that the damages awarded were grossly inadequate. Plaintiff requests that a new trial be granted on the element of damages only.

Defendant operated a yard wherein boats were towed from the water on cradles by means of a rail and a power-operated cable winch. Just prior to June 4, 1951, plaintiff's fishing boat (46 ft. in length) was resting on a scaffold on the ways in defendant's yard, on a day-rental basis. He was painting the name on the stern by standing on a scaffold erected on horses 28 inches high. This scaffolding was not visible from the winch. On June 4, 1951, the owner of defendant company, apparently without warning plaintiff, started the winch and plaintiff fell to the ground but landed on his feet, causing some injury to him.

It appears that on November 4, 1951, about five months later, plaintiff was again involved in a serious automobile accident and sustained severe injuries resulting in a Federal Court judgment in his favor in the sum of $12,312.94. It also appears that plaintiff, in 1936 or 1937, was involved in an automobile accident which pulled his shoulder loose and necessitated surgery, i. e., bits of muscle were taken from his leg, holes were bored in his shoulder, and the bones were tied together with the muscle; that in 1949, in Detroit, he fell to the floor across a sawhorse while working on a scaffolding plastering a ceiling. He severely injured his back and was seven weeks in the hospital. He then came to California. In 1951, he was treated by a surgeon in Long Beach and fitted with a back brace. While working on his boat on June 4, 1951, he had been wearing this brace three to four days a week. After the fall on that day he saw a Dr. West or a Dr. Carpenter, who examined him. The doctor stated that there were contusions of his shoulders and back but no treatment was given. He was referred to another doctor for physical therapy for some period but did not complete the course of treatments prescribed. In September, 1952, he was hospitalized in Long Beach as a result of a fall on his fishing boat causing his right leg and right hip to swell. He was later sent to a Marine hospital in San Francisco and was not able to walk or stand. He was paralyzed from the waist down and could not raise his arms. He left the hospital on crutches.

The injuries described by plaintiff, as a result of his fall on June 4, 1951, were sickness of the stomach, coughing causing pain in the neck and lower spinal region, contusions on his back and shoulders, headaches, instability of his right leg, dizziness, impairment of hearing, etc., and inability to do heavy work.

He stated that just before June 4, 1951, he felt well enough to go back to work, had applied for a Union card, and after the claimed accident he went fishing during the summer months but claimed this was with considerable pain. The special damages here claimed were $149 in doctor, hospital and X-ray bills.

The only medical testimony produced by plaintiff as to the particular injury on June 4, 1951, was one doctor who testified that on August 27, 1951, plaintiff came to his office and claimed that his arms felt numb and his shoulders would "crunch and grind", his neck "popped", the grip in his hands was weaker than before the injury, and that upon turning his head "shock" would go down both arms and his back; that the left leg was getting number all the way down; and that he limped on that side. This doctor said X-ray pictures were taken and he found no pathology at all and no change that he could attribute to the injury of June 4, 1951; that plaintiff was worried but did not appear to be in any acute pain; that he observed an old scar on the surface of his right shoulder from a former injury but the shoulder, reflexes, elbows and hands were normal; that plaintiff complained of pain in his back and its motion was limited in all directions about 50 per cent but an electromyelogram was taken and it reflected no nerve disease involving the lower extremities; that he felt there was nothing for him to offer plaintiff so he referred him to a Dr. Werden for examination and opinion; and that he had a report from him on January 7, 1952. Dr. Werden was not called as a witness for plaintiff.

[1] Plaintiff called as his witness a Dr. Greenwood, who never saw plaintiff until April 7, 1954, nearly two and a half years after the automobile accident in November, 1951. He testified in full as to what he found in reference to plaintiff's condition at that time, i. e., plaintiff gave a history of his previous accidents and the doctor was asked the result of his tests. Objection was made because it was impossible for such a witness to testify that the condition found was the result of the boat injury on June 4, 1951. Considerable argument ensued (out of the presence of the jury) and it was conceded that this doctor testified to these same proffered findings in the Federal Court where plaintiff received a judgment for $12,312.94, without the witness endeavoring to segregate the portion of the injuries claimed to have been caused by that automobile accident and that claimed to have been caused by the other accidents. By consent, a limited amount of testimony was allowed as to plaintiff's present condition as disclosed by the examination of Dr. Greenwood. He concluded his testimony with the opinion that plaintiff was then totally disabled and that the only thing that might improve him was a spinal fusion of the two lower vertebrae and that he so testified in the Federal Court without endeavoring to segregate the possible causes of the present condition of plaintiff. The doctor was not asked by counsel for plaintiff if he could so separate the portion of plaintiff's claimed injuries caused by the accident here involved. Thereafter, on a motion to strike this doctor's testimony, the court concluded that from this testimony there was no possible means, except by speculation, by which the jury or the court could segregate them and granted the motion, informing the jury as to his reasons.

The main attack on this appeal is directed to this ruling. Plaintiff cites such authorities as Katenkamp v. Union Realty Company, 36 Cal.App.2d 602, 98 P.2d 239; Ash v. Mortensen, 24 Cal.2d 654, 150 P.2d 876; and California Orange Co. v. Riverside Portland Cement Co., 50 Cal.App. 522, 528, 195 P. 694.

We conclude, under the circumstances of this case, that the ruling of the court was proper. There was no attempt on the part of counsel for plaintiff to have the witness attempt to segregate the injuries caused by the other accidents from the one here involved, and there is no indication that he could do so. From the injuries described by the doctor, another verdict in the same amount allowed in the Federal Court for the same injuries, may well have been returned. To base a verdict upon the testimony of this medical witness as to the amount of the injuries caused by the accident here involved would, indeed, be speculative. The jury was told, in its instructions, that its verdict must be based on competent evidence and it is not allowed to speculate, either on the question of liability or damages.

[2] There was some medical evidence presented, as well as testimony of the plaintiff, as to the injuries he claimed resulted from the instant accident. The jury and the trial judge, on a motion for new trial, fully considered the amount of the award based upon this evidence. Their finding in this respect, from the evidence produced, cannot be disturbed on appeal. Miller v. Pacific Constructors, Inc., 68 Cal.App.2d 529, 157 P.2d 57; Lay v. Pacific Perforating Company, Ltd., 62 Cal.App.2d 233, 144 P.2d 395. Judgment affirmed.

Cr. 1088.

District Court of Appeal, Fourth District,
California.

Oct. 11, 1956.

Defendant was convicted by the Superior Court of San Diego County, John A. Hewicker, J., for statutory rape, and appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Griffin, J., held that evidence was sufficient to support conviction.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Rape \S 261(1)

In prosecution for statutory rape, fact that victim made no complaint or outcry was not determinative of issue of defendant's guilt, but only a circumstance to be considered by trial court. West's Ann.Pen.Code, \S 261, subd. 1.

2. Criminal Law \S 572

Evidence was sufficient to support conviction of statutory rape and justify rejection of defendant's purported alibi by trial court. West's Ann.Pen.Code, \S 261, subd. 1.

Alpha L. Montgomery, San Diego, for appellant.

Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., Doris H. Maier, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

GRIFFIN, Justice.

Defendant and appellant (colored and aged 23 years) was charged with committing statutory rape, Sec. 261, subd. 1 Penal Code upon a white girl, aged 13 years, in two separate counts on two separate occasions. He was convicted by the court sitting without a jury only on one count, i. e., on the date of November 6, 1955, and sentenced to State's prison. The only question presented is the sufficiency of the evidence to support the finding.

The complaining witness claimed that an act of sexual intercourse took place between them on the evening of November 6, 1955, at her home, while her mother was away; that on that occasion she returned a brown leather jacket to him that he had loaned to her on a previous occasion; that previously, on October 14, 1955, she had a similar act of sexual intercourse in defendant's car near Torrey Pines. She testified that another boy (white) now deceased, came to her mother's home to pick her up, and told the mother he was Darnes Johnson; that she and the boy later met the real Darnes Johnson, defendant herein, and the complaining witness and defendant went out together on occasions and would drink white wine. A pelvic examination on November 30, 1955, indicated an old laceration of the hymen but there was no evidence of a fresh injury. The complaining witness testified she made no complaints about these occurrences until approached by a school official about defendant, and the official asked if she had been out with defendant and had intercourse with him; that she first denied it and later she thought defendant had told everything so she did too. She admitted calling defendant on the telephone at his home on several occasions.

The mother of the complaining witness testified she did not know her daughter was going out with defendant but believed it was a white boy who was introduced to her as Darnes Johnson; that the white boy came to her house and picked up her daughter on several occasions; that on one occasion she saw her daughter wearing a brown leather jacket which was not hers.

Defendant produced a witness who testified he was with the defendant on October 14th at a football game at the time indicated by the complaining witness, and that the complaining witness was not there. Other witnesses testified in support of this claimed alibi. Defendant denied having sexual intercourse with the complaining witness and said that he had never been in her house and did not know where she lived; that she was in his car on one occasion, with others, in September, 1955; that after she called him on the telephone, which was a common occurrence, on one occasion he suggested they go to a beach party in La Jolla; that he did not take her home; that he had no brown leather jacket but he had a brother-in-law who did, and he wore it sometimes; that he had an address book with her address in it; and that on November 6, 1955, he had been separated from his wife for a short time and on that evening had taken his two children over to his wife's residence from his mother's residence and then returned to his home.

Defendant's wife testified in his behalf and said the complaining witness had called defendant on a dozen occasions; that she called the complaining witness' mother and complained; and that defendant owned a leather jacket in the month of June.

The mother of the complaining witness testified that a voice called over the telephone for the complaining witness on many occasions; that the name given was Darnes; that believing he was the white boy she had met she allowed her daughter to go out on several occasions; that after the preliminary hearing this same voice called and told her if she testified at the trial she would be sorry; that she received a call from one whose voice sounded like Mrs. Johnson, and she was asked if she knew her daughter was going out with defendant, her husband; that she told the mother he was colored and had two children; that the complaining witness' mother complained to the police and they came to see her about it.

Another witness testified he was present in a car with defendant when he picked up the complaining witness and one Lee Evans, a white boy; that he had seen a white girl with defendant on four or five other occasions; and that he just assumed it was the complaining witness.

[1,2] The fact that the victim made no complaint or outcry is not determinative of the issue. It was only a circumstance to be considered by the trial court. Although corroboration is not required, there are surrounding circumstances pointing to the guilt of defendant. There was sufficient evidence to support the conviction and to allow the court to reject the purported alibi of defendant. People v. Meraviglia, 73 Cal.App. 402, 238 P. 794; People v. MacDonald, 167 Cal. 545, 140 P. 256; People v. Stangler, 18 Cal.2d 688, 117 P.2d 321.

Oct. 9, 1956.

Action for divorce. From an order of the Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco, William T. Sweigert, J., denying cross motions by the plaintiff to modify a divorce decree to eliminate support requirement and by the defendant to modify the decree to increase the support of children and to obtain attorney's fees and costs the defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Bray, J., held that wife was not denied due process of law on the ground that she was deprived of the right to produce evidence in support of her motion and that the refusal to modify the decree was not an abuse of discretion under the evidence.

Order affirmed.

1. Constitutional Law ⇨314

On cross motion by husband to modify divorce decree for payment of $50 per month alimony and by wife to modify the decree to increase the support for children, wife was not denied due process on the ground that she was allegedly deprived of the right to produce evidence in support of her motion.

2. Divorce ⇨296, 312.6(4)

The granting and refusing of support in divorce actions is largely in the discretion of the trial court, and before the appellate court will interfere it must clearly appear upon the face of the entire record that such discretion has been abused.

3. Divorce ⇨309

Evidence did not establish an abuse of discretion by the trial court in refusing to modify the decree of divorce by increasing the support for children awarded to the wife.

4. Divorce ⇨188, 223

The awarding of attorney's fees and costs in divorce actions is largely in the discretion of the trial court. West's Ann. Civ.Code, § 137.5.

5. Divorce ⇨223, 312½

On motions in divorce action to modify provisions of decree respecting support of children of the parties, denial of attorney's fees and costs to the wife was not an abuse of discretion. West's Ann.Civ. Code, § 137.5.

Phil F. Garvey, San Francisco, for appellant.

P. J. Kearns, San Francisco, for respondent.

BRAY, Justice.

The trial court denied cross motions (1) by the plaintiff to modify a decree of divorce granted December 15, 1953, by eliminating therefrom the requirement that he pay defendant $50 per month alimony, and by transferring the physical custody of the two minor children of the parties to him (the legal custody is in both parties), and (2) by defendant to modify the decree to increase the support of each child from $55 to $75 per month and to obtain attorney's fees and costs. Defendant appeals.

Questions Presented.

1. Was defendant denied due process of law?

2. Did the court abuse its discretion in denying (a) the increase in support, (b) attorney's fees and costs?

1. Due Process.

There is no merit to this contention. The hearing of both motions began by the court suggesting that plaintiff's motion be heard first. (It was filed first.) Defendant made no objection. Plaintiff without objection examined defendant as to her income and living situation. Defendant's counsel then examined her on the same subject. Plaintiff was then examined in his own behalf and cross-examined by defendant. A couple of times during this cross-examination the court stated that it appeared from the testimony of the parties that plaintiff was not in a position to pay more money for the support of the children. In each instance, however, the court said his statement was without prejudice to further examination of plaintiff by defendant or the introduction of further evidence. Defendant did further examine plaintiff. When the cross-examination of plaintiff by defendant was concluded, the court stated it was prepared to rule. Both parties testified as to their respective financial situations. The court said, " * * * we have got the picture, I think, don't you think so?" "Now, the wife, as I understand it, the wife has a motion here to increase?" All defendant said was that she would like to further cross-examine plaintiff. She did so. Plaintiff submitted the matter. Defendant said nothing. The court then ruled. Defendant did not object to the fact of ruling, nor offer any further evidence, nor request the opportunity to present more evidence or even to argue the matter. The statement in defendant's brief that she was deprived of the right to produce evidence in support of her motion is not borne out by the record. Apparently defendant contends that the court should have ruled first on plaintiff's motion and then heard the evidence all over again on defendant's motion. There is no such requirement of law, and were there, defendant's acquiescence in the court's ruling on both motions without any request for further hearing would prevent her from claiming error. A reading of the record clearly shows that the court and both parties understood that the testimony was to, and did, apply to both motions. There was no deprivation of due process.

2. Discretion.

(a) Support.

Plaintiff's income since the date of the divorce decree has increased only $4 per month. His take home pay is $311 per month. His expenses each month, including the $160 he has regularly paid defendant and the insurance premiums ordered by the decree equal $307 per month, leaving $4.19 per month. He owes debts of approximately $1,300 accumulated during the marriage. He remarried in December, 1953. His present wife earns approximately $190 per month take home pay plus an $18.75 bond every six weeks. He pays part of the rent of their home and of the grocery bills, as does she.

Defendant, at the time of the decree, was unemployed. She now earns $25 per week. She and the children are living in the home awarded her in the decree. She pays $31 per month on an F.H.A. loan for repairs on the house, also $47.32 per month on the lien, subject to which the house was awarded her. One of the children needs orthodontia.

[1-3] That the granting and refusing of support is a matter which lies largely in the discretion of the trial court and that before the appellate courts will interfere, it must clearly and affirmatively appear upon the face of the entire record that this discretion has been abused, is so well settled as not to require the citation of authority. Defendant concedes this by citing Baldwin v. Baldwin, 28 Cal.2d 406, 413, 170 P.2d 670. The evidence here shows one of those unfortunate situations which occur when parties having children are divorced and there just isn't enough money to meet the needs of the children and the parents living separately. It should be pointed out, too, that as far as plaintiff is concerned there has been no appreciable change in his financial situation from what it was at the time of the granting of the decree. Defendant, on the other hand, is now employed. With a $4.19 margin per month with which to meet outstanding bills, we cannot say that the court should have ordered him to pay more support, even though the combined total of defendant's earnings and plaintiff's support payments hardly meet the requirements of two growing children. We see no abuse of discretion here.

(b) Attorney's Fees and Costs.

[4,5] As in the case of support, the awarding of attorney's fees and costs is likewise largely in the discretion of the trial court. Civ.Code, § 137.5. What we have said concerning the absence of enough money to go around to meet an increase in support, applies here. Neither side can afford the payment of attorney's fees and costs. Shortly before this proceeding, plaintiff had made an effort to get sole custody of the children and a court had ordered him to pay defendant $300 attorney's fees and $73 costs in resisting that effort. Apparently the court took this fact into consideration, as well as plaintiff's present inability to pay. We see no abuse of discretion.

The order is affirmed.

Trespass action. From judgment of Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco, Frank T. Deasy, J., resulting from suspension of defendants' demurrer to amended complaint without leave to amend, and from granting of defendants' motion for judgment on the pleadings, plaintiffs appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Draper, J. pro tem., held that where certain counts of complaint alleged that, within past three year period, defendants, upon their own land, had maintained their premises without proper gutters or drainage, so as to deflect rain water from defendants' premises upon those of plaintiffs, and had maintained pipes and furnaces so as to cause emission of noxious odors and fumes upon plaintiffs' property, counts were sufficient, in view of fact that three year statute of limitations did not bar relief, and despite their vulnerability to demurrer for uncertainty.

Judgment reversed with directions.

1. Trespass ⇨40(4)

Where complaint alleged that between certain period, while plaintiffs were absent, defendants had erected walls, foundations, pipes and vents upon plaintiff's property, cause of action was in trespass.

2. Limitation of Actions ⇨55(5)

Where original complaint in trespass action was not filed until more than three years after defendants had allegedly erected walls, foundations, pipes and vents on plaintiffs' property, and such fact appeared from complaint itself, applicable three-year statute of limitations would bar relief. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc., § 338, subd. 2.

3. Limitation of Actions ⇨55(6)

Where encroachments of a permanent nature are erected upon one's land, remedy is by action in trespass for all damages suffered, past as well as prospective, and entire cause of action accrues when trespass occurs. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc., § 338, subd. 2.

4. Nuisance ⇨48

Waters and Water Courses ⇨126(1)

Where certain counts of complaint alleged that, within past three year period, defendants, upon their own land, had maintained their premises without proper gutters or drainage, so as to deflect rain water from defendants' premises upon those of plaintiffs, and that defendants had so maintained pipes and furnaces as to cause emission of noxious odors and fumes upon plaintiff's property, counts alleged maintenance of nuisance. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 3479.

5. Limitation of Actions ⇨178

Where complaint, which alleged maintenance of nuisance by adjoining landowners, alleged that acts occurred within past three year period, statute of limitations was not, on face of complaint, a bar to causes of action so asserted. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc., § 338, subd. 2; West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 3479.

6. Judgment ⇨606

Where landowner maintained his premises without proper gutters or drainage so as to deflect rain water from his premises upon those of adjoining landowner, and also so maintained pipes and furnaces as to cause emission of noxious odors and fumes upon adjoining landowner's property, adjoining landowner could treat other's use of his land as a continuing nuisance, and bring successive actions until it was abated. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 3479; West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc., § 338, subd. 2.

7. Nuisance ⇨48

Waters and Water Courses ⇨126(1)

Where certain counts of complaint alleged that, within past three year period, defendants, adjoining landowners, upon their own land had maintained their premises without proper gutters or drainage, so as to deflect rain water from defendant's premises, upon those of plaintiff, and had so maintained pipes and furnaces as to cause emission of noxious odors and fumes upon plaintiff's property, counts were sufficient to state cause of action, despite their vulnerability to demurrer for uncertainty. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc., § 338, subd. 2; West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 3479.

8. Pleading ⇨343

Issue of res judicata arising from judgment for defendant in prior action involving comparable causes of action, could not be raised upon motion for judgment on the pleadings, where amended complaint contained no reference to any other action, and record contained nothing to show nature of any such action.

9. Pleading ⇨350(3)

On motion for judgment on the pleadings, the court cannot consider any matter outside the complaint.

10. Pleading ⇨225(2)

Though demurrers for uncertainty appeared, at least in part, to have been well taken, where plaintiffs could amend complaint to state proper cause of action, it was abuse of discretion for trial court to sustain special demurrer without leave to amend.

Everett H. Roan, Kenneth L. Johnson, San Francisco, for appellants.

Alfred Del Carló, San Francisco, for respondents.

DRAPER, Justice pro tem.

Defendants' demurrer to the forth amended complaint was sustained without leave to amend, and their motion for judgment on the pleadings was granted. Plaintiffs appeal from the resulting judgment.

[1-3] Appellants and respondents own homes on adjoining city lots. Appellants' first cause of action alleges that between April 1 and July 31, 1950, while appellants were absent, respondents erected walls, foundations, pipes and vents upon appellants' property. This cause of action clearly is in trespass. The original complaint was filed November 3, 1953. The demurrer specified Code of Civil Procedure, section 338, subdivision 2, as one of its grounds. That section fixes three years as the statute of limitations for such an action. Where encroachments of a permanent nature are erected upon one's land, the remedy is by an action in trespass for all damages suffered, past as well as prospective, and the entire cause of action accrues when the trespass occurs. Bertram v. Orlando, 102 Cal.App.2d 506, 227 P.2d 894, 24 A.L.R.2d 899. The demurrer upon the ground of the statute of limitations was therefore properly sustained as to the first count.

[4-6] The three remaining counts of the complaint, however, are based upon different allegations. In these, appellants allege that, within three years last past, respondents, upon their own land, maintained their premises without proper gutters or drainage, so as to deflect rain water from respondents' premises upon those of appellants, and also so maintained pipes and furnaces as to cause the emission of noxious odors and fumes upon appellants' property. Here there is no allegation of trespass. Rather, the offending structures are alleged to be upon respondents' land, and complaint is made, not of their location, but of the use to which they are put. Clearly these counts allege the maintenance of a nuisance by respondents; Dauberman v. Grant, 198 Cal. 586, 246 P. 319, 48 A.L.R. 1244; Willson v. Edwards, 82 Cal.App. 564, 256 P. 239; Civ.Code, § 3479. The statute of limitations is not, on the face of the complaint, a bar to these three causes of action, because it is alleged that the acts occurred within three years. Even if this were not alleged, appellants might treat respondents' use of their own land as a continuing nuisance, and bring successive actions until it was abated. Spaulding v. Cameron, 38 Cal.2d 265, 239 P.2d 625.

[7] Each of the last three counts of the complaint, whatever its vulnerability to demurrer for uncertainty, appears to state facts sufficient to constitute a cause of action. Respondents do not seriously contend to the contrary, but rely upon the statute of limitations to justify the sustaining of the demurrer. As pointed out, the statute does not bar these three causes of action. Thus the general demurrer was improperly sustained as to them.

[8,9] The motion for judgment on the pleadings raised the issue of res judicata. Respondents contend that a 1950 judgment was entered in their favor upon facts comparable to those set forth in one of the causes of action of the present complaint, and that counts comparable to the other causes of action of the present complaint were thereupon dismissed with prejudice.

But such an issue cannot be raised upon a motion for judgment on the pleadings. On such a motion, the court cannot consider any matter outside the complaint. Douglass v. Dahm, 101 Cal.App.2d 125, 224 P.2d 914. The amended complaint here contains no reference to any other action. Further, the record before us contains nothing to show the nature of any such action. The motion for judgment on the pleadings was improperly granted.

[10] The demurrers for uncertainty appear, at least in part, to be well taken. However, as to three counts, we have pointed out that appellants can amend so as to state a proper cause of action. In these circumstances, it is an abuse of discretion to sustain the special demurrer without leave to amend. Guilliams v. Hollywood Hospital, 18 Cal.2d 97, 114 P.2d 1.

The judgment is reversed as to the second, third and fourth causes of action, with directions to the trial court to grant appellants leave to amend as to these counts of their complaint.

1. Criminal Law ⇨982

There is no constitutional or statutory right to hearing preceding revocation of probation, and if such hearing is held, it is not governed by rules concerning formal criminal trials, but on contrary court may revoke probation solely on basis of probation officer's report, there being no right to present witnesses; and constitutional right to have counsel in criminal prosecutions is likewise not applicable, since probation proceeding is not part of a "prosecution". F. A. Silveira, City Atty., by William L. Garrett, Deputy City Atty., Merced, and Edmund G. Brown, Atty. Gen., by Doris H. Maier, Deputy Atty. Gen., for respondent.

SCHOTTKY, Justice.

This is an appeal from a judgment of the Superior Court of Merced County denying a writ of prohibition.

Appellant Herman Wadler was found guilty after a jury trial on two counts of a violation of Penal Code section 415 (disturbing the peace). The Justice Court on February 15, 1955, pronounced "judgment" on each count as follows:

"Wherefore, it is by the Court Ordered and Adjudged that the said defendant H. H. Wadler is guilty of the crime of misdemeanor, to wit: violation of Section 415 of the Penal Code of the State of California and that for said offense, the said defendant is granted probation for the term of one year on the following conditions: 1. That he serve sixty days in the County Jail which sentence is suspended. 2. Obey all laws. 3. Keep honorably employed. 4. That he pay a fine in the sum of $100. * * *

An appeal was taken from the "judgment."

On April 23, 1955, one Antone J. Borba made a citizen's arrest of Mr. Wadler. At the time of the arrest Borba made a charge that Wadler was disturbing the peace, and Wadler was booked on the charge. On April 25, 1955, Mr. Borba signed a complaint charging Wadler with a violation of section 1203.2 of the Penal Code which deals with re-arrest and revocation of probation. A demurrer to the complaint was filed, and Mr. Wadler entered a plea of not guilty to the charge. On May 23, the Justice Court sustained the demurrer and ordered the proceeding stayed to be set at a later date for hearing. After the appeal on Mr. Wadler's original conviction was affirmed, notice was received by Mr. Wadler of a hearing to determine the violation of his probation. At this hearing on June 29, 1955, Mr. Wadler, through his attorney, made certain motions:

1. To dismiss the original charge (under Penal Code, sec. 415) on which he was arrested by Mr. Borba.

2. To dismiss the complaint based on section 1203.2 because a demurrer to the complaint was sustained and no amended pleading was filed within the time provided by sections 1007 and 1008 of the Penal Code, and therefore the court had no jurisdiction to continue.

3. To dismiss the complaint on the ground that the arrest was illegal since section 1203.2 does not provide for arrest by a private citizen.

4. To dismiss the complaint because there was no arrest as provided by the section.

These motions were denied and a hearing was held at which both sides presented evidence.

The record shows that the court then made the following order:

"The Court states that having heard the evidence presented in this matter and studying the Exhibits the finding at this time is that the defendant is guilty of violating Section 1203.2 of the Penal Code in that there was a disturbance in violation of the terms of probation heretofore granted and the probationary terms are changed and the sentence to be imposed upon the defendant is as follows and is pronounced at this time: Probation for the term of one year: 1. Defendant is to serve sixty days in the County Jail on each of the two charges heretofore suspended, which sixty days are to run consecutively. 2. Obey all laws. 3. Keep honorably employed."

Prior to the execution of the sentence Mr. Wadler applied to the Superior Court for a writ of prohibition. An alternative writ issued. The City Attorney of the City of Merced filed an answer on behalf of the respondent Justice Court. Petitioner moved that this answer be stricken because, as he alleged, the City Attorney was without authority to represent respondent. This motion was denied.

Following a hearing on the order to show cause the court made the following order: "The Court orders Writ of Prohibition is denied and further orders that the proceedings in the lower court have been regular and legal."

As grounds for a reversal of the judgment of the Superior Court denying his application for a writ of prohibition, appellant makes the following major contentions:

1. The complaint charging violation of section 1203.2 of the Penal Code should have been dismissed for failure to comply with the provision of sections 1007 and 1008 of the Penal Code;

2. That the complaint for violating Penal Code section 1203.2 failed to state a public offense;

3. That the arrest was not made in conformity with the provisions of section 1203.2;

4. That petitioner did not violate the terms of his probation;

5. That petitioner was never arraigned for judgment;

6. That the judgment contained illegal conditions;

7. That the Superior Court should have granted petitioner's motion to strike respondent's answer;

8. That the judgment of the Superior Court is void because it is not supported by findings of fact or conclusions of law.

Before discussing these contentions we think it well to point out that section 1203.2 of the Penal Code provides in part as follows:

"At any time during the probationary period of the person released on probation in accordance with the provisions of these sections, any probation or peace officer may without warrant, or other process, at any time until the final disposition of the case, rearrest any person so placed on probation under the care of a probation officer, and bring him before the court, or the court may in its discretion issue a warrant for the rearrest of any such person and may thereupon revoke and terminate such probation, if the interests of justice so require, and if the court in its judgment, shall have reason to believe from the report of the probation officer, or otherwise, that the person so placed upon probation is violating any of the conditions of his probation, * * *."

and that section 1203.3 provides in part:

"The court shall have authority at any time during the term of probation to revoke, modify, or change its order of suspension of imposition or execution of sentence."

[1] As stated by our Supreme Court in In re Levi, 39 Cal.2d 41, at page 44, 244 P.2d 403, at page 404:

"There is neither a constitutional nor a statutory right to a hearing preceding revocation of probation. In re Davis, 37 Cal.2d 872, 873-874, 236 P.2d 579. If a hearing is held, it is not governed by the rules concerning formal criminal trials. The court may revoke probation solely on the basis of the probation officer's report. In re Dearo, 96 Cal.App.2d 141, 143, 214 P.2d 585. There is no right to present witnesses. People v. Hayden, 99 Cal. App.2d 97, 99, 221 P.2d 221. The constitutional right to have counsel in 'criminal prosecutions' Art. I, § 13, is not applicable since a probation proceeding is not a part of a 'prosecution.' In re Dearo, supra, 96 Cal.App.2d 141, 143, 214 P.2d 585; People v. Fields, 88 Cal.App.2d 30, 33, 198 P.2d 104."

While it must be stated that proceedings in the Justice Court with regard to the revocation or modification of the terms of probation were somewhat unusual and in large part superfluous, it is also true, as is clear from the authorities hereinbefore cited, that no rights of appellant were invaded in any manner by the procedure in the Justice Court. Section 1203.3 of the Penal Code gives the court authority at any time during the term of probation to revoke, modify, or change its order. Under section 1203.3 the court had authority to do what it did, so the fact that it purported to act under another section is immaterial in a probation proceeding. Section 1203.3 does not require that a probationer be convicted of any crime. The section says the court shall have authority at any time during the term of probation to revoke, modify or change its order. The court in this instance held a hearing at which appellant was represented by counsel and during which evidence was produced from which it could determine that a modification of the probation order was proper.

[2, 3] Appellant also contends that the judgment of the Superior Court is void because it is not supported by findings of fact and conclusions of law. The petition in the Superior Court was for a writ of prohibition. The question presented was whether the Justice Court exceeded its jurisdiction which is a question of law. Section 632 of the Code of Civil Procedure, which is the section which provides for findings of fact and conclusions of law, begins: "In superior courts: * * *, upon the trial of a question of fact by the court * * * the facts found and the conclusions of law must be separately stated * * *." If jurisdiction were a question of fact the superior court would have committed error. But jurisdiction is usually construed to mean the power of a court to hear and determine or power to act in a certain manner. Abelleira v. District Court of Appeal, 17 Cal.2d 280, 109 P.2d 942, 132 A.L.R. 715. A determination of whether the Justice Court could modify the probation order is not the determination of a question of fact within the meaning of section 632 of the Code of Civil Procedure. By its judgment the Superior Court determined the only question before it, namely, whether the Justice Court exceeded its jurisdiction. No findings are required where no issue of fact is decided. In re Estate of Kearns, 129 Cal.App.2d 832, 278 P.2d 85; Wheeler v. Board of Medical Examiners, 98 Cal.App. 267, 276 P. 1119.

No other points raised require discussion.

The judgment is affirmed.

Anna H. COSGROVE and William T. Cosgrove, Defendants and Respondents.

Civ. 16966.

District Court of Appeal, First District,
Division 2, California.

Oct. 8, 1956.

Action to recover damages after purchasers repudiated contract to purchase motel property. From a judgment of the Superior Court, San Mateo County, A. R. Cotton, J., vendor appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Kaufman, J., held that trial court's finding that the market value of the property did not change between the date of first contract and date of resale and vendor suffered no damage, was amply supported by competent and admissible evidence in the record.

Judgment affirmed.

1. Appeal and Error ⇨843(2)

Where trial court's finding that market value of motel property, in a suit to recover damages after purchasers' repudiation of contract, had not declined from the time of the sale to purchaser through the period of a little more than six weeks until the date of the resale, was supported, such finding supported judgment denying relief against purchasers and if other findings were not supported they could be disregarded.

2. Vendor and Purchaser ⇨330

The measure of damages for breach of contract to buy real property is the difference between the contract price and the market price. West's Ann.Civ.Code, § 3307.

3. Vendor and Purchaser ⇨329

In vendor's action to recover damages after purchasers repudiated contract to buy motel property for $117,000, where vendor did not offer proof of any damage other than the difference between the contract price and resale price to subsequent purchaser for $109,796.96, and there was evidence that there had been no decline in real estate values, and that property was not overpriced at $117,000, while each sale price is evidence of value to the owner at the time of each sale, sale prices were not conclusive evidence binding on the trial court, and trial court could draw its own inferences from the evidence.

4. Evidence ⇨142(1)

In vendor's action to recover damages after purchasers repudiated contract to purchase real property, evidence of sales of the identical property was admissible as an indication of value of real property.

5. Appeal and Error ⇨931(6)

On appeal where numerous rulings of the trial court on the admissibility of evidence were objected to and the trial was by the court, it will be presumed that the findings were based on competent evidence, if there was such competent supporting evidence in the record.

6. Vendor and Purchaser ⇨329

In vendor's action to recover damages after purchasers repudiated contract to purchase motel property for $117,000 which was subsequently resold for $109,796.96, finding that the market value of property did not change between date of first contract of sale and date of resale and vendor suffered no damage, was supported by evidence.

Roy W. Seagraves, Redwood City, David Freidenrich, San Francisco, for appellant.

Crist, Peters & Donegan, Elton F. Martin, Palo Alto, for respondents.

KAUFMAN, Justice.

This is an appeal from a judgment rendered in favor of defendants and respondents and against plaintiff and appellant for costs of court.

Respondents Anna H. Cosgrove and her son, William T. Cosgrove, signed a written contract for the sale and purchase of the Camino Hacienda Motel in Redwood City on March 14, 1954, for a price of $117,000.

A deposit of $1,000 was made by the purchasers. Thereafter, respondents refused to consummate the transaction, and notice of their repudiation was given to David Freidenrich, appellant's assignor, through their attorney on or about March 24, 1954. Letters dated March 31, 1954, were mailed on that day by Freidenrich to respondents advising them that he was ready to perform, and that if they did not do so they could expect to be sued for specific performance and for damages. Receiving no reply to these letters, Freidenrich relisted the property for sale with the same broker at the same price as it had been previously listed, that is, for $117,000. He instructed the broker to remit one-half of respondents' $1,000 deposit to him which he retained.

On April 13, 1954, the broker, Rose Realty Company, sent a letter to respondents in which the broker said that Freidenrich had demanded forfeiture of the $1,000 deposit and urged them to reconsider and go through with the transaction. Freidenrich testified that he had not authorized this letter. The broker did not testify in regard to the matter.

A new contract for the sale of the motel property was entered into with a new purchaser in the latter part of April, 1954, for a sum of $109,796.96. Freidenrich stated that his opinion of the fair market value of the property at the time of the breach was $109,796.96, the price obtained for the property within 30 days after the breach. Freidenrich, who was an attorney, stated that he was not an expert on real estate values.

Robert G. Rose was the real estate broker here involved. It was stipulated that on the question of value of the property he would testify substantially the same as Mr. Freidenrich did; that in his opinion the value of the property at the date of the breach was the exact amount which it was sold for about a month later, and that he was basing his opinion on the subsequent sale price, that it wasn't based upon any rise or fall in the market.

The trial court held that appellant was entitled to no relief against respondents, and that respondents were not entitled to the return of their $1,000, for which they had filed a cross-complaint.

Appellant contends that under the contract in this case he had the right to retain the deposit and sue for additional damages caused by the breach, and that the provisions of the deposit receipt did not deprive him of that remedy. It is provided in that document: "That in event said purchaser shall fail to pay the balance of said purchase price or complete said purchase as herein provided, time being of the essence of this contract, the amount of said deposit shall at the option of the seller, be forfeited as liquidated damages, or the seller may apply said deposit on account of said purchase price and institute suit against the purchaser to compel the specific performance of this contract." Respondent takes the position that the contract provision for forfeiture of the deposit is a binding limitation on the amount of damages the seller can recover.

The trial court found that all the allegations of respondents' second, third and fourth answers were true. The second defense alleged that respondents mistakenly believed and plaintiff led them to believe that the agreement limited their liability in case of default to forfeiture of the deposit or an action for specific performance, and that on April 13, 1954, they were informed by the seller's broker that the seller had declared a forfeiture of the deposit and had made his election to pursue that remedy; that if they had known that there was an additional remedy by way of suit for damages available to the seller, they would not have signed the agreement. The third defense alleged mutual mistake, in that the seller as well as the buyer believed that there were only two possible remedies available under the contract, forfeiture of the deposit or a suit for specific performance.

The allegations of the separate defense of estoppel was found to be true; namely, that the seller prepared the agreement sued upon and represented that the only remedies available to seller were forfeiture of the deposit or specific performance; that respondents changed their position in reliance thereon, in that they made the deposit of $1,000 upon the understanding that that would be the limit of their loss if the contract were not specifically enforced.

The trial court also found that on March 14, 1954, the market value of the property to be sold under the deposit receipt was $117,000, that said market value did not change between March 14, 1954 and May 5, 1954, and as a conclusion of law determined that appellant had not been damaged in any sum whatsoever by respondent. It also found that the resale price of $109,796.96, was not obtained because of a fall in the market value of said property between March 14, 1954 and May 5, 1954.

[1] If the finding is supported that the market value of the property had not declined from the time of the sale to respondents through the period of a little more than six weeks till the date of the resale, such finding would be sufficient to support the judgment, and if the other findings attacked by appellant are unsupported by the evidence they may be disregarded. Sands v. Eagle Oil & Refining Co., 83 Cal. App.2d 312, 321, 188 P.2d 782; Colorado Corp. v. Smith, 121 Cal.App.2d 374, 377, 263 P.2d 79.

[2] The measure of damages for breach of a contract to buy real property is the difference between the contract price and the market price. Civil Code, sec. 3307; Royer v. Carter, 37 Cal.2d 544, 549, 233 P.2d 539; Employees' Participating Ass'n v. Pine, 91 Cal.App.2d 299, 301, 204 P.2d 965. Appellant's assignor, Mr. Freidenrich, an attorney, who stated that he was not an expert in real estate values, testified that the resale price which was obtained some three weeks after the breach by respondents, was the fair market value of the property. It was stipulated that the testimony of the real estate broker, Robert G. Rose, would be substantially the same as that of Freidenrich. Freidenrich stated that he knew of no general drop in real estate values in that area, that his opinion of value was based on the resale price. He also testified that on March 14, 1954, the date of the agreement with respondents, the property was not overpriced at $117,000. It was about ten days later that he learned through an attorney that respondents did not intend to go through with the transaction. On April 13, 1954, Rose the broker wrote to respondents telling them that it was a big mistake not to go through with the sale as this property "is a good money maker and is doing better than most other motels in this area."

[3] Appellant did not offer proof of any damage other than the difference between the contract price and resale price, except the $500 paid the broker out of the deposit. He contends that the evidence supports his claim to this amount of damage, and that there is no evidence to support the trial court's finding of no damage. Clearly from the testimony reviewed above there is some evidence to support the finding that the resale price obtained was not a consequence of a drop in market value of the property. It is true, as appellant says, that there was no conflicting opinion evidence relating to value of the property at the time of breach. Freidenrich, as the owner, could give an opinion, though admittedly not an expert. Rose could testify as an expert, and his opinion was stipulated to be the same as that of Freidenrich. There was evidence that there was no decline in real estate values in the area. There was the evidence that the property was not overpriced on March 14, 1954, at $117,000. If there was no decline, and the property was not overpriced at $117,000 on that date, that is certainly some evidence of value close to the time of the breach. Each sale price is evidence of value to the owner at the time of such sale but neither is conclusive evidence binding on the trial court. The trial court could draw its own inference from this evidence. Royer v. Carter, supra; Bagdasarian v. Gragnon, 31 Cal.2d 744, 757, 192 P.2d 935; Roloff v. Hundebly, 105 Cal. App. 645, 652, 288 P. 702.

[4] Appellant argues that the market price at the date of the first sale is irrelevant and immaterial. However, evidence of sales of the identical property is admissible as an indication of value of real property. 18 Cal.Jur.2d 624-626, sec. 164; Bagdasarian v. Gragnon, supra; Eatwell v. Beck, 41 Cal.2d 128, 134, 257 P.2d 643. It is said in 18 Cal.Jur.2d 627, sec. 166, that "evidence of value for short periods before or after the date in question may be allowed in the discretion of the court, as to either real or personal property." And, see, Stroman v. Lynch, 91 Cal.App.2d 406, 205 P.2d 409; Hanscom v. Drullard, 79 Cal. 234, 21 P. 736.

There was evidence that $500 was paid by appellant to the broker, and since respondents were not allowed to recover the deposit of $1,000 for which they cross-complained, appellant has been compensated for that expense and retains the remaining $500. Respondents have not appealed from the judgment against them on the cross-complaint.

[5,6] Since the evidence sufficiently supports the trial court's finding of the market value of the property at the time of the breach it becomes unnecessary to determine whether or not the provision in the present contract must be interpreted according to appellant's view as not precluding the additional remedy of retaining the down payment and suing for the price. It also becomes unimportant whether the findings on respondents' separate defenses are conflicting or unsupported by the evidence. Numerous rulings of the trial court on the admission of evidence are objected to, but since the trial was by the court, it will be presumed that the findings were based on competent evidence if there is such competent supporting evidence in the record. The evidence reviewed above which supports the finding of reasonable value at the time of breach was admissible and competent.

We conclude that the trial court's finding that appellant suffered no damage finds ample support in the record before us.

Judgment affirmed.

West's Ann. Code Civ. Proc., § 395; West's Ann. Const. art. 12, § 16.

6. Venue ☞68

In action brought in San Francisco against three corporate and eight individual defendants, change of venue to Los Angeles, the residence of the individual defendants, was not precluded on the ground that there was evidence that one of the corporate defendants maintained its residence in San Francisco, consisting of a San Francisco telephone directory listing where the listing did not show even by inference, that the "principal" place of business of the corporation was in San Francisco.

George H. Emerson, Los Angeles, for appellants.

Leon A. Blum, J. Albert Hutchinson, San Francisco, for respondents.

PETERS, Presiding Justice.

This is an appeal by the corporate and individual defendants from an order denying their motions for a change of venue.

The action was brought in San Francisco by a San Francisco corporation and partnership against three corporate and eight individual defendants. The action is for breach of contract and an accounting, the contract having been executed in 1950 between the Latchford-Marble Glass Company as seller and the plaintiffs as buyers, whereby the seller agreed to furnish the buyers with beverage bottles, and to give the buyers the exclusive right, with certain exceptions, to market such bottles in Northern California. It is alleged that the Glass company organized the other two corporate defendants as subsidiaries of the Glass company, enticed several of plaintiffs' employees into the employ of these subsidiaries, and then offered for sale and sold glass containers in Northern California in competition with plaintiffs and in violation of the contract.

The three corporate defendants and the eight individual defendants filed separate motions for a change of venue to Los Angeles County, averring that the corporate defendants were residents of that county, with their principal places of business there, and that all eight individual defendants reside in that county. In addition, all defendants averred that the contract was made and to be performed in Los Angeles, that the obligation arose there, and the breach, if any, occurred there. Plaintiffs filed no counter-affidavits. The trial court denied the motions. Defendants appeal.

[1,2] It may be conceded that, under Article 12, Section 16 of the Constitution, the action, so far as the three corporate defendants are concerned, was properly filed in San Francisco. The complaint alleges that defendants breached a covenant not to compete with the plaintiffs in the sale of bottles in Northern California, and it is a reasonable inference that the breach of this covenant occurred in Northern California. San Francisco is, of course, in Northern California. Plaintiff is entitled to the presumption that he has brought the action in a proper county, and the burden, to secure a change of venue, is on the defendant. Chase v. South Pacific C. Railroad Co., 83 Cal. 468, 23 P. 532; Konig v. Associated Almond Growers, 37 Cal.App.2d 360, 99 P.2d 678; Pacific Bal Industries v. Northern Timber, 118 Cal.App.2d 815, 259 P.2d 465.

We may assume, therefore, that as to the corporate defendants the place of performance or the place of breach of the contract was alleged to be San Francisco, and that as to these defendants the action was properly filed in that city and county.

It is equally clear, however, that the individual defendants, all of whom are admittedly residents of Los Angeles, were entitled to a change of venue. Section 395 of the Code of Civil Procedure provides: "In all other cases, except as in this section otherwise provided, and subject to the power of the court to transfer actions or proceedings as provided in this title, the county in which the defendants, or some of them, reside at the commencement of the action, is the proper county for the trial of the action. * * *. When a defendant has contracted to perform an obligation in a particular county, either the county where such obligation is to be performed, or in which the contract in fact was entered into, or the county in which the defendant, or any such defendant, resides at the commencement of the action, shall be a proper county for the trial of an action founded on such obligation, and the county in which such obligation is incurred shall be deemed to be the county in which it is to be performed unless there is a special contract in writing to the contrary. * * *"

It is quite apparent that, since the individual defendants are not parties to the contract here involved, the first sentence of the section is applicable, and that under it the individual defendants were entitled to be sued in the county of their residence.

Thus, the problem involved arises out of the fact that the corporate defendants probably were properly sued, on a ground other than residence, in San Francisco, and the eight individual defendants, considered separately, were entitled to be sued in Los Angeles.

[3] The solution to this problem is clear. When a corporation is properly sued other than at its residence on a transitory cause of action, and individual defendants are joined who, if sued alone, would be entitled to be sued in the county of their residence, the plaintiff waives his right against the corporation, and the individual defendants are entitled to a change to the county of their residence. The proper rule is stated as follows in 1 Witkin, California Procedure, page 764: "A special problem arises in joinder of individual and corporate defendants when the plaintiff sues in a county in which neither defendant resides, but which is one of the four other places in which a corporation may be sued * *. The individual defendant may obtain a change. The theory is that though the plaintiff may sue a corporation on a transitory cause where the contract is breached or the liability arises, etc., he loses or 'waives' this privilege when he joins an individual defendant. Joinder of the individual restricts the plaintiff to residence venue: the residence of either defendant."

In Hale v. Bohannon, 38 Cal.2d 458, 473, 241 P.2d 4, 12, the Supreme Court stated the rule as follows: "However, this application of section 395 involves the right of an individual defendant apart from that of the corporate defendant. A suit brought in the county where the corporation has its principal place of business is one commenced in a proper county under the constitutional provision. The individual defendant joined with the corporation may not secure a change of venue in such circumstances because, under section 395, 'some' of the defendants reside in the county where the action was commenced. Where the action is not commenced in the county of any defendant's residence, the individual defendant then is entitled, under section 395, to secure a change of venue to the county where some or all of the defendants reside. This rule is not a holding that section 395 is applicable in determining the venue of an action commenced solely against a corporate defendant."

[4] This court recently summarized the rule in Pacific Bal Industries v. Northern Timber, 118 Cal.App.2d 815, 828, 259 P.2d 465, 473, in the following language: "A plaintiff cannot by joining a corporation or corporations as defendants, under the circumstances of this case, impair the right or thwart the exercise of the right of an individual defendant to remove the cause to the county of his residence. In effect, by joining the individual defendants, neither of whom resides in Marin County, plaintiff has waived whatever procedural rights were granted him by article XII, § 16, of the Constitution, to bring his action against the corporate defendants in Marin County. [Citing cases.]"

[5] Thus, it is quite clear, that on the motion of individual defendants, the trial court should have granted the motion for a change of venue to the county of their residence, unless it was made to appear that at least one of the corporate defendants had its principal place of business or resided in the City and County of San Francisco. The complaint did not allege such residence. The plaintiffs failed to file any counter-affidavits. The affidavits of defendants alleged that the corporate and individual defendants all resided in Los Angeles. So far as the clerk's transcript is concerned, it is obvious that plaintiffs were relying, so far as venue is concerned, on their allegations that the contract was to be performed by the corporate defendants in Northern California, and that the breach occurred there. As already pointed out, these allegations might have supported an order denying the motion for a change of venue to Los Angeles so far as the corporate defendants are concerned, but when individual defendants residing in Los Angeles were joined, this amounted to a waiver so far as the corporate defendants were concerned, and the motion should have been granted.

[6] Plaintiffs, in their memorandum of points and authorities filed in the trial court and in their brief filed in this court, contend that there was "evidence" of which the trial court could take judicial notice that at least one of the corporate defendants maintains its residence in San Francisco. The "evidence" relied upon is that the San Francisco telephone directory lists the Latchford-Marble Glass Co. and the Latchford-Marble Container & Supply Co. with a San Francisco address and phone number. The classified section of the telephone directory lists the same two corporations and their address and phone number and also contains this information:

"for information call Main Office
"Latchford-Marble Container & Supply Co.
"1823 Egbert Ave. JU 5-1005."

Plaintiffs contend that the trial court and this court can take judicial notice of this listing, and that it indicates that the principal office of the container corporation was in San Francisco. Assuming, without deciding, that judicial notice can be taken of the directory, it is clear that all it shows is that the "main" San Francisco office of the company was at a certain address. It does not show, even by inference, that the "principal" place of business or residence of the corporation was in San Francisco. Thus, the directory does not contradict the positive averment in the affidavit of the container company that at the time of the filing of the action and of making the affidavit it had its principal place of business in, and was a resident of, Los Angeles.

The order appealed from is reversed.

Action by landlords in unlawful detainer for restoration of premises, damages, attorneys' fees, costs and a declaration that purported tenant had no interest in the premises. Tenant cross-complained for costs and attorneys' fees. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Louis H. Burke, J., entered judgment disallowing attorneys' fees and costs to tenant and it appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Moore, P. J., held that where judgment entered by trial court under a stipulation wherein the parties agreed to a settlement of their differences did not award any of the relief as prayed for by landlords, tenant was the "successful party," and under provision of lease providing successful litigant should recover costs, and under statute providing that costs be awarded to defendants as to whom action is dismissed, tenant was entitled to an award of reasonable attorneys' fees and costs.

Judgment affirmed in part, and reversed in part with instructions.

MOORE, Presiding Justice.

Appeal from a judgment disallowing attorneys' fees and costs to defendant.

Respondents leased a restaurant to appellant corporation for a fifteen-year term. The lease provided, inter alia, that no assignment of the premises was to be made by the lessee without the consent of the lessors; rents were to be payable on the basis of gross receipts; lessee would prepare detailed financial statements for the inspection of the lessors; and in the event a dispute between the parties should result in litigation, the "successful party" would be awarded reasonable attorneys' fees and costs.

After a year and a few months of the term had elapsed, respondents brought this action in unlawful detainer and to quiet title alleging on information and belief that lessee had violated covenants of the lease by assigning the lease on the premises without lessors' consent and by improperly accounting for rents. Attached to the complaint was the notice previously served demanding possession within three days of service. No specification of the alleged breaches of the covenants in the lease was set out in the notice nor was the lessee given the alternative of correcting the defects. The complaint prayed for restoration of the premises, damages in excess of $100,000, attorneys' fees and costs, and a declaration that appellant has no right, title or interest in the restaurant. Appellant answered and cross-complained for costs and attorneys' fees.

It appeared from respondents' opening statement that there had been an assignment of the term without respondents' consent; that appellant had failed to provide sufficient financial statements as required by the lease; and that it had fraudulently transferred certain secret pie recipes used by respondents to another restaurant owned by appellant without recording the receipt of compensation.

Appellant then moved for judgment upon the opening statement, and upon denial of such motion, objected to the introduction of any evidence upon the ground that the notice to quit was not in the alternative as required by Code of Civil Procedure, section 1161, subsections (2) and (3); that is to say, appellant was not put on notice of its failure to pay rent and of its improper assignment and was not accorded the alternative of correcting the situation or of quitting possession. After argument, the trial court decided to exclude evidence relative to nonpayment of rent since the notice was not in the alternative and the defect was correctible, but offered to hear evidence of the improper assignment to determine whether it was a fait accompli that could not have been corrected even had the notice been proper.

After the ruling of the trial court, respondents' counsel stated that he deemed a continuation of the action to be fruitless since, even though he were successful, defendant would be able to obtain relief from forfeiture of the lease under Code of Civil Procedure, section 1179. Furthermore, one of his clients was too ill to undergo the ordeal of a protracted trial. He then made this offer to stipulate: " * * we now offer to reinstate the lease and dismiss the action upon payment of the back rents and the accounting for the other rents. * * * The only question then would be the question of attorneys' fees * * * if each party bore their own attorneys' fees, that would be proper.*"

Appellant accepted the offer as to the dismissal of the complaint, reinstatement of the lease, payment of back rents and the accounting, but insisted that the court should proceed to determine the issue of attorneys' fees raised by its cross complaint. Thereupon, the two lawyers reached an agreement, as follows: both the liability for the fees and their amount would be left to the court on the basis of the lease, the file and depositions already submitted.

In the subsequent judgment rendered pursuant to the stipulation, the court recited that the parties had stipulated to the reinstatement of the lease, payment of back rent, payment of costs by each party, and a determination by the court whether attorneys' fees were to be awarded and, if so, their amount. The court declined to include in the submitted judgment that appellant had indeed violated the lease by an assignment not consented to by respondents and that proper notice had been given; but it was ordered that the lease be reinstated, back rent be paid, that defendants take nothing by their cross complaint for fees, and neither party recover costs against the other.

Appellant's position now is that the judgment improperly failed to dismiss the complaint in accordance with the stipulation of the parties; that had such been done, the action would have terminated in appellants' favor. Gagnon Co., Inc., v. Nevada Desert Inn, 45 Cal.2d 448, 455, 289 P.2d 466. Thus, appellant was the "successful" party and entitled to attorneys' fees as provided for in the lease. Cirimele v. Shinazy, 124 Cal.App.2d 46, 51, 268 P.2d 210. On the contrary, respondents contend that, regardless of the dismissal of the complaint, (1) the question of whether or not attorneys' fees should be awarded was left to the sole and unreviewable discretion of the trial judge; (2) the stipulation amounted to a compromise of the litigation so that neither party could be characterized as "successful."

In Steele v. Steele, 132 Cal.App.2d 301, 303, 282 P.2d 171, 173, the parties entered into a stipulation that certain property was separate and that the trial court should determine the character of the balance. One of the stipulators appealed the determination that it was community. But it was held that after "knowingly entering into such a definite stipulation in open court * * * it does not stand in the mouth of either party to dispute its terms or to contend that the judge should have done something other than that provided by the stipulation." Thus, respondents here contend that the parties stipulated for the trial court's determination of the question of fees and "it does not stand in the mouth of either party" to dispute his conclusion. However, whatever may have been the state of the record in the Steele case, the stipulation between the litigants here was not for submission of the question to plenary arbitration by the judge. The parties merely desired to avoid the necessity of a lengthy hearing of testimony relative to the fees. Rather the court was to determine the issue on the basis of "the files in this case, depositions and the lease." The court was vested with the duty of deciding whether or not defendants were "successful" and should succeed on their cross complaint, but was not relieved from the responsibility of rendering a correct judgment.

[1] Was the offer by respondents to stipulate, as accepted by appellant, a "compromise" of the dispute, or tantamount to total abdication of their legal position? As noted, the complaint prayed for restoration of the premises, damages, attorneys' fees, costs and a declaration that the purported lessee have no interest in the premises. The judgment awarded not one particle of this relief to respondents, nor did they by their offer to stipulate demand recovery of any of the relief sought as a condition of dismissal. Respondents demanded merely "payment of back rents and the accounting for the other rents which, I assume, there would be no difficulty about." Indeed, the latter assumption was well-founded. The back rents referred to were those which had accrued since service of the notice to quit. All such sums had been previously tendered by appellant. Appellant's counsel had in his possession checks sufficient immediately to pay those rents. As to the "accounting," the complaint included no request for an accounting of rents, nor did the stipulation provide for a judicial accounting. The purport of the agreement was only that the parties would secure through their own devices a settlement of their disagreement over the extent of past gross receipts upon which the rent obligation was based. Therefore, since the action was, or should have been, dismissed without attainment of any of the relief prayed for or any substantial external concession on the part of appellant, the latter was indeed the "successful" party and should have been awarded its fees.

[2,3] The judgment incorrectly recited that the parties had stipulated that each pay his proportionate share of the costs. Actually, the term "costs" never appeared in that portion of the record wherein the oral stipulation was recorded. Therefore, since the lease provided also that the successful litigant should recover costs, the award should have been to appellant. Furthermore, regardless of the provisions of the lease, Code of Civil Procedure, section 1032(b), requires that costs be awarded to "the defendant * * * as to whom the action is dismissed." Dismissal of an action with prejudice is a final decision, terminates it, and entitles the defendant to costs. Fisher v. Eckert, 94 Cal.App.2d 890, 894, 212 P.2d 64. A dismissal pursuant to a stipulation in open court intended finally to determine the dispute between the litigants is, in effect, with prejudice. Gagnon Co., Inc., v. Nevada Desert Inn, supra, 45 Cal.2d 448, 455, 289 P.2d 466.

The judgment for the reinstatement of the lease, the payment of back rentals, and defendant's right to possession under the lease is affirmed, but in all other respects the judgment is reversed with instructions to dismiss the complaint, award costs and to determine and award reasonable attorneys' fees to defendant, based upon the lease, the depositions, and the file.

Action for dissolution of a partnership and declaratory relief, wherein a stipulated agreement to arbitrate the controversy was filed and defendants thereafter filed application for an order confirming the award of arbitrators. The Superior Court, City and County of San Francisco, Frank T. Deasy, J., entered an order confirming the award and judgment thereon, and plaintiffs appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Peters, P. J., held that since copies of all the papers, required by statute to be attached to application for confirmation of award, were in the file of action, which trial judge had examined, and basic documents were incorporated by reference into application for confirmation order, there was substantial compliance with West's Ann. Code Civ.Proc., § 1291, and failure to physically attach copies of required documents to application did not deprive court of power to entertain such application.

Order and judgment affirmed.

1. Arbitration and Award ⇨69, 72

The purpose of statute requiring applicant for an order confirming, modifying or correcting an award to attach copies, of specified papers to such application was to make certain that trial judge had access to arbitration agreement, names of arbitrators and the award. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc., § 1291.

2. Arbitration and Award ⇨72

Where copies of arbitration agreement, award, etc., which applicant for confirmation of award was required by statute to attach to application, were all in the file of action, which trial judge had examined, and the basic documents were incorporated by reference into application, there was substantial compliance with statute and failure to physically attach copies of required documents to application did not deprive court of power to entertain application for confirmation order, particularly in absence of showing that other parties to arbitration objected in trial court to failure to attach required documents or that they were prejudiced by such failure. West's Ann.Code Civ.Proc., § 1291.

PETERS, Presiding Justice.

The plaintiffs appeal from an "Order Confirming Award of Arbitrators and Judgment of the Same." The appeal is on a minimum clerk's transcript. The only point raised is that the order and judgment were entered in a proceeding in which the applicants for the order failed to attach physically to their application the supporting documents required by section 1291 of the Code of Civil Procedure. That section provides:

"Upon the granting of an order confirming, modifying or correcting an award, judgment may be entered in conformity therewith in the court wherein said application was filed.

"The party applying for an order confirming, modifying, or correcting an award shall attach to such application copies of the following papers, to wit: the agreement; the selection or appointment of the arbitrator or arbitrators and the umpire, if any; the selection or appointment, if any, of any additional arbitrator or umpire; each written extension of the time, if any, within which to make the award; and the award.

"The judgment when rendered by the court shall be docketed as if it were rendered in an action."

The facts as disclosed by the clerk's transcript are as follows: On April 29, 1955, the respondents filed an application for an order confirming the award of arbitrators. This application, so far as pertinent here, alleges that appellants, on April 19, 1954, filed an action against respondents for the dissolution of a partnership and for declaratory relief, and respondents filed an answer thereto; that on December 28, 1954, the parties entered into a stipulated agreement to arbitrate the controversy, which agreement was "filed herein by the parties in these proceedings on March 17, 1955, which is incorporated by reference as if set forth in haec verba"; that pursuant to this agreement named arbitrators were appointed by the parties; that the agreement provided that the parties would comply with the terms of the award within 14 days after it was made, and that the determination of the arbitrators was to be binding; that the arbitrators made their award on February 21, 1955, and delivered the same to the parties; that an acknowledged copy of the award "was filed in this action in this court on April 5, 1955, and is made a part hereof by reference as if set forth in haec verba"; that more than 14 days have passed since the award was made, but appellants refuse to perform even though respondents are willing to perform.

The trial court issued its order and judgment confirming the award on May 12, 1955, the order reciting that the application for the confirmation order incorporated "copies of papers included in the file of this action," and had been properly served on all parties.

[1-3] Appellants' sole contention is that the documents mentioned in section 1291 of the Code of Civil Procedure were not physically attached to the application for the confirmation order, and therefore, so it is argued, the court was without power to entertain the application. No other attack is made on the award or the order confirming it.

The point lacks merit. The record before this court indicates that the required papers were all in the file of the action, that the trial judge knew this and had examined the file, and that the basic documents were incorporated by reference into the application. The purpose of the code section is to be sure that the trial judge has access to the arbitration agreement, the names of the arbitrators and the award. Here the trial judge had such access. There is nothing in the record to show that appellants ever objected in the trial court to the failure to attach physically the enumerated documents, nor do they point out how they were prejudiced by such failure. Under such circumstances, there was substantial compliance with section 1291, and that is all that is required.

The order and judgment appealed from are affirmed.

BARNARD, Presiding Justice.

This action arose from a collision between a passenger train and an automobile driven by Paula Smith Daggett, in which she and her two children were instantly killed. One of the children was about one year old and the other about three years old. The action was brought by the surviving husband to recover for the death of his wife and children, and by the parents of Mrs. Daggett, who sought recovery for her death. The engineer and conductor on the train are joined with the railway company as defendants. A jury returned a verdict in favor of the defendants as to the claim arising out of the death of Mrs. Daggett, and in favor of the husband for the deaths of his two children, awarding him $50,000. A motion for a new trial was denied and a judgment was entered on the verdict. The defendants have appealed from the judgment as entered against them and in favor of the surviving husband. The parents of Mrs. Daggett also appealed from the judgment as against them. It is stated in the brief that the parents have appealed solely as a precautionary measure; that the plaintiffs are satisfied with the present judgment; and that they believe a new trial, in the event one is ordered, should be as to all plaintiffs.

This accident took place where the main line of the Santa Fe crosses Plaza Street in Solano Beach some two miles north of Del Mar, which is a flag stop for south-bound passenger trains. Plaza Street is the main east-west street of Solano Beach. Immediately west of the railroad crossing Plaza Street intersects with Highway 101, which parallels the Santa Fe main line through Solano Beach. At the time in question an automatic wigwag signal was located on the northeast corner of this railroad crossing, and a standard crossarm was situated at the southwest corner. When a south-bound train arrived at a point 3023 feet north of Plaza Street an electric circuit caused this wigwag signal to go into operation, with the wigwag moving back and forth and a bell ringing. At the time of the accident a freight car was standing on a spur track east of the main line and about 100 feet north of Plaza Street. There was also a lumber company building on the north side of Plaza Street some 75 feet to the east of the railroad track.

This accident occurred at 11:18 a. m. on June 25, 1954. Mrs. Daggett, who was traveling west on Plaza Street in a Chevrolet Convertible, drove directly in front of a south-bound train. This was a regular passenger train, operated with a diesel engine, which was traveling between 85 and 90 miles an hour. Mrs. Daggett's automobile was traveling at from 10 to 15 miles an hour. It appears from the testimony of three outside witnesses, and without conflict, that the automatic wigwag signal was operating and its bell ringing prior to and at the time of the collision. The engineer and fireman testified that the automatic bell on the locomotive was ringing and that the train air horn was blown from a point at least 1,000 feet north of the crossing. The sounding of this horn prior to the accident was also testified to by three outside witnesses. The train was traveling on the company's private right of way and the speed limit for the fourth district of the Los Angeles division of the railway company, which included this crossing, was 90 miles per hour. The engineer testified that he approached this crossing at a speed of between 85 and 90 miles per hour, and the speed tape sealed in the locomotive showed the speed between 85 and 86 miles per hour at the time the emergency brake was applied. The engineer testified that he applied the emergency brake some 100 feet prior to the impact in response to the fireman's warning of the approaching automobile. Over the objection of the appellants the jury was allowed to view the scene of the accident, at that time, 15 months after the accident, the automatic wigwag at the northeast corner of the crossing and the crossarm at the southwest corner of the crossing had been replaced with flashing light signals.

The main contention on this appeal is that it was prejudicial error to allow counsel for the plaintiffs, over the objections of the defendants, to introduce evidence that at some time subsequent to the accident the maximum allowable speed at this crossing had been reduced from 90 miles an hour to 50 miles an hour, and evidence that at some time after the accident the type of warning signals installed at this crossing had been changed. The court overruled objections and admitted evidence of these changes, but we are not informed as to when the changes were made, whether shortly after the accident or a year or more later. The defendants argue that this evidence was brought out by the plaintiffs for the purpose of showing a consciousness or implied admission on the part of the defendants of their previous negligence which caused the injury; and that the error was emphasized in repeatedly referring to these matters throughout the taking of testimony, and in arguing to the jury.

[1] It has long been held in this state, as in most states, that such evidence is not ordinarily admissible. In the early case of Sappenfield v. Main St. & A. P. R. Co., 91 Cal. 48, 27 P. 590, 593, the court said:

"It would be unjust to hold that, because the employer seeks, by all the aid he gets from the light of experience to make the implement free from danger, he is therefore to be charged with negligence in the use of all prior appliances, even though they were adopted with the best light then under his control. * * * He may have exercised all the care which the law requires, and yet in the light of a new experience, after an unexpected accident has occurred, he may adopt additional safeguards. To hold that the adoption of such new appliances, which experience has demonstrated are more efficient than those previously in use, or which invention has developed from observing the defects in those originally adopted, shall be an admission that he was negligent prior thereto, would prevent the very conduct in employers which they should be urged to follow."

In Helling v. Schindler, 145 Cal. 303, 78 P. 710, 713, it is said: "[I]t is now well settled in this state, in accord with the rule prevailing generally elsewhere, that evidence of precautions taken and repairs made after the happening of the accident is not admissible to show a negligent condition at the time of the accident." These views have been approved in many cases and are based on the sound theory that the fact that a party observes an injury resulting from an accident, and then acts with a view of preventing the possibility of a similar accident again occurring, should operate to commend rather than to condemn the one so acting.

The respondent husband does not question this general rule but argues, under the authority of other cases, that evidence of changes or precautions taken after an accident are admissible for the purpose of impeachment. It is argued that the motorman on this train testified not only that 90 miles per hour was a safe speed through this intersection, but also testified that the speed limit at this intersection, both at the time of the accident and at the time of the trial, was 90 miles per hour, and that it was proper to impeach his testimony by showing that the speed limit at this crossing at the time of the trial was 50 miles per hour. It is also argued that the signal engineer for the defendant company testified that the wigwag signal at this crossing at the time of the accident was the safest type of signal being used on the Sante Fe system at that time, and that it was proper to impeach him on cross-examination by showing that this wigwag signal had been replaced by flashing light signals, and that wigwag signals were being replaced by flashing light signals throughout the entire Sante Fe system.

[2] The exception to the general rule relied on by the respondent, in allowing the admission of evidence of such changes after the accident by way of impeachment of evidence theretofore introduced by the defendant, has been upheld in such cases as Gorman v. County of Sacramento, 92 Cal. App. 656, 268 P. 1083; Uttley v. City of Santa Ana, 136 Cal.App. 23, 28 P.2d 377; Inyo Chemical Co. v. City of Los Angeles, 5 Cal.2d 525, 55 P.2d 850, and Hatfield v. Levy Brothers, 18 Cal.2d 798, 117 P.2d 841. In all such cases, however, such evidence has been allowed only by way of impeachment of evidence produced by the other party and not as original evidence on the part of the plaintiff.

In the instant case, the first witness called by the plaintiffs was the engineer or motorman on this train, who was called and examined under Section 2055 of the Code of Civil Procedure. After bringing out that the speed of this train was from 85 to 90 miles an hour immediately prior to the accident and that the railway company had a 90-mile restriction in the fourth district, which extended from Fullerton to San Diego and included Solano Beach, plaintiffs' counsel inquired as to the speed in the area between Fullerton and Los Angeles. An objection was overruled, and the witness said that the speed restriction on all districts in the Los Angeles division of the Santa Fe is 90 miles an hour except in the third district, from Fullerton to Los Angeles. Counsel for plaintiffs then asked "Well, Mr. Benton the restriction now is 50 miles an hour, isn't it?" An objection was made and the court said he did not know what district was referred to. Counsel for plaintiff said the restriction in the fourth district was referred to, that the witness had said the restriction in the fourth district now is 90 miles an hour, and that they were prepared to show "that the restriction in this district at this crossing now, rather than being 90 miles an hour, is 50 miles an hour". After some argument between court and counsel, counsel for plaintiffs asked the witness whether he had said that "the speeds in these areas then and now are 90 miles an hour." The question was not answered and in a discussion between court and counsel the court said the question was vague and indefinite, and that he did not know whether counsel meant the speed at the intersection here in question or whether he meant the speed in the entire area between Los Angeles and San Diego. Counsel for plaintiffs then asked the witness "Is it your testimony that the speed area at this Plaza Street now is 90 miles an hour?" An objection was overruled and the witness replied that the speed now at the Plaza Street crossing is 50 miles an hour. Not only was this evidence received by way of cross-examination before any evidence was put on by the defendants, but the record clearly shows that the witness had been discussing the general speed limit in the areas between Los Angeles and San Diego, that the first time he was asked concerning the speed limit at the crossing here in question, as distinguished from the speed in the fourth district as a whole, was at the close of the testimony above referred to, and that he had not theretofore given any testimony which was fairly subject to being impeached in the respect here in question.

The second witness called by the plaintiffs was William Price, the signal engineer for the railway company, who was also called under Section 2055. He was asked his opinion as to whether the automatic wigwag in place at the crossing at the time of the accident was the safest possible signal. He replied that in his opinion it was. Counsel for the plaintiffs then asked "Well, Mr. Price, you did change that signal after the accident, didn't you?" An objection was overruled and the witness replied that they were requested to change it by the Public Utilities Commission. Counsel for plaintiffs then asked "What type of signal is there there now?", and the witness replied: "Flashing light signals." The witness was then asked whether, in his opinion, the new signal was a more safe type of signal than the one in use at the time of the accident. He replied, "I do not think so". He was then asked why he did not think so, and gave his reasons. After then asking the witness many questions in an effort to show that the new signal was a better one, this testimony taking up 10 pages of the transcript, counsel asked: "By the way, aren't you changing this type along the system." The witness replied, "Well, I would say we are gradually going to the flashing light signal." In response to further questions the witness again expressed the opinion that "the wig-wag is just as safe or safer than the flashing light signal," but admitted that "it would be safer with one on each side than with just one over here."

[3] The record rather clearly discloses that this evidence as to the change in speed limit and change of signals was brought out by the plaintiffs before any evidence had been brought out by the defendants, and that the evidence in this connection, admitted over the objection of the defendants, was in no proper sense received by way of impeachment of previous testimony produced by the defendants. In our opinion, it was not admissible under the recognized exceptions to the general rule. That this evidence was prejudicial cannot well be doubted in view of the record as a whole. These changes after the accident were repeatedly referred to throughout the trial and were referred to at great length in the argument of plaintiffs' counsel to the jury. Counsel for the plaintiffs, in his argument, told the jury to remember the man that testified "that he was going 90 miles an hour then and was going 90 miles an hour now, and I had to make him" admit "on impeachment" that they were now going 50 miles an hour. In his closing argument he argued that "the highway signal and the railroad signal" were so close together as to be confusing, and after referring to the changes made he asked the jury why they reduced the speed and why they made the change of the signal if it would not have made any difference; told the jury that the family would still have been alive "if that signal had been a proper signal, not a confusing signal, and the train at that time ran as the train does today, at 50 miles an hour instead of the 90 miles an hour"; and then said: "Do you think, ladies and gentlemen, that that was a futile act? Not in anywise connected with the safety of that crossing or with this case, that they changed the signal that confused them, and that they changed the speed and cut it in two, from 90 miles an hour to 50 miles an hour? How much more do you need in a lawsuit like this to prove a case to a preponderance, beyond a reasonable doubt, and to a moral certainty?"

The reliance and emphasis thus placed on the changes subsequently made were further emphasized by one instruction given by the court, which reads:

"It is for the jury to determine from all the facts and circumstances and conditions existing at the railroad crossing involved whether such railroad company was negligent in failing to provide additional crossing protection, such as a human gateman, red flashing lights or gates at such crossing."

In this connection the respondent husband further contends that the defendants waived the right to object to the admission of the evidence as to changes subsequent to the accident because they did not request the trial court to instruct the jury that such evidence was admissible solely for the purposes of impeachment. Not only were these errors of such a nature that their effect could not reasonably be expected to have been removed by such an instruction, but there was no impeachment in a proper sense upon which such an instruction could have been based. Such an instruction would have been meaningless to the jury under the circumstances here appearing, especially in view of the way the evidence was brought in and used by the plaintiffs. In his closing argument plaintiffs' counsel told the jury in speaking of these changes, "* * * if it had been the way it is now, certainly there would have been no accident at all, because certainly they wouldn't have made those changes academically or idly, to put in these other signals or to reduce that speed there, and the track, as it was said, that a train can't dodge. Certainly that train then going through a town like that should give more warning, shouldn't it, at least go slower, at least they thought it should go slower in their wisdom when they reduced the speed to 50 miles an hour."

We find nothing in the fact that the jury was allowed over objection to view the scene of the accident and watch a train go by under the changed conditions, or in the photographs of the intersection taken after the new signals were installed, some of which were admitted without objection, which would excuse or justify the other extended admission and use of evidence of such changed conditions under the circumstances shown.

As to the appeal by the parents of Mrs. Daggett no error is pointed out with respect to the jury's finding that no recovery should be had because of Mrs. Daggett's death, and we find none. Contributory negligence on her part very clearly appears and we see no good reason for retrying that issue. With respect to the other issues, relating to the death of the two children the evidence erroneously admitted could only have had a prejudicial effect upon the issues as to negligence on the part of the defendant, and as to whether any such possible negligence was a proximate cause of the accident. In view of the undisputed evidence that Mrs. Daggett drove onto this crossing, with which she was familiar, in front of an approaching train, with the engine bell and whistle sounding, and with a wigwag signal operating and its bell ringing, these were very important issues on which the defendants were entitled to a fair trial, under evidence limited to the conditions existing at the time.

The judgment insofar as it denied relief on account of the death of Mrs. Daggett is affirmed. Insofar as it awarded the plaintiff husband damages for the death of the two children that judgment is reversed.

Clark HENDERSON, Plaintiff and Respondent,

v.

George Harry BALCOM, Paul Mathews, et al., Defendants,

George Harry Balcom, Defendant and Appellant.
No. 16850.

District Court of Appeal, First District,
Division 1, California.

Oct. 10, 1956.

Action for injuries arising out of an automobile collision on a wet highway at night. The Superior Court, Santa Clara County, Leonard R. Avilla, J., granted plaintiff a new trial after a jury verdict in favor of all defendants, and one defendant appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Bray, J., held that there was substantial evidence to support verdict in favor of plaintiff against the defendant who appealed.

Order affirmed.

1. Appeal and Error ☞977(3)

New Trial ☞6

The granting of a new trial is largely within the discretion of the trial judge, and will be reversed only if an abuse of discretion clearly appears, and the test is whether there was no substantial evidence which would support a contrary verdict.

2. New Trial ☞72

In considering a motion for new trial, trial court is not bound by rule of conflicting evidence, and may draw inferences opposed to those accepted by jury, and does not abuse its discretion by granting a new trial if there is any substantial evidence or reasonable inferences therefrom, which would support a verdict in favor of party granted the new trial.

3. New Trial ☞70

In action for injuries arising out of an automobile collision on a wet highway at night, where jury returned verdict in favor of defendants, evidence that the action of one defendant in crossing highway and turning into lane occupied by an overtaking motorist so closely in front of overtaking vehicle as to constitute a menace, was the proximate cause of the accident, warranted the granting of a new trial in favor of plaintiff.

4. Automobiles ⇨245(50)

In action for injuries arising out of an automobile collision on a wet highway at night, evidence of highway patrol officer that he had examined the brakes of defendant's automobile and found that the brake pedal did not meet the main resistance until approximately one inch from the floor, and that then resistance was slight, was not sufficient to require holding as a matter of law that the skidding which caused collision was due to a mechanical failure, rather than to the sudden application of brakes on a wet surface.

5. Automobiles ⇨245(60)

In action for injuries arising out of an automobile collision on a wet highway at night, where overtaking motorist was forced to swerve into outer lane, to avoid defendant who made a left turn in front of him, before being forced to quickly apply the brakes thereby causing overtaking motorist to skid and collide with oncoming automobile, that overtaking motorist had passed defendant's automobile by 160 feet before skidding into oncoming motorist would not as a matter of law withdraw defendant's negligence in turning so close in front of overtaking motorist as a proximate cause of the accident.

6. Automobiles ⇨201(9)

Faulty brakes would not necessarily constitute an independent intervening cause which would completely eliminate defendant's negligence in turning in front of overtaking motorist as a proximate cause.

7. Automobiles ⇨244(1)

In action to recover for injuries arising out of an automobile collision on a wet highway at night, where trial court granted plaintiff a new trial after the jury returned a verdict in favor of all defendants, there was substantial evidence to support a verdict in favor of plaintiff against defendant who appealed.

BRAY, Justice.

[1] The sole question presented upon this appeal by defendant Balcom alone, from an order granting new trial as to all defendants after a jury verdict in favor of all defendants, is whether there was any substantial evidence that would have supported a verdict in favor of plaintiff against defendant Balcom.¹

Evidence.

The accident, for injuries incurred in which plaintiff brought this action, occurred February 1, 1952, at about 8 p. m. on El Camino highway. The street was wet, but at the time of the accident it was either raining very lightly or not at all. The general area was fairly well lighted by neon lights from stores along the street. All cars had their headlights on. Defendant Balcom was driving southerly on the highway, according to his testimony. Desiring to look at a display in a boat shop, he drove westerly off the highway and parked in front of the shop. Shortly thereafter he drove south on the parking area approximately 200 feet, turned his car east towards the highway, and stopped. He intended to enter upon the highway and travel back in a northerly direction. At port a contrary verdict. Deshotel v. Atchison, T. & S. F. Ry. Co., 126 Cal. App.2d 303, 305, 272 P.2d 71; Moss v. Stubbs, 111 Cal.App. 359, 362, 295 P. 572, 296 P. 86.

this point directly opposite him, Curtner Street entered the east side of El Camino but did not cross. There were no traffic lights. Balcom observed that the nearest approaching traffic on the highway was about 1,000 feet. He was unable to form an opinion as to the speed of any of the cars. He crossed the two southbound lanes and proceeded north in the lane closest to the center line. As he entered the highway he was probably talking to the passenger on his right. His speed was 15-25 miles per hour. As he made the left turn he observed the traffic again and the nearest approaching cars were 600-900 feet away.

Plaintiff's testimony was that, driving southerly on the inside lane of the highway at about 25 miles per hour, he noticed two cars, both of which were approaching him on the northerly inside lane. Balcom's car was about 300 feet from him and about three car lengths ahead of the car driven by defendant Mathews.

Mathews testified that driving northerly 30-35 miles per hour he saw Balcom's car starting to cross the southbound lanes. He was then about 150 feet south of Balcom. Mathews honked his horn thinking Balcom would stop as Mathews was so close to him; but Balcom continued across. When Balcom entered the inside lane going north he was 30-50 feet in front of Mathews. Mathews did not slow down but swerved to the outside northerly lane to avoid hitting Balcom. In this lane there was a car just ahead of him. To avoid hitting it Mathews applied his brakes. He was then either abreast or a little ahead of Balcom's car. The application of his brakes, which apparently caused one of them to "grab," caused Mathews' car to skid in a northerly direction across the highway, into the inside southbound lane where it collided with plaintiff's car. Plaintiff sued both Balcom and Mathews and a Mrs. Taylor (who signed Mathews' application for a driver's license).

Balcom as a Proximate Cause of the Accident.

[2, 3] Having in mind that the trial court in considering a motion for new trial is not bound by the rule of conflicting evidence, may draw inferences opposed to those accepted by the jury, and does not abuse its discretion by granting a new trial if there is any substantial evidence or reasonable inferences therefrom which would support a verdict in favor of the party granted the new trial (see Ballard v. Pacific Greyhound Lines, 1946, 28 Cal.2d 357, 358-359, 170 P.2d 465), we fail to find any abuse of discretion here. According to the testimony of plaintiff and of Mathews, Balcom crossed the main highway and turned into the lane then occupied by the Mathews car and another so closely in front of those cars as to constitute a menace to the Mathews car at least.

[4] Balcom contends that this negligence was responsible for no more than causing Mathews to turn into the outside northerly lane, and that Balcom's negligence was not a proximate cause of what happened thereafter. Balcom contends that Mathews' later acts and the "grabbing" of his brakes were unforeseeable intervening acts which eliminated Balcom's actions as a proximate cause of the accident. It requires no argument to state that it is reasonably foreseeable that if it becomes necessary to suddenly apply brakes on a wet highway while turning, skidding may result, and that therefore, as here, when the operator of a car turns in front of a car approaching on a highway at such a close distance as to require the latter to attempt to get out of his way and turn into an adjoining lane in which there is a car, that a proximate result of the first operator's action would be any skidding which might result from the second operator applying brakes on the wet highway. But, says Balcom, the skidding here was not due to the wet surface, but to mechanical failure. This contention is based upon two bits of evidence: (1) Mathews' answer to the following question: "Q. Did you have any feeling of your brakes—of brakes grabbing when you applied them?" A.

Evidently one of them had grabbed because it caused me to skid." (2) California Highway Patrol Officer Bruwer testified that he examined the brakes of Mathews' car and found "Brake pedal did not meet the main resistance until approximately one inch from the floor, then resistance slight." This evidence is not sufficient to require a holding as a matter of law that the skidding was due to a mechanical failure and not due to the sudden application of brakes on a wet surface.

[5] Based upon measurements from locations placed by Mathews on a map, Balcom contends that Mathews traveled approximately 160 feet in the outside lane after passing his car, and that such fact demonstrates as a matter of law that the chain of events started by Balcom was broken. In spite of these measurements, Mathews testified that the total distance he traveled in the outside lane, including a 20-30 foot skid, was approximately 75 feet. It was for the trial judge to determine the distance traveled by Mathews before applying his brakes and whether such distance broke the chain of events set in motion by Balcom. We cannot say as a matter of law that, under all the circumstances here, even 160 feet was such a distance as to withdraw Balcom's negligence as a proximate cause of the accident.

[6] Moreover, assuming Mathews' brakes to have been faulty, such fact would not necessarily constitute an independent intervening cause which would completely eliminate Balcom's negligence as a proximate cause.

Throughout the country there are various views applied as to the liability of one who sets in motion a chain of events leading to the injury of another. California appears to follow the view that where the defendant's negligent conduct is the stimulus for some other act which causes the injury, there is no break in the chain of events which would prevent his liability. In Champagne v. A. Hamburger & Sons, 1915, 169 Cal. 683, 689, 147 P. 954, 956, the court said: "The proximate cause, as defined generally, is the cause which led to what might naturally and probably be expected to produce the result. Here, of course, the contention of appellant is that the injuries of the plaintiff were not caused by the fall of the elevator but by the intervening act of the crowd in rushing over her. But the intervening act of the crowd would not break the causal connection between the negligent act of operating the elevator in a crowded condition and the injuries sustained by plaintiff, if such intervening act was one which might have been foreseen as likely or probable to occur as the result of the original negligence." The court in Titlow v. Florence Trading Co., 1917, 35 Cal.App. 457, 460, 170 P. 172, 173, said: "* * * whatever the jury assumed as an immediate cause for the precipitation of the lamp to the floor, it was justified in taking the position, the negligence of the defendant having been shown, that such immediate cause was the natural and to be expected consequence of that negligence, and that, therefore, the negligence was the proximate cause of the damage, the cause which set all other causes in motion." It was said in Haverstick v. Southern Pac. Co., 1934, 1 Cal.App.2d 605, 614, 37 P.2d 146, 151: "* * * In order to make a negligent act the proximate cause of an injury, it is not necessary that the particular injury and the particular manner of its occurrence could reasonably have been foreseen. [Citation.] If the consequences follow in unbroken sequence from the wrong to the injury without an intervening efficient cause, it is sufficient if, at the time of the negligence, the wrongdoer might, by the exercise of ordinary care, have foreseen that some injury might result from his negligence."

The cases cited in appellant's opening and closing briefs in regard to this issue are not of value because all of them deal with independent intervening acts—not intervening acts stimulated by defendant's negligence, as here.

[7] In view of the law on this matter, and the evidence that Balcom turned onto

El Camino in a position which caused Mathews to turn to an outside lane where, because of belief that he would overtake a car that was there, he applied his brakes and thus skidded into Henderson, it cannot be said as a matter of law that the trial judge was incorrect in his determination that Balcom's negligence was a proximate cause of the injury.

Action to enjoin labor union from picketing within area of store owners' premises claimed to be private property of owner. The Superior Court, Los Angeles County, Walter R. Evans, J., entered judgment enjoining union and union appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Ashburn, J., held that where lease to store in shopping center provided that lessee had right to use parking lot in common with other tenants of landlord as well as such tenants' patrons and customers, lease gave tenant exclusive use of building only and he had no such right to exclusive occupancy of streets, sidewalks or parking area within center as would enable him to exclude picketing therefrom on ground of trespass, notwithstanding landlord's subsequent supplemental document giving tenant exclusive use of such streets, sidewalks, etc. subject only to use by other tenants, their patrons and customers.

ASHBURN, Justice.

Here presented is another facet of the recurrent problem of adjusting the right of free speech, in the form of picketing, with an owner's exclusive right to use his private property. Defendant Union and its secretary-treasurer appeal from a judgment enjoining them from conducting any picketing upon or within a certain area held to be the private property of plaintiffs.

On November 29, 1954, plaintiffs, engaged in business as partners under the name Nahas Department Store No. 4, opened a variety type department store at 1250 West Redondo Beach Boulevard in the city of Gardena. It is located upon a ten-acre tract of land, a "shopping center," owned by Victor C. Hornung and wife, who leased to plaintiffs on July 1, 1954, a building 82 x 150 feet in size, together with the right to use the surrounding parking lot (and apparently the private streets, sidewalks, alleyways and courts) in common with Hornung's other tenants and their patrons and customers. The store faces Redondo Beach Boulevard to the north and is surrounded by parking areas. In front is one about 66 feet deep and to the rear a much larger one. Immediately in front and in the rear of each building is a sidewalk, the one in front being 11 feet wide and in the rear 6 feet. A public sidewalk also runs along the front of the premises on the southerly side of Redondo Beach Boulevard. West of the Nahas store is Von's super-market, the two being separated by a private road 38 feet wide. There were no other tenants or buildings on the property at the times of the occurrences now under examination.

Local 905, Retail Clerks International Association, is a local union chartered by the American Federation of Labor to represent sales clerks and other related employees in the retail variety and department store field. Efforts to obtain a collective bargaining agreement from Nahas, which had been started before the store was opened, proved unsuccessful, and the local began a drive to organize the employees. To that end a picket line was established upon each of said sidewalks adjoining the store in the front and the back. The pickets carried signs reading: "Please Do Not Patronize—This Store Refuses to Sign a Union Contract" or "Please Do Not Patronize Nahas Department Store—A. F. of L. Picket Line." In the parking areas the union caused automobiles to be placed at strategic points displaying similarly worded banners. This began on December 10, 1954. Demand was made that the pickets withdraw from plaintiffs' private property. This was refused and the picketing continued until a temporary restraining order was issued on December 17th. It was followed by a preliminary injunction and the permanent injunction from which this appeal is taken. After December 17th the union pickets paraded on the public sidewalk on the south side of Redondo Beach Boulevard.

The judgment enjoins the defendants and each of them, "their officers, employees, agents, members, representatives, organizers, and attorneys" from "[s]tationing, placing, or maintaining any picket or pickets or other person or persons either in vehicles or on foot anywhere in the areas surrounding plaintiffs' store building which is private property occupied by and subject to the control of the plaintiffs, that is to say anywhere within the territory bounded on the North by Redondo Beach Boulevard and on the East of the property line parallel with Budlong Avenue and on the South by 155th Street and on the West by Normandie Avenue * * *." Also, "from placing or maintaining on any car parked in any of the parking areas located anywhere on the premises described hereinabove any signs or printing of any nature whatsoever containing the words 'Please Do Not Patronize—This Store Refuses to Sign a Union Contract' or 'A. F. of L. Picket Line' or any other signs or printing specifically referring to the existence of a picket line or labor dispute involving the plaintiffs' store." The theory of the ruling is expressed in these conclusions: "That the property upon which the defendants, their agents, employees, and representatives were picketing was private property. * * * That the defendants, their agents, employees, and representatives had no lawful right to picket upon said private property. * * * That the activities of the defendants, their agents, employees, and representatives, in picketing on said private property amounted to a continuing trespass working irreparable injury to the plaintiffs. * * * That the activities of the defendants, their agents, employees, and representatives, in picketing on the private property leased to the plaintiffs interfered with the right of the plaintiffs in the quiet and peaceful enjoyment and use by them of their said property so leased to them and caused said plaintiffs irreparable injury."

Defendants-appellants argue that this is a denial of their right of free speech expressed through the pickets and the car banners. Plaintiffs say that the injunction is limited to an area which is their private property, that the pickets are not employees, and that the right to exclusive use of one's own property precludes trespass thereon by non-employee pickets.

The extent to which the rights of the employer as owner of his plant must yield to the demands of union organizers is largely defined in National Labor Rel. Bd. v. Babcock & Wilcox, 351 U.S. 105, 76 S. Ct. 679, 100 L.Ed. 975, decided April 30, 1956. It deals with three cases of employers who prohibited distribution, within their privately owned parking lots, of union literature by representatives engaged in organizational efforts, not employees of the company. The National Labor Relations Board had found this to be an unfair labor practice by the company, relying on National Labor Relations Board v. LeTourneau Company of Georgia, one of several cases reported sub nom. Republic Aviation Corp. v. N. L. R. B., 324 U.S. 793, 65 S.Ct. 982, 89 L.Ed. 1372. The Babcock & Wilcox opinion holds " * * * that an employer may validly post his property against nonemployee distribution of union literature if reasonable efforts by the union through other available channels of communication will enable it to reach the employees with its message and if the employer's notice or order does not discriminate against the union by allowing other distribution. In these circumstances the employer may not be compelled to allow distribution even under such reasonable regulations as the orders in these cases permit." 351 U.S. 105, 76 S.Ct. 679, 684, 100 L.Ed. 975. The court differentiated the LeTourneau case upon the ground that it dealt only with activities of employees upon the master's premises, and further said, 351 U.S. 105, 76 S.Ct. 679, 684:

"This is not a problem of always open or always closed doors for union organization on company property. Organization rights are granted to workers by the same authority, the National Government, that preserves property rights. Accommodation between the two must be obtained with as little destruction of one as is consistent with the maintenance of the other. The employer may not affirmatively interfere with organization; the union may not always insist that the employer aid organization. But when the inaccessibility of employees makes ineffective the reasonable attempts by nonemployees to communicate with them through the usual channels, the right to exclude from property has been required to yield to the extent needed to permit communication of information on the right to organize. * * * Here the Board failed to make a distinction between rules of law applicable to employees and those applicable to nonemployees.

"The distinction is one of substance. No restriction may be placed on the employees' right to discuss self-organization among themselves, unless the employer can demonstrate that a restriction is necessary to maintain production or discipline. * * * But no such obligation is owed nonemployee organizers. Their access to company property is governed by a different consideration. The right of self-organization depends in some measure on the ability of employees to learn the advantages of self-organization from others. Consequently, if the location of a plant and the living quarters of the employees place the employees beyond the reach of reasonable union efforts to communicate with them, the employer must allow the union to approach his employees on his property. No such conditions are shown in these records. * * * The Act requires only that the employer refrain from interference, discrimination, restraint or coercion in the employees' exercise of their own rights. It does not require that the employer permit the use of its facilities for organization when other means are readily available." See, also, N. L. R. B. v. Monsanto Chemical Co., 9 Cir., 225 F.2d 16, 20-21; certiorari denied, 351 U.S. 923, 76 S.Ct. 777. 100 L.Ed. 1454.

[1,2] While the Babcock & Wilcox case and the Monsanto Chemical Co. controversy arose upon findings by the National Labor Relations Board of the existence of an unfair labor practice under § 8(a) (1) of the Taft-Hartley Act, 29 U.S.C.A. § 158(a) (1), and superficially do not rest upon a constitutional basis, the discussion actually goes to that depth and deals with the fundamental adjustment of rights of speech and rights of private property. Hence, the statutory origin of controversy in those cases does not detract from their authority when applied to a dispute arising in intrastate commerce, as at bar. Moreover, the statutory declarations of policy found in the Federal Act, 29

U.S.C.A. § 157,¹ and in our Labor Code, § 923,² are substantially the same. "The principle espoused by section 923 is essentially the same as that fostered by the National Labor Relations Act, 29 U.S.C.A. § 151 et seq., namely, the right of workmen to enjoy free collective bargaining over terms and conditions of employment." Nutter v. City of Santa Monica, 74 Cal. App.2d 292, 298, 168 P.2d 741, 745. The cited authorities are binding precedents so far as they go, whether viewed from a constitutional or statutory standpoint.

[3] However, those cases deal with the dissemination of literature and personal solicitation rather than picketing, which is something more than free speech even when conducted peacefully. Building Service Employers International Union v. Gazzam, 1950, 339 U.S. 532, 536, 537, 70 S.Ct. 784, 94 L.Ed. 1045. "Here, as in Hughes v. Superior Court, 339 U.S. 460 [ante, 985], 70 S.Ct. 718 [94 L.Ed. 985], we must start with the fact that while picketing has an ingredient of communication it cannot dogmatically be equated with the constitutionally protected freedom of speech. Our decisions reflect recognition that picketing is 'indeed a hybrid.'" International Brotherhood of Teamsters, Chauffeurs, etc., v. Hanke, 339 U.S. 470, 474, 70 S.Ct. 773, 775, 94 L.Ed. 995, 1001.

1. 29 U.S.C.A. § 157: "Employees shall have the right to self-organization, to form, join, or assist labor organizations, to bargain collectively through representatives of their own choosing, and to engage in other concerted activities for the purpose of collective bargaining or other mutual aid or protection, and shall also have the right to refrain from any or all of such activities except to the extent that such right may be affected by an agreement requiring membership in a labor organization as a condition of employment as authorized in section 158(a) (3) of this title."

2. Labor Code, § 923: "In the interpretation and application of this chapter, the public policy of this State is declared as follows: Negotiation of terms and conditions of labor should result from voluntary agreement between employer and Ordinarily, picketing is addressed to the public, not the employees, as witness the signs used by appellants' representatives in this case. " * * * [P]eaceful picketing consists of bringing the facts to the attention of the general public by means of one or more persons stationed about the place of employment which is being picketed. So conducted, peaceful picketing is an attempt to bring to bear upon the picketed employer the pressure of the opinion of such portion of the public as may be sympathetic to the objects of the picketing organization, by inducing that portion of the public to cease dealing with the picketed business." * * * " People v. Spear, 32 Cal.App.2d 165, 168, 89 P.2d 445, 446. Of course it is not necessarily limited to the public as its objective. In re Bell, 19 Cal.2d 488, 497, 122 P.2d 22. No case of which we are aware has gone so far as to hold that the employers' property may be invaded and occupied by non-employees for the purpose of picketing. The "broader perspective", applied in Northwestern Pac. R. Co. v. Lumber & Saw Mill Workers Union, 31 Cal.2d 441, 446-447, 189 P.2d 277, 281, may dictate that "the public welfare tip the scales in favor of preventive relief" in such a situation. But, as will appear from the later discussion of trespass, there is no necessity of here deciding whether any such employees. Governmental authority has permitted and encouraged employers to organize in the corporate and other forms of capital control. In dealing with such employers, the individual unorganized worker is helpless to exercise actual liberty of contract and to protect his freedom of labor, and thereby to obtain acceptable terms and conditions of employment. Therefore it is necessary that the individual workman have full freedom of association, self-organization, and designation of representatives of his own choosing, to negotiate the terms and conditions of his employment, and that he shall be free from the interference, restraint, or coercion of employers of labor, or their agents, in the designation of such representatives or in self-organization or in other concerted activities for the purpose of collective bargaining or other mutual aid or protection."

extension of the Babcock & Wilcox doctrine is appropriate.

No question of discriminatory use of the employers' property arises at bar and the evidence does not afford basis for any finding that the employees of Nahas were "isolated from normal contacts" of union representatives, as in the case of men spending their entire time in the employer's mining camp or aboard his ship. No showing of inability to contact employees through normal channels was made or attempted at the trial of the instant case. The burden of establishing such over-riding necessity of occupying the employers' premises obviously rests upon the union. All that appears is that when Mr. Morriss, business representative of the local, wanted to organize the Nahas employees he arranged on November 19th a lunch-time meeting at a drive-in stand on Redondo Beach Boulevard; that nine employees were present and six membership applications were then obtained; on or before December 11 seven more such applications were procured. Concerning the matter of what constitutes inability to contact employees through normal channels see 76 S.Ct. footnote 1 on page 681 of the Babcock & Wilcox decision, and the last paragraph of the test column 1, page 685.

[4, 5] Appellants argue that it was error to refuse to find upon their plea "That there was no other place or way for plaintiffs' employees who are members of the defendant Local 905 to publicize their dispute through peaceful picketing of the customer entrances of plaintiffs' store except by using the sidewalks in front of and behind plaintiffs' store for that purpose." The thesis is that the customers of plaintiffs and the general public could not be reached effectively except through picketing upon the ten-acre parcel and the sidewalks thereon. This is beside the point. In ability to reach the employees for proselyting purposes is the criterion of a right to use the employers' premises for that purpose; inability to reach actual or prospective customers adds nothing to the union's claim of right to use the employers' property. A finding on this subject, if made, would be immaterial and the trial judge so held.

[6] Appellants also say that the court erroneously ignored the rights of plaintiffs' own employees to use the master's premises for organization purposes because it appears that at least five of the pickets were employees as well as union members and the injunction runs against the union and all its members. The record discloses, however, that these persons not only had gone on strike, thus suspending their status of employees, Mark Hopkins, Inc. v. California Emp. Comm., 24 Cal.2d 744, 749, 151 P.2d 229, 154 A.L.R. 1081, but had also given up their jobs. There is no specific finding on this matter of voluntarily terminating their employment, but if it were held that this did not occur and that their employment was merely suspended, nevertheless their status of strikers would terminate any right they otherwise might have to occupy the employers' premises for organizational purposes. During the period through which they were rejecting the obligations of employment they could not be heard to claim any of the rights or benefits thereof.

[7] For the foregoing reasons we conclude that, in this case, union organizers and strikers were not entitled to occupy the employers' private property for their picketing activities. The assumption that they were doing so requires a closer look at the lease and supplement thereto.

If the parking area, sidewalks, etc., were not the private property of plaintiffs, the second major question which counsel discuss does not arise. Both sides argue the effect of Marsh v. State of Alabama, 326 U.S. 501, 66 S.Ct. 276, 90 L.Ed. 265, and Tucker v. State of Texas, 326 U.S. 517, 66 S.Ct. 274, 90 L.Ed. 274. Appellants claim that the sidewalks and parking lot in question had been thrown open to public use in such manner and to such extent as to place them on a parity with public streets under the cited cases, and that the question of technical trespass fades away. Respondents say that this argument rests upon a faulty factual premise, namely, that they had opened the use of the property to persons other than actual and prospective customers; that there was in this instance a continuing trespass upon their private property which was properly enjoined by the lower court.

In Marsh v. State of Alabama, supra, the court dealt with a company-owned town wherein all property, including streets, sidewalks, alleys, etc., were owned by the private company. Distribution of religious literature upon those streets by a member of Jehovah's Witnesses gave rise to the litigation; the witness was charged with violation of a statute forbidding the entry or remaining on premises of another after being warned not to do so. The Supreme Court held that in the necessary balancing of the rights of free speech and control of private property the mere state of title to the street which was open to the use of all could not control the issue. Speaking through Mr. Justice Black, the court said, 326 U.S. at pages 505-506, 66 S.Ct. at page 278, 90 L.Ed. 265: "We do not agree that the corporation's property interests settle the question. * * * Ownership does not always mean absolute dominion. The more an owner, for his advantage, opens up his property for use by the public in general, the more do his rights become circumscribed by the statutory and constitutional rights of those who use it." Mr. Justice Frankfurter, concurring, said: "[T]he technical distinctions on which a finding of 'trespass' so often depends are too tenuous to control decision regarding the scope of the vital liberties guaranteed by the Constitution." 326 U.S. at page 511, 66 S.Ct. at page 281. The statute was held invalid as applied to the activities of the Jehovah's Witness. The same holding was made in Tucker v. State of Texas, supra, which involved a town entirely owned by the United States government.

In Marshall Field & Co. v. National Labor Relations Board, 7 Cir., 200 F.2d

375, the rights of non-employee union organizers to carry on their activities in various parts of the Marshall Field store were involved. One of the areas was a company-owned street which extended through the store from one public street to another. It was used to a limited extent by company employees and the public to enter the building. The labor board held that a company rule which prohibited organizational activities in said private street was pro tanto invalid. The court upheld this ruling upon the authority of Marsh v. State of Alabama, supra, 326 U.S. 501, 66 S.Ct. 276, 90 L.Ed. 265.

[8] Counsel for both sides argue the question of whether the sidewalks and parking area involved herein are and have been open to the public to such an extent as to place them on a parity with public streets for picketing purposes. As above indicated we do not reach that problem because the factual basis for the discussion is not supplied by the evidence. Those areas were not and are not owned by plaintiffs-respondents, nor do they hold the same under an exclusive lease.

The original lease of July 1, 1954, was made by Victor C. Hornung and wife as lessors to Nahas as lessee. It describes the leased property as follows: "A location in the development at the southeast corner of Normandie Avenue and Redondo Beach Boulevard in said City of Gardena, to be a building 82'0" x 150'0" in size and design as mutually agreed upon between Lessor and Lessee, exclusive of parking which is hereinafter provided for. Said demised premises shall consist of said real property, the building and improvements to be erected thereon as hereafter provided on a plot of ground with its boundary located 38'0" east of present Von's Market building, and Lessee's rights to use the parking lot in common with other tenants of Lessor as hereinafter provided." (Emphasis added.) Paragraph (1) says that the premises to be occupied by the lessee "are to be a part of a planned development in which development Lessor will include approximately seven hundred (700) feet in developed and improved frontage on Redondo Beach Boulevard, and on the south side thereof, extending in an easterly direction from the east line of Normandie Avenue." A map is attached and incorporated by reference. Paragraph (15) contains this: "Lessor agrees to install and pave the parking lot as indicated on Exhibit 'A' attached hereto, and to make, at its own expense, all necessary improvements so as to provide suitable and adequate parking for the entire development. Said parking lot shall be used by all of the tenants of Lessor in said planned development, as well as patrons and customers of said tenants." (Emphasis added.) Plainly, the document leaves plaintiffs possessed of an exclusive right to the building itself but limited to a common use of the parking facilities with all other tenants and their patrons and customers. The lease makes no specific mention of streets, sidewalks, etc., but, as the supplement of December 14, 1954, recites that the lease covers the building and "in common with other tenants of Lessor, the parking area, private streets, sidewalks, alleyways and courts," it may be conceded for present purposes that that is a correct interpretation of the original document.

The picketing started on December 10, 1954. At that time plaintiffs had no exclusive right whatever in or to the locus of the picketing. Only the right to use it in common with others. No right to exclude anyone. The supplement of December 14th was made at the request of Mr. Nahas who told Mr. Hornung, according to the testimony of the latter, that "the purpose was to protect my private property. * * * Against the pickets."

This document, after reciting Nahas' existing right to common use, specifies that same "shall be subject only to the rights of all other tenants of Lessor on said real property and their suppliers, and the employees and agents of such tenants and their suppliers, and patrons and customers of said tenants, to use said private streets, sidewalks, alleyways and courts for ingress and egress in connection with the regular business of such tenants, and to use said parking area for parking of vehicles in connection with the regular business of said tenants, and Lessee shall have the right to remove any other persons from said parking area and said private streets, sidewalks, alleyways and courts on said real property.

[9] "2. Lessee shall have the exclusive right to control the use of the sidewalks extending along the front * * * and the rear of the building * * * except that Lessee shall keep said sidewalks free and clear of any obstructions and shall permit the use of said sidewalks by other tenants of Lessor on said real property, and patrons and customers of such tenants, for normal ingress and egress to and from the buildings occupied by said tenants, and Lessee shall have the right to remove all other persons therefrom." Manifestly it would be impossible to differentiate between customers of Nahas and Von, or to distinguish actual customers from prospective buyers, or potential patrons from mere lookers, or mere lookers from out and out trespassers. The quoted language of the supplement adds nothing to the lessee's right except an asserted power to remove "any other persons," and that language, read in the light of the existing situation, meant only the strikers. The professed "right to control" falls in the same category. This document was nothing but an attempt on Hornung's part to transfer to Nahas a right to remove the pickets upon the theory that they were trespassers. Trespass against whom? Not Nahas, for he had no greater right in these walks than does one who fronts on a public sidewalk,—the right to enjoin picketing which is violent or threatening or abusive or en masse, or the like, but not orderly and peaceful picketing. Hornung is not a party to this action. The pickets were not interfering with him or his enjoyment of the premises. He had no right to cause their removal which he could transfer in gross. The problem presented by the attempted application of the Marsh and Marshall Field cases, supra, does not arise here because plaintiffs had no title to the walks or parking lot. They had only the same rights which one has whose store fronts on a public sidewalk or parking lot. "The defendants have a right to use the public sidewalk in front of plaintiff's market for the purpose of spreading their propaganda. Plaintiff has a right to have his customers use the sidewalk for the purpose of entering and leaving his market. Neither right is exclusive; each may, fortunately, be exercised without a denial of the other, although each may interfere with the other. Defendants' use of the sidewalk may not be prohibited, but there may be a limitation placed upon the number using it and the manner of use, so that there is neither intimidation nor undue interference with its use by plaintiff's customers." Pezold v. Amalgamated Meat Cutters and Butcher Workmen, 54 Cal.App. 2d 120, 126, 128 P.2d 611, 615. Peaceful picketing, when pursued for the purpose of organizing a nonunion plant, is held in this state to be a legitimate means to a lawful objective. C. S. Smith Metropolitan Market Co. v. Lyons, 16 Cal.2d 389, 401, 106 P.2d 414; Park & T. I. Corp. v. International Brotherhood of Teamsters, etc., 27 Cal.2d 599, 604, 165 P.2d 891, 162 A. L.R. 1426; Pezold v. Amalgamated etc. Workmen, supra, 54 Cal.App.2d 120, 122, 128 P.2d 611.

[10] The trial court found that there were certain abuses by some of the pickets, that they took pictures of customers and employees, made remarks to customers, such as "get that lady's license number," pushed Von's shopping carts in front of plaintiffs' doorway in such manner as to block it, and used a sound truck. Such findings may justify a regulation of the manner and extent of picketing, but not an injunction prohibiting picketing entirely. Chrisman v. Culinary Workers' Local, 46 Cal.App.2d 129, 133, 115 P.2d 553; Pezold v. Amalgamated etc. Workmen, supra, 54 Cal.App.2d 120, 126, 128 P.2d 611; Steiner v. Long Beach Local No. 128, 19 Cal.2d 676, 684, 123 P.2d 20.

The pickets were not trespassing upon plaintiffs' rights and the injunction against any picketing upon the Hornung property was too broad.

The judgment is reversed.

v.

LAMB FINANCE COMPANY, Inc., a corporation, and Leah Lamb Poyet, also known as L. L. Poyet, Leah D. Lamb and Leah Lamb, Defendants, Cross-Complainants and Appellants.*

Civ. 21775.

District Court of Appeal, Second District, Division 2, California.

Oct. 1, 1956.

Rehearing Granted Oct. 29, 1956.

For Opinion on Rehearing see
303 P.2d 86.

Action to enforce the payment of a promissory note wherein a cross-action was filed seeking damages based on alleged fraudulent activities of cross-defendants in connection with transactions affecting the cross-complaints. From a money judgment rendered on a directed verdict of the jury in favor of plaintiffs in the Superior Court of Los Angeles, Arthur Crum, J., the defendants appealed. The District Court of Appeal, Fox, J., held that the trial court erred in not permitting certain defenses based on alleged fraud to be tried by the jury, improperly denied the defendants the right to amend cross-complaints and properly excluded parol evidence to show an agreement between the payee of a note and the guarantor thereof by which the former promised not to enforce the latter's liability thereon.

* Opinion vacated 303 P.2d 86.

Judgment reversed as to the plaintiff bank; appeal dismissed as to cross-defendants.

1. Jury ⇨10

The right to a trial by jury guaranteed by the Constitution is the right to a trial by jury in actions at law of issues which were triable at the common law in 1850. West's Ann.Const. art. 1, § 7.

2. Jury ⇨13(14)

Where an action presents issues of both a legal and equitable nature, a party is entitled to a trial by jury of any legal issue remaining after the equitable aspects of the case have been determined by the court. West's Ann.Const. art. 1, § 7.

3. Jury ⇨13(14, 18)

Equity jurisdiction is not automatically conferred by a mere charge of fraud made affirmatively or defensively so as to authorize the trial court to remove the issues of fraud from the jury. West's Ann.Const. art. 1, § 7.

4. Contracts ⇨94(1)

Deeds ⇨70(1)

Fraud will invalidate in a court of law as well as in a court of equity and annul every contract and every conveyance affected with it.

5. Jury ⇨13(18)

In action on a promissory note defendants having pleaded fraud defensively to avoid their apparent obligations were entitled to a trial by jury of the issue so raised. West's Ann.Const. art. 1, § 7.

6. Jury ⇨13(18)

Where fraud in the inducement is relied upon as a defense to a legal demand based upon a simple contractual obligation, the issue thus raised is properly triable to the jury. West's Ann.Const. art. 1, § 7.

7. Bills and Notes ⇨103(1)

Fraud in the inducement is available as defense against the holder not in due course of a negotiable instrument.

8. Jury ⇨13(18)

In action on note, cross-complaint seeking damages of $500,000 based on alleged fraudulent activities of cross-defendants did not transmute the litigation into an equitable proceeding precluding a jury trial on the issues of fraud raised. West's Ann.Const. art. 1, § 7.

9. Jury ⇨13(18)

In action on a note, prayer in cross-complaint that plaintiff take nothing by its action and that defendants be released of all liability did not indicate the equitable character of the action so as to preclude a jury trial on the issues of alleged fraud raised in the cross-complaint. West's Ann. Const. art. 1, § 7.

10. Jury ⇨13(18)

In action on a note, where cross-complaints sought damages for alleged fraudulent activities of the cross-defendants, denial of a jury trial was not justified on the ground that even if the issue of fraud had been tried by the jury the court would have been justified in directing a verdict for the plaintiff. West's Ann. Const. art. 1, § 7.

11. Evidence ⇨423(7)

Parol evidence to the effect that guaranty was a matter of form and no personal liability would attach to the guarantor as a result of the transaction was properly rejected under the parol evidence rule.

12. Evidence ⇨441(12)
